Director Paul Scardon, who has directed Earle Williams' recent efforts in Vitagraph features, has started work on a five reel drama soon to be released, entitled "A Meddler with Destiny." Corinne Griffith and her husband, Webster Campbell, will be seen with Mr. Williams.

"Annie for Spite." Her real name is Mary Miles Minter, and her leading man is George Fisher.

Mary Miles Makes Love

Mary Miles Minter knows how to make love to a man. She does it quite to perfection in her latest Mutual photoplay, "Annie-for-Spite."

It happens in one of the several day dreams which the dainty little star enacts in the course of the picture. All by herself in the library she wooes the young man who plays the role of her secretary, with realism and cleverness which belie both her years and her experience as an actress. Double photography adds to the effectiveness of the scene, but it makes the role she plays no less difficult.

In several of her recent pictures Miss Minter has appeared alone in remarkably well done scenes.

Paralta Productions Coming

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Plays Corporation, who has taken up his residence in Los Angeles to supervise the work of the production end of this enterprise, has informed Carl Anderson, president of the corporation, that work is going forward very rapidly on two productions, and that both studios controlled by the company will be in full operation in the course of the next three weeks.

Mr. Kane is now surrounded by a very large staff of expert talent. The full roster of dramatic and technical directors and camera men and assistants will be made public early in May.

$10,000 From One Showing

Following the announcement that Pathe and not General would release the output of Official War Pictures, Inc., William K. Vanderbilt, president, and H. P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan & Company, treasurer, it is stated that after a $7,000 advance sale, the British War Films played the Chicago Auditorium April 11 to a capacity house, totaling $10,000 in paid admission and that bookings are especially heavy also in the New Orleans, Boston, Philadelphia, and Omaha territories, despite the fact that only about a week has elapsed since the transfer and all Pathe offices have not yet received prints sufficient to fill the demand.

Fox Back in New York

After a two-months stay in his western studios at Hollywood, Cal., his first visit to his own plant, his first vacation in years, and his first trip west of Buffalo in his life, William Fox has just returned to New York.

His eight weeks of close contact with the players and the productions in the making have made him more enthusiastic than ever over the photoplay industry, present and future.

"I am frank to confess," Mr. Fox laughed, "that I learned the picture business had several angles of which I knew little which were worthy of study and development. I think I may claim that plans have been laid for some remarkable screen subjects in our Hollywood studios."

Walsh Makes New Fox Drama

A new photodrama by R. A. Walsh, director of "The Honor System," the sensational cinemelodrama which has completed its four months successful run at the Lyric Theater in New York, has produced a new film for William Fox. It is "The Silent Lie" which will be released on May 21.

The leading role in the new R. A. Walsh picture will be played by Miriam Cooper who sprang into fame by her work in "The Honor System." Miss Cooper's supporting cast has never been excelled. In it are Ralph Lewis and Charles Clary.

Minneapolis Nominations

At the Minneapolis convention, May 1, 2 and 3, the following were nominated for president of the Northwest Exhibitors Corporation: James Gilosky, David G. Rodgers, Charles Campbell. Mr. Rodgers announced that he would refuse the honor.

Secretary Hitchcock and former Secretary Steffes were spoken of for secretary. The nominations for treasurer include former Treasurer Van Duzee, Henry P. Greene and Fred Upham. It is probable that eleven delegates will be sent to the Chicago convention in July.

Stiff Stunts for Russell

William Russell in the new American-Mutual five reel production, "The Frameup," released May 7, is given one of those slam bang rattling action opportunities that so well suit his requirements as a star and so thoroughly accord with the public taste in adventure drama.

Mr. Russell comprehends the value of the "stunt" and in the new play soon to be released, he displays the remarkable athletic and acrobatic versatility for which, in connection with irreproachable artistry, he has become famed among picture fans. His back somersault out of a speeding automobile to escape from the police, and his thrilling leap from the tonneau of one fast traveling machine to the tonneau of another, are examples of the chances he takes of physical injury in "The Frameup."

There is everything that should appeal to the exhibitor in this play. It has a corking good story, sequentially and logically told, it is full of the quickest kind of quick action and photographically it is well done.

The story—a love episode of exceptional strength—is well told, and "Bill" Russell handles love themes with consummate skill. Francelia Billington, who plays opposite Mr. Russell, provides a fascinating foil for the spectacular heroics of the star.

Press comment on Mr. Russell's recent production for the screen is decidedly flattering.

The Denver Times, referring to his work in "The Sequel to the Diamond from the Sky," says:

There is one thing that must be said for Mr. Russell's work—it possesses the element of realism.

When Russell is called upon to jump a horse over a precipice into a raging torrent we know that he does it actually, instead of having some poor duffer whose skin is worth less than the star's, pull the dangerous stuff.

The Boise, Idoha, News says:

There were fifteen expert boxers in the right proscenium box last night to see William Russell in "The Torchbearer." The way "Big Bill" handled himself in that political scrap against twenty or more ward heelers and thugs made that box party happy. It was great stuff.

William Franey is being featured at Universal City in a one-reel comedy entitled "Young Lochinvar, 1917."

Remarkable Story for Jane Cowl

Jane Cowl's first appearance on the screen as a Goldwyn Pictures' star will be made in one of the most popular stories ever written by an American author; a story that set the American reading public and society to talking as few novels have ever done.

Miss Cowl will have one of the greatest emotional opportunities with which any play has ever provided her, and has a role that is known to audiences throughout the country.

Goldwyn expects to make heavy demands upon Miss Cowl throughout the summer, as she will have to quit the studios in the late summer to begin her tour of the principal cities in "Lilac Time," the successful play which she wrote in collaboration with Jane Murfin, and in which she has been starring since the early part of the year.

Jane Cowl's tremendous popularity in the theater will create for her a nation-wide audience in pictures

U. S. Exhibitors' Co-operation

The United States naval publicity bureau is calling on picture exhibitors to help in recruiting for the navy by displaying on their screen a set of twelve slides prepared by the Novelty Slide Company of New York. These slides may be had absolutely free of charge from any local navy recruiting station or direct from the headquarters of the United States navy publicity bureau at 318 West Thirty-ninth street, New York.

We urge exhibitors to do their share in this recruiting campaign and believe that this is an opportunity for the picture industry to display its patriotism to the fullest extent.

Chicago Goldwyn Representatives

Aaron J. Jones has been appointed personal representative in Illinois and Indiana for the Goldwyn productions. This newly formed organization producing feature pictures, is reaching out in to the principal cities of the country, establishing branch offices. The local territory will be handled with Mr. Jones as executive, with offices located on the third floor of the Orpheum Theater building. F. M. Brockwell, at present associate managing director of the Central Film Company, will become manager of the local branch for Goldwyn. The office will be opened on June 15 and the first six releases will be shown to exhibitors on July 1.

WARNING!

F. B. McKee, a traveling subscription solicitor, holds a letter from MOTOGRAPHY, dated December 30, 1916, authorizing him to take subscriptions at the regular rate of $3.00 a year. McKee has not only failed to remit any part of his collections, but has neglected to send in the names of any subscribers. His activities become evident only when those who have entrusted him with their orders complain to us. When last reported he was operating in Ohio.

The motion picture field is therefore warned that F. B. McKee can no longer be considered a MOTOGRAPHY subscription solicitor, and his letter of authorization is hereby canceled.

New House Added to Chain

The Bankers and Merchants Theaters Company, a corporation with headquarters in Chicago, which makes a specialty of buying or building high-class photoplay theaters with a view toward establishing a chain of money-making houses with their first purchase, the Orpheum Theater of Fort Wayne, Indiana, as a nucleus, is building a $70,000 theater in Terre Haute, Indiana. The new house will be located at the corner of Main and Eighth streets, the center of Terre Haute, on the site of the old Varieties Theater.

The Varities Theater has been razed and the foundation for the new house has already been laid. When finished it will be one of the most beautiful motion picture playhouses in Indiana as the Bankers and Merchants executives have expressed a determination to make it so, no matter what the cost.

The manager of the new house will be C. W. Mason, who is at present actively associated with A. F. Brentlinger in the management of the Orpheum at Fort Wayne. Mr. Brentlinger is general manager of the Bankers and Merchants Theaters Company. He was former owner of the Orpheum Theater at Fort Wayne and prior to that owned the Orpheum in Terre Haute. Incidentally he is one of the best known exhibitors in Indiana.

The property upon which the new Terre Haute house will be built was owned by Mr. McFall, who also owns the building occupied by the Terre Haute Tribune.

Lesser Cancels Selznick Franchise

Sol L. Lesser of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, has forwarded to the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., his notice of cancellation on the Selznick pictures, including the Clara Kimball Young productions. The cancellation of the Clara Kimball Young subjects is to take place immediately after her sixth picture. But with the other Selznick productions, it will go into effect immediately.

In an interview, Mr. Lesser said, " I have tendered a cancellation to Mr. Selznick not because I was disappointed with his pictures, but, owing to the fact that I am exploiting so many big productions, such as "Intolerance," "The Garden of Allah," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Civilization" and "Art Dramas." I have decided that in order to obtain the most efficient results with this class of productions, it will be necessary for me to concentrate my entire efforts to handling these pictures efficiently."

Slackers Will Dodge This

Skirt-hiding slackers will not want to see "Whose Wife?" Gail Kane's first Mutual production, released April 30, depicts the perils of marriage which are made in haste and for convenience. It sets forth a vivid lesson.

Miss Kane's work in the new production is considered by competent critics the best that she has ever done for the screen. She makes the appealing character of Mary Melville, a living, breathing, human entity—a thrilling presentment of constancy, sacrifice and love that grips the heart and inspires the imagination. Miss Kane's youth and great beauty add to the convincingness of her interpretation.

"Whose Wife?" is an adaptation of a thrilling love story by the successful English novelist, Cecil Henry Bullivant; its plot involves a succession of intensely dramatic situations, sequentially developed through the exigencies of the story, of which additional strong points are the perfect continuity of acting and interest.

Fairbanks Film at Rialto

Never in the history of the Rialto Theater, New York, has such a constant demand for admission been evidenced as during the past week, when Douglas Fairbanks made his re-appearance on the screen in his first Artcraft release, "In Again—Out Again." At every afternoon and evening performance the traffic police around Times Square found it necessary to detail special officers to handle the crowds that lined up in front of the theater and extended several blocks up Broadway. On Sunday evening a plate glass door at the entrance of the theater was broken by the mob that actually fought to get in.

"Doug's new film is simply great," said S. L. Rothapfel, the famous manager of the Rialto. "It was thoroughly enjoyed—by those who were able to get into the theater. We smashed all records for the house, just as I expected, and many were turned away each day. I received many telegraphic inquiries regarding the picture from exhibitors all over the country and was only too glad to report the wonderful result of this engagement." The Rialto engagement of the initial Fairbanks-Artcraft offering was a pre-release showing, the picture being released April 30. Critics of the daily, as well as the trade press, were unanimous in their praise over "Doug's" new picture, many expressing the prediction that it will prove his greatest success to date.

Clever Sales Plan

W. E. Shallenberger, who is selling "The Deemster" through his Arrow Film Corporation, in the Times Building, New York, is not merely selling the rights to the great Hall Caine feature; he is selling a plan for marketing it that is sure to affect greatly the method of handling big features.

The exploitation of "The Deemster" at the Broadway Theater proved conclusively that there was some well developed plan behind the campaign and that more than ordinary intelligence had been at work before the big drive for paid admissions began. It is now an open secret that the town was not "papered" for "The Deemster's" Broadway Theater engagement and yet the house was filled during the entire run.

In the final analysis but one conclusion is logical and that is that a well defined plan was worked out whereby the attention of theater goers was riveted to "The Deemster."

State rights buyers who have purchased "The Deemster," as well as those who have negotiated for it, freely admit that a splendid plan for getting quick results goes with every sale of rights and prints.

Helen Holmes Becomes Director

Helen Holmes has made her debut as a director.

In order that J. P. McGowan, the Signal director, might supervise in person the cutting of a specially difficult reel of the ninth chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," the Mutual serial, Helen Holmes took charge of the company and carried on the production of the remaining scenes of the chapter.

Harry Carey, well-known western character actor, is featured in a two-reel drama entitled "The Golden Bullet."

First Mutual-La Salle Comedy

Carol Halloway is the featured player in the first La Salle comedy which will be released through Mutual on May 7, entitled "The Prodigal Uncle."

Miss Halloway began her career on the legitimate stage as a member of the Carleton Stock Company. Later she appeared in a number of Broadway productions, and is remembered for her impersonation of "Youth" in "Every Woman."

She is best known on the screen for her work in the "Beauty Comedies," released by the American. Her picture work includes engagements with Lubin, Lasky, New York Motion Picture, American and Fine Arts.

Sunday Pictures in New York

The Walker bill, which was passed by the state senate at Albany, New York, legalizing the showing of motion pictures on Sunday, has been amended in such a manner that it will only affect cities of the first, second and third classes. This is according to information received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The bill as it now reads will permit the exhibition of films after 11 o'clock on Sunday forenoons in cities of more than 1,000,000 inhabitants, and after 1 o'clock in other cities. The members of the legislature from rural districts, who, up to this time have opposed this measure, are now understood to be favoring this bill and supporting it.

Theatermen are jubilant over the amendment of this bill, for they have kept their theaters open on Sunday by means of injunctions and in every manner possible. The closing of theaters on Sunday is a very severe blow at the exhibitors' business, and the legalizing of Sunday showings is an incalculable aid to New York managers.

Edna Goodrich's First Film

At the Empire All Star studio Edna Goodrich is working on the final scenes of "Reputation," the drama by John Clymer. "Reputation" will be Miss Goodrich's first Mutual appearance, and her debut is anxiously awaited by the host of admirers of her work on the stage.

May 28 has been set as the release date of this photodrama. William Hinckley plays opposite Miss Goodrich and others in the cast include Frank Goldsmith, Carcy Lee, Esther Evans and Nellie Parker Spaulding.

North Carolina Exhibitors Meet

The annual convention of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will be held at Wrightsville Beach, Wilmington, North Carolina, June 14, 15 and 16. Convention headquarters are to be established at the Oceanic Hotel.

President Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, and Secretary H. B. Varner, of Lexington, have not yet announced the completed program for the session, but it will undoubtedly be fraught with significant importance both to the industry of the state of North Carolina and of the nation, since the Tar Heel exhibitors have shown a disposition in the past to wade right out into deep water, and have succeeded in rescueing the industry from many evils in the four years of its existence as an organized league.

Elaborate displays by manufacturers of films and accessories will be a feature of the convention, and applications for reservation of space are coming in to President Wells weekly. Efforts will be made to have several stars and some speakers of national importance in the industry. As Wrightsville Beach season will be in full blast at that time, an opportunity will be afforded the visitors of combining business with pleasure and have a seashore outing while attending the convention.

The Bureau of Economics, Department of Public Instruction, at Washington, has made application for Hanover's feature, "How Uncle Sam Prepares," in order to give a private exhibition before members of the senate, the house of representatives and government officials. The government hopes to use the remarkable film in national propaganda to aid recruiting and other phases of war preparation.

Robert Warwick's third Selznick-Picture will be an original story by his director, Leonce Perret, "The Modern Othello."

Even artists must take nourishment—as they say some have found at times to their regret. Above is the lunch room at the Greater Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn.

COHAN PLAY PRAISED

"Broadway Jones" Initial Cohan-Artcraft Picture, Lauded By Daily Press Throughout the Country. Picture Welcomed By Public

Seldom, if ever, has a theatrical favorite of such magnitude as George M. Cohan answered to the call of the camera with such complete success as has the famous Yankee Doodle comedian in his first Artcraft Picture, "Broadway Jones." Newspaper clippings from every part of the country indicate that this photoplay is a distinct departure in screenland as a result of George M. Cohan's introduction of a new type of comedy and hence a welcome subject to the photoplay public. Not only has the production elicited most favorable praise from the critics but it has in various cases, received editorial comment and endorsement.

The New York critics gave the production unusual space in extolling its merits and these expressions were duplicated by out-of-town publications. The New York Times in commenting upon the manner in which Mr. Cohan adapted himself to the screen, said: "Mr. Cohan might have been miming before the camera since the birth of the movies from the knowledge he displays of the tricks of the screen. The mannerisms that have given countless impersonators jobs—the quick, vigorous gestures, the eccentric posturings and gait—are even greater assets than they were on the stage."

In connection with the improvement of the screen version over the play which was Mr. Cohan's great speaking success, the New York Sun said: "'Broadway Jones' as presented by Movie Manager Cohan is the old stage version illuminated and expanded by the addition of many touches of realism and striking scenes which are bevond the limits of the stage to portray."

The Philadelphia North American said: "'Broadway Jones' is an intermittent riot. George M. Cohan takes easily to the camera and his acting for the screen has the same originality, breeziness and pep as has his stage work. The film is completely equipped; no detail was left out or slurred." Zit in the New York Journal proclaimed the picture "the greatest comedy five reel feature that has ever been produced in front of any audience, be it in Scotland, England, Ireland, Wales or in any city of the great big United States."

"None of that you two!"—Douglas Fairbanks and Arline Pretty in "In Again—Out Again."

Tamar Lane of the Boston Evening Record said: "As a screen artist George M. Cohan is not only a great and immediate success but a scream. He conquered every other branch of theatricals, and now the difficult task of gaining the heights of movie popularity is won in a single effort."

Unusual Film Exchange

The recent opening of the new offices of the Famous Players' Exchange, Philadelphia, at 1219-23 Vine street, forecasts an idea that the exchanges of the future will be sumptuous and efficient. There is no doubt but that William E. Smith, president of the "Famous Players' Exchange," has erected the most modern exchange in this country. Recent visits from film men testify to this fact.

It seems remarkable that only three years ago, the majority of the film exchanges which distribute the finished product of the film producers, did business in one little room in any kind of slip-shod manner. Some idea as to the tremendous growth of the motion picture industry can be gathered from the fact that three years ago the "Famous Players' Exchange" occupied quarters of about 1,000 square feeet, while the new quarters have a floor space of 14,000 square feet.

Big Bookings for Fairbanks Picture

Up to date bookings with ninety first-class theaters during the week commencing April 30, for the initial Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft release, "In Again—Out Again," have been closed, with many applications for other showings under consideration. In addition to these first run presentations, there will be various pre-release showings commencing the week of April 22. Among the houses giving such advance showings are the Rialto Theater, New York, which will present the picture as the star attraction for its Anniversary Bill, and the Triangle Theater, Brooklyn.

Having booked "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the Greater Vitagraph super-production, for Springfield, Massachusetts, the prominent exhibitor, George A. Whitney, showed his confidence in the picture as a show proposition by putting it on at the Court Square Theater instead of at his Bijou. At the former house it will play to a larger seating capacity and prices will rule at 50 cents and 25 cents. The Court Square plays ordinarily attractions of the legitimate stage and to devote it to this picture indicates the importance attached to J. Stuart Blackton's romantic dramatic spectacle.

A popular stunt from a benevolent as well as advertising point of view is Mr. Whitney's announcement of a pledge to award ten per cent. of the proceeds of his "Womanhood" engagement to the American Red Cross.

With his customary enterprise Mr. Whitney billed Springfield liberally with 24-sheets and employed other approved advertising devices.

Olive Tell, Robert Warwick's leading woman in his photoplay, "The Silent Master," his next Selznick-Pictures production, is declared by many keen observers of the drama, to be the most beautiful woman on the American stage.

ESSANAY SUMMER FEATURES

Jack Gardner in Essanay—Niles Series of Westerns Included. Also Bryant Washburn in Continuation of Skinner Series

Essanay has announced its entire program of feature productions for the summer months.

Supplementary to this announcement, George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, issued the following statement:

"Only by closest co-operation can the manufacturer and the exhibitor get the best benefits from the business of motion pictures. The manufacturer can produce the highest class pictures, yet the exhibitor, after all, is the man who must deal with the public. He knows, better than any manufacturer, how best to get a picture before the people. For that reason, Essanay has adopted the policy of selecting its picture subjects far ahead, and of announcing its selections to the exhibitors. Thus the latter can arrange their programs and have ample opportunity to plan ways of advertising much before the actual showings.

Essanay schedules eleven features for release, in its announcement, two of which have already been announced. The first is "The Night Workers," which will be released May 21. The second is "Filling His Own Shoes," a Bryant Washburn picture.

On June 18, the first of the Essanay-Niles series of red-blooded Western dramas will be released. Its title is "The Land of the Long Shadows." Mr. Gardner will be featured in this, as well as the productions of the series to follow. Reality will be the first aim of these pictures; however, they will not lack the thrills and popular ideals of the "wild and woolly" West.

Bryant Washburn will be starred in the feature to follow. Its title will be "The Man Who Was Afraid." This picture will present a film version of the story by Mary Brecht Pulver, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post.

On July 16, "The Range Boss" will be issued, presenting Jack Gardner.

"The Golden Idiot" will be released July 23. This production has been scenarioized from the story by Robert Rudd Whiting.

"Skinner's Baby" will be released August 6, with Bryant Washburn supported by Hazel Daly and the original cast.

Following "Skinner's Baby" will come "Open Places," the third of the Essanay-Niles series. This production will be released August 20.

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," a comedy-drama adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story of that title by Clarence Buddington Kelland, will be released September 3.

The next on the program will be entitled "Lost Paradise." The picture is from the story of Frederick Arnold Kummer, and will feature Marguerite Clayton.

On September 24 Mr. Gardner will again appear in an Essanay-Niles feature entitled "The Vigilantes."

All of these features will have a screen time of approximately 1 hour and 15 minutes. They will be filmed and ready for release in plenty of time for exhibitors to book according to their program requirements, and for advertising purposes. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service will handle all the releases.

"Mayblossom," the Pathe Gold Rooster Play in natural colors, in which Pearl White stars, was colored by hand by French soldiers.

"The Deemster" Powerful Magnet

It is the powerful and vivid human element in "The Deemster," which just finished a run at the Broadway Theater, New York, that transcends all else and has created such widespread interest in the great Hall Caine photoplay.

Nothing more electrifying or heart-rending has ever been presented than the great murder trial on Tynwald Hill where father pronounces sentence on his only son and condemns him to a life of solitude and privation.

Sweetheart and friends are left behind, not one daring to speak to the exiled youth as he passes out of their lives. But the hand of fate reaches out and gathers in and in due course of time sends him back among his people to rescue them from a dreaded plague that threatens to destroy them one and all.

How these remarkable conditions are brought about is one of the finest examples of real drama that has ever gripped the attention of audiences in this city. To appreciate the manifold beauties of Hall Caine's absorbing story, "The Deemster" (meaning the Governor of the Isle of Man) one must sit under his spell and watch the unfolding of the film.

Spectacular scenes follow each other in rapid succession and are so conceived and presented as to excite the hysterical emotions of an audience to the last degree. The fight on the cliff, the burning ship at sea, the burial of the Deemster's son at sea, the multitudes assembled on the heather of the "open court" at Tynwald Hill and finally the pathetic scenes where Manxman and maiden cling to the garments of the broken youth who has returned to rescue his countrymen from the dreaded plague, are wonderful to behold.

Drama Re-Issued

Re-issues of pictures are infallible signs of popularity and excellence in this form of art. As it has been pointed out over and over again, really good pictures are like books which achieve a great vogue; they can be issued again at frequent intervals.

Thomas H. Ince, the producer, is one of the few whose pictures have reached a second edition. "The Battle of Gettysburg" and "The Wrath of the Gods," two of his best known and most successful efforts are being brought to the attention of state right buyers by Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre Building, New York.

"The Battle of Gettysburg" is, of course, timely. "The Wrath of the Gods" is one of the best Japanese dramas Ince ever made.

Jack Mulhall, of Universal, is enacting the principal part in a five-reel drama entitled "The Great Adventure."

Backs 'Em Off the Boards

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Below will be found a few brief comments on the pictures I have run for your "What the Picture Did for Me" department. I would like to say that I think that these columns, from an exhibitor's standpoint, have everything else backed off the board.—C. Everett Wagner, Dreamland Theater, Chester, S. C.

Passing of the Star System

By Harry Raver

President of Art Dramas, Inc.

Like all undeveloped and experimental things, the modern motion picture has done a great deal of borrowing. In its earliest days it borrowed wholly from the theater. As the art improved, the difference between the two mediums became greater, until now the photoplay has almost cast off all allegiance to the older art, and stands as an individual form of entertainment.

One of the evils which it borrowed from the theater and which it has not yet wholly cast away, is the "star system." This system, however, has now nearly disappeared from the stage. Audiences go to theaters, not to see a famous actor, but to see a good play.

So the photoplay is the only art now which still maintains this worn-out idea. The greatest painter in the world could not sell his pictures if he did nothing but splash his name across a canvas and call it a painting. The greatest novelist in the world could not sell his books if they were written poorly. But there are still some producers who think they can sell their pictures simply because there is a well-known name on the posters.

The average man loves a good story. He likes to see it well told with dramatic interest maintained and suspense kept up to the end. And he wants to see it acted by the most competent cast possible.

The actor who throws himself into his part, whether the part be an extra in a mob or the hero of the play, is the actor who deserves credit. And it is of actors like this that good pictures are made.

The producer who tries to sell his pictures by means of the star's name is like the man who tries to sell candy by putting it in a fancy box, or a hat by means of the colored ribbon. The candy has to be good and the hat has to fit or the customer won't return. And if the articles are good the fancy box is useless and the colored band is superfluous.

If the story is unusual, entertaining and dramatic, the cast competent and well selected, and the direction skilful and carefully done, the amusement value and the box-office value of the picture are fifty times as great as those of the badly written, poorly constructed and indifferently produced play with a super-star whose only recommendation is the size of her pay envelope. There may have been stars in Shakespeare's day, but no one ever heard of them. But we still have the plays written then. And if any pictures we are now producing last a hundred years they won't be the "star" pictures. They will be the pictures with good stories and good actors.

"Watch Small Town Exhibitor"

"Watch the small town exhibitor. Don't fail to stop at a town because the atlas tells you it only has a population of fifty persons" is the subject of instructions that have been issued to all Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. salesmen as a result of revelations made recently during discussion at a meeting of Vitagraph's Advisory Council, which is made up of the heads of all departments of the big producing and distributing company.

Some members of the Advisory Council were inclined to believe that the schedule by population was the correct manner to solicit a territory and arrange a schedule until the reports from branch offices were discussed. The report from the Los Angeles branch showed that a theater in Keeler, with a population, according to the atlas, of 86 persons, had signed a contract for Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features, and that a theater in the town of Kackley, Kansas, with a credited population of 85 persons had signed a contract for all Vitagraph features and also booked "The Battle Cry of Peace" for two days.

Subsequent investigation showed that the theater owners of these two towns are progressives from start to finish. They do not consider the towns, proper, as their territory, but they take into consideration the surrounding population. On Vitagraph's special blue ribbon features they bill and snipe the country in radius of ten miles with the respective town as the hub. For "sniping" purposes they use a long narrow sheet, not more than six inches in width and usually about five feet in length. These are "sniped" on fence rails, tree limbs, sides of barns and in some cases arrangements have been made with neighborhood farmers to allow the use of their wagon boxes as moving bill boards.

Following this investigation it was decided by Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., that there is no such thing in the country as a town "too small to consider, nor an exhibitor too small to receive every possible co-operation from the Greater Vitagraph organization."

Kitty Gordon's photoplay "Forget-Me-Not" has just been released. It contains a number of scenes which were not in the stage drama of the same name when Genevieve Ward and Rose Coglan played it successively. A particularly effective finish has been provided by Director General William A. Brady of World-Pictures to take the place of the former unsatisfactory ending. In this new scene, Stefanie, the wicked lady who makes all the mischief, "gets hers."

Ince's Electric Crown

The giant electric-flashing sign surmounting the Triangle-Ince studios at Culver City has been finished and turned on for its continuous run night in and night out. This sign is the most prominent feature in the long plain that stretches from Los Angeles to the ocean, and is visible on clear nights many miles away from the San Bernardino mountains.

It consists of the words "Triangle Studios" divided by an enormous triangle, on which the letter T in electric lights is crossed by the smaller letters Kay Bee. Above this is an enormous red disc with red electric lights picked out by white lights supporting the name Thomas H. Ince. The word "Ince" is in letters eighteen feet high. The "flasher" starts with a single red glow in the center of the red disc that works outward until the entire disc is a colored word against the background of the night.

The gigantic electric sign which tops the Triangle-Ince studios. The design is unusually good and the letters are at the same time out of the ordinary and in very good taste.

Praise for Warren Production

"The Warfare of the Flesh," the Edward Warren production which is being released on the state right market, has had an unusual run of comments from the general and trade press. Ministers, women's clubs and educators are taking an interest in the picture and are beginning a militant campaign to accelerate its circulation. The following is a copy of a letter Mr. Warren has received from Dr. Francis T. Miller of the department of editorial research of the Searchlight Library:

Mr. Warren's production, "The Warfare of the Flesh," marks the beginning of a new epoch in motion picture drama. It is the first conscientious movement toward establishing a high moral standard in photo-plays.

Mr. Warren presents a more convincing argument for morality and character than all the sermons I have heard in an entire lifetime. Our churches have been trying to impress the Seventh Commandment upon the human race for nearly two thousand years; the motion picture drama, "The Warfare of the Flesh," accomplishes this purpose in two hours.

Mr. Warren is more than a moralist in motion pictures; he has proved himself to be a psychologist. He evidently intends to solve our great social problems through the medium of the photo-play. This is the next important step in this remarkable art. We may expect notable achievements from Mr. Warren not only as an artist and dramatist, but as a man of strong character. We may expect him to portray in his pictures the motives behind human conduct, for he has the intellectual force to analyze character and then put it into action on the screen.

Dr. Miller is the founder of the Journal of American History and is the editorial counsellor of many educational foundations. He is consulted on literary and psychological matters by the leading universities and the important government departments.

Advertising "The Trufflers"

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce that "The Trufflers" formerly scheduled for release April 9, will not be released until later in the month because they want exhibitors to get the full benefit of a nation-wide advertising campaign starting immediately in all the Hearst publications. This means that full page display ads and full page illustrated feature stories will be printed in all the Hearst daily papers from coast to coast during several weeks preceding release date. Besides many smaller "ads" and shorter stories, there will also be a campaign of exploitation in behalf of "The Trufflers" through the International News Service, an agency controlled by William Randolph Hearst.

"The Trufflers" was made by Essanay and has for its star Nell Craig, supported by an all-star cast, composed of Sydney Ainsworth, Ernest Maupain, Richard C. Travers, Patrick Calhoun, Harry Dunkinson and Joseph Cosar, stars, each with a big following in the film world.

"The Trufflers" was written by Samuel Merwin published recently in the Cosmopolitan and deals with the colony life in Greenwich village, New York City, where stage folk, authors, artists and globe trotters are supposed to spend so much of their lives. "The Trufflers" was one of the most popular short stories contributed to a magazine in recent years.

Plea Against "Murder for Murder"

The Selig feature melodrama, "Who Shall Take My Life?" written by Maibelle Heikes Justice, is unusually timely. The story is a strong plea against capital punishment. Coincident with the announcement by the Selig Company that "Who Shall Take My Life?" was scheduled for release the newspapers published articles of interest. One item announced that Governor Gardner, of Missouri, would sign a bill abolishing capital punishment in Missouri. Another newspaper article stated that a law abolishing the death penalty would probably be passed in Illinois.

"Christus"

Presented by Historic Features, Inc., at Criterion Theater, New York. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IT IS to the exhibitor's interest to remember that this is a production of the Societa Italiana Cines of Rome, whose "Quo Vadis" was a brilliant spot in the history of the motion picture. The public knows at least what it can expect in a Cines production. The meaning of the latter word, by the way, is not distorted a hair's breadth when applied to "Christus," for if any picture was ever given painstaking, elaborate, and, in a word, faultless production, it never achieved a higher point of excellency in its particular line than this film. It is not after every picture that one can reach for his hat and walk out upon the street with the feeling that he has been rudely awakened out of a dream, as it were, so magnificent, charming and awe-inspiring that the emergence into the dazzling reality of things proves quite a discomfort. For such is the way that the director, Count Giulio Antamoro, has fashioned his picture. The realization that one is gazing on the very ground upon which the Master trod helps in a way hardly calculable to maintain the spectator's engrossed, even spell-bound, interest. The Egyptian pyramids, the time-worn landmarks of the Holy Land, the Mount of Olives, the River Jordan and numberless other places of historical significance not only make for perfect realism, but give the picture its educational side.

The story is based on Fauste Salvatori's poem, "Christus," dealing with the earthly career of Jesus the Christ. As produced it incorporates all of the chief experiences of "the Best Man that ever trod the globe," as He has been called, from Mary's conception of Jesus to His final triumphant exit from the flesh. The story adheres very closely to the Biblical narrative, sub-title quotations from the four gospels being frequently employed. The other explanations, historical and dramatic, were framed for American presentation by Maurice V. Samuels. These sub-titles are all so copious that the person who is entirely unfamiliar with the Bible may understand every last bit of the action. These well-written sub-titles make up no small part of the picture's interest. There is almost a volley of titles at the film's start, however, which might be epitomized to great advantage, as the audience becomes restless reading a dozen or so lengthy leaders before the first scene. Many of the ample explanations throughout will be superfluous to one who is familiar with the New Testament.

The story relates with wonderful reality among its many incidents these: The wise men's journey to Bethlehem; Jesus at twelve years of age preaching in the temple; His combined forgiveness of the woman taken in adultery and denunciation of hypocrites; the driving of the money changers from the temple; the touching absolution of the penitent Magdalene, who anointed the Master's feet with the costly oil and wiped them with the hair of her head; Jesus walking on the water; His transfiguration upon going up into the mountain to pray; the raising from the dead of Lazarus of Bethany; the Wayshower's triumphant entrance into Jerusalem on the palm-strewn path; the feast of the Passover; Judas' betrayal; the trial by Pontius Pilate; the crucifixion and ascension after three days; and the Master's final ascent above the vision of the material world after demonstrating to the disciples that death had left His body unchanged.

Among the excellent effects secured in direction were the indication of Judas' betrayal by the falling of his staff to the ground in two pieces, in the shape of the cross, the representation of the wonderful influx of light that, according to the Bible, took place on certain occasions, the lighting of the sky, etc., the effect of the glowering elements directly subsequent to the crucifixion, the star of Bethlehem, and the child in the manger. Unusual photographic effects are a feature of the picture. A number of portrayals of the paintings of the masters, some of them colored, lend a strong note of distinction. Among them are Correggio's "The Nativity," Angelico's "The Annunciation," "The Pieta," by Michelangelo, and "The Descent from the Cross," by Rembrandt.

The picture's artistic side creates a lasting impression on the mind. Scenes worth being framed could be cut from any one of the eight reels. The mob scenes reach a high point in spectacle, while Jesus' betrayal reaches a melodramatic pitch, and His shameful treatment, borne without a murmur, strikes a note of pathos.

The acting of the picture is splendid throughout. In fact, there is nothing in the whole eight reels which calls for unfavorable criticism. The picture is a powerful, authentic portrayal of the life of Jesus of Nazareth, stirring the spectator deeply and constantly. It has a wide field in the churches. In fact, it is our opinion that the silent dramatization of the life of the Master will be far more potent in the winning of converts than unrestricted evangelism. The exhibitor can bank on the knowledge that "Christus" has already played 1,000 performances to houses in Paris, Rome and Madrid and is still being shown in these cities.

"Within the Law"

Vitagraph Special Feature in Eight and One-half Reels. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

BAYARD VEILLER'S drama of heart-beats and startling, unexpected developments, was fortunate to have fallen into such capable hands as those of director William P. S. Earle for its production on the screen and to such a cast of competent Vitagraphers, with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in the leading parts, that a viewer loses all sight of the theatric. All the big situations which kept the play for such a long time on Broadway have been Vitagraphed in excellent dramatic style, giving the screen version the punch that puts it in the same position in moving pictures that "Within the Law" occupied among the stage offerings of its time. The thrilling moments, the heart-interest scenes, the mystery, the cunning of the representatives of the law pitted against the equal shrewdness of those going strictly against the law but technically within it; all these things, in fact, the sum total of the play's hits are thrown upon the screen for two hours of engrossed entertainment. The picture is one whose every scene makes one more eager for the next.

A very noteworthy and memorable part of the production is the work of the cast, every member of which is suited to the part assigned. Alice Joyce scores a triumph as Mary Turner, the woman with the alarming ingenuity and courage, registering perfectly the near complete gamut of emotions attached to the part and making an appealing as well as graceful and beautiful figure to watch upon the screen. The fans will be glad to note that Alice Joyce is again being regularly starred in pictures after her extended absence from the screen. The name Harry Morey alone is enough to stir up enthusiasm anywhere among the film play-goers. Mr. Morey makes Joe Garson stand out in all of his actions, putting his usual ardor and sincerity into the portrayal. Adele DeGarde scores a distinct hit as Aggie, the happy-go-lucky, witty-tongued girl, the character that those who saw the stage play will remember well. Miss DeGarde is substantially helped by sub-titles, probably from the original manuscript, which are gems of piquant slang. Another among the players deserving special mention is Eugene O'Rourke, who, with a good part, gets plenty of laughs from the audience because his depiction is so unerringly and comically true to life. Billie Billings, Anders Randolf, Walter McGrail, and Robert Gaillard are other players prominent in the support.

The picture is bound to "get over" with audiences who demand high class, intelligently prepared entertainment. It is a credit to Greater Vitagraph. Bayard Veiller's play is widely known, a fact which the exhibitor can count upon to "sell" his patrons. But perhaps the greatest lure, as he knows, are the names of Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, both of whom, we are led to believe, are enormously popular. Settings and general atmosphere are more than acceptable and the photography is up to the Vitagraph standard.

"Whose Wife?"

Gail Kane in American-Mutual Five Reel Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A MELODRAMA, full of rapid action and suspense, is the vehicle chosen to introduce Gail Kane on the Mutual program. Made at the American studios, the story has been picturized with the beautiful photography, especially in exteriors, for which American has a reputation. Rollin S. Sturgeon directed the play from a story by Cecil Henry Bullivant, scenarioized by Doris Schroeder.

The plot is clearly presented and holds the interest. While it depends largely on coincidence and in many respects is unconvincing, the average patron will be too interested in the course of the events to question.

Miss Kane is pleasing, as usual, in the leading role. Edward Peil takes the leading man's role well. Harry Von Meter is a suave, heartless villain. Others in the cast are Lucille Younge, in an unsympathetic role, Ethel Ullman and Frank Richert, who look the part of South Americans, Elizabeth Taylor, Robert Klein, Amelia Widen and Robert Miller, the latter a youngster who always plays so well we wonder he is not given more prominent roles.

The Story: Mary Melville (Gail Kane) marries a rich man, Claude Varden (Harry Von Meter), to please her invalid mother. Varden is called to South America on business soon after the marriage. His wife refuses to leave her mother, a decision which angers Varden. Mrs. Melville dies and Varden, still angry, refuses to answer his wife's cablegrams. On the boat he meets and becomes infatuated with a wealthy South American heiress who is traveling with her brother.

The boat is wrecked and Varden is reported drowned. However, he is saved, and marries the heiress for her money. Later, she commits suicide because of the unhappiness of her marriage. Then Varden returns to the States.

In the meantime, after the death of her mother and the supposed death of her husband, Mary becomes secretary to a young lawyer, John Herrick (Edward Peil). They fall in love and are engaged to marry, when Varden re-appears and kidnaps Mary. The brother of the girl Varden had falsely married has followed and in a struggle is killed by Varden. Mary is a witness to the struggle but escapes. Herrick, who knows nothing of Mary's connection with the affair, defends Varden in the trial. He tries to locate the missing Mrs. Varden as a witness. Finally Mary reveals her identity and upon her testimony Varden is about to be judged not guilty. But before he is freed, he is killed by a secret enemy whose wife he had ruined. Then Mary is free to marry Herrick.

"The Clock"

Franklyn Farnum in a Pleasing Bluebird Comedy Drama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is an entertaining five-reeler, in the rapid, cheerful comedy drama style which always proves popular with audiences of every grade. Franklyn Farnum is the happy-go-lucky hero of the amusing story, written by Aaron Hoffman and scenarioized by Maie B. Havey. William Worthington directed the picture. Production details are satisfactory. Audiences generally will like the story, the hero and the heroine, the latter played in pleasing style by Agnes Vernon, a pretty ingenue. The offering is satisfactory in every way and is as a whole the best Bluebird release shown in some time.

The Story: Jack Tempest (Franklyn Farnum) recklessly squanders the fortune he has inherited. Finally he is told by his lawyer that it will be necessary for him to go to work. Jack, because of his happy-go-lucky nature and his gay life, finds it practically impossible to be on time for appointments. As a result of this failing, he loses a position almost before he has it, and finally loses the girl he has been engaged to, Vivian Graham (Agnes Vernon). Vivian's father, a business man, becomes disgusted with Jack's careless methods, and Vivian herself is wavering in her loyalty.

Then Jack is told that an uncle of whom he had never heard has willed him an income. But with the money goes a clock, which, according to the will, must be wound at ten o'clock each night, with the alarm set for six o'clock. The influence of this clock in changing the hero's habits forms the basis for the rest of the story. He learns punctuality and wins an important position. He wins the girl again. Then she reveals the fact that she had been the mysterious "uncle," and that the clock idea was her own.

"Eternal Love"

First of the "Butterfly" Pictures Released May 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS picture is the first of the five-reel Universal films to be released under the "Butterfly" brand. It proves to be a lavishly staged, beautifully photographed offering, its story dealing with French life in a little town and in the Bohemian quarters of Paris. E. Magnus Ingleton has supplied the story, and Douglas Gerrard has done the directing, as well as played the leading man's role.

Mignon is disillusioned regarding the artist.

The play, which bears a trite and not especially appropriate title, is a pleasing picturization of a love story between a Parisian artist and a peasant girl who poses for him. While such stories have been pictured many times before, the beauty of the settings and the photography, the good directing and acting of this will insure its entertainment value. Ruth Clifford as Mignon does especially good work. Those who support Mr. Gerrard and Miss Clifford are George Gebhart, Edward Clark, Dan Duffy, Miss Marvin and Myrtle Reeves.

The Story: Paul Dachelette, a Parisian artist, visits the little village of Chimay and discovers in Mignon, a girl of the village, an ideal model for a painting. Mignon falls in love with the artist and he promises to come back to her the next summer. Again in Paris, Paul wins fame for the painting of Mignon, but in the gay surroundings, he forgets the girl who patiently waits for him.

Some time later, Mignon reads in a newspaper an account of Paul's injury in an accident. The report is an error, and the girl, believing she can aid Paul, walks the distance to Paris to be with him, only to discover him the center of a wild studio party. Disgusted by his conduct, Mignon runs away. She is befriended by a kind old man, who proves to be a famous artist. Later he dies, leaving her his fortune. She refuses to forgive Paul. He becomes very ill and his friends persuade Mignon that only her forgiveness can save his life. Finally she goes to him. Her love is reawakened and the two are reconciled.

"One Law for Both"

Ivan Abramson's Moral Propagandic Drama in Eight Reels. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

MR. ABRAMSON'S knack of depicting life as it is and pointing out how it should be, is well known. He has a number of moral propagandic dramas to his credit, not the least of these being "Enlighten Thy Daughter." In "One Law for Both," Mr.

Abramson, the author and director, shows us in clear terms that forgiveness is not to be expected on the woman's part any more than on the man's, any more than the prevalent exercise of the usage which says that a wife must come to her husband pure but it matters not how he comes to her, should be tolerated. This theme of the moral equality of sex the author treats of very convincingly in his story, but he jeopardizes interest by spreading the action over too much footage as well as by invoking a torrent of incidents near and remote to the theme and employing a large cast. This unwieldy number of characters acts as a cloud of obscuration over the first reels, which not entirely lifts during the rest of the performance. Members of the audience are heard arguing over the identity of the different characters, and this is not an ideal condition. Yet the fact remains that there is any number of big situations.

The acting to be seen in the film is individually and collectively good; the characters are mostly well chosen as to type and a number of the parts are strongly sympathetic. In the cast are people of no less screen note than Rita Jolivet, Leah Baird, James Morrison, Pedro de Cordoba, Paul Capellani, Helen Arnold, Margaret Greene and others. Rita Jolivet carries away the honors, laurels and all the other things in acting the part of the woman who sells her soul to save and release her down-trodden country-people in a characterization which is strong from first to last. Paul Capellani and Anders Randolf are splendid as the heavies and James Morrison, too, distinguishes himself in the interpretation of his part.

In the maintaining of correct atmosphere, especially that of the Russian scenes Mr. Abramson has been successful. The larger part of his direction of the action shows a comprehensive knowledge of screen requirements, but yet there are situations which do not register well. The continuity in spots is bad and unskillful repetition of ideas that the author wishes to impress on the audience prove to have the effect, at times, of comedy on the audience.

The greatest faults of the picture are its excessive length and lack of clear presentation. It must be said, however, that the purpose of the story is worthy and its moral effect is of the best. The story sets about to impress one morally and it finally does it, but as it now stands, the film needs an operation, with a pair of shears as the surgeon's chief instrument.

"One Law for Both" has a strong human appeal, and this, together with the able acting throughout and the excellent moral significance of the play, put it in the class of better pictures. Inasmuch as the picture will do good wherever shown, besides entertaining, the stamp of approval is to be affixed to it.

viewers in constant interest. The story is centered around two young people, Mary McClinton and Chadwick Anson. Joshua Anson, the owner of the ribbon mill, has high ambitions for his son's future. He promises him on the day he chooses a girl of prominent social position, he will come into control of the Anson fortune. Chadwick, however, has different plans.

Toward the end, matters become so complicated, that it is not until the close of the picture that the real motive of the girl is understood. Miss Ostriche's splendid portrayal of Mary McClinton is to be commended. Arthur Ashley, too, deserves much credit for his fine acting as Chadwick Anson. Edward Elakas, as the crusty old father, and Richard Turner, as the villain, are well cast.

Romaine Fielding directed and Philip Hatkin photographed the picture. Others in the supporting cast are: Clarence Elmer, Robert Forsyth, Julia Stuart and Edmund Cobb.

Willie McDonald is considered by Mary's father as a likely husband for his daughter. Mary and Chadwick meet and at once fall in love with each other, much to the disapproval of both parents.

Seeing that his son is paying too much attention to the foreman's daughter, Joshua Anson, with the help of his secretary, tries to get the girl in a compromising position. Mary suspects them and the plan does not work.

Chadwick and Mary elope and are quietly married in Boston. Thinking the girl had married his son for money, Anson offers her a large sum of money if she will get a divorce. She does so, but after getting the decree and the payment for it, she proposes to Chadwick that they be remarried. After her explanation he consents. Won over by her clever trick, and feeling that she is quite a match for him as an adversary, Anson offers her his home and the place at the head of his table.

for an instant. Miss Dana has many opportunities in the role of Ameia, a young Hindoo girl, and she takes full advantage of them.

The story, taken from Paul Trent's novel, "A Wife by Purchase," is about Ameia, a girl of mixed English and Indian blood. Realizing that she stands in the path of the man she loves, she seeks the only suitable way out. In the support of Miss Dana is Robert Walker, playing the part of a young English surgeon. Augustus Phillips, Henry Hallam, Frank Currier, Marie Adell, George A. Wright and Floyd Buckley are the capable players appearing in the cast.

Claude Drummond, a young English army surgeon, is stationed in India. His friend Jack Alston is commissioner for the English government at a neighboring post. Ameia, a young Hindoo girl, rushes into their midst and claims their protection. Claude will not stand by and see her sacrificed to the priests of the temple of Krishna. He settles the matter by buying the girl for his wife, according to the native law. Under the law of God she now is his wife.

At first he determined that she shall be his wife in name only, but he cannot help falling in love with her charm of manner and unspoiled ways. Claude is summoned to England. He leaves Ameia in India, promising to return for her. Upon reaching home he is surprised to learn that his father expects him to marry Olive Dennison. Claude's native marriage is not recognized in English law. Matters are further complicated by the fact that Olive and Jack are in love with each other. The young people bow to the wishes of their parents and plans are made for the wedding.

Jack obtains a leave of absence and returns to England, accompanied by Ameia. Claude, torn between his obligation to marry Olive and his love and duty to Ameia, decides to make a clean breast of the whole affair. Ameia, in the meantime, realizing that she stands in the way, decides to commit suicide and rid her beloved Claude of her presencee. Claude is able to give her an antidote which revives her.

Major Dennison notices on her finger a ring with his family crest. Upon questioning her he finds that she is his daughter, her mother having been a Hindoo woman whom he had married according to the native custom. Jack and Olive are reunited. Ameia now becomes Claude's lawful wife both according to the law of God and the law of man.

Arbuckle's Second Comedy

Paramount has set May 21 as the release date for "A Reckless Romeo" the second of the series of two reel comedies in which Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle is the star, and which Paramount is releasing to all exhibitors irrespective of the present program system.

So wonderful has been the success of the first comedy, "The Butcher Boy," and so great has been the clamoring for additional pictures of this class, that Paramount has decided to release the second picture one month after the first feature was shown.

Paramount has established in each of their 27 exchanges Arbuckle departments, which are handling these comedies separately from their feature program, and in every section of the country they have broken all previous records for contracts on a two reel feature in the industry.

Save for Al St. John, an entirely different cast of stars will be seen appearing with Mr. Arbuckle in this second picture. "A Reckless Romeo" is the most elaborate production that Mr. Arbuckle has ever produced. The interior settings are without a single doubt the most stupendous that have ever been used in a two reel comedy, and there was nothing left undone by him in the production to make it the most attractive bit of work from an artistic standpoint, that had ever been issued in connection with his name.

Universal's New Serial

Work on the new Universal Film serial, "The Gray Ghost," has begun under the direction of Stuart Paton, who has to his credit, among other great film triumphs, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Voice on the Wire." "The Gray Ghost" is a film adaption of Arthur Somers Roche's story, "Loot" which ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, whose millions of readers will have the opportunity of seeing in picture form this exciting and interesting narrative.

The serial will be in fifteen chapters. The leading roles in "The Gray Ghost" will be played by Priscilla Dean, Emory Johnson, Harry Carter and Eddie Polo, whose work in the serials, "The Broken Coin" and "Liberty" won for him hosts of admirers.

Jackie Saunders—"Newsie"

"Poiper!" Jackie Saunders, is a "Newsie" in her latest photoplay. She plays the role of "Sticks."

"A Bit of Kindling" is the title of the next picture chosen for Miss Saunders. It will be the fourth of the series of features in which Miss Saunders is appearing for Mutual.

Arthur Shirley plays opposite Miss Saunders in the role of a young civil engineer. The supporting cast includes J. P. Wade, Charles Dudley, Ethel Ritchie, Edward Jobson, H. C. Russell, Charles Blaisdell and George Austin.

A Sugar Candy Crash

During the production of "Might and the Man," a comedy drama by Triangle, the scenario called for scenes in a physical culture school.

The school is patronized by middle aged business men who have neglected their health and while the pupils are in the gymnasium taking their lessons sneak thieves enter and try to rob the dressing rooms. The physical instructor throws the thieves out of the windows. In order to get the effect of breaking window glass and not hurt the men Director Dillon made some windows of sugar candy which proved to be hard and brittle and crashed with a realistic effect as the actors were sent hurling through the candy panes.

Mutual Pictures

Woman's Wit—(Two Reels)—Railroad Raiders Series—Signal-Mutual—May 7.—Superintendent Frost discharges Webb and puts Burke in his place. Burke, in an effort to show worthiness of the new position, plans a robbery of the private car in which are the heads of a railroad syndicate who wish to purchase the K. & W., and double crosses his co-conspirators. Burke sends Helen Holmes on the train with money to pay off some of the men, notifying Buck Masters of the money sent and the time of its arrival. The raiders attacked the paymaster and secured the money. Helen, seeing this, puts their automobile out of commission, but they steal an engine and fly at top speed. Helen follows in the inspection car, passes the engine and reaches the switch in time to send the fleeing engine into a warehouse, demolishing it. The railroad employes arrive in time to capture the thieves and the money is turned over to Helen.

The Prodigal Uncle—(Two Reels)—La Salle-Mutual—May 7.—Billy's rich uncle, with whom he lives, has an eye for beauty, and when Billy becomes enamored of Vivian, the dancer, Billy's uncle enters the scene and buys for the little beauty some sumptuous dinners, thinking that is the way to win her. Vivian consumes the truffles but double-crosses uncle. She coaxes Tottie Twinkletoes to aid her, and Luigi, the tenor, adds complications, being in love with both. In the end there are reconciliations and Tottie tags the millionaire while Billy escapes with Vivian.

The Great American Game—(One Reel)—Strand—May 9.—Featuring Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco. Jay Belasco, the "shine" millionaire, makes love to Billie, who is very much taken with her tailor-made hero, believing him to have the million, while aware that her "millionaire" father is really borrowing money to pay the grocery bill. Jay encounters an icy front from the supposed capitalist, but elopes with Billie and marries her, to papa's delight, but the old man blows up when he discovers that Jay's million is moonshine and that Billie will have to wash the dishes herself.

Jerry's Picnic—(One Reel)—Horsley—May 10.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry takes his girl to a picnic and as usual encounters opposition to his undisturbed possession of the lady's good graces. Jerry is disturbed to find that the lady herself is flirtatiously inclined and he decides to play a trick on her, but finds that the woods are full of tricksters and after involving himself in the usual Ovey complications, ultimately slides out of them in the usual Ovey style, right side up and the wheels still turning.

A Vanquished Flirt—(Two Reels)—Vogue—May 12.—There is plenty of room for fun in most beauty parlors. "A Vanquished Flirt" is funny forty ways. It deals with Lawrence Bones, a man about town, who is the sweetheart of Rena Rogers, a dainty demoiselle of the lady barber's union. In the popular barber shop works Paddy McGuire, the champion ladies' bootblack. Here is a chapter of accidents, each one of which is a screech. John Oakes as "The Flirt" is chased from one hiding place to another by Bootblack Paddy. A pair of painters represented by Henry Huckins and Owen Evans, do extraordinary acrobatic things, from a swinging stage outside a tall building and with the aid of an extension ladder.

The Under Dog—(Two Reels)—Jimmie Dale alias The Grey Seal Series—May 11.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. The well-known Tocsin warns Jimmie Dale of a big robbery plan in which an innocent man is to be the victim. Connie Myers kills Luther Doyle, an old miser, after luring him to a room in a tenement house, next to that occupied by Mike Hogan, a construction laborer. Hogan is betrayed by Myers into an innocent participation in the robbery of old Doyle. When the money has been stolen Myers knocks Hogan unconscious and leaves him in the presence of the murdered miser. Jimmie Dale unravels the mystery and frees Hogan, once more revealing the infallibility of "The Grey Seal."

Universal Program

The Doctor's Deception—Laemmle—May 12.—With Wm. Welsh, Wm. Shea, Frank Crane and Leah Baird. Walter Stone consults Dr. Rollins, who secretly loves Stone's wife. He tells the man that he has contracted a terrible disease and must leave for South America immediately. Stone tells his wife that he is going on a business trip. With Stone out of the way, Rollins pretends to Irene that her husband has gone off with another woman. He begs her to go away with him. Douglas, assistant to Dr. Rollins, rushes in to tell Irene that the doctor has deceived them both, that her husband was not sick. She is just in time to catch the steamer and to persuade her husband to return, as it was all a tragic mistake.

Industrial China—(Split Reel)—Powers—May 8.—As seen by Dr. Dorsey. Hankow has its "poverty row" like other industrial towns. The use of coal has been known since earliest times. Cattle are raised in the interior and hides are an important export. Millions of pigs' bristles are exported. The Chinese are very fond of pork, and are experts in curing hams. For thousands of years the Chinese have been clever ship-builders, and there are no better sailors on earth. On the same reel is:

A Barnyard Nightmare.—Neb falls asleep and dreams that he is awakened by a hen. He twists the hen's neck and it runs away. The hen comes to a cow chewing gum, but the cow laughs so hard at the hen that it swallows the gum. Next the hen sees a cat with a mouse. The cat falls into a fit of laughter at the hen's twisted neck and the mouse escapes. Neb's dream ends when the hen jumps on his head in reality.

Universal Screen Magazine—Issue No. 18—May 11.—The reel starts with a new invention which enables the wearer to walk and play on the water. Then we have a nature study of the badger, an animal which is always hunting a victim. Next is shown a large cake bakery which is under the supervision of the New York Health Department. A swimming lesson for the children, posed by Commodore Brown, comes next. The reel closes with an animated sculpture cartoon, by Willie Hopkins, called "Presidential Problems."

Swearing Off—Victor—May 10.—With Milton Sims, Eileen Sedgwick and Dolly Ohnet. Milt has heart trouble and is advised by the doctor to go to the mountains. He writes a tender note to Dolly, from whom he always bought cigars. In the rush he puts the letter into the wrong coat. He tries to return for it, but the two guides won't let him get away. That night Milt has a terrible dream in which he sees his wife with the letter. He knocks the guides over and starts for home. Meanwhile, his wife is just about to open the letter to Dolly when a neighbor calls. Milt rushes into the room and snatches the letter. He tears it up behind her, mentally swearing, "Never again."

The Voice on the Wire—Episode Nine—May 7. With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. This installment is as exciting as the last. The policemen overcome the crooks and take them before Shirley. He questions them and offers $5,000 to the one who will tell him who "The Voice on the Wire" is. Cummings is shot mysteriously by one of the gang, who are afraid he will talk. Shirley pursues the crooks who have taken Reynolds prisoner. He receives a telegram saying this is the last warning.

The Man With the Package—Joker—May 12.—With William Franey and Gale Henry. Bill the janitor has ambitions to become a secret service man. A mysterious person gives him a package. He takes it to Gale, with whom he is in love. Then Milt offers to make him his deputy if he gets the package he is expecting. Bill takes the parcel away from Gale and gives it to Milt. Lillian gets a bomb by mistake and throws it down the register. It explodes and hurls Gale and Bill in the air. Bill is appointed to Milt's place. Gale then offers to love him, but he tells her to go and get a reputation.

One Wild Night—(Two Reels)—Bison—May 12.—With Kingsley Benedict and Gipsy Hart. A party of cowboys come to town with a load of war horses. Having seen the town they retire to a park bench, broke and disgusted. Rose Seeley discovers the five gloomy cowboys and decides to find out if they are real. She lashes the horses and then cries for help. The boys rush out and stop the horses. Rose invites them to ride with her and they all climb in. Reggie is horrified at the sight of the boys, and they in turn are amused at him. Rose tells him that she is going to keep the boys to help entertain the guests. Happy sees two crooks sneaking among the shrubbery. The thieves crawl up the pillar of the porch and take jewels from a dresser. The boys go after them and they all come tumbling down the stairs into the midst of the frightened and astonished guests. Rose explains that the incident was a novel entertainment to surprise her friends. She intends to go back to her old home in Arizona.

The Grip of Love—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—May 8.—With Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely. Lester Jordan goes to Tennessee for a rest. The natives suspect that he is a revenue officer and want to get rid of him. Clem picks a fight with Lester, who easily thrashes the rowdy. Clem is found unconscious. They conclude that he has been shot by Lester. The ignorant people are about to lynch Lester when Clem opens his eyes and says that he must have shot himself. Lester is released. With Ruth he returns to civilization.

The Girl in the Garret—(Two Reels)—Imp—May 11.—With Mary Malone and Jack Nelson. Stephen determines that his daughter, Cynthia, shall have a good education. He sends her to the city to a relative of his, Mrs. Loring. Cynthia is ill treated by the Lorings, who try to make a good showing with the girl's money. Realizing that her father is being swindled, she decides to win her own way. She answers an advertisement as a companion to Mrs. Dunning and is hired. Later Harvey Dunning returns from a trip. The friendship soon ripens into love and they spend their honeymoon at Stephen's farm.

Baseball Madness — Victor—May 8. — With Billy Mason, Orin Jackson and Gloria Swanson. Bill and Pen Points arrive in town. Bill goes to a ball game, where a lunatic hands him some money. He meets an heiress, is accused of theft and taken to jail. The girl finds her purse, so Bill is released. Pen Points finds a detective badge, so decides to become a detective. Pen Points sees Bill leave the home of the girl. He goes into the house and tells the young lady that Bill is crazy. Bill is arrested and taken to the asylum and put in a padded cell.

Captain Marjorie's Adventures—(Two Reels)—Big U—May 13.—Little Marjorie is the pet of the regiment. The fort is at the outpost of civilization, and the Indians are very restless. In an encounter with the Redman, the chief's son is killed. The chief swears vengeance on the men at the fort. While out for a ride with one of the men, Marjorie is kidnaped and taken to the Indian camp. The trooper makes his way back to the fort, where he tells his story. The men are ordered out to rescue the little girl. The white troops are hard pressed, but are relieved in time by the arrival of reinforcements. Marjorie is restored to her parents, to the joy of the whole regiment.

Tom's Tramping Troupe — (Two Reels) — L-KO—May 9.—With Merta Sterling, Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. The tramping troupers arrive at Punkville Centre to give a performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Phil is the man-of-all-work at the theater and takes quite a fancy to the girl who plays Little Eva. It is time for Eva to die, but she is way up above the stage eating candy with Phil. Merta, Phil's wife, interferes and when Eva cannot be found an actor grabs her and tells her to go on and die. She is yanked up into heaven, where she discovers Eva and Phil. She clutches Phil and they fall on the stage together, while Eva laughs at them. The audience is disgusted and the Tramping Troupe is run out of town.

Signs of Trouble — Victor — May 11. — With Jennie Nelson, Nellie Siattery and Paul Panzer. Lucille goes to the Matrimonial Agency to look over the stock. The office boy plays a trick on his boss. He puts the employment agency sign in the window instead of the matrimonial sign. Mr. Brown enters the Bureau by mistake and hires Lucille for a cook. She thinks he is choosing her for his wife. Lucille seizes him and tries to kiss him. Mrs. Brown calls in a policeman, who takes the whole party to the Bureau. Here the mistake in signs is discovered, and apologies take place.

Flames of Treachery — Imp — May 10. — With Clyde Benson, Lois Wilson and Lee Hill. Ford, the Western representative of a big concern, has been carrying on some crooked work. He treats the new clerk with scant courtesy. Working in the office is Ruth Chalmers, and Ford makes love to her. One night Ford asks Ruth to work late. Hatton comes back to the office to find Ruth fighting for her honor. Ford is angry and discharges Ruth, telling Hatton that the head office will take care of him. Ford puts some marked bills in Hatton's desk and then brings the officers to arrest him. Hatton, who is the head of the concern, causes the arrest of Ford, for he has found the evidence of fraud that they sought.

The Lost Appetite—Nestor—May 7.—With Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and Lee Moran. Eddie and Edith find living difficult, owing to the high cost of food. Lee, the country cousin, comes to visit them and nearly eats them out of house and home. Lee insists on going out to breakfast with Eddie. He eats until Eddie has to pawn his watch to pay the bill. Lee begins to understand that his relatives are hard up. He opens his grip and out falls a shower of potatoes. Eddie and Edith are overjoyed at their sudden wealth.

Universal Animated Weekly—No. 70—May 2. —Twentieth Century minuteman stirs citizens to great pitch of enthusiasm by covering same ground as that traversed by Paul Revere—Boston, Mass. High school students shoulder rifles and march for purpose of stimulating enlistments—Chicago, Ill. Youths eagerly enroll in gunnery classes, for instructions in manning armament of submarine chasers—New York City. Junior Naval Reserves prove their efficiency as Federal officials look on—New York City. Missouri militiamen patrol great Eads bridge, spanning Mississippi—St, Louis, Mo. Artillerymen of the Mid-West show efficiency in sham battle on shore of Lake Michigan—Chicago, Ill. Youngsters begin work of cultivating 100 acres of rich Potomac bottoms, loaned to them by the Government—Washington, D. C. Remnants of Canada's Overseas forces celebrate Ypres Day—Montreal, Can. Allied armies gain mile after mile in war's bloodiest battle, the French battering the foe with famous "seventy-fives."—Somewhere in France. Crack gun crew, on "Magnolia," assigned by U. S. navy, sends German submarine to bottom with the nation's first shot of the war. Hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil burn—Fullerton, Cal. Distinguished envoys from France reach United States for discussion of vital issues in prosecution of the war—Washingto, D. C. Cartoons by Hy Mayer.

General Program

The Secret of the Lost Valley—American Girl Series—(Two Reels)—Kalem.—An old man and his daughter live in Lost Valley, and on receipt of a message of distress from them Madge and her followers go to them and bring them back to civilization. The old fellow dies and a chest of jewels is found which had belonged to him. It is then discovered that the girl, long thought to be his daughter, is a princess of royal blood.

Bandits Beware—Ham and Bud Comedy—(One Reel).—Ham and Bud steal a suit case full of clothes from a bold bad man who has stolen them from an automobile. The bold bad man then makes his appearance minus most of the habiliments of civilization, and later is imprisoned in an icebox, which he is robbing while Ham makes love to a pretty girl.

Much Obliged—Black Cat Feature—Essanay—(Screen Time 29 Minutes).—A burglar, in order to have free rein in robbing the apartment of Wayne Chisholm, a newspaper reporter, sends him an anonymous note directing him to be at a certain corner at midnight if he seeks adventure. Through this accidental medium Chisholm meets with the adventure of his life. Hilda Norwood, daughter of a millionaire, had been kidnaped the day previous. As Chisholm arrives at the designated corner, a girl's sidecomb falls at his feet. It bears a note from Miss Norwood announcing that she is a prisoner in the building above him, and pleading for aid. After a series of thrilling experiences, including a desperate battle with Hilda's captors, Wayne succeeds in rescuing her and registering not only a scoop for his paper, but her own sweet gratitude. This more than compensated the reporter for what the burglar got.

Feature Programs

Blue Bird

The Clock—(Five Reels)—April 30.—Franklin Farnum and Agnes Vernon in an amusing play written by Aaron Hoffman. Reviewed in this issue.

Butterfly

Eternal Love — (Five Reels) — Butterfly.—Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford. Paul, an art student, goes to Brittany seeking inspiration. He finds it in the person of Mignon, who consents to pose for him. They become great friends. Upon leaving for Paris he tells her that he will always be true to her. Later Mignon goes to Paris to look for Paul. Learning about his bad reputation she decides to end her life. She is restrained from doing so by Francis Gautier, who shelters her in his home. Paul searches all night for Mignon and the next morning he is found almost dead. Cou-Cou sends for Mignon. At his bedside she forgives him and their troth is plighted. Reviewed in this issue.

Mutual Star Productions

Whose Wife? — (Five Reels) — American—April 30.—First appearance of Gail Kane in Mutual features. Play reviewed in this issue.

Hedda Gabler—(Five Reels)—May 7.—Featuring Nance O'Neil. George Tesman and his wife, lately "Hedda Gabler," have just returned from their honeymoon. Left alone, Hedda fondles her pistols, for which she has an uncanny affection. Married to Tesman, Hedda still lives in jealous watchfulness over Eilbert Lovberg, her former lover, and in her passionate imagination she pictures Lovberg in Tesman's place. Lovberg, a dissipated genius, has fallen under the good influence of Thea Elvsted and has written a valuable book. Hedda discovers Mrs. Elvsted's influence over Lovberg and at once sets out to resume her sway over the man, with the result that Lovberg drinks, loses his manuscript in the course of his revels and is cast into despair, not knowing that Hedda Gabler has the manuscript concealed. Lovberg breaks with Thea Elvsted, his good genius, and shoots himself with one of Hedda's pistols. Hedda, after burning the manuscript of Lovberg's book, shoots herself. Reviewed in issue of May 5.

The Frame-Up — (Five Reels) — May 7.—Featuring William Russell. Jeffrey Claiborne, son of the wealthy manufacturer, Avery Claiborne, decides to abandon the life of ease and go in for real work. He is driving his father down to the office, meanwhile, in his racer, when they see a taxi-driver abusing a young girl. She appeals to young Claiborne for help. He jumps from his racing car to the other machine and leaves his father to handle the racer. All he can do is to keep the racer in the road until the gas gives out and it "dies."

Jeffrey accepts a job as taxi-driver for Mrs. Moir, the mother of Jane-Anne, the girl he has rescued, who owns a fleet of taxis, and who once had connections with the underworld. She has left that life in order that she might raise her daughter in the proper way, but a band of crooks compel her to allow them to use her house as a rendezvous, threatening exposure if she doesn't. Jeffrey has some adventures with the crooks and the police, and in the end elopes with Jane-Anne, only to be arrested at the altar after the ceremony.

He knows the chief of police and exonerates Mrs. Moir of any blame for hiding the criminals, and takes his bride home, where they are given a glad welcome.

Metro

One of the Family—Metro.—With Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. This comedy is about the difficulties of Mr. and Mrs. Marsh in trying to keep a cook. The women all find it too lonesome for them in the country and only stay till their month is up. In despair, Mrs. Marsh consults a friend who advises her to make the girl "One of the Family." She does so, but the girl thinks they are crazy and leaves.

God's Law and Man's—(Five Reels)—Metro.—With Viola Dana and Robert Walker. Claude Drummond, an English army surgeon, is stationed in India. His friend, Jack Alston, is commissioner for the English government at a neighboring post. Claude could not stand by and see Ameia sacrificed to the priests of the temple of Krishna. To settle the matter he married her according to the native law. Under the law of God she was his wife. Claude is called back to England and preparations are made for his marriage with Olive Dennison. The young people care nothing for each other. Olive is in love with Jack. As Jack Alston is leaving for England on a furlough, he volunteers to take Ameia with him. Arriving in England Ameia realizes that she stands in the way and decides to take poison to rid her beloved Claude of her presence. Claude makes a clean breast of the whole affair and says that he has decided to make Ameia his wife by the English law. Ameia is given an antidote which revives her. Major Dennison notices on her finger a ring with his family crest. He finds that she is his own daughter, her mother having been a Hindoo woman whom he had married according to the native custom. Jack and Olive are reunited. Ameia now becomes Claude's lawful wife, both according to the law of God and the law of man. Reviewed in this issue.

The Great Secret — Chapter 18. — Featuring Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne. In this chapter the "Great Secret" is out and the serial ends. Just as Zulph is about to announce his election as leader of "The Secret Seven," the East Indian servant enters and announces that the Great Master has called. Zulph does not believe this and orders him shown in. He is horror-stricken and when the Great Master enters he orders him to sit in an arm chair—whose arms close about him, holding him a prisoner. Strong, Sears, Beverly Clark and Jane Warren enter. Jane then tells the story of the Great Secret. Years before, in Alaska, in order to get the map of a rich mining claim from Clarke, Beverly's uncle, she and Zulph had poisoned the wife of the Great Master and had taken his son with them to New York. The Great Master had become one of the Secret Seven that he might watch their work and one day be revenged on Zulph, the man who had slain his wife and stolen his son, who is none other than Strong. Just at the right moment secret doors and panels in the room open to admit the police, and Zulph and the band are taken. Strong embraces his father and Jane Warren, asks Beverly to name the day for the wedding, and there is all-around rejoicing. At the wedding Wee See is an honored guest.

The Half-Back—(Three Reels)—April 30.—Featuring Yale Boss. Reviewed in this issue. K. E. S. E.

The Ladder of Fame—(One Reel)—Kleine—April 29.—Featuring Harry Watson, Jr., in "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer." Musty Suffer hopes to win the young lady of his affections. She insists he climb the ladder of fame. Musty erects a convenient ladder of fame and attempts to climb it. After each job in which he shows progress he goes back to see of he cannot mount the ladder a little higher than before. It is a hopeless task, however, and Musty, after repeated falls from the ladder, is forced to give up. The girl gives him up.

Spliced and Iced—(One Reel)—Kleine—May 5.—Featuring Harry Watson, Jr., in the Mishaps of Musty Suffer." Cupid—an extremely ungainly one at that—takes a shot at Musty Suffer, and he succumbs to the lure of the couch and family album. His prospective father-in-law succumbs to Musty's cornet playing. Musty in a dream pictures his happy married life, with his loving spouse bringing his slippers and tobacco. But when he is finally enmeshed in the bonds of matrimony he finds his wife insists upon laying in bed reading while Musty is forced to work a foot-power electric fan. He does all the work and the dog occupies his place at the table, while he is compelled to eat dog biscuits off the kitchen floor.

The Saint's Adventure — Essanay — (Screen Time 1 hr. 15 min.)—May 7. With Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson. Rev. Paul Manson, pastor of the fashionable St. Mark's Church, is ordered to the country for his health by his physician. When he reads in his home-town newspaper of his "sudden death," he decides to realize a long-cherished ambition, return incognito, and clean up the slums of his town. He is recognized by Sid Farley as his missing father, Joe Farley. Mary Farley also recognizes him as her husband and he does not deny it. Though he does not live at Mary's home, declaring he is tired of her, he finally sees her good qualities and falls in love with her. He cleans up an evil political ring in the slums, and soon after is recognized as the supposedly dead Rev. Manson. Having attained his ambition in the slums, he remains there, marrying Mary.

Paramount

The Butcher Boy—(Two Reels)—April 23.—Featuring "Fatty" Arbuckle. "Fatty," the butcher boy, is in love with the cashier, who is the daughter of the proprietor. He has a rival for her favors in Al St. John, also employed in the store. "Fatty" sends love notes to his adored one by the cash conveyor and arouses the wrath of his rival and the contents of the store begin to fly. Daddy sends the little girl to a young ladies' seminary, and hither goes "Fatty," arrayed in socks and sandals, blonde wig and sash of blue, the nicest "little girl" that ever entered a seminary. His sweetheart recognizes him and things are going his way, when a Sis Hopkins kind of girl, long and lanky, enters school also. The instructress puts the two new girls in a room by themselves and soon they discover each other. They resume enmities and there is some commotion. The instructress takes "Fatty" to her room and Al's confederates break into the dormitory and kidnap the girl. When "Fatty's" wig gets awry he is ejected from the premises. This works no hardship, for he joins the girl and they go to the nearest minister. Reviewed on page 915, April 28 issue.

Invited Out—(Two Reels)—May 7.—Victor Moore is starred. The story of a clerk in an office, who eats his meals at restaurants and longs to be invited out to a "home cooked" one. He receives three invitations at once, the first one from his employer's daughter. A dress suit must be purchased for this, but Vic decides to make one for himself. He does. When he arrives at the house he finds the dinner postponed, and when he arrives at the home of his friends who gave him invitation number two, he finds them just going out for dinner.

At the house of invitation number three, they are going to have Irish stew, and Vic thinks he is in luck, when a water pipe in the kitchen bursts, spoiling the stew and soaking everything, including Vic. He ends up at a restaurant, a sadder and wiser man.

The Primrose Ring—(Five Reels)—Lasky—May 7.—Starring Mae Murray, with Tom Moore in the cast. The Primrose Ring is the story of a crippled girl who is cured of her affliction and devotes herself to the nursing of younger children who are also subject to the same disease. Because of her wonderful imagination she has been able to keep her cheerful disposition in spite of her suffering, and knowing the advantage of keeping them happy,, she tells the little sufferers fairy stories. She is the beloved of all the children in the hospital.

Time brings changes, and when the old doctor dies and a new man takes his place, the fairy stories are scorned. The gentle nurse, after the altercation, resigns her position and is unable to secure another one. The children clamor for their old favorite, and the young doctor wakes up as to her real worth. This awakening is not alone of his mind, for his heart soon is melted and he learns to love Mary McLean.

Vitagraph

Within the Law—8,500 Feet—Greater Vitagraph.—Featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey. Mary Turner is sent "up the river" for three years by her employer, Gilder, for a theft which she never made. She vows vengeance. On her release Mary attempts to go straight, only to find this made impossible by the vigilance of detectives, who will not allow her to get honest work. She finally falls in with a gang of crooks, led by Joe Garson, who decide to confine their activities to "within the law" operations. They prove that the law will bend without breaking, much to the wrath of the police, who would like to see Mary again in "the cooler." Mary at last last has her vengeance by marrying the son of the man who wronged her. About this time Joe is tempted to go outside the law by a member of his own band, who is secretly working to betray the gang into the hands of the police. He nearly succeeds in his pernicious work when he is mysteriously murdered. Joe, Mary and her husband are among the suspects. How the mystery is cleared up, Mary is reconciled to her husband, and the hard places generally smoothed over, provides the material for an unusual climax.

Chicago News

JOSEPH HOPP, president of the Exhibitors' League of Chicago, attended the successful film convention held the first four days of the month at Minneapolis.

Lee A. Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L. of America, who has been spending some time in Chicago, is in the middle western states, including Minnesota and the Dakotas, addressing local leagues.

Aaron J. Jones, upon his return from New York City, Saturday, announced the purchase by Jones, Linick & Schaefer of "The Barrier," the big story of the Northwest by Rex Beach. This feature film will be released through the Central Film Company in Illinois and Indiana.

The Laemmle Film Service, 17 South Wabash avenue, has installed a new projection room for the convenience of exhibitors. Two motor-driven machines are used. Manager I. L. Leserman will show all the Universal releases at the new "little theater."

Among those who attended the Minneapolis exhibitors convention, held May 1 to 4, from Chicago, was Wm. J. Sweeney, who made the trip with Fred G. Herrington, national organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

The First National Exchange Circuit had its birth at the Astor Hotel, New York City, April 27, and marks the organization for the first time of state-right buyers and exhibitors. Aaron J. Jones adds local interest to this organization having been appointed one of the directors. The other directors are T. L. Tally of Los Angeles, Fred Dahnken, Harry Schwalbe of Philadelphia, Robert Lieber of Indianapolis, E. A. Hulsey of Dallas, and S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater Corporation, New York. The purpose is for the purchasing of big feature films and their release throughout the country, doing away with the bidding system which has run the cost of exhibiting films to an exhorbitant price. More than fifty exhibitors attended the meeting.

At the meeting of the Chicago Exhibitors' League on May 4, Nicholas Michaels, assistant states attorney of Cook county, addressed the members. Mr. Michaels has been in charge of the violations of the law by operators and others in connection with the recent labor troubles. Some real "inside stuff" was learned.

The justly celebrated Geraldine Farrar came into town on Friday of last week and remained a few hours shopping and talking about "Lou." There was no entertainment for her because nobody knew she was coming. She is on her way to the celluloid coast to work in the Lasky studios under the Artcraft wing, along with Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Most of the film men of Chicago and the middle west will remember Charles L. Worthington, former western Fox manager. Mr. Worthing died at his home in New York last week. William Fox was in Chicago when the news reached him via telegram and he took the next train for New York to attend the funeral. Mr. Worthington was a charter member of the Reel Fellows Club and was very popular.

Things are sure moving in Chicago. Pathe no more than gets settled in its new quarters in the Consumers Building, when Universal picks up its office and expands into the fifteenth floor of the same structure. The exposition headquarters have been moved to room 1416 Masonic Temple and the Atlas Educational Film Company has doubled its former space in the Mallers Building, by moving into the Chapin & Gore Building at 63 E.. Adams street Whose move is next?

Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review, was in the city last week and spoke at the motion picture meeting of the national convention of Community Centers. He got into an argument with members of the women's clubs who favor state censorship and the affair grew very interesting. Mr. Cocks admitted that he receives $3,000 a year from the manufacturers and that the work of the board represents the public opinion of the country. In the latter point the women differed with him. Hence the fair and warmer conversation.

It has been well said that hogs, chickens, potatoes and wheat and other farm products will win the war. Following out the activities of the nation in connection with the food supply for the allied armies and the United States, the Atlas Educational Film Company is making several educational films, dealing with such subjects as how to raise chickens, dairy products, corn, etc. Some of these pictures are being made in co-operation with Purdue University.

Not satisfied with organizing a band of music exterminators, the Reel Fellows Club has formed a base ball team. Practice will begin with the balmy days and already a game against Essanay has been arranged.

Following are the Reel tossers, as lined up at present: Manager, J. E. O'Toole; pitchers, Kenneth Fitzpatrick, J. E. O'Toole, L. J. Neiss; catchers, Cresson Smith, W. C. Benson; first base, C. E. Elliot; second, A. R. Wellington; third, C. W. Jones, A. E. Curtis; short stop, F. M. Brockell; right field, H. C. Miller; center, Edward Mordeau; left field, H. A. Spanuth; utility men, Jack Haag, M. G. Watkins, Ralph Proctor, Sidney Abel, Bob Mathis, Bill Sweeney. The club would like to hear from other film men who think they can play ball.

Conditions Have Forced Goldwyn To Surrender

A GREAT leader has stepped in and seized the reins of our business. His word with us is law.

He is dictating how our stories shall be written and produced.

He commands our directors and cameramen and is running our studios with the authority of a commanding General.

He is organizing our exchanges—his hand is in everything. He takes orders from no one. He gives orders to everyone. And all obey him without question.

He even insists upon appearing in each one of our Goldwyn Pictures.

His name is Quality.

Industry Must Aid in War Tax

TEN PER CENT LEVIED ON AMUSEMENT TICKETS—ONE CENT PER FOOT ON FILM

THE UNITED STATES is to raise $1,800,000,000 this year by direct taxation. This means, of course, that every industry and every individual must bear its burden. In a case of this sort, of course, the tax makers turn toward amusement enterprises almost at the first as being a logical field for taxation, based upon the theory that amusements are not necessities of life.

In spite of the fact that European nations have found that places of recreation for the people are practically a necessity during war times, this general attitude still exists. Therefore, the Ways and Means Committee of the United States House of Representatives has included legitimate and motion picture theaters and amusement tickets of all kinds in the general scheme of methods by which to raise the first sum required for the prosecution of the war. Films are also to be taxed one cent per lineal foot.

The Proposed Amusement Taxes

Owing to the many unavoidable readjustments of the taxation plans as drawn up by the Ways and Means Committee, it is practically impossible to state at the present moment just what the final schedule of taxation in connection with amusements will be. There have already been several changes and more are likely to take place. The present plan is to levy a tax of ten per cent on all tickets for theaters and other places of amusement. This applies to tickets for any kind of theatrical performances, all motion pictures, concert tickets, prize fight tickets, and even your dues to clubs. Of course, the public will be forced to pay the tax as it is practically assured that the taxation will be added to cost of the tickets, at least in the cases of the higher priced amusements.

The exhibitors managing the small picture theaters will, however, find it very difficult to increase their price of admission over ten or fifteen cents. This means that the average motion picture theater man has a very serious problem to face. If he is unable to take the tax out of his profits, he must either readjust his programs, raise his price, or if the additional burden proves to be "the straw that broke the camel's back," he must go out of business.

Five-Cent Theaters Exempt

It is understood in the present time that in planning the amusement tax the government has exempted the motion picture theaters that charge an admission of five cents, their idea in this matter following the suggestion at the beginning of the article. These low-priced theaters cater to the great masses and form an invaluable method of recreation. This recreation has been found to be almost a necessity when the minds of the people are burdened with the atmosphere of war.

Motion Picture Men Meet

The proposed war taxes have caused a good deal of agitation in the motion picture industry, and a number of smaller organizations have entered protests to the government. The executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has met to consider the question. It was decided that no action should be taken until the Ways and Means Committee makes its final report. Then if it is decided that some action should be taken the entire executive committee of the National Association will go to Washington. Of course, the question of true patriotism enters into the matter and it is the sentiment of the film men to take no action to embarrass the government, or to avoid their share of the country's tax, which justly belongs with the motion picture industry.

Manufacturers Hold Meeting

More than a dozen leading motion picture producers and their representatives have met at the headquarters of the National Association in the Times Building, New York, to devise means for assisting the government in administering the proposed ten per cent tax on amusements. This was before the one cent per foot tax on films was announced. Of course, the motion picture side of the question only was considered. It is understood that between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 is expected to be raised annually from the proposed amusement taxes. Of this sum the film industry would probably bear about one-half. To meet this situation to producers, whose meeting was presided over by Arthur S. Friend of Paramount, adopted a resolution recommending to the National Association that the public be induced to pay the coming tax by means of a special war ticket to be paid for by the patron in addition to his regular admission ticket. The government has already made plans for this arrangement, which is the same as is at present in practice in Canada.

Film Men in Washington

Among the film men who have been so widely interested in the question as to make special trips to Washington are: Theodore Mitchell and J. J. McCarthy of the David W. Griffith Enterprises, and Pat Powers, general manager of Universal. These men were on the lookout in the interests of the small exhibitors, and report that the attitude of the government officials is one of fairness and consideration for all who are affected. The taxes are based upon the idea that those who can afford to attend in time of war are able to pay the additional cost which the amusement taxes will make.

President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation has made the following statement regarding the war tax on picture houses:

The war tax measure now before Congress proposing a tax of ten per cent on tickets of admission for theaters is in my opinion likely to work an unjust burden upon the public and the picture industry. At this distance I am not sufficiently informed of the conceptions which actuate the statesmen who drafted this measure to analyze them with assurance.

It seems, however, probable that they conceive the motion picture business to be infinitely more profitable than it really is, in all its branches. I am sure that if they had the real truth before them they would find that a tax of ten per cent is more than most motion picture theaters can bear and yet pay a reasonable profit.

It is my hope and understanding that the purpose of the congress is not to put anybody out of business, but simply to raise war revenue. That being true I fear that the ten per cent picture theater admission tax will fail of its purpose and at the same time strike a serious blow at the most wholesome, low priced popular pastime of the people.

I must again turn back to my often repeated declaration that the motion picture is simply a form of publication, an expression of the press, a form of thought transmission using pictures instead of printed words. It has long been a theory of the people of these United States that the press was an important public servant. I wish very much that this true view of the purposes and functions of the motion picture might be more forcefully borne into the minds of our legislators in all legislative bodies.

"Pictures More Than Entertainment"

It is too often argued that the motion picture is purely an entertainment—it is practically always so treated by the governments, city, state and nation. It is no more entirely a medium of entertainment than the typical newspaper with its funny columns, its comic cartoons and advice to the love lorn. The motion picture serves the people and their government. The picture's rights demand a degree of appreciation and conservation.

I am sure that I am as patriotic and sincerely in support of the government as any citizen may be, but I am sure that the government may well consider a somewhat lighter tax upon the motion picture theater, if proportionate justice is to be had.

"Follies" for Military Relief

The American Military Relief Association is having produced under its auspices and for its benefit a series of one-reel comedies known collectively as "Follies of the Week" under the direction of Cullom Holmes Ferrell. Each week will see a travesty upon some one of the popular topics of the day featuring some well known and famous stage star. The first "Folly," for example, features Raymond Hitchcock, the musical comedy star, supported by Mrs. Gertrude Busch and Miss Margery Poir, both of whom are appearing with him this season in his musical comedy success, "Betty."

The purpose of these one-reel "Follies" is to provide a fund to be administered by the American Military Relief Association for the benefit of the men who have gone to the front, in the purchase of candy, cigars, tobacco and other comforts not supplied by the United States Government.

These one-reel comedies or "Follies" should have a remarkable circulation, for in addition to being good comedies on some popular and generally talked about subject of the day, they will feature some nationally known theatrical star and will also have a popular appeal, for in almost every neighborhood there will be at least one man who is serving with the colors either in the Army or Navy, and his neighbors and acquaintances will be glad to feel that at least some part of their theater money is doing some good without any additional expense.

These pictures are being distributed by Titan Pictures Corporation, of which Frederick Russell Clark is president. Titan Pictures Corporation is located on the twelfth floor of the Century Building, Adams and State Streets, Chicago.

The release date of the first "Folly", featuring Raymond Hitchock, is set for early June. It is entitled "Bucking the High Cost of Living." Advance bookings and requests for territory reservations are now being received by Mr. Clark.

CANADIAN FILM TAX

Exhibitors of U. S. A. May Meet Conditions Similar to Those Now in Force in Provinces of Ontario and Quebec

There is a film tax in force in the Province of Ontario in Canada which is similar to the one proposed by the National Government at Washington. W. A. Bach, who is well versed in Canadian film matters, gives the following version of how the tax works out.

There is also a similar tax in the Province of Quebec, but as results in Ontario are more clear cut it serves as a better illustration of what might be expected of the above plan if put into force in this country. While the plan of taxing as proposed in Washington includes the affixing of a stamp to each ticket, the Canadian authorities made it necessary for every person entering a theater to purchase an additional ticket with their regular admission. These tickets, which were printed and sold to the theater owners directly by the Canadian government, range in value from one to five cents. The scale on tickets is as follows: For every ticket up to fifteen cents a one cent war tax ticket must be purchased, from 15 to 25 cents a two cent ticket, and from 25 cents up to $1 a five cent ticket. These tickets are sold in rolls and it is one of the government regulations that these tickets must be deposited in choppers which completely destroy them, so as to prevent their further use.

At first the exchanges distributed, or asissted in distributing these tickets, and were allowed a 2 per cent commission. Later, however, when this commission was reduced to one per cent many of the exchanges dropped out. The recent report of Provincial Treasurer the Hon. Mr. McGarry for Ontario, states that more than $300,000 was made in this manner during the first six months, as per the above information and that he expects the total yearly income will be well over $600,000.

However, while this scheme has been found to be most profitable financially the Government had much difficulty and received many complaints from theater men because of its clumsiness and of the difficulty in regulation and collection, especially in the larger houses, where the crowds handled are great. Therefore the provincial government of Ontario is now considering a plan whereby tax may be levied directly on the theater man, giving a portion of their gross receipts. Of course, in the end the patrons will pay for this war tax, as the theater man will add one or two cents as it may be to his admission, but instead of using another ticket, will simply hand over a certain cash account to the government.

During the last six months in which this law has been in force I talked to many theater managers in Ontario and while some in the smaller houses stated that the tax had interfered with their business, it was generally considered that the tax, while it had made an appreciable effect, had not interfered seriously with business.

New Selig Comedies

William N. Selig announces the forthcoming release in K. E. S. E. service of a number of feature comedies each two reels in length and founded on the famous plays written by Charles Holt. There will be ten of these comedies in all and they will be released every other week in K. E. S. E. service beginning Monday, May 28.

Chicago Film Men Notice

There will be a big time at the next get-together of Chicago film men when they meet at the Reel Fellows' Club on Friday evening, May 11. The slogan of the Reel Fellows, "Make Chicago the Film Center," is being carried out in good shape. The following meetings of the windy city film men will be devoted to boosting the various film companies, in connection with the entertainment, which is found at every meeting of the club.

The meeting on May 11 will be called Universal Night, and practically all of the Chicago Universal employes and officials will be present. There will be a buffet lunch served and all kinds of refreshing entertainment.

Numerous stunts for the coming convention will also be discussed, and there will be some efforts made to console Treasurer Harry C. Miller, the well-known Chicago exhibitor, for the loss of his Elgin car, which was stolen last week from in front of the Covent Garden Theater.

Selig Changes News Service

"The Selig World Library" is the title of a new film service announced by the Selig Polyscope Company. The Selig World Library will supersede the Selig-Tribune. The first release will be May 16, and the film will be released every Wednesday thereafter instead of twice weekly.

William Franey is being featured at Universal City is a one-act comedy entitled, "Young Lochinvar, 1917."

Funny Sunshine Fat Man

Tipping the scales at three hundred and sixty pounds, Floyd Williams, principal comedian appearing in the latest releases of "Sunny Films," made by the Sunshine Film Corporation of Chicago, is truly one of the fattest fat fellows in films. In addition to that, he is funny,—so much so that several of the exchanges of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, which distributes all of the Sunshine productions, have ordered additional prints of the last two releases, "Some Baby" and "A Forceful Romance." Williams is very ably supported by a very thin lady, Miss Rose Burkhardt, who makes any perfectly good set of scales groan with her three hundred and forty-one pounds.

The American Standard has been handling thirty-two prints of each of the Sunshine comedies, but is planning to increase its order to fifty prints within the next two weeks, all of which speaks exceptionally well for as new a concern as the Sunshine Film Corporation.

Civil War Setting

One of the most charming plays that has been developed in the Triangle-Ince studios in many weeks is now nearing completion with Enid Bennett in the star role.

Miss Bennett has had the unique experience of stepping from the speaking stage of Australia and New York into immediate popularity on the screen that bears all of the indications of being both genuine and permanent. In this new play Enid will appear as the grand-daughter of a veteran of the Civil War.

Second Warren Production

Edward Warren, producer and director of the "Warfare of the Flesh," has started work on the second production to be released under his own trademark. He has engaged Rene Guissard, formerly of the Triangle and Goldwyn forces, as his cameraman and Henry Allen Farnum as his technical director. A studio has been leased for a long term and work is progressing rapidly. The new scenario is by Rufus Steele, of the Saturday Evening Post staff and author of many big feature plays.

Director Lynn F. Reynolds and his Universal Company, including Myrtle Gonzales, George Hernandez and Jean Hersholt, are at Santa Cruz Island, off the coast of Santa Barbara, where a number of scenes are being filmed for the Reynold's production, "Back to the Primitive." Upon the return of the company from Santa Cruz Island it will go to Palm Canyon for additional scenes.

Screenshine

By Mel

SOME film men may have gotten it into their heads that there is no fun at the National Exposition. There were a number of funny things there last year.

We shook hands with some of them. According to Fred Hartman, the funniest thing at the Coliseum last July was the gaudy green parrots that Ralph Proctor had in the Metro booth. These old birds were tethered near the mouth of a phonograph system, through which Proctor and his assistants would call out such phrases as, "Have you seen the latest Metro picture?" "Polly likes Metros," etc.

Everybody thought that these wise old birds had been trained to advertise Metro.

Is is said that Ralph is to have a trained oyster at the big show this year.

And among the other animals at the show will be a well trained editor in the Motography booth.

FILM MEN BANQUET

There was a film men's banquet at the College Inn on the evening of April 30. The Vitagraph Company, impersonated by Sid Abel, entertained W. C. Quinby, of the Jefferson Theater, Fort Wayne.

The banquet was held right next to the rail of the skating rink, where the beauties show their agility.

We know, for we were there.

The Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago has been eating beef steak—and with horses so high, too.

Maurice Rubens, the live wire exhibitor from Joliet, wants a rifle range at the Exposition—from one end of the Coliseum to the other, with some of Uncle Sam's boys to show the public how to shoot. Rubens, who used to be a gunner on the Battleship "Texas," has guaranteed to show all the big producers how to make a hit every "shot."

Rube's idea is very good, the only trouble with it being that there would be some very poor shooting done, and as a result there might be some one hit in the Coliseum. It wouldn't do to have a spectator or film man shot—or even half shot.

HERE'S YOUR CHANCE!

Currycomb your cerebellum a bit and send in some suggestions to the Exposition Committee, Masonic Temple, Chicago, and tell 'em how to pull the crowds to the big show in July.

If you don't know what to do with the $50 first prize, send it to Motography Mel.

That would put some sunshine in Screenshine.

The prize P. A. line of the past week is credited to the Metro publicity purveyors:

"CARMEL MYERS SUPPORTS HAROLD LOCKWOOD IN 'THE HAUNTED PAJAMAS'"

We'd like to be president of something so we could start a paper, have it sanctioned by our subjects and use that to fill up our advertising pages.

Politics is pretty useful after all.

On the left is "The Crimson Dove," with Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge. The other charming pictures are Alice Brady in "Maternity."

These are but two of the unusual productions to be released by World in the close future. Alice Brady in "Maternity" especially is a picture that will enjoy a wide appeal.

Coming World's Announced

World-Pictures Brady-Made are now practically completed up to the release of August 13 next. There are fourteen of these between May 14 and the date already mentioned. The list follows:

May 14, Muriel Ostriche and Arthur Ashley in "Moral Courage;" May 21, Ethel Clayton and Montague Love in "Yankee Pluck;" May 28, Alice Brady in "Maternity;" June 4, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Dion Titheradge in "The Crimson Dove;" June 11, Robert Warwick and Gail Kane in "The False Friend;" June 18, Montague Love, Gerda Holmes and Evelyn Greeley in "The Brand of Satan;" June 25, Ethel Clayton and Edward Langford in "The Stolen Paradise;" July 2, Alice Brady in "The Divorce Game;" July 9, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge in "The Price of Pride;" July 16, Kitty Gordon in "The Beloved Adventuress;" July 23, Arthur Ashley, Gerda Holmes and Edward Langford in "Partnership;" July 30, Alice Brady in "A Self-Made Widow;" August 6, Ethel Clayton and Milton Sills in "Chasms;" August 13, Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge in "The Waster."

This list is supplemented by the four French photoplays directed by Louis Mercanton and purchased for America by World-Pictures to be published as follows:

May 28, Regina Badet and Albert Signer in "Atonement;" June 11, Susan Grandaise in "A Naked Soul;" June 25, Regina Badet and Paul Guide, in "The Golden Lotus;" July 16, Susan Grandaise, Albert Signer and Paul Guide, in "When True Love Dawns."

"These plays," said Director General William A. Brady, "possess a special value at the present time when the American market is receiving little or no material from Europe. I will not say they are better picture plays than we make in this country, for I honestly feel that we lead the whole world.

"But the four French photodramas which we are passing along to our regular program exhibitors are entirely new in their scenic surroundings as well as the acting personalities they introduce. This makes contrast and variety and is sure to be welcome to the public. Some of the exteriors in the imported plays are really marvellous in scenic beauty—and it is a totally different type of scenery from what we have in this country; not more magnificent, to be sure, but fresh and novel."

Theodore Roberts and Wallace Reid have signed contracts with Jesse L. Lasky to appear in Paramount pictures for two more years.

Davis Resigns from Universal

H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City, has resigned from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and his resignation has been accepted by the board of directors. As an evidence of the regret with which the company has accepted Mr. Davis' resignation, the following extracts from a letter to Mr. Davis, are presented. The letter was written by R. H. Cochrane, vice president of the University Film Manufacturing Company.

This is a sort of good-bye letter in which I want to say, first of all, that I am mighty sorry we could not induce you to stay with the company and go on with your good work. It was only when you seemed to sigh for other worlds to conquer that I finally cast my vote with the others to accept your resignation.

When I look back eighteen months and recall what rotten conditions prevailed in our western studios; and then draw a contrast with the present high class organization, I realize that you have accomplished the impossible and I want to thank you and congratulate you not only on my own account but on behalf of the company.

The fact that you have actually reduced our costs so sharply in the very face of advancing prices on all sorts of labor and material is a great big thing; but a still bigger one is the fact that you have improved our quality so remarkably while chopping down the costs. So much for the dollar viewpoint.

You are leaving with a one hundred per cent record of achievement. That's pretty fair.

Strickland with Vitagraph

The sales force of Greater Vitagraph's St. Louis branch has been augmented by the recent acquisition of H. E. Strickland, formerly of General Film. Mr. Strickland, a film solicitor of wide experience, will handle, for Greater Vitagraph, the same territory that he covered for his former employers, which includes portions of Illinois, Kentucky and Indiana.

"Hell's Gridiron" is the attractive appellation bestowed upon a lumber camp to which the young clergyman hero of "The Crimson Dove"—played by Carlyle Blackwell—is assigned as official soul-saver. At first it looks as though the minister would have to "beat up" the entire community in order to salvage their future lives, and he makes a very fair beginning before they believe him. He wins out at the finish.

Exposition to Double Last Year's Show

EXHIBITORS ELECT DELEGATES TO BIG CHICAGO SHOW JULY 14 TO 22

THE authorities on the coming Motion Picture Exposition and Convention in July state that this year's show will be more than twice as large as last year's show. The 1917 event will be held, as is now well-known to the trade, in the big Coliseum in Chicago, July 14 to 22, inclusive.

Last year's exposition yielded a gross income of $51,000. Exposition Director Ludwig Schindler is confident that the gross of this year's show will run well above $100,000.

$15,000 in Contracts Received

The hustling manager of the seventh National Exposition and Convention is again stirring up all sorts of activities in the Windy City, following his strenuous two weeks' work in New York. He brought back contracts representing $15,000 worth of space and reservations for $10,000 more, which the exposition directors can depend upon with absolute certainty. The following contracts for space in the Coliseum have all been approved and locations of the various booths assigned and confirmed:

MOTOGRAPHY, Exhibitors Trade Review, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Moving Picture World, Typhoon Fan Company, National Carbon Company, Pathe, World Film Corporation, Enterprise Optical Company, Fox Film Corporation, Amusements, Universal Film Corporation, Westinghouse Electric Company, Motion Picture News, Selznick Pictures Corporation, Morning Telegraph, Cahill-Igoe Company, Exhibitors' Herald.

Practically all of the arrangements have been completed for a big style show at the exposition in connection with the extensive vaudeville performance. The latter will occur twice each night and will be in charge of Hamilton Coleman, the dramatic coach and well-known exploiter of Chicago's La Salle Theater. According to the present plans there will be twenty attractive young women used at the style show as fashion models. These will appear in a separate performance each evening.

Exhibitors' Leagues Elect Delegates

Branches of the Motion Picture League of America in several different states have notified the exposition directors and MOTOGRAPHY that they have already elected delegates to the coming convention. W. J. Sweeney, national secretary, who attended the recent convention at Minneapolis, has stated to MOTOGRAPHY that there will be a big delegation of exhibitors and film men from Minneapolis and the Northwest. "The exhibitors up there are very enthusiastic over the big show in Chicago," said Mr. Sweeney, "and we can be sure that they will swarm down here in large numbers and will make themselves heard, both on the floor of the convention and in the general exposition activities."

New Exposition Headquarters

The exposition and convention committee are now well established in the new headquarters at 1416 Masonic Temple. These are the headquarters of the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. These quarters are very roomy and will enable the various committees to transact the business of the big exposition with dispatch. All inquiries regarding space should be sent to this address.

The exposition committee has placed an order for five thousand poster stamps well designed and finished in two colors. These will be used on all mail and parcels of the various branches of the industry. The exposition committee will be glad to supply these stamps to anyone who may care to use them. Send your request for these to Ludwig Schindler, exposition manager, 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago. Secure some now and use them on all your mail.

Needless to say every exhibitor and film man in the United States is personally and cordially invited to attend the coming show, which will without doubt be the greatest event of its kind ever held, not only by the picture industry but by any of the industries of the United States. Make your plans now to be in Chicago, at least part of the time, between July 14 and 22. You will be enabled to aid in making film history, in deciding important legislation and will take part in festivities which you will long remember.

"Betty Be Good"

"Betty Be Good" will be Jackie Saunders' next star production for Mutual. The production is under way at the Horkheimer-Mutual studio, Long Beach, California. Arthur Shirley plays opposite Miss Saunders. Captain Leslie T. Peacocke appears in the role of her father.

Jackie plays the role of a millionaire's daughter. Tiring of her life of luxury, she decides to leave home. She drives through a giant facsimile telegram, nine by twelve feet, to avoid meeting her father and emerges in a barnyard, where her life as a runaway begins.

Mutuals Popular in "Los"

Six motion picture houses in Los Angeles were showing six different Mutual features for the week of April 16.

"The Gentle Intruder," with Mary Miles Minter, at Tally's; "The Cure," with Charlie Chaplin, at the Garrick; "Dulcie's Adventure," with Mary Miles Minter, at the Liberty; "Innocence of Lizette," with Mary Miles Minter, at the Iris; "A Dream or Two Ago," with Mary Miles Minter, at the Laughlin; "Beloved Rogues," with Kolb and Dill, at the Academy, and "Shorty Turns Wild Man," with Shorty Hamilton, at the Liberty.

Universal on the Way

With "The Phantom's Secret," a Butterfly, five-reel feature of mystery and romance at its head, the program of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, for the week of May 14, offers an unusually strong bill for the exhibitor.

The story has to do with the most dreaded and notorious crook in Paris, known to the police of two continents as "The Phantom," and whose ramifications carry him into many tight situations, and who in the solution of them resorts to underworld strategy of the most interesting sorts.

"To Oblige a Vampire," a Nestor Comedy featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, will also be released on May 14.

"USE CUSTOMERS' FIRST NAMES"

These Are the Instructions of Albert W. Goff to the Branch Managers of the Universal V. L. S. E. Service

The active head of the V. L. S. E. sales force, Albert W. Goff, has issued instructions that the twenty-seven branch managers of V. L. S. E. must become personally acquainted with every exhibitor in their respective territories.

The detail of the plan to make the branch managers acquainted with the men with whom they do business and with their prospective patrons has been intrusted to Edward Auger, traveling manager for the Eastern District, and H. D. Naugle, traveling manager for the Western District.

In issuing the instructions to his direct assistants Mr. Goff made it plain that he considered it the very first duty of the branch managers to know the exhibitors if possible well enough to call them by their first names. Mr. Goff said:

In every other merchandizing line a branch manager knows his customer almost as well as he knows himself. He knows the peculiar traits of his customers. He knows if one drinks and if another is a prohibitionist. He knows just which are single and which are married. He knows the childless from those who have children. He makes it his business to know when there is sickness in the family of any of his customers. As a matter of fact he knows all about his customers.

Our branch managers must look at their business from exactly the same viewpoint but they must go even farther. Not only must they know all about the exhibitor and his family, but they must know the territory in which his theater is located. If a branch manager knows the territory and the class of persons residing in a territory surrounding a theater he certainly is in a position to suggest the picture that will make the best box office return for that theater. It may be that an exhibitor is losing money through injudicious booking. If such is the case we want our branch managers to be in a position to advise him as to the kind of pictures he should book to change his loss to a profit.

The fact that you become intimately acquainted with the problems of the branch managers is almost as equally as important that the branch managers get personally acquainted with the exhibitors.

There are spots where our service may be improved. It is likely that the branch managers and yourselves will find certain localities to which no general rules of business will apply. If such is the case we want special reports on these conditions in order that we may endeavor to formulate rules to fit the conditions.

In issuing the orders Mr. Goff was emphatic in saying that it did not forecast any change either in V. L. S. E. policy or in the personnel of the organization but that the new plan was being put to the trial in order to bring the entire organization to one hundred per cent efficiency.

Chicago Film Folk Stage Benefit

A large number of film people have been very much interested in the American Theatrical Hospital which has been built in Chicago for the benefit of any persons connected with motion pictures or the stage. The institution gives help to every one, and its services are free for those who are unable to pay.

For the benefit of this praiseworthy enterprise there will be held the Fifth Annual Theatrical Revel and Benefit at the Auditorium Theater, Chicago, on Sunday afternoon, May 20. A large number of prominent actors and entertainers will take part.

The committee handling the big performance include, besides many judges and other prominent citizens of Chicago, a large number of well-known film men, including Alfred Hamburger, chairman of the press committee; Joseph E. Hopp, William J. Sweeny, reception committee; Aaron Jones, Bryant Washburn, Nell Craig, entertainment committee; Ralph Kettering, Walter Hildreth, Tom Burke, press committee. Joseph E. Hopp, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' League and also chairman of the auditors committee.

Those who are interested in the big performance on May 20 should secure their tickets at once from the Ziegfeld, Fine Arts, McVickers or Colonial Theaters. The leading stars from pictures, the stage, musical comedy and vaudeville will take part in the performance. General admission is to be one dollar, with gallery fifty cents.

Needless to say the hospital has been doing work of inestimable value to the people in films and on the stage. The building was erected at a cost of $150,000. It is located at 850 Irving Park boulevard, Chicago. The officers of the Hospital Association are: Hon. Charles N. Goodnow, president; Alfred Hamburger, vice-president; Hon. John M. McGoorty, treasurer; Miss Lillian M. Cody acting secretary.

Among those who have personally equipped rooms at the hospital are Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and Alfred Hamburger of the Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises.

Film Brings Recruits

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Greater Vitagraph's war preparedness photoplay, continues on one triumphant march across the country, obtaining hundreds of recruits for the army, navy and marine corps as it goes, according to daily reports received at the headquarters of V. L. S. E.

The enthusiasm aroused at the Ziegfeld Theater, Chicago, Illinois, has been so great that the army recruiting officers have requested that the run be continued. Recruiting officers stationed at the theater from the Navy Department and from the Illinois National Guard report a large number of enlistments and also report that the theater enlistments are of far higher calibre than those received from any other source.

On May 1st the First Illinois Infantry, accompanied by a band of fifty pieces, attended the theater in a body.

That which applies to Chicago applies to all of the large western cties. In Kansas City the picture opened at the New Center Theater in a pouring rain, breaking all attendance record, notwithstanding the weather. Two navy recruits were signed the very first night.

Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, announces that he now has ten companies playing his big film productions as road attractions touring the States of California, Nevada and Arizona.

Tell Us About Your House

Tulsa, Oklahoma, April 24, 1917.

Gentlemen:

I read Motography every week and like it very much. I mention your paper in answering advertisements.

Enclosed you will find a full description of my New Liberty Theater, and you may use it if you wish to.—William H. Stricker, 10 South Norfolk St., Tulsa, Oklahoma.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

A Tin Can Show

THE ultra valuable potato has become the price of admission to pictures in Portland, Indiana. However, in Portland vegetables are not all that are valuable, for in order to gain entrance to the small boys' paradise the youngsters must also provide the sum of ten cans.

William H. Ludy, manager of the Theatorium Theater, writes that he held a tin can day on which the school boys paid their admission by a potato and ten small tin cans apiece. From the picture it is evident that one youngster must have found it too hard work to rustle for ten small cans, and so brought a dish pan. Doubtless this answered just as well, for there is no face in the picture which shows disappointment.

Manager Ludy celebrated "Clean-up Week." Potatoes and tin cans taken in "trade" by the Theatorium Theater of Portland, Indiana. Everybody can now see the pictures free by cultivating his war garden.

The reason for the cans' appearance is rather doubtful, although it seems that there was a clean-up week in Portland, and that might have something to do with it. Mr. Ludy adds that it was a good stunt, and brought him lots of publicity, and besides cost nothing, for the city carted the tin cans away to the dump and he kept the potatoes.

This kind of co-operation with the community is the best sort of thing for a theater. It creates solid good will and pulls the teeth of reformers and censors.

Theater in Manayunk, Pa., Changes Ownership

Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing-director of the Stanley Company, of Philadelphia, and one of the firm of Mastbaum Brothers and Fleisher, has announced that all details had been completed and arrangements made for the transfer of the ownership of the Empress Theater, of Manayunk, Pennsylvania, and that this popular picture house will hereafter be under the direction of the Stanley Company, of which Stanley V. Mastbaum, Messers. Sablosky and McGuirk and Alexander R. Boyd, will be the new owners. The amount involved in the change of ownership is said to be two hundred thousand dollars, the theater being located in the most valuable space in this popular territory. Its former owner and manager was Alfred Greenfield, who personally represented himself in the transfer.

The Empress Theater is practically a new house and its improvements are all modern in every detail. It has been one of the principal centers of entertainment since it was first opened and its clientele is large. It is stated that hereafter the house will be under the direction of the Stanley Company and the same up-to-date methods which have made all the theaters under its management favorite resorts for lovers of pictures will be at once utilized to increase the policy of this place. This will be done at once and one of the things that will carry strong appeal to the residents will be the screening of photoplays of the highest class, none of which have ever been presented in this part of the city. This house, as are all others that are owned by the Stanley Company, will be under the personal supervision of Managing-Director Stanley V. Mastbaum.

Fine Organ in Iowa House

The Strand Theater, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has a new $15,000 pipe organ. The instrument is known as the Foto-Organ and is the first of its kind installed anywhere in the United States outside of California, where it was manufactured by the American Photo Player Company. It is installed in the two upper boxes, the swell organ on the left-hand side of the stage and the great organ on the right-hand side of the stage. It can be played by hand the same as any pipe organ, from the regular organ console in the orchestra pit.

The opening took place with a special organ recital by G. H. Fairclough, organist and director of the boys' choir in St. John's Episcopal Church at St. Paul. There were many musical critics in attendance, who pronounced the organ one of the finest they had ever heard.

Fine New Oklahoma House

A new photoplay house, the New Liberty Theater, is being built at Sand Spring, Oklahoma, by William H. Stricker, of Tulsa, Oklahoma. The house will be up to date in every respect and will be one of the finest in that part of the country when completed. Fabry and MacDonald are the architects and Latermore and Rouch are the contractors. The building alone will cost twenty-five thousand dollars.

Stricker announces that he wishes to hear from film companies and different firms who advertise in Motography, as he has bought only from concerns which advertise in the trade papers.

He forwards a clipping from the Tulsa Times, Tulsa, Oklahoma, in regard to his theater, which reads: "The building will be a two story structure, 40x135 feet. The face of the building to be of dark brown carved pressed brick, trimmed in terra cotta, relieved with numerous panels, plaster casts, etc. The lobby to be of marble to a height of six feet. From the marble wainscoating to the ceiling the walls will be deep paneling in terra cotta, each panel to be hand painted. Then entire lobby floor to be tiled with 12 inch border.

"Upon each side of the ticket booth will be large doors, with large mirror panel in each door. Immediately behind the ticket booth will be large doors with double panel. There will be a spacious rest room for ladies, which will have lavatory and other conveniences such as a window that faces the picture. From the entrance to the curtain the floor will have a seven foot drop. The floor will be of cement with an aisle on each side of the theater which will have plush opera chairs of the very latest design. An orchestra pit with a seating capacity of twenty musicians will be entirely concealed from the audience. As manager Stricker does not expect to run his house as a vaudeville house a spacious stage will be done away with, leaving enough room for the few features he will handle for his patrons.

"The ceiling of the room will be paneled and furnished in masonic designs. An indirect lighting system will be used. Sixteen oscillating fans suspended from the walls will supply a breeze, and a large exhaust fan will be used to ventilate the auditorium.

"Leading off the stairway at the first landing will be the theater office and operating room. The operating room will be the largest in the state and will be lined with the best of fireproof matter. It will contain three Simplex Machines with motor attachment."

The theater is expected to be in running order on the fifteenth of May at the latest.

Motography has for some time been loaning the cuts it runs in its columns free to exhibitors for use in their programs and other printed matter. The above is an example of the use of one of our half tones. The cover shown here would, like many another, be only mediocre and uninteresting with type alone. The picture (of Arline Pretty) immediately makes the program attractive and a more valuable article as a representative of the theater which uses it. Write Motography, Chicago, when you see a cut you would like to use.

Theater Takes Valuable Church Property

Negotiations have been closed by Frank G. Hall for the purchase of the Third Presbyterian Church at Nos. 905, 907, 909 and 911 Broad Street, Newark, New Jersey, where he will erect one of the largest theaters devoted to the showing of pictures in the world.

Mr. Hall, of Newark, a prominent man in the theatrical and motion picture business, is president and general manager of the Rialto Theater Realty Company, building the new theater and is also president and general manager of the Rialto Theater Company which will operate the big playhouse under his personal supervision.

Mr. Hall is at the head of seventeen corporations handling theatrical and picture enterprises, among which are the Strand Theater of Newark and the Civilization Film Corporation. He recently created a sensation in theatrical circles by buying outright the latest big Edgar Lewis feature production, "The Bar Sinister," without seeing it.

The Rialto, as the new auditorium will be called, is planned upon a scale so elaborate that no city in the country will have a theater that excells it. With a seating capacity of more than 3,000 and a monster stage with enormously large dressing rooms adjoining it, the Rialto will be a fit place for the suitable presentation of the special feature production for which it is being built. Space for an orchestra of large proportions promises music of unusual excellence, while lighting and stage effects are being planned which will make possible the presenting of big pictures on a scale never attempted before, including as it does the staging of elaborate prologues to the screen dramas, in keeping with the subjects treated and especially written and rehearsed to surround the audience with the atmosphere of the picture before it appears upon the screen.

Associates with Frank G. Hall in his latest enterprise are some of the most prominent men of Newark, many of whom are interested in his other ventures, all of which are proving unusually successful. Among Mr. Hall's other activities are the United States Theater Company, The U. S. Amusement Company and Frank G. Hall Productions, Inc.

The brokers in the transaction by which Mr. Hall acquires the Third Presbyterian Church property are Applebaum and Applebaum Brothers. The transaction includes the taking over by Mr. Hall of the handsome store and office building on Broad Street now nearing completion. Work upon the new theater will begin immediately.

The "setting" for the Hunt Club Ball in the latest Triangle play, "Wild Winship's Widow," in which Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton as star, is one of the most elaborate scenes ever depicted upon the screen.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

EXHIBITORS from several different states have written to Motography asking questions about the coming National Convention to be held in Chicago, July 14 to 22, and stating that they are planning to be present. The attitude of these theater men is a good example of the progressive spirit that makes for success.

The Federation of Women's Clubs of New Orleans, Louisiana, advocated the elimination of "White Slave" films at their last meeting.

Lexington, Kentucky, public school teachers have started a fight on improper pictures. They plan to have every principal and teacher intercede with parents to permit their children to witness only "good" pictures.

C. W. Bartlett of Fairburn, Nebraska, has purchased the Majestic building, in which he has been running a picture theater for a number of years. The building is a two-story brick.

The Kansas State Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors voted to assist the navy department in stimulating recruiting for the navy in Kansas. A parade of floats and a "movie ball" were events of the convention.

"The Battle of Gettysburg," produced by Ince, will be the feature picture on the program for the midnight military show to be given at the Strand Theater, Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the benefit of a volunteer regiment.

To prove that he did not exhibit an obscene motion picture a theater manager of Minneapolis, Minnesota, who was indicted on that charge, has announced he will show the film in the court room. His trial was continued until May 7.

Orchestra Hall, Chicago, was to open its summer season on Monday night, May 7, with "The Spirit of '76," a story of revolutionary days. The showing was prevented by the city censor board on the ground that it was antagonistic to our present ally, Great Britain. The special musical score was to have been rendered by a Symphony orchestra of fifty pieces.

John Steinson, branch manager of the Vitagraph at New Orleans, has been transferred to San Antonio, Texas. E. W. Plues, who had charge of the San Antonio territory, has been transferred to New Orleans as assistant manager.

Manager Harold Edel, of the Strand Theater, New York, gave his patrons a striking illustration of up-to-date electrical stage effects last week. The electricians give a veritable color symphony in conjunction with the concert orchestra's rendition of Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes," and the combined effects surpass in delicate beauty anything hitherto presented on any stage.

Strenuous efforts are being made in Pennsylvania to pass the censorship repeal bill in the legislature. The bill was voted down, 11 to 24, when it was called for final passage on third reading in the Senate at Harrisburg on April 23. The support and influence of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry will be sought to this end.

The New Dewey Theater, of Minneapolis, Daniel Le Bar, manager, was robbed when thieves drove cold chisels through the safe and escaped with $85.

A near-panic resulted in a picture house at Fifth avenue and Pride street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, when a film exploded. The audience, composed chiefly of women and children, escaped without injury. A blaze which followed did little damage.

There will be an attempt to revive interest in the Michigan Exhibitors' Association, according to A. J. Moeller, who says a campaign will be made to increase the membership at least one hundred per cennt. The annual convention will be held in Detroit in June.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the preparedness photoplay that has been selected by the government as one of the swiftest methods to increase enlistments, was shown at the Strand Theater, New York City, during the week of April 30.

If a motion made by Commissioner James T. Garland passes the city council of San Antonio, Texas, in the form of an ordinance at a later meeting, picture operators will have to be examined and qualify before the city electrician before being allowed to operate machines.

Plans for the new theater building to be erected on the corner of Tower avenue and Center street, Tacoma, Washington, by J. A. Field, George Smith, J. E. Fitzgerald and Albert Smith, who recently purchased the site, are nearly completed. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,000.

The Buffalo (New York) F. I. L. M. Club has been organized in Brooklyn and W. A. Comstock has been appointed local manager. Charles A. Taylor, manager of the Metro branch in Buffalo, says that the organization is proving a great benefit in straightening out accounts between exchange men and exhibitors.

Milwaukee's film censors are maintaining a close watch to prevent anything treasonable being shown in the city's picture theaters, according to G. H. Radley, a member of the censorship board. Radley recently asserted that no trouble is anticipated, as the national board of censors scrutinizes all pictures before they reach Milwaukee.

H. D. Bye, manager of the New Bell Theater, South Minneapolis, advertises "The Voice on the Wire," in a novel manner. He rented a large wagon and placed 6x10 foot signs on both sides, with two Bell telephone booths, one at each end. A young girl is at one switchboard and a man with a black robe is at the other.

A prime example of nonsensical agitation in relation to the film industry is found in the fact that someone has caused to be brought up in the City hall, Chicago, an old proposed ordinance which would prohibit in the city the use of anything but non-inflammable films. The matter is due to come up in a week or so, but there is little chance of any real developments.

The exhibitors of Chicago who are booking Universals will now have to get into the habit of dropping into the Consumers building, to call on the new office, occupying the entire fifteenth floor. In removing from the old office to the new one, a big job which occupied three days and nights, errors were made on only thirteen reels of film.

Exhibitors are sometimes slightly annoyed by errors made in exchanges booking their films. These errors, however, are found to be very small in proportion to the amount of booking done. A good example of this is the fact that Clyde Noble, head booker of the Chicago Universal, handles the bookings of an average of twenty-six hundred reels a week.

Douglas Fairbanks' first Artcraft picture, "In Again —Out Again," has been retained at the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, for a second week. The performance at the Studebaker is continuous, from eleven in the morning until eleven at night. The Selig film version of Winston Churchill's novel, "The Crisis," is being presented at the Colonial Theater, Chicago.

The number of places of amusement in Liverpool, England, where motion pictures are exhibited is 62. The price of admission varies from 12 cents to 48 cents in the center of the city to from 4 cents to 24 cents in the outskirts. It is estimated that 75 per cent of the films are of American manufacture, 15 per cent British, and 10 per cent French and Italian.

There has been no exhibitors' organization of importance in Richmond, Virginia, since the abandonment of the former association two years ago. However, Thomas J. Farley is planning an organization and predicts that within a short time the Richmond exhibitors will get together in their interests and form a stable organization, of which, according to tentative plans, he will be secretary.

Manager Woodhouse of the Lagoon Theater in Minneapolis, has originated an idea which is very clever. On each side of the stage he has fans to which the American flag is attached. The fans are turned on when the orchestra plays "The American Patrol." The fluttering flags bring the audience to their feet at every performance.

The pastors of the churches at Fort Worth have appealed to the pastors at Dallas to start a movement to stop the showing of pictures on Sunday in Dallas. Committees have been appointed to continue the agitation against Sunday shows in Dallas until the law can be made effective and enforced in Dallas as well as in Fort Worth.

The Milwaukee, Wisconsin, patrons of pictures will no longer see the weaker sex wantonly kicked, beaten, or roughly handled, for the citizens' commission on motion pictures decided at its recent monthly meeting that such brutality had been overdone. In this decision it is working with the national board of censorship. The censors will also prohibit films in which there is unnecessary use of weapons, and there will be no shows in which drinking is superfluous or for dramatic purposes.

A number of young men who have been ushers in the Orpheum Theater, Portland, Oregan, have enlisted in the army and the manager has been compelled to recruit a new crew of young women for ushers. Manager McGettigan says that most exhibitors will now have this problem to face and it has been suggested that exhibitors commence training a reserve corps of lady ushers.

Tom Moore, proprietor of Moore's Strand Theater, Washington, D. C., is reported have let a contract to erect Moore's New Strand, at Ninth and G streets, northwest, Washington, D. C.; two stories, main auditorium, mezzanine floor, with balcony; seating capacity 3,389, with standing room 3,000; lobby 75x100 feet; rotunda with glass dome; marble stairway; substage for orchestra; Appleton P. Clark, Jr., architect.

Crowds attended a picture show held at the Majestic Theater, Elwood City, Pennsylvania, under the auspices of the senior class of the high school. The picture displayed, Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities," proved of a high and interesting type. In furtherance of the movement to bring high class pictures here the schools have arranged for the appearance of the picture "Alice in Wonderland" at the Savoy Theater.

A clever sign was installed by Manager Meighan, of the Star Theater, Portland, Oregon, on the portecochere of the theater when he opened to capacity business with the "Mystery of the Double Cross." A twenty-four-foot "double cross," reaching to the roof, was lighted by a spotlight. W. W. Kofeldt, manager of Pathe's Portland Branch, reports that the whole town is talking about this advertisement.

The Jefferson Theater, Dallas, Texas, has given its noon hour during the time shows are in progress to Reverend George W. Truett, for twenty years pastor of the first Baptist church. The house is filled to capacity daily to hear him speak.

Oklahoma may take the film industry from California if the business men of Okmulgee, Oklahoma, take kindly to a proposition which presented itself to the chamber of commerce on April 24 by Charles Simons, formerly director of the Universal, and one of the founders of Universal City. He proposes the establishment of a fifty-thousand dollar plant in Okmulgee, and if the plan is established an oil field serial will, in all likelihood be the first picture produced.

The Victoria Theater of Buffalo carries the following pointful editorial in its latest program:

If you find something at the Victoria you don't like—don't cry it to the multitude!

Just tell us!

We are the only ones able to fix it.

It means a whole lot to the men behind the Victoria whether or not it is pleasing you every time you make a visit.

If you are not finding the Victoria a source of pleasure—the sort of a place you like to go to when the day is done—then we are not efficient.

Won't you please come to the Victoria management with your suggestions. Tell him, and help him to help you to better entertainment, if it is possible.

If there is anything in particular that appeals to you, make it known.

The Victoria will get it for you.

Getting Them Out of the Trenches

THERE are crowds on the streets on fine evenings. "Everybody is out," we say. But that is not true by any manner of means. There are always more in the houses and on the porches than on the sidewalk. Books and magazines, card games, comfortable porch chairs, operate to keep the majority at home.

Some exhibitors do not concern themselves with the stay-at-homes. They aim to attract the passers-by with posters and pictures and electric lights and signs. If they can turn a good percentage of the strollers into admissions they think they are doing well. And then, if there are still too many empty seats, they figure that the neighborhood will not supply enough patrons to fill the house.

The truth is that if they could get five per cent, or ten per cent, of the whole tributary population instead of the same percentage of those on the street, there would be enough patronage to make the fiercest of competitors bosom friends.

When the exhibitor has signed up for the best possible program or the most attractive of features, has arranged his front and his lobby in the most interesting manner, and has flashed his brilliant electric sign far up and down the street, he has taken advantage of only half his opportunity. The stay-at-homes never see his lobby, his front or even his signs. They scarcely know he is there, except in an abstract, semi-conscious sort of way.

The only way an exhibitor can get the maximum patronage out of his neighborhood is to get the people out of their houses and off their porches. He can get them into the theater all right if he can only induce them to break the home ties for a couple of hours or less.

The only way to get them out of their homes is to go in after them. That sounds difficult; but there are several ways of doing it without trespassing. One is by way of the newspapers. Another is the mails. The third is house-to-house distribution of circulars.

Advertising by type is a mighty good second to the direct personal appeal.

The best kind of printed advertising with which to invade the sacred precincts of the home is simply a program of the week's shows. It should include, of course, just enough description of each feature picture to arouse interest—for titles are not often a good guide to film character. It should be printed on paper neither too poor nor too good—cheap enough not to overload the expense column, and good enough not to make the housekeeper ashamed to see it lying on the table.

Since the United States Post Office Department has ruled that house-to-house distributors of circulars may not use the private mail boxes, the mail has a certain amount of advantage. The average householder looks carefully at his mail, even if it bears only a one-cent stamp. The exhibitor who keeps a mailing list of his neighborhood and sends his printed program slips out once a week by mail, is assured of a fairly careful reading.

But the programs he sends out that way cost him, with stamps, about two cents apiece. That is a pretty high cost. We doubt if he can cash in on it with a ten-cent admission price. On a ten per cent basis he would have to figure on two admissions a week from everybody who received a program. That is a pretty high percentage when you realize that many of those on the mailing list would come to the show anyway, without an invitation. It is not reasonable to credit all the attendance to any one thing.

Newspaper advertising is always good, and a live neighborhood weekly is especially effective. All small towns and most big cities have these little papers that issue once a week and are devoted to local gossip. Their rates are low and their results are satisfactory.

House-to-house distribution of printed programs is good only when boys of more than average conscientiousness may be found to distribute them. When the circulars are thrown into vacant lots and alleys in bunches, or delivered twenty or thirty to a house, the system becomes costly and inefficient. But where the boys are fairly decent about it—as they are in a neighborhood where they are known—it is one of the cheapest and best of methods for getting theater programs into the hands of those who stay home.

Some curious arguments have arisen on the subject of printed weekly programs. It has been claimed by some amateur logicians that the printed program actually discourages some attendance. The theory is that the patron who had intended to go to the show "sight unseen," on reading the announcement decides he would not care for it.

This argument presumes that a patron would rather go to an unknown show than to one that had been announced. That position is quite illogical. The picture theater is no longer a game of chance, where the patron pays his price on the possibility of interest. It is a recognized, organized, advertised entertainment. Those who do not want to see it need not come.

The exhibitor who tells everybody what he is showing has at least a business chance at every "prospect" there is. The exhibitor who depends wholly upon his signs and his posters, and does not look beyond the pedestrians that cross his sidewalk, will come no nearer to complete success than did the old fashioned lawyer who hung out his shingle and then sat for years waiting for clients.

War Taxes

WAR taxes are awkward things to handle editorially. It is difficult to demonstrate an eager spirit to help the nation, and balance, at the same time, the equity of the situation as it applies to one's own industry.

The motion picture industry is ready and willing to do every bit of its share, and maybe a little more. But it is embarrassed by an all too common error. There is a tendency to regard the film business as more prosperous than it really is. Consequently it is always liable to a tax on profits which it does not make.

A tax amounting to ten per cent of the gross receipts is quite apt to knock all the profits out of any business, and make a perceptible hole on the loss side. Theaters doing a gross business of ten thousand ten-cent admissions a week do not often show a net profit of one hundred dollars a week, above all expenses and salaries. Yet a tax of one cent on each admission would be a tax of one hundred dollars a week for such a theater. As a general rule, somebody would have to go without a part of his salary.

The tax makers have their own troubles, and we must not be too abusive of their efforts. They are confronted with the necessity of levying upon a thousand different industries, of whose financial affairs they can be expected to know but little. They naturally expect and anticipate protests, and generally receive them in good faith.

Of course a protest in itself is of no value, but a protest that carries truth and information, and is convincing, will go a long ways. Since the showmen are expected to protest, it is up to them to do it in an intelligent and effective manner.

Too much taxation will defeat its own purposes by putting some of the taxees out of business and so killing the source of revenue. The tax makers know this just as well as we do; but we must prove to them that the argument applies in our case.

The best way to play any business game is with all the cards on the table; and the same rule applies in dealing with the war tax situation. Film men who are not ashamed to present the proof that their profits are less than they are painted can doubtless get satisfactory treatment.

But it takes action to get any treatment. Mere grumbling will only get the business in bad with the people.

Ex-Postmaster General Joins Vitagraph

FRANK H. HITCHCOCK DIRECTOR OF V. L. S. E.—BUSINESS INCREASE REPORTED

THE Vitagraph Company of America has elected Frank H. Hitchock, former postmaster general, chairman of the board of directors and general counsel of the Vitagraph. He became officially connected with the producers of Blue Ribbon Features on Friday, April 27. Mr. Hitchcock, at the annual meeting of the Vitagraph - Lubin - -Selig-Essanay combination, was also elected a director of that organization. V. L. S. E. is the distributing organization for Vitagraph and is owned exclusively by the latter concern.

Frank H. Hitchcock, former United States postmaster general. now a part of the Vitagraph organization.

Leaders of the motion picture industry are a unit in declaring that the connection of Mr. Hitchcock with Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. is the most important announcement of recent years. In making this assertion they take into consideration the constructive methods of Mr. Hitchock and point to the fact that he is of the very highest type of business man.

Probably the most notable achievement of Mr. Hitchcock from a spectacular standpoint, was the making of a president of the United States. From a strictly business viewpoint his most notable achievements, all of which are of equal importance, was of the transformation, while he was Postmaster General, of a postal deficit of $17,600,000 annually into an actual credit balance, the inauguration of the postal savings banks, and the starting of the parcels post system of the United States, the latter two of which will be his lasting monument.

He Made a President

When Theodore Roosevelt in 1908 decided to refuse to accept the Republican nomination to succeed himself as President of the United States his desire was that William Howard Taft, then Secretary of War, should be his successor. Numerous politicians were antagonistic to the Roosevelt candidate. The opposition was so great that there appeared to be little hope for the nomination of Mr. Taft.

It was at this point that President Roosevelt solicited the services of Mr. Hitchcock. History records the result. Mr. Hitchcock first organized a combination between the delegates of the West and the South. This gave him the balance of power in the Republican convention. Mr. Taft was nominated. Later Mr. Hitchcock became chairman of the Republican National Committee, managed the presidential campaign, and elected Mr. Taft as President of the United States. Mr. Hitchcock also forced the nomination for the presidency of Charles Evans Hughes in spite of opposition.

One of Mr. Hitchcock's closest friends describes him as a man who "likes responsibility and worships efficiency," which probably is the secret of his remarkable success in big undertakings.

President Albert E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, always a man of few words, was enthusiastic over the association of Mr. Hitchcock with the company. He said:

> Mr. Hitchock is the very man we need. He is a trained business organizer of the very highest type. Any person even remotely acquainted with the motion picture industry knows that its greatest need is "organization." In Mr. Hitchcock Vitagraph has the highest type of business man. Not only am I glad to welcome Mr. Hitchcock as a business associate but it is a pleasure to me to welcome him personally. Anything I might say regarding his work would be beside the question. That will speak for itself.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, director - general and one of the original organizers of Vitagraph, was equally enthusiastic over the acquisition of Mr. Hitchcock.

> Mr. Hitchcock's organization ability will make itself felt not only in the Vitagraph Company, but throughout the entire industry. His association with the Vitagraph Company means that we will remain right at the head of the industry, intrenched there so strongly that we will be able to repel all attacks of competitors.

At the same meeting at which Mr. Hitchcock was elected a director of V. L. S. E. other directors elected were: Albert E. Smith, Clendenin J. Ryan, Walter W. Irwin, J. Stuart Blackton, and H. H. Vreeland. Following the election of the directors, officers were elected as follows: President, Albert E. Smith; vice-president, Clendenin J. Ryan; treasurer, general manager and secretary, Walter W. Irwin.

Business Increase of 200 Per Cent

Mr. Irwin, in his position as general manager and treasurer, read the annual report for the calendar year ended April 8, 1917, submitting figures which showed that from September 9, 1916, until the end of the calendar year, the business of V. L. S. E. had increased approximately two hundred per cent. This increase was accomplished with considerable less footage than when the V. L. S. E. distributed the product of four manufacturers.

Mr. Irwin also called the attention of the stockholders to the credit showing made by the exhibition patrons of V. L. S. E. which he considered rather remarkable and decidedly complimentary to the exhibitors. Of the gross business of the company for the year but three-tenths of one per cent is unpaid and of this seventy-five per cent is collectible, leaving the company with bad debts of less than one-tenth of one per cent.

The report of Mr. Irwin likewise contained specific recommendations for the future.

New Oriental in "Hari Kari"

New and vivid Oriental blood has been transfused into the screen work of Califilmia by the importation of Yukio Aoyama, a late arrival from Tokio. He appears in the picturized version of Julian Johnson's stage play, "Hari Kari," now being re-created into films by the California Motion Picture Corporation.

Yukio Aoyama is known in Japan as one of the three or four greatest Japanese actors. It was to widen and strengthen his influence upon the dramatic life of his country that persuaded the actor-author to come to California and study first hand the modern development of the photoplay.

Incognito, Yukio Aoyama first played a few minor roles in various productions to accustom himself to camera requirements. His artistry was recognizable even in the bits and he was consequently cast to play the important part of the Japanese butler-spy in "Hari Kari." His final scene with the Admiral's daughter (Lois Wilson), in which the play reaches its climax, is said to be one of the most tremendous ever shown on the screen.

Yukio Aoyama's influence has been felt upon the politics as well as the dramatic activities of Japan. He was for a time editor of one of the Japanese dailies.

Elks Thank Mae Marsh

Apparently Terre Haue, Indiana, has a warm spot in its heart for Mae Marsh, the Goldwyn Pictures' star, who recently took pleasure in lending her aid to the Elks' Club of that city in connection with the production of a musical show.

This show was written by members of the Terre Haute Lodge of Elks, played by Elks, stage managed and directed in every essential by Elks, and was, in addition, a splendid success of which all Terre Haute was proud. Mae Marsh's part in the show was small indeed, for she merely wrote the Lodge a letter of good wishes, which was featured in their program, sent them autographed photographs for publication, for sale to the audience or for framing in the clubhouse as the member saw fit.

Here is the letter she has received:

Dear Miss Marsh: Success is one of the most enjoyable things in life and it is especially so when one can share it with friends. While our musical show has broken all records, we are not unmindful of your assistance, and it is with a feeling of appreciation that we tender you the deep thanks of more than a thousand Elks in Terre Haute.—Sincerely, A. L. Miller, Exalted Ruler; M. R. Lawrence, Chairman; William K. Hamilton, Producer.

AUDIENCE GREETS BERNHARDT

Telegram from Cincinnati Audience to the Greatest Living Actress Answered at Once in True Parisian Spirit

During a recent performance of the photoplay, "Mothers of France," at the Alhambra Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio, the audience, carried away by their enthusiasm over the matchless work of Madame Sarah Bernhardt, and moved by the knowledge of her serious illness, unanimously agreed to send her the following telegram, addressed to the New York Hospital where she is confined to her bed:

Madam Sarah Bernhardt, Mt. Sinai Hospital, New York, N. Y.: Having just viewed your magnificent work in the motion picture "Mothers of France," we, as an audience, desire to express our unbounded appreciation. We cannot give you up, Divine Sarah. We know your unconquerable spirit will win you back to perfect health just as the spirit of your beloved country, our ally, will lead her to victory. May you live to enjoy the triumph. A message from you as to your real condition will be greatly appreciated by those who have been inspired by your wonderful work in the motion picture "Mothers of France." (Signed) Christine Mayo, Charles Weigel, Dr. Otto Dieckman, Geneva Murray, Committee Representing Alhambra Theater.

In reply to the above message of hope and inspiration, the divine Sarah Bernhardt rose from her pillow and dictated the following message of appreciation:

Alhambra Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio: To Christine Mayo, Charles Weigel, Dr. Otto Dieckmann, Geneva Murray: I am profoundly touched by your telegram. I have only tried, in "Mothers of France," to show the real sorrow (grief) which each woman in France feels; a grief which I feel grows deeper from day to day. Thanks for your sweet words.—Sarah Bernhardt.

Linder Films Suspended

Owing to the illness of Max Linder, the announcement is made by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, that further releases of the famous European comedian's pictures have been indefinitely postponed. Complications have arisen from a wound suffered by Mr. Linder in the war and the foremost physicians of the Pacific coast have ordered him to abandon for the time the rigorous program to which he subjected himself in the filming of his comedies.

The first three pictures made by Mr. Linder in America—"Max Comes Across," "Max Wants a Divorce" and "Max in a Taxi"—have enjoyed wide popularity.

Screen audiences will have an opportunity to see Norma Talmadge washing dishes when her new picture, "Poppy," is released.

NEW MUTUALS

Mary Miles Minter Heads Schedule of May 14—Unusual Chapters of Serials Appear—Four Corking Comedies

Mary Miles Minter in "Annie-For-Spite" is the Mutual Star Production at the head of the list of releases for the week of May 14. See the frontis piece of this issue of MOTOGRAPHY for an interesting view from this play.

In this production Mary Miles Minter is shown in a variety of roles, she appears as a homely girl—a new role for this star, noted for her beauty—as a ragged little shop girl, and also in decided contrast as the pampered adopted daughter of a wealthy woman with a most extensive wardrobe and everything to make her beautiful. The costumes purchased for Miss Minter for this production cost over three thousand dollars.

"The Overland Disaster" is the sixth chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," scheduled for May 14. In this chapter occurs a spectacular wreck of a Pullman car. Going forty miles an hour it runs off the rails, and rolls over and over down a forty foot embankment. In your advertising play up headlines of a great rail disaster. As this serial runs in your theater for fifteen weeks it is worth while to get some good lobby decorations to carry out the railroad atmosphere, as these can be used week after week.

Four Side Splitters

"When Betty Bets" is the second Marie Cahill comedy, also released on May 14. In this comedy Betty (Marie Cahill) starts out without a cent and not even clothes to her back and earns $1,000 in thirty days.

On May 16 comes Billie Rhodes in "Trixie of the Follies," in which Mary masquerades as an actress and cures hubby of flirting.

"Jerry's Finishing Touch" is the Cub comedy for May 17, in which George Ovey is featured. The many laughs in this story arise from Jerry's aspirations to be a movie magnet.

The Vogue contribution to the fun is "Caught in the End," ready May 19, and shows Lillian Hamilton masquerading in a suit of boy's clothes.

Ninth Chapter of Jimmie Dale

"The Alibi" is the title of the ninth story of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" series. In this story the Grey Seal upsets the plans of a crook who is impersonating him.

Famous French Castles Shown in "Tours"

"Mutual Tours" for May 15 show "Famous French Castles Along the River Loire" and "Barbados, an Island of the British West Indies."

"Mutual Weekly" comes on May 16, and "Reel Life" on May 17. "Reel Life" is composed of the following subjects: "Speeding the Spoken Word," "The Toothsome Crab," "Beating the High Cost of Furs" and "A School on the Beach."

"Fairbanks Alley"

"Fairbanks Alley" is the name of a new row of dressing rooms recently completed at the Lasky Hollywood studio, where "A Regular Guy," the Fairbanks-Artcraft satire, is now in production.

"Douglas Fairbanks Alley" consists of twelve large, nicely ventilated dressing rooms and five offices, occupied respectively by Director John Emerson, Scenario Writer Anita Loos, Business Manager John Fairbanks, Bookkeeper Florence E. Gribbon and her assistants, and Bennie Zeidman, personal publicity representative for "Doug."

Each of the dressing rooms is equipped with shower baths, comfortable furniture, attractive draperies and rugs. Fairbanks believes that a good-looking dressing room will very often put the players in a happy mood, while they are preparing for a day's work, and happiness of mind means superior results. Now that "Doug" is at the head of his own company he is enforcing a number of ideas he has been dreaming about since his theatrical debut.

"A Small Town Girl"

A screen play with a fine, wholesome spirit throughout is "A Small Town Girl," as the next picture starring June Caprice will be known. The film is scheduled for release shortly. John G. Adolfi was the director.

Miss Caprice is well fitted to enact the stellar part in "A Small Town Girl" as she is one herself—with all due respect to Arlington, Mass., her birthplace. In the supporting cast appear Bert Delaney, who plays opposite Miss Caprice; Inez Marcel, Tom Brooke, Lucia Moore, N. D. Southard and John Borkel.

EXHIBITORS AND WAR

Cheap Pictures Unsuccessful as Business Getters Under Present Conditions—Show the Best and Advertise Properly

"Business of the motion picture theaters throughout the country has reached low tide," said E. Auger, manager of the Eastern Division of V. L. S. E., a few days ago after finishing a trip through his entire territory. "From now I look for a steady improvement in attendance and I feel that within a few months the exhibitors will be enjoying a fair degree of prosperity."

Many of the exhibitors apparently became panic stricken over the thought of the United States being dragged into the war. The uncertainty of government conditions had its effect upon the industry. Numerous exhibitors started to retrench in every conceivable manner. Not only did they eliminate much of their advertising campaign, and in some cases all of it, but they began entering the market for the cheapest and most inferior pictures. They did not reduce their admission prices to the public but expected their patrons to pay the same admission price for an inferior entertainment. The result was that the patronage fell off.

But Mr. Auger explained that this condition had undergone a considerable change since the declaration of war.

With the certainty of the country being at war many of the exhibitors seem to have regained their equilibrium. Many of them have reinstated the necessary advertising and overhead charges and are having fair success in obtaining their former patronage. For some, however, and more especially those who have a live competitor wise enough to foresee that inferior pictures would ruin his business, it is pretty hard sledding. In these cases the competitor has taken the cream of the business and he means to keep it if he can.

It is my opinion that no matter what happens the exhibitor should not become panic stricken. First he should select good pictures and then he should promote them properly. And the exhibitor always must remember that he has the only absolutely inexpensive means of entertainment, which means it should be the very last to feel the effect of tight money conditions. Instead of losing patronage it is my opinion that the exhibitor presenting a superior program is sure to increase rather than decrease his patronage.

"ROMANCE OF THE REDWOODS"

President of Artcraft Highly Enthusiastic Over New Subject Staged by Cecil B. De Mille for May Release

A revelation in Mary Pickford photoplays will be evidenced with the release of "A Romance of the Redwoods," according to Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. An advance print of this production has just been received at the Artcraft headquarters in New York from the Lasky West Coast studios and immediately after viewing the picture, Mr. Greene expressed great enthusiasm over its exceptional qualities. He said:

A new Mary Pickford will be introduced to patrons of high-class photoplays on May 14, when "A Romance of the Redwoods" makes its initial public appearance. Although I have seen Miss Pickford in parts that demand much of her histrionic talent I have never viewed her in a role that exacts such wonderful dramatic display. That Miss Pickford is equipped with more than individual charm and personality is most effectively evidenced in this production. This fact is strikingly demonstrated at this time in that her last production, in which she is scoring the greatest success of her career to date, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," showed a sweet and charming Mary in a light part, though of great heart appeal. In "A Romance of the Redwoods" Miss Pickford portrays an entirely different part which discloses her as an actress of the drama, second to none. Not even her famous curls are seen in this new picture. Undoubtedly her greatest dramatic effort, the photoplay will, I am sure, create a new Mary Pickford of the screen and show that the wonderful popularity of "Little Mary" is well deserved.

Coupled with this creation of a new Mary Pickford characterization, is immediately manifested the great art of that master of screencraft, Cecil B. DeMille. The wonderful technique which this picture shows has never before been duplicated. For instance, in several scenes there are actually three different lighting effects which would make one believe that it was color photography. There are several other distinct departures in film-play production that are entirely in keeping with the star's new characterization. Seldom has my interest been taken up and held to the very end as when I viewed this picture. From every standpoint it is a triumph; action, thrills, beauty and charm, all are generously injected. It is indeed a great credit to everyone connected with its production.

New Triangle Features

Charles Ray and Seena Owen are the stars of the Triangle feature productions released May 27. Ince presents Ray in a powerful social drama of deep contrasts, entitled "The Millionaire Vagrant." The role which Ray is called upon to enact in this play tests his versatility to the limit. He is supported by a large cast of Ince favorites, including Sylvia Bremer, J. Barney Sherry, Dorcas Matthews and Jack Gilbert.

Seena Owen is being starred in an O. Henry story, "Madame Bo-Peep," taken from "Madame Bo-Peep of the Ranches," one of his best-known Western stories. Chester Withey is the director of the production, which will probably be the last filmed at the former Fine Arts studio in Hollywood.

As the hero of "The Millionaire Vagrant," Charles Ray takes the part of a wealthy idler who pledges himself, as the result of a wager, to live for a certain time among the slum-dwellers of a great city on $6 a week. In carrying out his end of the bargain, he is thrown into contact with a strange assortment of human beings and meets with many startling adventures. He is metamorphosed in short order from a handsomely groomed product of the leisure class into a half-shaven tramp, but as a result his inherent manliness rises to the surface, and when the big test comes it finds him fully equal to the occasion. There are several novel turns to the plot that kept the spectators guessing until the final fade-out.

Seena Owen's vehicle is a spirited story of the Texas sheep ranches, with an appealing love story.

Charlie Ray in "The Millionaire Vagrant."

Goldwyn to Send Stars to Chicago Exposition

OTHER INTERESTING THINGS GOLDWYN—MAXINE ELLIOTT SAILS

Mae Marsh in her second Goldwyn picture.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation will be an active participant in the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Exposition in Chicago, July 14 to 22, and has taken space for its headquarters on the main aisle of the Coliseum, immediately facing the entrance of the big convention hall.

The Goldwyn display will be designed by three noted painters and scenic artists: Hugo Ballin, Robert Edmond Jones and Everitt Shinn.

Goldwyn officers and stars will be in attendance and a cable received yesterday from Mary Garden, who is now in Paris, brings the news that she will return to America in time to take part in the exposition as Goldwyn's chief representative. Mae Marsh and Madge Kennedy are expected to devote several days to the convention.

The management of the Goldwyn booths will be intrusted to the Chicago branch executives, supplemented by members of the Goldwyn general staff from the East.

Goldwyn will have its official day at the exposition and Miss Garden is planning a surprise for her thousands of admirers in Chicago, who will welcome her return there as a heroine of the screen.

Members of Goldwyn's art and technical staffs will journey to Chicago to give personal attention to the installation of the company's exhibit.

Maxine Elliott Defies War Risks

Goldwyn's great stars possess a high degree of war-time courage, which atrocities on the high seas have not succeeded in diminishing. Maxine Elliott, the celebrated beauty who has just finished two productions for Goldwyn, is about to set sail for England, where she will spend a part of the summer before resuming her war relief work.

Miss Elliott interrupted her relief work in Flanders to make a hurried trip to the United States early last December, and no sooner had she landed on American soil, than the Goldwyn Pictures' officers succeeded in beguiling her into motion pictures.

Almost from the outbreak of the war in Europe, Miss Elliott had devoted her entire time to the organization of relief work.

During her stay in the States, Miss Elliott has acted in a noted play by Roi Cooper Megrue and in a second play by Robert H. McLaughlin, the Cleveland dramatist, who won financial rewards two seasons ago in New York with his first big play, "The Eternal Magdalene."

Madge Kennedy's Remarkable Smile

The real story of Madge Kennedy, ablest of American comediennes and now a star in Goldwyn Pictures, seldom has been told. Miss Kennedy, in her early twenties, is virtually deserting the stage for a period of years to win the larger rewards that are afforded by the screen.

Having been born in California, and spending her childhood days there, Miss Kennedy came to New York with her mother and by luck tumbled into the Art Students' League where she was admitted as a pupil.

Madge Kennedy made her first appearance in "The Genius," which was none too brilliant a success. One day, by virtue of the accidents of the acting profession, Miss Kennedy found herself in Cleveland wondering how far it was to California.

In Cleveland there was a successful theatrical stock company manager named Robert H. McLaughlin operating the Colonial Theater.

Madge Kennedy became an ingenue in McLaughlin's Cleveland organization and, like most players in stock, learned and acted a new role each week during the season.

Her Whole Career Success

While playing in Cleveland, Miss Kennedy attracted the attention of William A. Brady, who was there looking over one of his productions. But he also "looked over" Madge Kennedy and she was immediately engaged to play in "Over Night." Henceforth theatergoers are familier with Miss Kennedy's sequence of remarkable successes. "Over Night" was followed by "Little Miss Brown" and managers in the New York theatrical market began to talk of certain farce roles as "Kennedy parts."

From the day of her first real part in "Over Night" Madge Kennedy has been "the girl without a failure" —an unusual theatrical achievement, as anyone can tell you.

At the particular moment when the theatrical world was wondering what new farce would be carried into all-season popularity through this girl's great vogue in the theater and by reason of the brilliancy of her work, she amazed all of the watchers by deserting the stage to become exclusively a star of Goldwyn Pictures.

On the screen she will be starred in several of the great farce successes in which she has been seen in the theater.

Many Countries in "Outcast"

The locale of "Outcast," the Mutual-Empire production starring Ann Murdock, changes from America to London, to Paris and finally Scotland.

A number of scenes are laid in London in the rain and gloom of an English spring, and life along the Piccadilly with the English "bobbies" much in evidence.

Splendid settings have been erected at the studio, one being a replica of the world famous Ritz-Carlton restaurant and another a typical Parisian restaurant.

From Paris the scenes change to Scotland and the story ends with a wedding in a kirk in Scotland.

Thrill a Minute in "Raiders"

Helen Holmes outdoes herself as an exponent of sensational action drama in "A Woman's Wit," chapter V of the new Signal-Mutual fifteen-chapter photonovel, "The Railroad Raiders," in which there are more hair-raising thrills than in any previous chapter, Miss Holmes taking chances on her life about once a minute in the exciting chase of the raider's gang. Chapter V was released May 7.

When the young actress boards Division Superintendent Frost's automobile inspection car and turns it loose at fifty miles an hour in an effort to head off the scheme of the conspirators, which involves wrecking a treasure train, she is pursued by members of Steve Arnold's gang in a Mogul engine, the pursuers firing on Helen as she clings to the side of the speeding motor car for cover and furnishing one of the most sensational chases ever seen on the screen.

The big engine pursuing Miss Holmes is thrown into a switch by one of her aides and it goes crashing at top speed into a big warehouse, wrecking the big structure completely and burying itself under a mass of debris.

"WAR GIRLS" SUPPLANT MEN

Universal Training Women to Take Places of Men Who May Be Called to War— Exhibitors Warned

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through an order of Carl Laemmle, its president, issued a warning to all its exhibitors throughout the United States to prepare for the war draft on the young women of the country by training young women to take their places in all branches of the film industry, to which up to the present they have only been considered as actresses, directors, scenario writers, stenographers and telephone operators.

As a forerunner of preparing women to take men's places in the film industry, the general manager of the seventy-two Universal Exchanges has engaged a well-known New York newspaper woman to start out on the road at once to sell film service to exhibitors. This is one of the first times that a woman has ever been connected in any way with the selling end of pictures.

Exhibitors are being urged through Mr. Laemmle's suggestion to begin at once to instruct young women as operators of projection machines. The case is cited by two operators of the Universal as going to the border with the Sixty Ninth regiment and receiving from their Company during their absence their salaries. Another example is the difficult Canadian situation brought about by the enlistment and draft which also took out of that country a number of skilled motion picture operators and resulted in the closing of many motion picture houses.

Following the example of foreign countries at war, women will have to take the places of men in various capacities of the industry, Universal officers believe.

Commencing Monday, young women of all departments of the various offices of the Universal will be trained by men to take their places when they are called to the colors.

"Doug." Has Swimming Tank

Douglas Fairbanks has purchased a very attractive Californian home located at the foot of a Los Angeles hill. Smiling "Doug" is adding a 60x100 foot swimming pool to his new house, where he hopes to teach his seven-year-old son the rudiments of keeping above water. The next Fairbanks-Artcraft starring vehicle will very likely include scenes taken in and around the new swimming tank, for at the present time it is Doug's principal topic. He has already planned a series of brand new thrills, which would be very effective in this pool.

Several important scenes of "A Regular Guy" have already been photographed under the direction of John Emerson.

Big Northwestern Film Convention

COMPLETE STORY OF EXHIBITORS ANNUAL EXPOSITION

By J. L. Johnson, Special Representative for Motography

James G. Gilosky, three-time president, Northwestern Exhibitors Corporation, sketched from life for Motography by J. L. Johnston.

THE seventh annual convention of the motion picture exhibitors body of the Northwest was called to order at Minneapolis Tuesday morning, May 1, by President James G. Gilosky. Unlike previous years, after a few minutes given over to the usual formalities the meeting got down to business and more real good was accomplished during the first two days of the convention this year than in twice that time in previous years.

The exhibitors had the pleasure of listening to short speeches by National President Lee A. Ochs, Former National President Fred J. Herrington, Joseph Hopp, president of the Chicago branch of the league, Mayor Thomas Van Lear of Minneapolis, President H. L. Hartman of the North Dakota league and President Hirtz of the newly organized Black Hills Exhibitors' league. About seventy-five exhibitors from outside of the Twin Cities and a good representation from Minneapolis and St. Paul were in attendance at the opening meeting.

Exhibitors Collect Nearly $8,000

Reports of various committees and officers were adopted. The treasurer's report showed that the total income of the Northwest exhibitors' body during the fiscal year just closed was $7,743.41, expenses $6,578.96, leaving a balance in the bank of $1,164.45 when the convention opened.

The first afternoon was given over almost entirely to discussion by out of town exhibitors of advance deposits, return express charges and rental, Tom Foster of Stanley, Wisconsin; Oliver Whaley, Bemidji, Mr. Wane, Jamestown, North Dakota, and H. C. Zander, Rhinelander, Wisconsin, taking an active part in the discussion. President Gilosky delayed final discussion of several grievances until Thursday morning, May 3, when the exchangemen of Minneapolis presented their side of the case.

Exhibitors Protest War Tax

David G. Rodgers moved that the exhibitors go on record as being willing to assist the government in every way possible during war time, and his speech and motion were greeted with wild enthusiasm. A resolution was drafted by the resolutions committee and forwarded to the leaders of both houses of congress telling them that a war tax of ten per cent on moving picture theaters would in all probability drive seventy-five per cent of the exhibitors out of business. The resolution stated that the exhibitors would gladly "do their bit" but that exhibitors should not be taxed more than mercantile men. The committee drafting the resolution was made up of W. A. Steffes, E. U. Carter, Anton Gillis, Julius B. Reismann, and Max Hoppenrath.

President Gilosky appointed W. G. True, George Carisch and Sprague Green as an auditing committee and David G. Rodgers, Henry Breilein and William B. Watson as a by-laws committee. Chairman Watson of the grievance committee told exhibitors that all grievances given to his body during convention time would be acted upon immediately.

On the evening of May 1, following an automobile trip around Minneapolis, exhibitors were guests of the Northwest body at a free cabaret at the Hotel West, convention headquarters. Musical numbers and dancing kept the entertainment going until "the wee small hours."

Agree to Double Present Tax

Wednesday, May 2, brought "rosey" Rose Tapley to the convention, and following her short talk exhibitors got down to business with vim. Ways and means to battle the proposed ten per cent war tax were again discussed. Several motions were made and a committee was appointed to draft a telegram which exhibitors could send to congressmen individually, but before the committee began action other motions were made which were against sending such telegrams and after considerable discussion President Ochs agreed to go from Minneapolis to Washington and interview personally all the congressmen and senators possible and battle for a fair tax for war purposes. Two motions were made for the purpose of giving Mr. Ochs an idea of what exhibitors considered fair, but only one was passed. The successful motion was to the effect that exhibitors were willing to pay double the present government tax. The defeated motion was that which provided for the additional charge of one cent per ticket in the future for war purposes, corresponding somewhat with Canadian tax measures.

D. W. Chamberlain moved that Fred J. Herrington explain the new "music tax" proposition to exhibitors. Mr. Herrington explained the "tax" and urged Sam Spedon to tell of action Brooklyn exhibitors took against it. Mr. Herrington's resolution regarding the "music tax" was adopted. A committee composed of Joseph Friedman, Lee A. Ochs and Max Hoppenrath conferred with officials of the Minnesota Federation of Labor and informed the meeting that the federation would instruct its ten vice-presidents to wire congressmen in Washington to reduce the percentage of war tax on exhibitors and would give Mr. Ochs letters to men of influence in Washington.

Deposits Elimination Endorsed

The David G. Rodgers plan of doing away with advance deposits was unanimously adopted and Mr. Rodgers promised the gathering immediate action. A telegram from the Wisconsin vice-president, James E. Sherwood of Madison, was read. Mr. Sherwood informing the exhibitors that all adverse legislation brought before the Badger legislature to date having been "killed."

On Wednesday evening, May 2, the annual banquet of exhibitors was held at the West hotel with Rose Tapley, President Ochs and Thomas Furniss of Duluth, Minnesota, among the prominent speakers.

On Wednesday afternoon members of the newly organized Motion Picture Salesmen of the Northwest body held a meeting in Room 218 West hotel, and discussed many topics of interest and importance. Wednesday morning a special showing of "The Deemster" was given at The Strand Theater for the benefit of exhibitors and another special showing of "Beware of Strangers" was given at the same theater Thursday morning. Each evening during the convention the Pathe exchange staged special showings for exhibitors at the New Unique Theater beginning at midnight. The convention came to a close May 3 with the election of officers and grand ball at the West hotel. The convention selected a board of directors which re-elected President James G. Gilosky, St. Paul; Vice-president Charles W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D., and Secretary Clyde H. Hitchcock, Minneapolis. William H. Deeth, Minneapolis, was chosen to succeed C. E. Van Duzee a streasurer of the organization. The board of directors is as follows: David G. Rodgers, Minneapolis; James G. Gilosky, St. Paul; Max A. Hoppenrath, Minneapolis; Henry P. Greene, Minneaplis; William A. Steffes, Minneapolis; Charles W. Campbell, St. Paul; Clyde H. Hitchcock, Minneapolis; William H. Deeth, Minneapolis; Charles W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.

Delegates to Chicago Convention

The delegates to represent the Northwest body at the Chicago convention in July were selected by the directors, and are as follows: M. A. Hoppenrath, chairman; C. H. Hitchcock, James G. Gilosky, David G. Rodgers, C. E. Van Duzee, C. W. Gates, T. Foster, C. W. Campbell, W. H. Deeth, Ed. Hinz, H. P. Greene, T. Furniss, J. Friedman and D. W. Chamberlain.

The convention voted to give the national organization known as "The Four Minute Men" permission to lecture in their theaters during intermission. The matter of return expressage was discussed pro and con without any ultimate decision, exhibitors being urged to do the best they could for themselves individually. Some exhibitors maintained that they had to pay return expressage to some exchanges and not to others and after considerable discussion it was decided that the convention could not possibly draft measures tending to stop the return express payment by exhibitors. Harry Cohen, representing the Metro headquarters in New York; W. K. Howard, of the Minneapolis Vitagraph; J. E. Schwartzbine, of the Minneapolis, Pathe, and several exhibitors stated that the exhibitor would be paying more for service if the exchange paid the express and, being that the matter was "as broad as it is long," it was dropped.

The meeting voted the Triangle exchange thanks for abolishing advance deposits and also extended thanks to national officers in attendance and to the press for its assistance. National President Ochs, Joseph Hopp, Chicago; National Organizer Herrington, and National Secretary Sweeney and Sam Spedon of the Moving Picture World, were the chief speakers at the closing session.

Richard Travers, formerly with Essanay and now with the Sunshine studios, Chicago, and Rose Tapley, Vitagraph actress, who is touring the country in the interest of the exhibitors, led the grand march at the ball on Thursday evening. About 500 couples were in attendance at the grand ball.

Members of the Northwest organization presented President Gilosky with a handsome silver loving cup at the annual banquet on the evening of May 2. David G. Rodgers, acting as toastmaster, made the presentation, and speakers following Mr. Rodgers' first remarks paid many glowing compliments to the executive.

New War Time Specials

"Zeppelin Attack on New York," and "Manning the Navy," are the titles of two single-reel specials produced by Watterson R. Rothacker of Chicago, and released by the Mutual.

The Zeppelin picture is a fictional fantasy of what might happen if the Kaiser should send a fleet of Zeps to raid New York, just as London has been raided so often. The picture is given the requisite touches of patriotic fervor. There is an aviator hero who saves the city. A burning Zeppelin is shown, bombed by the aeroplane scout and sent flaming to earth. The enemy is routed and the flag waves free again.

The picture was made by a process of camera work which Mr. Rothacker is not revealing. However, realistic results are obtained and some decidedly interesting new views of New York and its water front are presented. The picture is released May 21.

"Manning the Navy" is a one-reel presentation of the making of a "jackie" as it is done at the Naval Training Station at Lake Bluff, Illinois.

The picture was taken under the supervision of and with the due official approval of the naval authorities. It presents in detail all that the raw recruit receives in training—being taken on the ground with all the facilities which the government could offer.

Ella Hall, of Universal, is working under the direction of Jack Conway in a five-act feature production, "Little Miss Fixit."

Bomb Gets Strand Director

Scott Sidney, director of Billie Rhodes in the Mutual-Strand comedies, has been the victim of a bomb.

ing the shooting of one of the Strand comedies, entitled "A Two-Cylinder Courtship."

In the picture Mr. Sidney uses several woe-begone flivers of the vintage of '13. With Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco fleeing an irate parent in one of them there was to be an explosion in the vitals of the gasoline chariot.

While they were arranging the bombs under the little machine there was a premature explosion and Mr. Sidney will not look the same for two weeks, at least. No one was seriously hurt. The heaviest casualties were sustained by Mr. Sidney's moustache, eyebrows and forelock.

New Hart Play

William S. Hart will make his next regular-as-clockwork appearance in "Wolf Lowry," when he is presented on the Triangle program by Thomas H. Ince. In this drama Hart is a ranchman and a sort of king of the wild desert country. He portrays a strong, grim, silent man, quick on the trigger, terrible in his wrath, and a bitter and implacable enemy. The softening influence begins to affect his life upon the arrival of one Mary Davis, who has purchased a claim in the center of his domain.

Margery Wilson, as Mary Davis, who is like an angel that has dropped from the sky into the hard and sombre life of "Wolf" Lowry, makes the most of her exceptional opportunity, presenting, with Hart, a performance polished in its finished artistry. They have handled each situation in a manner both convincing and forceful. "Wolf" Lowry will undoubtedly take its place in the foremost ranks of Triangle's western dramas.

Mignon Anderson, of Universal, has been assigned Langford are featured at the head of Miss Clayton's to the leading role in a three-reel Decoration Day drama, "The Little Hero," which is being filmed at Universal City.

NEW TRIANGLE POLICIES

Western Exhibitors Visited by President Hodkinson in Seven Weeks' Tour. Greatly Increased Business Results from Tour

W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, has just made a seven weeks' tour of the West in the interest of his organization. Mr. Hodkinson's itinerary included Chicago, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Spokane, Seattle, Portland and Los Angeles. The purpose of his trip was to get into personal touch with Triangle branch managers and the leading exhibitors of the West to acquaint them with the details of the new policies that are being put into operation.

The results of Mr. Hodkinson's campaign have already made themselves manifest in largely increased business and a better understanding between Triangle's producing, distributing and exhibiting units. The West, according to Mr. Hodkinson's investigations, which have been carried on over a space of ten years, is an exceedingly progressive section of the country, motion picture exhibitors having reached a high average level of achievement. It has, therefore, followed that their problems have in many respects become very sharply defined, and the president of Triangle says that the announcement of the new bonding system which he has perfected, together with the system of modified program booking, about to go into effect has aroused great enthusiasm among western exhibitors.

Some of the most widely sought accounts on the Pacific Coast were signed by Mr. Hodkinson as a direct result of his personal presentation of the new constructive policies. Resolutions of endorsement of the bonding system have been passed by many of the strongest exhibitors' leagues in the West.

Before returning to New York, Mr. Hodkinson spent several days at the Triangle studios in Hollywood and the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City, aiding in the perfection of details of the consolidation of these plants under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. The president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, whose wide experience and lack of prejudice make him a real authority on such subjects, declares that the Ince organization represents the highest standard of efficiency that has yet been reached in the manufacture of motion pictures.

"Triangle has the ideas, the organization and the product," Mr. Hodkinson stated. "We are also getting the fullest co-operation from exhibitors. The result will be inevitable. We shall achieve success in the truest sense because we shall deserve it."

Brand New Comedy Series

Having "made good" in three years of active service for L-Ko's Alice Howell has been advanced to a position of stardom in a new series of mirth-provokers produced by Stern. President Julius Stern and General Director J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko, declare that this advancement is made in recognition of Miss Howell's talents, energy and enthusiasm in her efforts to put laughs in the spot where laughs belong.

"There is no reason why a woman cannot be just as funny as a man," says Mr. Stern in making the announcement of these comedies. "In three years service with L-Ko's Miss Howell has abundantly proved that she is good for as many hearty laughs in a given number of reels as almost any man who ever appeared before the camera." Mr. Stern continues:

On the stage women have advanced scores of individual instances where their abilities to make mirth have won them boundless public favor. Some of the women in musical comedy, vaudeville, burlesque and farce are a great deal funnier than a large majority of the men who work in the same branches of stage entertainment. We believe that women on the screen deserve to have their chance and we believe that Miss Howell, in particular, has earned the right to be a star in her own series.

Thus it comes that the Stern comedies are ready for distribution with Miss Howell the star. "Baloonatics" will be her first production, with "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" following on. The Strand, New York, has secured "Neptune's Naughty Daughter" on pre-release and are showing it this week as the comedy feature of the program.

Miss Howell will proceed with her comedies under the personal direction of J. G. Blystone, director general of all productions at the Hollywood, Cal., studios, where our comedies are made. She has been under Mr. Blystone's supervision during the three years she has been with L-Ko and in that time has demonstrated her willingness and her abilities to go anywhere and do anything humanly possible to create laughs and build up comedy situations.

We intend to get behind the Stern comedies and exploit them to the fullest possible advantage, that the exhibitor may be rewarded in collecting on Miss Howell's popularity. Mr. Blystone is working on a series of comedies, to maintain the supply adequate to the needs of exhibitors who, wise in their generation, see the advantage of connecting with a novelty in comedy programs.

L-Ko Has Clever Program

General Director J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko Comedies, has completed four subjects for immediate release and is now supervising another batch of merry-makers for the early weeks of Summer. Richard Smith, Vin Moore, Noel Smith and Mr. Blystone's other assistants are kept busy at Hollywood, in L-Ko's spacious studios, handling several companies in anticipation of exhibitors' demands.

"Tom's Tramping Troupe," a lively travesty on "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is now in circulation, under release of May 9. Three other clever comedies are ready for distribution to fill out the balance of the current month. They are: "Good Little Bad Boy," "Beach Nuts" and "Roped Into Scandal."

Richard Smith, under the supervision of Director General Blystone, produced "Tom's Tramping Troupe," with Phil Dunham featured, and Charles Inslee, Mert Sterling and Lucille Hutton prominent in his support. Vin Moore directed "Good Little Bad Boy," in which Phil Dunham is also featured, with the same players in his support.

"Beach Nuts," to be released May 16, will have Dan Russell as the featured one, with Gladys Varden and Bert Roach prominent in the cast. Noel Smith directed this one. The final May release will be "Roped Into Scandal," featuring Eva Novak, Harry Lorraine and Bert Beach.

Watch This Exhibitor

Frank G. Hall, of Newark, New Jersey, who recently entered the state rights field on a large scale by buying outright from Edgar Lewis his nine-reel production, "The Bar Sinister," is attracting the attention of exhibitors by the manner in which he goes after business and packs his theaters at prices above the average.

Mr. Hall owns the New Jersey rights to "The Whip," "Joan the Woman," "Civilization," and several other attractions. He believes in big pictures and high prices and is doing a large business at the Strand, Newark, New Jersey, where he charges from twenty-five cents to seventy-five cents admission. He believes that theater patrons want to see the very best pictures obtainable and are willing to pay for them.

"The Whip" was advertised by a large tally-ho drawn by six horses and carrying a coaching party, while a thoroughbred race horse with a jockey in attendance stood in front of the theater. "The Honor System" was advertised by turning the handsome Strand lobby into a tier of cells with prisoners looking through the bars.

Rena Rogers Again Joins Vogue

Rena Rogers has returned to the Vogue field and is now playing opposite Paddy McQuire in Vogue comedies. Miss Rogers appeared in Mutual-Vogue releases about a year ago and was well known to all fans as the "little blonde who always makes a person laugh."

Three howls from the new comedies presented by L-Ko and featuring Alice Howell. The scene on the left is from "Neptune's Naughty Daughter," the other two from "Baloonatics." The brand name will be announced later.

Exhibitor Markets Seven Reeler

FRANK J. SENG, MANUFACTURER AND THEATERMAN, TO PRESENT "PARENTAGE"

IT is a fact that, if we give a little love to a child we'll get a great deal back, and that has never been better emphasized than in the seven-reel feature "Parentage," which will soon be shown to the trade under the auspices of Frank J. Seng, the well-known Chicago manufacturer, who is a successful exhibitor in Wilmette, Illinois, and who, for the first time in his career, has taken over the marketing of a production.

Up to the present, Mr. Seng, who is recognized as one of the most conservative exhibitors in the country, has been satisfied to devote his attentions to his theaters, but when, on a recent visit to New York City, he realized the possibilities of this remarkable story, he was so impressed that he immediately invested and now has to offer to the trade a film that is unusual. It is a thought film that is entertaining.

For some time Mr. Seng has been of the opinion that what is needed in the industry is "fewer and better pictures," which necessarily means longer runs. Although he has been approached and tempted many times to enter the distributing end of the field, he has always kept out, because, as he says, he has never seen an organization which would back up that slogan. In "Parentage" he believes he has a picture which typifies that sort of offering, and he is willing to back his reputation with that judgment.

"I believe 'Parentage' is going to make a lot of money for the exhibitor," he says, "because it is something different. It is a message to the public and I think it will enjoy a long run wherever it is shown, because it touches a human note. There is not a man, woman or child in the world who will not be impressed with the beautiful story which Producer Henley has so intelligently placed upon the screen. The atmosphere is real, the photography is excellent and the cast is an exceptional one. In fact, every member of the company seems to be peculiarly fitted to play the role which has been entrusted to them. There is no wild, impossible melodrama in 'Parentage.' It is a real story of real folks. The thing that will impress the spectator most is the simple manner in which each member of the company plays his part. The result is that the moral of the story is put over in a most convincing way and will leave its imprint on all those who see it.

"The theme contains human thoughts that have not been touched upon by producers in the past. The story is a strong, gripping one that will set every mind to thinking hard after they have seen it. It is a sort of picture we need, as exhibitors, and one that will keep our regular patrons and increase their faith in us, as well as gain for us a new clientele. This is the age when the patron of a moving picture theater wants to be amused."

Just a few of the very human and intensely appealing scenes in "Parentage," placed in the market by Frank J. Seng, exhibitor of Wilmette, Illinois, and Chicago manufacturer. A new and beautiful message to the public is presented in a simple but extremely effective fashion.

NEW VITAGRAPH SERIAL

Next Fall Will See Remarkable Chaptered Story, "Hearts Aflame," Appear in Fifteen Parts With Striking New Star

Greater Vitagraph is making a fifteen episode serial which is startling in its action and which will bring into the limelight a striking screen star who is said to outshine any woman yet cast for the part of "A Girl of the Plains." The serial of which she is the heroine will not be released until fall.

The young star is Carol Holloway. She takes the only female part in the series which is said to have been named "Hearts of Flame" and in which she appears as leading woman with William Duncan.

Critics who have seen Miss Holloway at work on the western locations have been amazed at her versatility. They say she has absolutely everything necessary to make her the heroine of the screen and that she is bound to immediately possess herself of the laurels of other screen stars who have enjoyed basking in the sunshine of the nom de plume of "The Girl from the Golden West." Not only, say the criticis, has she good looks, but she has many things that heretofore have not been linked with good looks. She is short and dark and might be described as "plump" with jet black hair and dark appealing eyes. And she is unusually graceful.

The first episode which consists of three reels is sub-titled "The Precious Ingredient" and apparently has to do with some priceless chemical or mineral the entire supply of which has been exhausted except that obtainable from a small mine on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains. Following is a sketch of the rest of the chapter:

This mine is controlled by John Gwynn, in the picture William Duncan. The chemical or mineral is of such tremendous importance that the available supply is absolutely necessary to several of the world powers.

Gwynn, after making arrangements to deliver "The Precious Ingredient" to the agents of the United States, starts across country to fulfill the terms of his agreement. His constant companion in his journey from New York to the Rockies, is Hendrick Von Bleck, portrayed by Walter Rogers, who is a spy for the German Government, which apparently must have "The Precious Ingredient," in order to continue to manufacture ammunition. During the railroad journey Von Bleck manages to burglarize Gwynn's case, obtaining almost precise information as to where the mine is located.

Gwynn and the spy leave the train in Arizona and start across Death Valley before Gwynn recognizes his companion of the trip and realizes that Von Bleck has some ulterior motive for following him. Trailed and trailer ride across the wastes of Death Valley, eventually meeting face to face. The lie is passed, and the men know they are enemies. Then the battle of wits begins, victory apparently always being with the spy.

Eventually Von Bleck trails Gwynn to the home of Don Carlos Ybarra (Charles Wheelock), on whose property the mine of "The Precious Ingredient" is located. With the assistance of outlaws, Von Bleck attacks the house, mortally wounding Ybarra. Gwynn escapes, but returns in time, with the assistance of Yaqui Joe, an Indian (Tote Du Crow), to drive off the outlaws and rescue Nan Lawton (Carol Holloway), who had supposed herself to be the daughter of Ybarra. The episode closes with Gwynn and Nan reading a statement made by Ybarra, in which he reveals that Nan is not his daughter.

This apparently is the mystery basis for the balance of the serial.

At the New York offices of Greater Vitagraph all information regarding "Hearts of Flame" was refused beyond the fact that the serial will be released in the early fall and that it probably will consist of three episodes of three reels each and three episodes of two reels each.

New Players for Art Dramas

Herbert Blache, president of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, releasing on Art Dramas Program, has just signed contracts whereby three of the most important players in fllmdom will appear in his next production, which is entitled "House of Cards."

Catherine Calvert, widow of the late Paul Armstrong, will play the leading female role. Frank Mills appears opposite; Kitten Reichert, the popular child actress, completes the trio.

Miss Calvert is known to theater-goers all over the world. She played leading roles in all of her husband's plays, including "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Deep Purple," "Woman Proposes," and many others.

Frank Mills has had a long stage career and he has been featured in productions by Belasco, Frohman, the Shuberts, and many others.

His screen career began with Triangle and he appeared in the Mutual production, "The House of Mirrors," in the International "The Flower of Faith," where he was co-starred with Jane Grey, and in several Metro productions, including "Capital Punishment."

The third acquisition of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, Kittens Reichert, has been with the Fox Company for over a year and is known and loved by the entire picture-going population. Although only six years old, she has gained a reputation that many older players envy.

The picture in which these three players will appear is a modern drama treating of an important social problem. Nothing further than this regarding its nature has been announced. Herbert Blache himself is directing this, which promises to be the best feature yet turned out by this company.

Scenes from the early episodes of Greater Vitagraph's new adventure serial "Hearts of Flame," which will be released in the

Arizona Film Appears

To the heart of the divorce problem, to Reno, Nevada, goes the theme of "Should She Obey?," the photoplay which had its premiere at the La Salle Opera House in Chicago on May 6. Endorsement of the production by men of national eminence is shown, not by signed statements, but by personal participation of these leaders in the vivid scenes. Among the prominent figures shown on the screen are Gov. Emmett Boyle of Nevada, Judge Marcus A. Cavanagh of Chicago; former Lieut. Gov. Barratt O'Hara, of Illinois, and others of political and clerical note.

The play follows the lives of two American couples from humble beginnings to days of affluence and external happiness. Then the vipers of the divorce evil creep in, and the complications which ensue are taken from real life. It is not a sermon, but deductions may be drawn by the spectator after a gripping cycle of events extending from the depths of vice and squalor to the summit of wealth and extravagant gayety.

Walter C. Rower is the author of "Should She Obey?" It was produced by the Arizona Film Company, a coterie of well-known Chicagoans who thus backed their belief in the necessity of hammering home the facts of the divorce question and the accepted code of matrimony.

Lesser Buys "The Whip"

Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Ins., of San Francisco, has just purchased the California and Arizona rights to the Paragon Film Corporation's dramatization of the Drury Lane spectacle, "The Whip."

The production is now playing a two weeks' engagement in San Francisco's leading playhouse, the Cort Theater, to tremendous business; so big, in fact, that the management is endeavoring to secure added time for it. It is being presented twice daily at 25c and 50c prices.

Opera in Photoplay

A scene from the opera "Faust," staged with all the realism of detail that ever marked its legitimate presentation, is one of the strikingly beautiful features of "The Snarl," the Triangle-Kay Bee play by Leona Hutton and Lambert Hillyer, in which Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale as star.

The scene serves as the setting of that part of the drama in which Miss Barriscale, as one of twin sisters, sits back of the wings, a cripple, and sings the role of "Marguerite," while the other, also played by her, enacts the "business" of the part on the stage.

Beecroft Places Wilbur Subjects

Chester Beecroft this week again demonstrated his facility to place American film product on the foreign market when he closed a deal with Bolton-Stewart, Limited, of London, to supply them every month for the next two years, with a new five reel feature subject starring Crane Wilbur.

So far Mr. Beecroft has placed three brands of five-reel feature productions with the Bolton-Stewart concern. These brands are the Triumph productions, the Frohman super-pictures, and now the Crane Wilbur subjects. Bolton-Stewart, Limited, receive one new subject a month of each brand.

Since opening his business considerably less than a year ago Mr. Beecroft has concluded perhaps more and bigger sales than have ever been accomplished in the film export line. Included in his list are the sale of the Chaplin-Mutual series in all parts of the world; the entire product of one of the principal releasing organizations of this country on a basis of fifty thousand feet each weekly in the United Kingdom and Australia; the Triumph productions, the Frohman super-pictures, the Crane Wilbur subjects, Cub Comedies and special productions, such as Wm. J. Locke's "Where Love Is" and Rex Beach's "Pardners," in the United Kingdom, India, Australia, Japan and other countries, and a number of other pictures and brands.

Superfeatures Gets "The Crisis"

What is said to be one of the largest prices that was ever paid for a picture was paid by the Superfeatures, Limited, of Canada for "The Crisis," a picturization of Winston Churchill's famous novel of the same name.

Charles Stevens, who represents the firm, purchased the production in his rapid, characteristic manner from M. E. Mazur, Eastern representative of the Sherman-Elliott Company, after viewing the picture at a private projection room. He expects to exploit the picture commensurate with its worth.

fall. It comprises 15 episodes and stars William Duncan, who is also responsible for the direction.

NEW STARS FOR MUTUAL

Juliette Day Latest Addition—Mary Miles Minter Also Re-Signs at Same Time as Julia Sanderson Herself

Juliette Day, a stage star of rising fame, has signed a contract for the making of a series of feature pictures for the American Film Company for release through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mary Miles Minter, "the crown princess of the motion picture," as the critics call her, has signed a new two-year contract with the American, and will continue in pictures for Mutual release.

Julia Sanderson has been placed under contract for pictures by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, in behalf of the Empire All Star Corporation, which is making pictures of Charles Frohman stage successes.

That, in one breath, is the package of "big stars only for the Mutual" which Mr. Freuler and Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., brought back from New York on their return to their Chicago offices last week. President Freuler said:

"This is some more evidence of our strict adherence to the policy of 'big stars only' for the Mutual pictures. We shall have important announcements concerning the vehicles in which these stars are to appear. We are giving particular attention to the matter of diversity of dramatic matter and clearly established lines of production for each star. It is a simple matter of business judgment to discover what line of material for each star best satisfies the public and makes money for the exhibitor, and after that to use that sort of material for that star.

"In acquiring Miss Sanderson for the Empire we are adding importantly to the start made with Miss Ann Murdock, who is now at work on the first series of the Charles Frohman successes at the Empire Studios on Long Island. Other additions to the staff of the Empire are to be announced shortly."

Mr. Hutchinson discussed some of the plans of the American Film Company, Inc., in connection with the addition of a new company for Miss Juliette Day. Miss Day will be directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon, formerly Vitagraph's star director, who has been engaged in the making of Miss Gail Kane's first pictures for the American. Miss Kane's future pictures will be directed by Henry King, the director just now particularly known for his successes in the making of the "Little Mary Sunshine" pictures.

"The line-up at the American studio is a decidedly satisfactory one now," observed Mr. Hutchinson, "covering as it does four complete lines of well defined dramatic products—William Russell, whom I consider a leader among the male stars of the day—Mary Miles Minter, just put under a new and high priced contract, who has her own special field in the motion picture world—Miss Gail Kane, admittedly one of the greatest of the young actresses in America—and latest, Miss Juliette Day, from whom we may expect a new and valued dramatic product.

"With four big companies at work the Santa Barbara studios will be just comfortably busy, with ample facilities for all that the pictures require, and a big, strong technical staff, which means so much in the finish and quality of the delivered picture."

New Walthall Play

Henry B. Walthall is shown in a characterization entirely different from anything in which he has appeared on the screen in his next Essanay feature, "The Saint's Adventure." This production is a love drama, having a screen time approximately of one hour, fifteen minutes. It was released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, May 7.

Henry B. Walthall in his newest play, "The Saint's Adventure."

Mr. Walthall essays the role of a young rector of a fashionable church. In his fight to "clean-up" the slums of his city, he discovers that his own church owns the biggest tenements. His congregation declines to furnish funds to remodel and cleanse them. The rector becomes ill and goes West. He reads while there of his reported death. Returning to the city in the disguise of a workman, he sets about his long cherished task. A woman of the slums by strange coincidence claims him as her missing husband. Though he refuses to live with her as such, he does not disillusionize her, and enlists her aid in his work. The rector mobilizes the voters of the slums, and with this political power, forces his former congregation to tear down the unhealthy tenements and erect modern ones. At this time he is recognized by a member of the congregation. The rector, however, refuses to return to his old life, preferring to live among the people he has aided. He weds the woman who mistook him for her husband.

This story provides Mr. Walthall an unlimited field for his genius, and he has rendered a portrayal that will delight his millions of admirers. Mary Charleson is his leading woman. There are some magnificent scenic effects in "The Saint's Adventure."

The new glass-enclosed stage, recently completed, at the Ince-Triangle studios, received its christening when Charles Ray and a company of three hundred and fifty players, under the direction of Schertzinger, appeared in evening dress in a "set" that covered every foot of floor space. This "setting" is a reproduction of one of New York's famous roof gardens, and when the players, each in the latest creations for evening wear, took their places, either at the tables, or dancing, or promenading, one felt certain that, by leaning over the balustrade, he would see the great white way far below and hear the dull murmur of mingled humanity.

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Changing Intermittent Sprockets

I am using a Simplex machine and am having trouble with the picture jumping. I have tried to adjust the intermittent sprocket but that does not seem to help it much. I find that the sprocket teeth are worn quite a little. Would you advise me turning the sprocket around? I have used this machine nearly two years and have never had a new intermittent sprocket put on. We have no repair shop in this town and if I get a new sprocket (I do not know whether the manager will buy one or not) I will have to put it on myself. Will you please tell me how to go about it? Thanking you in advance and hoping to see an answer in the near future in MOTOGRAPHY.—Yours truly, M. M. H., Pennsylvania.

If you have adjusted the star and cam so that there is no loss of motion in the intermittent, and the picture is still jumping, then the trouble more than likely is in the intermittent sprocket. If you have used the machine nearly two years, it is certainly time to put on a new intermittent sprocket. When a sprocket begins to wear or undercut, you are going to have trouble with your projection. The later Simplex sprockets have only one taper pin to hold them to the shaft and that is drilled so that the sprocket can not be reversed without drilling a new hole in it and that hole must be drilled exactly right or the sprocket will not fit right on the shaft. The old style sprockets had two holes for taper pins in them and they could be reversed without any trouble. If I were you, I would get a new sprocket and put it on correctly and so stop the trouble for good.

If you do use the old one, it will only be a short time until you will have to change it again. If the machine has given good service for nearly two years, then the manager surely will not complain at buying a new sprocket for it now. Examine the film trap shoes and tension springs and see whether they are worn out or not and if they show signs of wear, then order new ones. To remove the intermittent movement so that you can remove the intermittent sprocket, proceed as follows: Remove the film trap door by lifting it straight upward, unhooking the door from the pins. To take out the intermittent movement, remove screw S-209-G main driving gear retaining screws, pull off G-112-G main driving gear, push in on film trap screw, S-134-E, which opens door. Next pull back the door which encloses the intermittent sprocket. Next loosen screws S-157-B, intermittent case cover lock screws, and push back locks L-116-B so that they no longer engage ring R-133-A framing cam adjusting ring, on framing cam C-100-A. Loosen collar C-192-G, intermediate shaft retaining collar, grasp fly wheel with right hand, at the same time pulling out gear G-133-G, intermediate gear number 2, with the left hand.

This removes the entire intermittent casing, fly wheel and intermittent sprocket. In replacing the same, reverse the process of removal step by step. Next loosen the two screws S-125-B, intermittent case eccentric bushing screws, grasp intermittent sprocket, pull straight out, removing bushing, star, spindle and sprocket from the casing. Remove taper pin which holds the sprocket to the shaft and with a cloth in the left hand, grasp star and bushing firmly, while with the right hand, you pull the sprocket from its spindle with a twisting motion.

In installing the new sprocket be very careful that the large diameter of the pin holes in the shaft and sprocket are together. To replace parts in the machine first wipe the bushing and its bearings perfectly clean and lubricate with good, clean oil. Push the bushing into its bearing until the star is against the cam; turn the fly wheel slowly, at the same time pushing in on the sprocket until pin P-177-B, star wheel cam pin, on cam C-178-B engages with the star slot, when the bushing may be pushed home; after which adjust the star to the cam and tighten up the two screws S-125-B. In adjusting star and cam, do not fit them too snug. There should be just a little lost motion between the star and cam.

Small Town Equipment and Pay

Dear Sir: I wish to take exception to your statement of April 28 that an operator who will not teach an apprentice is not much of an operator. Most of the small town shows here have these kids for operators, or else the boss runs his own machine. The pay is $1.00 a day to run the evening show, ship the films and sweep out. I hold such a position because my home is here, and many other operators are similarly situated. I have been operating for ten years and have been called on to get a good picture with some mighty bum outfits and have always produced the goods.

I have here a Power's 6A and an Edison Exhibition. Still the traveling operators who come here with the big features say that my machines produce as good a picture as theirs and are the best kept of any on the route. Still if I should teach some kid my work the kid would take my job and would work the first six months for nothing in order to learn the work and then I would lose my job. Our ushers and door men get nothing; our piano player gets $1.00 per night and often plays an extra night free just to see the show. Cheapness is the watchword. I ran one machine with the intermittent so worn that the teeth had been filed off on one side. Another place a temporary wire had been slipped in back of the meter to reduce the juice bill and a tap on the wire with a pencil would set every light winking. With home made fuse plugs, telegraph wire rheostats and other home made devices it takes an operator to get a good picture (I'll say that it does.—Editor.) Give us small town operators our dues, Mr. Scobey. We put on a good picture with rotten equipment that a city operator would not try to handle and we are not breaking in any kid crank twisters to take our jobs. They should be willing to pay to learn and agree to say as a helper until they do learn.— Gale Robinson, Hemet, California.

Well, Brother Robinson, I evidently owe you an apology for the statement that I made about men that would not show or tell another man what little he knows, and I take this opportunity to apologize to you for that statement. Of course you know that there are exceptions to all rules, and after reading your interesting letter I am frank to admit that your case comes under the exceptions. Far be it from me to have any man with a job like the one that you have, lose it. I can understand why you value that job as much as you do. I do not believe that there are many more like it around the country. At the pay that you are getting you ought to be able to have a show of your own by this time; that is, if you have been working steady for the last ten years. If living is as cheap as salaries are then I'll say to you that I do not blame you for not wanting to leave home. They must pension you fellows out there.

I know that the operators in the smaller cities have a hard time getting the proper equipment and repairs and I also know that as a rule they get better results on the screen than a lot of the operators do in the larger cities. And there is a cause for this—they take an interest in their work and as the brother says—have to hold on to their jobs, but how on earth an operator can act as janitor, messenger boy and operator for that kind of a salary is beyond my power of comprehension. I certainly have a very poor opinion of a so-called manager who is so cheap as to steal electricity or allow any of his employes to steal it. You evidently agree with me when you say that a helper should stay a helper until he does learn to be an operator, but if you go on your previous statement that you would not teach any kid how to operate, pray tell me how long would a kid have to stay in a booth with you before he did learn?

Get the idea out of your head that you are married to any particular job. A man with the experience that you have had and that can get the results on the screen that you can, can get a job any time and anywhere. Managers are always looking for good men, and are willing to pay decent salaries to that kind of men. Get out of the rut that you are in and get yourself something. If you cannot get wages where you are then get out and see what the large world contains beside yourself. Let the kid have your job, no one else wants it.

Don't ever get the idea that you have a corner on any kind of business; we all have to learn and the only way that you have learned some, not all, of your craft has been through asking some one who knew more than you did or else reading the works of some one that knew more than you.

Setting Motiograph Shutters

I have been operating a picture machine for two years and have always worked on a Power's machine, but I changed positions last week and am now working on a Motiograph, No. 1A, 1912 model. I am having trouble with the double shutter. Will you please tell me how to set them? Thanking you in advance.— C. L. C., Charlestown, North Carolina.

To set the shutters, remove the front plate which carries the lens after which remove the outer shutter wing (the one nearest to you), loosen the screws on the inner shutter, leaving the shutter just loose enough to be turned easily by hand, and tight enough so that they will not turn on their own accord. Remove the gear cover, after which take hold of the balance wheel and turn the mechanism in the same direction as during the operation of the machine; turn very slowly until the intermittent sprocket starts to move, after which set the lower edge of the large wing of the inner shutter about 1/8 inch above the center of the aperture opening when looking on a line parallel through the center of the light aperture.

Tighten the screws firmly. Replace the outer shutter on the shaft, tighten the screws partially in the same manner as was done with the inner shutter, set the top edge of the large wing about 1/8 inch below the center of the aperture opening after which tighten the screws firmly. The space between the two large wings of the shutters should be exactly the same width when the intermittent sprocket is just ready to start (but not started) as it is just as the intermittent sprocket has come to rest after turning, and said space should be exactly in the center of the aperture opening when looking on a line parallel through aperture opening.

Use Music Cue Sheets

The exhibitor realizes that proper music is invaluable in making his show "go over big."

The music is being arranged for him properly cued to the production. And yet too many exhibitors still shy at the using of these cue sheets.

They are afraid the music will cost too much, or their musicians will not be able to play the selections chosen, or the many changes will be too difficult to handle.

"In this attitude of being afraid of the cue sheets," said Joseph O'Sullivan, the Mutual music man, "the exhibitor is losing track of the full value of the service which is being offered to him.

The one aim in planning the musical cues to accompany the Mutual productions is to simplify this part of the program both from the standpoint of the musician and the exhibitor.

To help keep down the expense we try to use the same music over again for the following features so that although the first expenditure may seem large the foundation of a musical library is then laid and the next time there will be less to buy and so on until a very comprehensive library is built.

We also make an effort not to cue the pictures too closely—that is, not have the music change with every scene—but choose some theme which will be appropriate for a longer period, two or three minutes if possible, which makes it less difficult to follow. The music is arranged so that there will not be too many changes and at the same time it will catch and carry along the spirit of the story.

In selecting the music we are careful to list not only the title of the piece, but also the tempo, so that if the musician has not in his library or cannot obtain the music specified, he can substitute something of the same character. Also we select music, which—while of the best class—is well known and melodious, music with which the player and the ordinary audience will be familiar.

The one idea is to make the cue sheet as simple and yet as effective as possible for only in this way can the exhibitor and musicians get the utmost value from this srevice.

War News Weekly Released

The first issue of the American War News Weekly, produced by the Cinema War News Syndicate, was released on April 29, and will be followed by one-reel weekly. This presents something of an innovation in topical films, as the illustrated main titles and tinted scenes give a feature atmosphere to the news subjects. In matter the country appears to be well covered, as views were shown in locations ranging from Texas to New Hampshire.

ACTORS FORM COMBINATION

Harry Mc Crae Webster Directs "Fraternity Films"—Strives for Combination of Actors—"The Devil's Playground," First Release.

Not to be outdone by the combinations of producers, state rights buyers and exhibitors which have followed each other in quick succession, a number of well-known actors have formed a combination to produce their own features and market them through state right buyers under the brand name Fraternity Films.

The plan originated last December. Charles Abrams and Arthur Werner, of Abrams and Werner, worked out the details and the first picture which was started on January 1, has just been completed. It is a modern drama of Broadway Life in nine reels, entitled "The Devil's Playground," written by Dallas Tyler and Harry McRae Webster.

Fraternity Films is a remarkable organization in many ways, and the fact that its large membership of artists worked together in perfect harmony, spending four months on the elaborate staging of a large special production which was completed without a hitch, has caused a stir in the ranks of the film army.

The idea of actors sharing in the profits of pictures which are financed and produced by themselves is in itself an innovation, but an added interest is being taken in "The Devil's Playground" because of the fact that four months were given to its making instead of the usual five or six weeks, and its completion is followed by the announcement that another picture will be started immediately.

Among the names prominent in Fraternity Films, Inc., are Vera Michelena, William H. Tooker, Robert Cummings, Harry Spingler, George Trimble, Dallas Tyler and Abrams and Werner, who are looking out for the business interest of the organization.

St. Louis Men Meet

At the meeting on April 27, of the St. Louis Theater Managers' and Exhibitors' Association there were thirty-eight active members present.

Mr. Pholman, reporting for the special committee having charge of the musicians' wage controversy, said that the decision had been postponed and there will be another meeting between the committees. A motion was carried instructing the special committee to investigate and find out whether the Musicians' Union can lawfully sustain a boycott where a mechanical instrument is played, and until the association decides otherwise, there will be no mechanical instrument used for fear of a walk-out.

May Art Dramas

Alma Hanlon, Marian Swayne, Naomi Childers and Jean Sothern are the picture players who will be featured in the Art Dramas' releases for May. The pictures come from the four studios: Apollo, Erbograph, U. S. Amusement, and Van Dyke.

"The Auction of Virtue," the first release of the month, dated for May 3, marks Naomi Childers' debut on the Art Dramas program. In support of Miss Childers are Leslie Austen, Wyndham Standing, Kirke Brown and Evelyn Dume.

Second of the month's releases, scheduled for May 10, is "Little Miss Fortune," an Erbograph production featuring Marian Swayne. The story of "Little Miss Fortune" was written by Reverend Clarence J. Harris, and was directed by Joseph Levering.

Next comes the Apollo picture, "The Mystic Hour." The fact that it is founded on a mystifying dream, in which a murder is committed, has aroused curiosity and interest in the minds of both exhibitors and laymen.

The last of the month's releases is entitled "A Mute Appeal," starring Jean Sothern.

Paralta Plan Aids Exhibitors

Nat I. Brown, general manager of Paralta Plays, Incorporated, is finding his hands full in answering inquiries from exhibitors in reference to the Paralta Plan of distribution. The grievances of exhibitors are many and they are most thoroughly interested in any proposition that will relieve them of at least some of the burdens of which they complain.

Their chief source of complaint is high rentals on feature films and instability in distribution management. They never know where they stand, they claim, either in reference to rentals or as to their contracts, which are usually short term agreements that can be cancelled on two or three weeks' notice.

They claim that when they take on a certain line of productions and work up interest in them in a community, it is unfair and unbusinesslike to take these pictures away from them at short notice and turn them over to some competitor who may be willing to pay a few dollars more per day for the service.

They have made a certain make of pictures known and feel that the only reason that a competitor can afford to pay more for them is that he has the advantage of the advertising which has been done in connection with the productions of this company. What this competitor is not called to expend to advertise pictures he can pay in higher service rentals.

One angle of the Paralta plan prevents this situation from arising in connection with its releases. The exhibitor secures a Paralta exhibiting franchise. Under this agreement he owns the exhibition rights of the Paralta plays in a given district and they cannot be taken from him. He will absolutely control them and all the pictures can be made to earn in his territory will be income to him.

U. S. Endorses "Womanhood"

The United States Government has officially indorsed "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation." As is already widely known in the film world this feature was recently produced by Greater Vitagraph, and has proved to be one of the most unusual war pictures ever made. The Adjutant General of the United States army has written a letter to Vitagraph Company giving his complete indorsement of "Womanhood," and the feature is being used in many cities throughout the country as an aid to the enlistment of troops.

Exhibitors running "Womanhood" can be certain, not only of drawing unusual houses because of the keen patriotism started up by the film, but can also be assured of the enthusiastic indorsement of the performance by the officials of his city and state, backed up by the United States Government itself. The Rotary Club of Chicago recently viewed the big feature and unanimously indorsed it. This is only one example of the clubs throughout the country who will boost the feature because of their belief in its inestimable value to the country.

Other scenes from Greater Vitagraph's visualization of Hamlin Garland's popular novel, "The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop." Antonio Moreno and Edith Storey are featured in this Blue Ribbon feature which appeared on May 7.

KANSAS EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE

Enthusiastic Convention in Kansas City Results in Further Establishing the Growth of the Picture Industry in Kansas

The Kansas branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America has at last organized in every sense of the word. The convention was held in Hutchinson, April 23-24, with fifty members present.

The meeting was called to order at 10 o'clock Monday morning, President Chris Glamann, of Wellington, presiding. Routine business and an address by National President Lee Ochs filled the morning program. In the afternoon Mr. Ochs gave a talk on "Organization," driving home the one big idea—that the exhibitors must organize and organize properly to meet the conditions which are bound to face them in the near future, conditions which emphasize the fact that exhibitors and exchangemen are going to the mat in a life and death struggle in the near future—hence the struggle for a strong, well organized branch. The crowd was happy-go-lucky and everybody enjoyed himself, but there could be felt a strong under current of feeling that something was going to happen, and happen quick, and the Kansas delegation is coming to Chicago with enthusiasm for the struggle.

Monday afternoon the visiting members were treated to an auto trip over the city, visited various industries and wound up with a big smoker and entertainment as guests of the Commercial and Rotary Clubs. The smoker opened with an address of welcome by Chester Leasure and was followed by Miss Laura Townsley of Great Bend, who sang to tremendous applause. Other entertainers provided a bill which was more than usually entertaining.

Tuesday morning, promptly at 9 o'clock, the convention was called to order and routine business dispensed with and followed by the election of a new secretary. In the afternoon the big parade was under way promptly at 1:30, headed by Cavanaugh's band and followed by many pretty and unique floats. At two o'clock the convention was called to order by Chairman Glaman, and resolutions were passed condemning the deposit system with the film exchanges in its entirety, as unfair and unjust in every respect. A committee was appointed to frame a resolution and present the same to the different exchange heads, stating the fact that all members of the Kansas branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, will upon a certain date discontinue service with all exchanges demanding the deposit. The date mentioned was not made public, but it will be in the very near future, as another meeting will be held in Wichita, June 4-5, at which time the answer of the members will be taken up.

Convention Delegates Elected

The following were elected as delegates to the National Convention to be held in Chicago, July 14-22. Others will be appointed if membership justifies: Merritt L. Beeson, Dodge City; Lee Gunnison, Atchison; Fred Savage and C. B. Yost, Hutchinson; W. M. Meyn, Kansas City, Kan.; J. J. Marshall, Manhattan; W. H. Willey, Mulberry; Stanley Chambers, Wichita; C. E. Glamann, Wellington.

Tuesday night big convention hall was packed to capacity and the big ball was a success in every respect. Everyone was sorry when the event was over, and while there was many a tired body which wended their way home over various parts of the state, everyone was glad that they did not miss the splendid convention.

Two Title Innovations

In its two latest and greatest releases, Greater Vitagraph introduces two title innovations, each of which is a masterpriece in its way, but which differ entirely in method and effect.

The first device, the "animated" title, was shown in J. Stuart Blackton's "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the great special patriotic spectacle. The second development, the "articulating" title, appeared with the presentation of "Within the Law." The latter, which is so strikingly effective that the spectators almost "hear" the speeches of the actors, was so impressive that the reviewers of the New York papers were moved to comment on it.

The "animated" title, which combines a high degree of inventive genius and artistic coloring, opens the "Womanhood" production, when the introductory announcement, dedicating the film to the Womanhood of America, is presented. It moves vertically over the field of the screen, unfolding the text as it rises.

Special three-color tinting and mechanical devices are used to introduce the national colors as the message progress, the red and white stripes of the flag being used in the early stages as a background, while the stars on their field of blue appear later.

Virtually every title in the seven reels of the big picture is treated in this original and artistic manner; bird's-eye views of New York, Niagara Falls and other important places being presented, each providing a symbolic background for the title. In several instances moving subjects illustrating the titles are interpolated.

Another important feature of the film is tinting of scenes to conform to the time or location of the action. The various leading characters are introduced by the double exposure method. F. Earle, of the Greater Vitagraph art staff, designed the titles, but a dozen different studio departments co-operated in perfecting them.

Of entirely different treatment is the "articulating" title used in "Within the Law," but it has an instrinsic value in addition to its originality. The producers, in employing this device, have been able to retain the meaning and effectiveness of the dialogue which was such an important part of the stage production. Instead of flashing a complete sentence or speech on the screen in cold print, the words are moved singly and with emphasis. They appear successively, so that the reader is enabled to catch the meaning easily and completely. Thus, a speech is "articulated":

"That—is—a—Lie!"

Each word is thrown on a tinted background and the coloring, combined with the motion of the sentence, gives an impressive illusion of spoken lines.

New Lasky Production System

Returning to New York from the Lasky studios at Hollywood, California, Mr. Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces a number of forthcoming productions and outlines a new system of motion picture producing.

Mr. Lasky was away from New York about four weeks and spent much of his time in company with Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and in conference with the directors at the Laskey and Pallas-Morosco studios, as well as the stars. He discussed future productions with Miss Mary Pickford, who is completing her second picture under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille; and with Douglas Fairbanks and John Emerson. Mr. Lasky said:

We are putting into immediate effect a plan of producing to fit Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's announcement made by Mr. Zukor last week, that commencing in August the Paramount Pictures Corporation will adopt the open-booking system of distribution. To this new problem I have given a great deal of thought and we have adopted the following method of production, based on my conclusions that photoplay producing is a fine art and not a manufacturing business, and that best results are obtained by individual expression and unrestrained development.

Each director in our four studios will be absolutely independent to produce to the best of his efficiency and ability. I have had conferences with all of the directors and they have enthusiastically entered into the plan. With the discontinuance of a central scenario bureau each director will have his own writing staff and the author will continue active work on every production until its conclusion, staying by the side of the director even when the film is cut and assembled.

With the engagements mentioned, together with several made before I went West, the roster of Paramount stars includes Petrova, Kathlyn Williams, Wallace Reid, George Beban, Vivian Martin, Louise Huff, Jack Pickford, Sessue Hayakawa, Ann Pennington, Mae Murray, Margaret Illington, Fannie Ward, Billie Burke, Marie Doro, Pauline Frederick and Marguerite Clark.

To the present Artcraft attractions, which include the photoplays starring Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan, will be added Elsie Ferguson, Cecil B. De Mille-Geraldine Farrar productions and the forthcoming personally-directed D. W. Griffith productions.

"The Marcellini Millions," the next Morosco-Paramount picture starring George Beban, has been completed and is scheduled for release on May 14.

Two of the big scenes in "The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop," the story of West and East, which is more than gratifying to Vitagraph patrons.

IN SALES TRENCHES

Glimpse of the Forces Campaigning in Western Division for McClures—a Superorganization for Superpictures

YOU can undoubtedly recall the exchange of a short time ago—an office, so-called, with its walls hung with huge posters of the ink-splashed thrillodramatic variety—an exchange man with scruples (on his letterhead perhaps) and cans of the latest "flim" stacked away in a corner like a closeup of so many poker chips. In those wild days the field for exploitation was as open, free and inviting as the seas of Captain Kidd. Piracy was the order of the day. Between the exhibitor and the "booky" it was a game of wits, and in most cases the exhibitor was decorated with the double cross.

Today it is different. At least there is a vast difference when one looks in, unannounced, on the operations of the McClure Western forces, whose headquarters are in Chicago. Here business is transacted above board, conducted quickly, safely and economically. Efficiency is the rule. A customer is never regarded with suspicion. The exhibitor gets what he wants, when he wants it, without humiliation or embarrassment. Everything is priced in plain figures and all deals are made open and unconcealed.

Behind every organization of this kind there is a dominant personality. The genus homo in this case is Homer A. Boushey, who needs no introduction, and sitting at his side, his perfect protege, C. B. Price.

Price, western division manager, is a hardy product of the old school, but with modern ideas. Ordinarily, being identified with the swiftly changing motion picture industry since its inception practically eight years ago, might be considered a liability. In this instance it is a case of conservatism blended with modernism. Price has the strong faculty of adopting the fundamentals and discarding improper and unfair methods as he goes along. Happily, however, he is never satisfied. Everything must be made better. He has travelled the globe of filmland and come away with an international perspective that admirably fits him for the duties of division manager, wherein he ministers to a territory of twenty-four states. Being of a studious turn of mind, he can talk intelligently on local conditions everywhere. He knows the exhibitor's difficulties, his anxieties and his risks.

When large concerns like the General Film Company, V. L. S. E. and Mutual sought a man big enough for a big job, they summoned Price, and Price got results.

Price is a peculiar type of strong man, earnest, irrespressible, kindly, generous, effective. It should be said, however, that he is a business man first, and then a film man. One who only knows films and nothing else doesn't know films. When McClures decided to enter the picture field they cast around anxiously for the best talent and picked a man who was also a good picker. Such is strategic business organization.

Again this keen spirit of big business is repeated in Mr. Price's selection of salesmen. When one reads the exceptional qualifications that follow in the form of almost too brief biographies, it is safe to say that the McClure western forces are the type that the fifth largest industry in the United States depends upon to hold its own in the greatest commercial era the world has ever seen:

In the Sales Trenches

T. C. Montgomery—Owner and manager of theaters in St. Paul, Hot Springs, Laramie, Wyoming, and Chicago. Salesman and manager of the General Film Company for four years. Opened Chicago office for Fox; traveling representative for V. L. S. E. in Salt Lake, Frisco and Denver. A wise counsellor to the exhibitor fraternity, with an enviable reputation among them.

O. F. Woody—Had valuable training as traveling salesman with the Diamond Match Company until attracted by the film business. "Dago Hill," an irate Italian settlement in St. Louis, still celebrates the opening of its first theater, commemorating the name of Woody. Was also traveler for O. T. Crawford, St. Louis, and associated with them in various other capacities; later with Mutual and World.

W. Van Gelder—If there is such a thing as exhibitors' confidence, Van has it monopolized. He has had intimate contact with all Chicago exhibitors. He has an unusually large following, gained through fair and square dealing after five years' service, first with the General Film Company, and later with Pathe.

W. W. Armstrong—An efficient, hard-working exchange man, formerly in Vancouver and Seattle. A high regard for duty and an attractive personality are gaining him friends and orders in Seattle.

J. A. Davidson—Two and a half years with Mutual, six months with V. L. S. E., formerly with Price in Mutual, and good enough to stay with him.

R. H. Clark.—Veteran purveyor of film on the Pacific Coast since 1907. With the old Turner and Dahnken exchange in 'Frisco; later with General and Mutual. Also manager of Tivoli Opera House in Frisco.

W. C. Brinner—Formerly officiated for Universal in America's greatest German-American stronghold; and in the same capacity with the General Film Company. Also organized the Pioneer Film Company of that city.

W. C. Hoffman—Hoffman's early experiences were obtained behind the footlights. "The Spoilers" marks his first connection with film business, with which he made great records. Was also with Triangle as traveling salesman.

Milton Simon—In divers capacities with General Film Company, Mutual, K. E. S. E., and Art Dramas—leaving all of them with good records. Simon has the distinction of having sold

F. G. Sherrick—Two years an exhibitor and salesman; for a brief period with Pathe and Mutual. Assigned to Minneapolis McClure branch, where he enjoys a substantial acquaintance among exhibitors.

J. R. Harrington—Harrington is said to have installed the first projection machine in a picture theater in the state of Washington. He was a salesman for Mutual for two years, and manager of the V. L. S. E. branch.

W. B. Classon—An exhibitor in Colorado; exploited several large serials for Mutual in the West. Conducted tour of Irving Cummings prior to appointment as assistant manager for Metro, Denver branch; recently gravitated McClurewards as manager of the Denver branch.

H. R. Slocum—With Crawford Film Service in St. Louis in 1906. Then with Swanson-Crawford, General Film Company, Famous Players.

William Berhard—Having lived all his life in San Francisco, formerly connected with both Fox and Metro companies, in a sales capacity, has made him one of the best known and liked film men in the business.

A. J. Reed—Another newspaper man who embarked in films—first with Greater Vitagraph, then with McClure. He makes it a rule to see a film before he sells it.

E. O. Child—Formerly booking agent of San Francisco's legitimate attractions; later Pittsburgh manager of V. L. S. E.

Two Vitagraph Winners

Greater Vitagraph last week had two pictures running in Broadway houses in New York within two blocks of each other, and both playing to capacity business.

"The Sixteenth Wife" was at the Rialto and "Within the Law" is at the Broadway Theater. At the Rialto the doors are being closed at every performance and the special policeman in charge is kept busy forming lines of patrons for the following performance. "The Sixteenth Wife" is the picture booked by Manager Rothapfel while it was in an unfinished state, before it had been trimmed or titled. At the time of booking the picture Mr. Rothapfel declared that he believed it would be one of the big successes of the year and his box office is justifying his prediction.

"Within the Law," which is backed by the unanimous praise of every New York theatrical critic, also is playing to capacity. It is so popular that Greater Vitagraph is seeking another large house in which they may present it after the run at the Broadway is closed next Saturday night.

Remarkable studio scene from Vitagraph's "The Sixteenth Wife."

May Pathe Program

With four big stars and a comedy team of the first magnitude, Pathe presents a strong front for the week of May 20th. Gladys Hulette in "The Neglected Wife" and "Mystery of the Double Cross," a two-reel Lonesome Luke comedy and a Myers-Theby one-reel comedy are features of the program.

"The Candy Girl" is a Gold Rooster play produced by Thanhouser, and is a strong story.

The second episode of "The Neglected Wife," in which Ruth Roland is the star, is entitled "Weakening." A crisis in the lives of the beautiful and innocent young girl and the married man, who despite himself, has fallen desperately in love with her, is reached in this episode.

Mollie King is starred in the tenth episode of "Mystery of the Double Cross," entitled "The Hole in the Wall."

The third of the two reel Lonesome Luke comedies is entitled "Lonesome Luke's Honeymoon." The attempts of an heiress to marry Luke in order to destroy the chances of a wily villain are excruciatingly funny.

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby afford laugh after laugh in "Jumping Jealousy," a one-reel comedy.

The beautiful combitone scenic pictures are represented by the ninth release of the "Know America, the Land We Love" series, entitled "The Copper Industry."

The International cartoon and scenic split-reel release is made up of "Jerry on the Job;" "Quinnine," cartoon; and "Seoul, Korea," scenic.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 42 and No. 43 complete this strong program.

Film Pirate Convicted

Herman Abramovitz, alias Herman Abrams, was recently convicted before Judge Robert E. Crowe, in the criminal court of Chicago on a charge of film piracy preferred by the Mutual Film Corporation, for having received and sold three stolen Charlie Chaplin comedies, "The Count," "The Vagabond" and "The Fireman."

These films were abstracted from the vaults of the Corporation in Chicago last September and disposed of by Abramovitz to a film dealer in Omaha, who sold them to McLean and Walters, proprietors of the Lyric Theater in Sioux City, Iowa.

The property was received in October by E. W. Stoddard, assistant general counsel for the Mutual, at Sioux City. Abrams was arrested and bound over to the Cook County grand jury, which indicted him.

The campaign against film thieves, launched by the Mutual several months ago, has already resulted in several important convictions, and the indictment by the federal grand jury of George E. Bradenburgh, a former Philadelphia alderman, as well as the conviction and sentence of Louis Chatteau and other minor offenders who have been harassing the motion picture industry. During the last five months the Mutual Film Corporation has recovered sixty reels of film stolen by pirates and valued at $60,000.00.

Director Marshall, of Universal, is nearing the completion of "The Heart of a Man," with Janet Eastman as the leading lady.

This idyllic pastoral scene is found in "Madame Bo-Peep," a new Triangle-Fine Arts play, with Seena Owen.

This will remind many of your patrons of their college (business) days. It's Charlie Ray in a new Triangle-Kay Bee.

Madame Bo-Peep Appears

Director Chester is now filming the final scenes of "Madame Bo-Peep," in which Seena Owen will be starred, at the Triangle studios in Hollywood, California.

This will be a screen version of O. Henry's story, "Madame Bo-Peep of the Ranches," written in the heyday of the great American author's success. When O. Henry's death accurred in 1910, the silent drama was still in a very primitive stage of development. In fact, it is doubtful whether he ever looked forward to the time when his stories would be considered ideal screen material, and companies would offer better prices for the cinema rights than he had been able to obtain for periodical and book rights combined. However, that time has arrived.

It is said that Seena Owen appears at her best in this dramatic story of the Texas sheep country. She will be supported by A. D. Sears, F. A. Turner, and other capable Triangle players.

This Will Interest You

General Manager Nat I. Brown, of the Paralta Corporation, has written four little pamphlets of 600 words each on screen plays, stars, sales and publicity, which will be distributed to exhibitors as a part of information relating to the Paralta plan of distribution. These little books are more remarkable, perhaps, for the thought they suggest than what they actually contain. They were written to make the exhibitor think—and think hard.

Essanay Films "The Night Workers"

Essanay is photodramatizing the serious side of a big city's night life. The production will bear the title, "The Night Workers." Marguerite Clayton, who has just finished the highly successful series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" is being featured. Jack Gardner is appearing as her leading man. The picture, which will have a screen time approximately of 1 hour, 15 minutes, will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on May 21.

"The Night Workers," as the title implies, will portray the lives of people who work at night. The base of the plot is laid in a metropolitan morning newspaper office, and unfolds many interesting details in the making of a great public journal. It deals, however, with all kinds of night workers. J. Bradley Smollen, for years a newspaper man in New York and Chicago, is the author of the play. Its direction is under the eye of J. Charles Haydon.

The play does not deal with the pleasure seekers of the night. Its theme is confined to the unnaturalness of the lives of those compelled to earn their bread in the hours of darkness. It takes up persons who arisé to undertake their daily tasks when most workers are laying them down. The unfilled lives of these people form a tragic angle that even they themselves will not admit. The play is not a preachment but a keenly interesting story.

Unusual Piece of Advertising

If you receive through the mails a generous sized folder take good care to look it over as it may be the classy mailing piece sent out by the Arrow Film Corporation to present to exhibitors its production, "The Deemster," which was picturized from the noted novel by Hall Caine and in which Derwent Hall Caine, son of the novelist, is featured. The folder is of unusual size and contains many splendid illustrations done in sepia, like the "spreads" of photographs found in many high class magazines. Arrow deserves real credit for the creation of so fine a piece of advertising.

Re-Book Cohan-Artcraft Picture

The immediate success of George M. Cohan in his initial Artcraft picture, "Broadway Jones," has resulted in many rebookings of the production throughout the country.

Closely following the release of the great Mary Pickford triumph, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," which is continuing to break box-office records everywhere, Artcraft has scored another big hit with the first Cohan film, directed by Joe Kaufman. At the Rowland & Clark Liberty Theater, Pittsburgh, "Broadway Jones" registered such a success that a re-booking of the picture was immediately arranged for.

A foreign conspiracy to secure the secret of a newly invented American military aeroplane furnishes the background for the pretty love story of "Yankee Pluck," the next Ethel Clayton photoplay for World-Pictures Brady-Made. Montagu Love and Edward associates in the cast.

"SUBMARINE EYE" SUCCESSFUL

Williamsons Offer Territorial Rights for Their Latest Triumph of Underwater Photography—Most Spectacular Yet Released

The Williamson Brothers' newest picture, "The Submarine Eye," has met with success, and it is predicted that the film will prove very profitable. This announcement is made from the Longacre Building, New York City, at the offices of the Williamson Brothers.

It has been about three weeks since the first advertising for this film appeared and the film is being marketed on a territorial rights basis. The success of the picture has kept the releasing staff busy meeting the demands of the buyers.

J. M. Franke, of New England, is preparing to cover his territory at once with this film, with the hearty co-operation of the Williamson Brothers' organization. R. E. Lawhead, of Chicago, is in New York, negotiating for Illinois and Michigan. Three of Canada's biggest centers, Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, will be opened for long runs on May 21. On the same date "The Submarine Eye" will open at the Temple Auditorium, Los Angeles, California. William G. Golvin is in charge of the company.

It is expected that the first Western showing of the film will be in Minneapolis, to be followed by runs in Milwaukee, Duluth, and other Mid-Western cities. A Southern tour is being planned on the Jake Wells circuit. Negotiations are being made for the acquisition of a big time theater in New York, about the 42nd Street line.

It is generally conceded by theatrical men that this picture eclipses the former submarine photography of the Williamsons. Not only is the undersea photography as bright as that taken in ordinary studio, but the story itself has all of the elements of success—a love theme of power and a plot filled with suspense and thrills, told with perfect continuity.

The Williamson Brothers will retain the territories of New York, Chicago and Boston, and will give showings on the scale which the magnitude of the production demands. Titles in foreign languages are being prepared by interpreters and it is expected that the timeliness of this production will assure its popularity in countries not too seriously affected by the war.

"WITHIN THE LAW" SUCCESS

New York Critics Unanimous in Praise of Film Adapted by Greater Vitagraph From Bayard Veiller's Drama

Greater Vitagraph's visualization in film of the famous stage play, "Within the Law," is meeting with unusual success during its first run in New York City.

All of the Metropolitan critics and many of the actors who have taken parts in some of the companies which produced this drama on the stage, have attended the opening of the picture at the Broadway Theater in New York and have expressed their approbation in no uncertain terms, both during the performance and afterwards.

"Zit," in the New York Journal, concludes his criticism with the admonition, "Don't miss this picture, whatever else you miss."

The Journal critic, discussing the success of the picture from the monetary standpoint of the playwright, Bayard Veiller, says, after a very thorough analysis of the dramatic values of the production, "The picture industry has done for him what no stage manager could have done in the spoken drama."

The critic of the New York American writes in part as follows: "The great enticement of Bayard Veiller's 'Within the Law,' a photo version of which was presented at the Broadway Theater last night, is its ever-increasing dramatic power."

The New York Herald, speaking through its critic, says: "Few words of praise, even though used by the producers themselves, would more than do justice to the motion picture version of 'Within the Law' presented last night at the Broadway Theater."

According to the critic of the New York World the screen version is even more thrilling than the stage version. He writes: "'Within the Law' was shown on the screen last night before a crowded house and won an easy success."

Miss Harriett Underhill, critic for the New York Tribune, wrote: "Everyone in the audience was bound to contrast the screen version with the play, and if the rest of the audience agreed with the writer they decided in favor of the silent drama."

Even the super-critical New York Times, known only too well to motion picture distributors and producers as antagonistic to motion pictures from every angle, turns about face and, in the person of the critic, writes: "It seemed altogether probable that 'Within the Law' would make an interesting photoplay, just as it was an unusually thrilling drama, and this probability the picture at the Broadway confirms. In the development of the original plot and in its staging a higher degree of intelligence than is sometimes evident in movies is manifest."

The critic of the Morning Telegraph takes the view that Greater Vitagraph, in producing "Within the Law," has thrown down the gauntlet to the producers of the legitimate stage. He says: "In risking a screen adaptation of this subject the producers have evidently realized that they are bringing to an issue the much disputed question as to whether the motion picture can pinch hit for the legitimate play, for the most careful thought has been put into the film."

Greater Vitagraph has decided to release the film on May 14, the showing at the Broadway being a pre-release exhibition. Already the home offices of the V. S. L. E., through which the picture will be released, are besieged by exhibitors who seek first call on the booking and other exhibitors are also applying in telegrams and letters.

Graphic Changes Quarters

New York's newest state right concern, Graphic Features, who are distributing "The Woman and the Beast," have found larger quarters necessary, and early next week move from the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh Avenue, to the Candler Building, 224 West 40th Street. Almost simultantously with the move, the first trade showings of the feature will be given in the Candler Building.

The feature was produced for the Graphic at the Thanhouser Studios and Marie Shotwell heads the cast. A runaway lion, a quarry heroine, a dynamite explosion, and a commendable pacifist are features of the attraction.

KERRIGAN AND BARRISCALE

Paralta Plays to Feature Two Popular Stars in Own Companies—Productions Now Under Way in California Studios

Paralta Plays, Incorporated, has secured the control of the Bessie Barriscale Feature Corporation productions, according to an announcement made by Carl Anderson, president of Paralta.

Miss Barriscale, who is at present in New York City, will soon return to Los Angeles and will at once start work on her first production, "Rose of Paradise," in her own studio, and under the direction of Oscar Apfel.

Mr. Anderson also announces that the Paralta distributing corporation has secured control of the releases of the J. Warren Kerrigan Company. J. Warren Kerrigan has been touring the United States, appearing in person at the most important picture theaters and is now on the return trip to California.

The Kerrigan Company will make about eight or ten feature pictures a year. The Kerrigan studio is located at Hollywood, where Miss Bessie Barriscale is also engaged in making her own productions.

Miss Barriscale has also formed her own company, which will make from six to eight productions each year. These will be feature pictures of from five to nine reels, according to the importance of the story. She will employ three directors under much the same system as J. Warren Kerrigan, one to handle the actual photographing of a story while the other two are preparing the next release, looking up locations and attending to technical details.

The Paralta Distributing Corporation was organized by Carl Anderson of New York, formerly of the Lasky-Paramount organization; Herman Katz and Herman Fichtenburg, the New Orleans exhibitor, who conducts a chain of 37 theaters in the South; Robert T. Kane and Nathaniel I. Brown.

The Barriscale and Kerrigan pictures, which will comprise from sixteen to twenty each year, will be the first productions released under the Paralta Plan, which is an original co-operative system for picture distribution, designed to bring about a more equal distribution of profits between the producing, distributing and exhibiting interests.

Any exhibitor who holds these pictures controls them absolutely in his own exhibiting territory, and he can run them the same as any showman might run his own attractions to make money from them. They will be his own property in his immediate territory, and the exploitation of them will benefit him rather than some competitor.

The plan is admittedly revolutionary in many aspects but every feature of the Paralta Plan has been thoroughly tested in a practical way, and all seemingly speculative and uncertain features were proven sound and practical during the eighteen months of severe test given the Paralta Plan in southern and western theaters, and as the result of these tests, the framers of the Paralta Plan have invested several hundred thousand dollars in the promotion of the Paralta idea.

The week of May 13 will signalize the release of the first Harry Myers-Rosemary Theby comedy, "The Delicatessen Mystery," on the Pathe program.

Mary Miles in Dream Picture

Mary Miles Minter has another Cinderella role in "Annie-for-Spite," her latest Mutual-American photoplay, released May 14. Mary's dreams come true in "Annie-for-Spite," just as they did in "The Innocence of Lizette."

In "Annie-for-Spite" Miss Minter is just "Mary." The picture allows her a wide scope for the use of her specialty. From poor, ungainly, unhappy little orphan she is transplanted to a home of extreme wealth, where she becomes the adopted daughter of a crabbed old woman. She lets sunshine into the staid old house and into the shriveled old heart, and transforms the household.

Her dreams are her articles of faith. She believes, in the days when she is clumsily handling brooms in the basement of a department store, that she is someday to be adopted and loved, and in the moment of deep despair she is found, adopted "for spite" and made happy to make others happy.

The story is one of the prettiest and happiest in which Miss Minter has appeared and technically the picture is highly creditable to the director.

"The Deemster" Attracts Buyers

"The Deemster" is attracting state rights buyers all over the world. Two big operators are bidding for the rights to the United Kingdom, three for Canada, one for France, one for Spain and Portugal and one for China, Japan, Singapore and other far eastern countries.

Messrs. Wilson and Stedman of the American Maid Film Company, Minneapolis, bought "The Deemster" for Minnesota, North and South Dakota. Options are held on two other groups of states and should advantage be taken of same, only the Pacific Coast states and one or two separate states will remain to be sold.

A wonderfully lucid sales plan and business getting campaign has been evolved for buyers of "The Deemster" and their constituents, and is given gratis to all interested in promoting the great Hall Caine photoplay.

Application to the Arrow Film Corporation, 1205 Times Building, either by mail or in person, is sufficient to obtain the above mentioned data.

"Official War Pictures"

Following the big success of Pathe's Official British War Pictures in Chicago, they opened to large business at the American Theater, Denver, the fifth city in the United States to see these authentic motion pictures of actual warfare in the French battlefield.

Contracts having been signed for the complete series of seven episodes of two-reels each, prints have been apportioned to the Pathe exchanges and the British War Pictures are now available to exhibitors in the territories covered by the following Pathe branches: Chicago, Minneapolis, Boston, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Washington, Omaha, Buffalo, Dallas, Denver, Kansas City, New York, Newark, Cleveland, St. Louis, Atlanta and Seattle.

Working under the supervision of Director Stuart Paton, Ben Wilson is filming the concluding episodes of "The Voice on the Wire," in which Wilson plays the lead, with Neva Gerber opposite and supported by Joe Girard, Howard Crampton and Francis McDonald.

Powerful Triangle Director

As Thomas H. Ince's chief assistant in the direction of "Civilization," Raymond B. West has lately added considerably to his prestige by his remarkable direction of two of the Bessie Barriscale Triangle features scheduled for early release, "The Snarl" and "Miladi of Tags and Tatters."

Raymond B. West, Ince-Triangle director.

In "The Snarl" West has registered a triumph of double exposure in the characterization of the twin sisters. The story is a modern drama, and in most respects the direct antithesis of "Miladi of Tags and Tatters," which takes place in the rollicking days of John Paul Jones.

His special talent is shown in his ability to work out characterizations amid settings which enhance the dramatic values of each scene without losing the visual thread of the story. There is a smoothness and a naturalness about West's technique which shows the selective eye of the born artist. In fact, he declares that when he has earned enough money, he intends to retire and devote himself to sculpture, for the pure joy of expressing his ideas in a medium that is all his own. But let us hope that that day will not arrive until he has made many more Triangle features with the sweep and the thrill of "Civilization" in them and the charm and whimsicality of the forthcoming Bessie Barriscale series.

"A Battle Cry of War" Endorsed

Contrary to some rumors which started from Pittsburgh and which were printed in the New York papers, "The Battle Cry of War," the Vitagraph feature, which in its first form was known as "The Battle Cry of Peace," has not been banned by the authorities of the Smoky City.

When the war spectacle was shown by an exhibitor in Pittsburgh he issued some sensational advertising matter which met with the displeasure of the police authorities, and this publicity was confiscated. There was no objection to the picture itself. On the other hand, the film has been commended for the patriotic spirit it instills into those who view it, as it has been re-moulded. The picture is now said to be one of the outstanding factors in the creation of the right attitude toward the present war and in the stimulation of recruiting.

Expose of Smuggling

The battle of federal authorities to wipe out opium smuggling is the basis of Edna Goodrich's second star production for Mutual "Queen X." "Reputation," her first picture, is scheduled for release May 28.

"Queen X" was written by Edwin M. Stanton, assistant United States attorney of New York, who participated in the crusade against opium smuggling and led many of the raids on the gangs which offered desperate resistance to the federal government's attempt to stamp out the drug.

Miss Goodrich appears as "Madame X," queen of Chinatown, a brilliant woman, the victim of the opium habit and leader of the gang which smuggles the drug into the United States.

The story is laid in New York and the time is the present.

Coming Texas Convention

The general convention of Texas Exhibitors, which will be held in Galveston on June 12 and 13, has aroused a great deal of interest among exhibitors in the South. It is expected that the convention will bring about a further organization of forces to fight adverse legislation and to co-operate for the general good of all exhibitors.

Representatives of every Texas City Organization affiliated with the state body were present at a delegate conference in Dallas. This was done upon the invitation of President E. H. Hulsey, and it was decided to retain the present officers until the general convention. A "steering" committee was appointed consisting of Karl Hobletzelle, president of the Interstate Amusement Company; P. C. Levy, Hippodrome Theater, Fort Worth, and W. J. Lytle, of Epstein and Lytle, who operate four houses in San Antonio. Hugh M. Hardie, cashier of the Central State Bank, was continued as treasurer.

Fight Against Fake Enterprises

A number of theaters have been capitalizing the patriotism of the country at war in New York City, by promoting fake war benefit performances. Mark A. Luescher, publicity manager for the Hippodrome, advances a plan for the discouragement and suppression of unworthy and undeserving enterprises of this kind, and by the same process, a method of gaining the best advantage for authorized and commendable patriotic undertakings. Thus far no bogus war benefit has been shown in the big theaters, but many of the smaller houses have been induced to run 50-50 propositions with promoters.

Lillian in Boy's Clothing

Ben Turpin poses as the president of the Union Square Fish Ball Company in the Vogue Comedy entitled, "Caught in the End," which will be released by Mutual on May 14.

Lillian Hamilton is engaged as Ben's stenographer, but appears most of the time in a neatly pressed suit of boy's clothes. Not in the office, however. The fair Lillian rented the suit for a masquerade ball and liked it so well that she continued to wear it on all occasions.

Indians with Margarita

A whole tribe of Indians has been engaged to appear in Margarita Fischer's fifth feature for Mutual, "Little Miss Missionary." These Indians will encamp in the Exposition grounds at San Diego and will be used in various spectacular scenes, including a thrilling encounter with Mexican cowboys.

Jack Mulhall, one of the featured players at Universal City, is enacting the principal part in a five-act drama entitled, "The Great Adventure."

"The Law and the Lion"

Selig Five Reel Play Released Through K. E. S. E. May 14. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE lion is the featured player in this drama and is the star performer throughout the five reels. And although his name is not given in the cast, we are informed by Miss Olga Celeste, the well-known animal trainer of the Selig forces who was present at the trade showing, that he is known as "Jimmie."

Nakhla is placed under guard.

"Jimmie" plays his role in a stately manner and with much seriousness. In spite of his dignity he has playful moments which are in their way as thrilling as his more business-like exploits. In fact, "Jimmie" is as thrilling a hero as we have seen recently.

The production is an adventure story of the jungle and wild animal type for which the Selig Company is so well known. It is some time since this sort of a production has been offered and most patrons will doubtless welcome it. The locations are fine, especially the ocean and the desert scenes, and the photography is worthy of praise. The story is the weakest phase of the picture. With a more interesting plot the offering would have been excellent. With the exception of the player mentioned, the cast is not remarkable. They handle conventional roles in a capable manner.

The Story: William Bankinton (Will Machin), a wealthy youth, embarks on a trip to Africa during a college vacation. The ship is wrecked, but the boy is rescued by a sailing vessel. As a result of the shock, his memory is a blank. A fire breaks out aboard the sailing vessel and the crew, fearing an explosion of the powder they are carrying, abandon the ship. The rescued youth, a stowaway, and a caged lion remain on the ship and conquer the fire. Later the stowaway is frightened away by the lion. The vessel drifts to land. The boy and the lion travel together but discover that the Arab tribes are not friendly. The boy meets the daughter of the ruler, and the two fall in love. The girl's father prevents their meetings. The boy becomes a guide for an American girl traveling in that country. He learns of a plot against the Arabian sheik and foils it. In the struggle, in which his lion plays an important part, he is wounded. This shock restores his memory. He prepares to return to his own country with the friends of the American girl. But when he does so, he takes the sheik's daughter and his lion companion with him.

"The Auction of Virtue"

U. S. Amusement-Art Dramas in Six Parts. Released May 3. Reviewed by George W. Graves

JOSEPH POLAND'S story, as produced by Herbert Blache, proves to be a splendid screen entertainment. It is that of a girl who has to fight the desire, born of years of poverty, to take the easiest way out, but who is finally jolted back into sensible thinking by a circumstance which fortunately gives her a foretaste of what her lot would be should she decide to take the broad road, pleasant at its start. In the very nick of time she sees her two offered futures in their true light—one, a happy marriage to a good but poor man, and the other a life of misery beginning with the temporary consolation of money in plenty. The story is one that lends itself especially well to screen requirements. It has action, situations of power and atmosphere, that of the artist colony scenes being quite remarkable, as any one familiar with the milder forms of Bohemian life will attest.

Naomi Childers heads the strong cast in the part of Phyllis, which she makes to shine for all its worth. It is a sympathetic, powerful role to begin with, and Miss Childers proves herself equal to her dramatic opportunities. The cast, to a person, is strong. It includes Wyndham Standing, Leslie Austen, Evelyn Duma and others. The picture is above the Art-Dramas standard in story-interest, acting and production.

Mrs. Shaw, who has suffered distress all her life from poverty, brings up her daughter, Phyllis, with one desire planted firmly in her mind—to marry for money. Although she loves her artist suitor, she tells him she can never drag through a life of penury. At a sort of mock auction in the artists' quarters Phyllis offers herself to the bidders. All the men offer wealth, position, etc., but without marriage. When Jerry, her artist lover, enters the arena and offers love and marriage, the truth gleams a little too brightly for Phyllis, and she stops the auction, saying the joke has gone far enough. But the girl finally is enmeshed by a wealthy man who relates the story of misunderstanding between him and his wife, enlisting Phyllis' sympathy and successfully making her see good in evil. But when Phyllis is about to take the fatal step—to go to the apartment he has furnished—the man's real character is revealed. The reaction of her miraculous escape leads the girl to come back penitent to Jerry, and a happy marriage is the result.

"Heart's Desire"

Lasky-Paramount Photoplay in Five Reels. Released April 30. Reviewed by George W. Graves

MARIE DORO has a part not worthy of her talents in "Heart's Desire," which as a story is insignificant. The picture relies entirely on Miss Doro's individual work, since the cast does not properly do its part, and the state of things is beyond the saving grace of direction. The plot lacks the spicy human bits that make a light romance of this stamp register as entertainment, and the incidents are badly developed. Marie Doro is about the only reason a person could have for wanting to see this, and the exhibitor has a fair idea how much of a drawing card she is. When this star has a real part she proves herself able to rise to the occasion, as those who remember "Oliver Twist" will attest, but her admirers will be disappointed with the scanty opportunities given her in "Heart's Desire." The picture might have been much improved upon by a classy, distinctive setting and, above all, by the introduction of some telling human touches, but as it is the story is flat, poorly acted by the cast, and given only ordinary direction. Yet, because Miss Doro is the star, there may be those who will derive a fair amount of entertainment from the offering. The name Paramount has appeared on better, far better, pictures than this. In the support are Albert Roscoe, Mario Majeroni and Jean Gaunthier.

The big rentals imposed upon his tenants in a French village cause the villagers to harbor much malice towards Henri Le Roque. Because of coming on his premises without permission, Fleurette, a flower girl, is shot. She is nursed back to health on the estate by Paul, Henri's nephew, and a love interest springs up between the two. Henri cannot become reconciled to the common flower girl. But later he is forced to recognize her courage and worth when she saves him and his household from the infuriated attack of the revolting townspeople. Then his benediction is upon the marriage of Fleurette and Paul.

"The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in Five Parts. Released May 7. Reviewed by George W. Graves

A NEW ANGLE on Indian pictures has been reached in this film, which proves to be not merely so many feet of war whoops and fast riding, but an interesting study of the Indian's character and also that, in passing, of the white man who chased him from one place to another and would have been glad to see the whole race extinct. The question that looms up dark and sinister before much of the picture has passed is: Which was the savage? Hamlin Garland's story has enough material for the entire five reels. It is novel, stirringly entertaining, virile; it has a strong human appeal and it is morally satisfying in its conclusions. The broad moral significance of the picture with its masterful treatment makes the picture big.

The hero's love for a girl who despises him, not knowing her father is in the wrong; his perseverence in the cause of the Indians and of humanity; his virile encounter with the lynchers who would gladly make the whole band confined in the reservation pay for one Indian's deed of murder; the protracted but successfully waged battle with the cattle interests; the timely rescue, given an interpretation which smacks not at all of the procedure of the usual movie rescue; the final dramatic and satisfactory settlement of troubles and the happy culmination of the romance—all combine in a sequence of events which have a "walloping" dramatic power. The novelty of introducing Indian sign language into the action is ably conceived and proves a source of unusual interest.

Antonio Moreno makes Captain George Curtis, the staunch champion of the Indians, and, incidentally, of the government, a strong, likable character; in fact, making Curtis live upon the screen as he would have lived had the camera been over on the next mountain range. Edith Storey makes a part of less sympathetic power stand out in the way she usually does—with utmost conviction. Because of past acquaintance with your patrons under very favorable circumstances these two leads have a big drawing power. They are supported by Otto Lederer and Al. Jennings, splendid in two Indian characterizations; Mrs. Bradbury, Neola May, Robert Burns, Edward Cecil and H. A. Barrows. The entire cast has caught the spirit of realism and genuineness of the picture. It seems to have been infectious.

"The Captain of the Gray Horse Troop" is among the best Vitagraphs that have appeared. Hamlin Garland's story is a real live one and it has been produced with a "wallop" by Director William Wolbert. The picture has the vivifying combination of finely wrought situations, thrills, suspense and un-acted acting. It is all of a "dashing story of the West."

"The Wildcat"

Jackie Saunders in Horkheimer-Mutual Feature of April 23. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AGAIN Jackie Saunders has a hoydenish role and she plays it with vigor. As Bethesda, the spoiled daughter of wealth, she romps through the five reels of this story in a very entertaining fashion. The picture is a comedy drama with a slightly different flavor and will easily please most audiences. The star is very good, the story is a diverting mixture of old and new material cleverly presented, and the photography and settings are excellent. The supporting cast is well chosen. Included are Daniel Gilfether as Bethesda's father, Mollie McConnell as her mother, Arthur Shirley as Mortimer Hunt, the hero, and Nell Holman as his sister. The story and the star's acting hold the interest at all times. The offering can be rated as very good.

The Story: Bethesda, the tomboy daughter of Roger Carewe, is allowed her own way in everything. Although kind-hearted, she is possessed of an unruly temper. When Carewe finds that he is in a way to lose his fortune, he and his wife plan a brilliant marriage for Beth, but she, overhearing the plot, flies into a tantrum and refuses to consider it.

Carewe's fortune is saved by a young man, Mortimer Hunt, whom the old man had once befriended. When Mortimer is entertained at the Carewe home, Beth believes he is the rich man who wishes to marry her and she goes to great lengths to disillusion him. Mortimer and Beth's father plan to turn the joke against Beth, and through an elaborate plot, Mortimer kidnaps the girl, frightens her into a submissive attitude and wins her love. Then the two are married.

"The Phantom's Secret"

Second Butterfly Feature a Brisk Melodrama. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE title suggests the nature of this picture. It is a swiftly moving melodrama, patterned after a rather lurid but harmless type of fiction. It is well presented, with technical details capably taken care of, and is interpreted by a well-chosen cast. Excitement rather than plausibility is the goal sought and attained. Its appeal is especially to a middle class, sensation-loving audience, and it will thoroughly delight those for whom it is intended. Good photography is a feature of the picture.

Mignon Anderson as the persecuted heroine, Jeanne de Beaulieu, has the most important role, and interprets it well. Others in the cast ar Marc Fenton, Hayward Mack, Dan Leighton, Jeanne's deception is discovered.

Molly Malone, L. C. Shumway, Fred Church and Nellie Allen. Charles Swickard directed.

The Story: Jeanne is the daughter of a French nobleman who leads a double life. Part of the time he is "The Phantom," the mysterious crook who terrorizes Paris. One night Jeanne is summoned home from the convent where she is at school. Her father is dying. Before his death he reveals to her his secret career and begs her to marry his co-worker, Leroux, to protect the family name. Jeanne obeys and accompanies Leroux to America, where she is forced to aid in several robberies. On one of these occasions she meets a girl she had known while in school. This friend aids Jeanne in running away from her husband.

The train on which Jeanne and her friend are traveling is wrecked and the friend is killed. Jeanne sees a way out of her trouble, for the friend is on her way to live with relatives who have never seen her. Jeanne goes in the dead girl's place.

Later Jeanne falls in love with the son of the house, but tells him of a bar to her marriage. Then her deception is discovered by a young man who had known her in Paris. He tries to blackmail her. Things come to a crisis when Jeanne's husband also arrives on the scene. Jeanne tells the entire story of her deception. A happy conclusion is reached when Leroux is killed by a confederate he had "double crossed," leaving Jeanne free to marry the man she loves.

"Little Miss Nobody"

Violet Mersereau in Bluebird Photoplay of May 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AS BONNIE, a little waif of the lumber camps who is later adopted by a family of wealth, Violet Mersereau has a very congenial role in this story. There is plenty of variety and the little star is given a very good opportunity to do the sort of acting she does best. There is in the role a mixture of tomboyishness and daintiness which suits Miss Mersereau. The story is clearly told but is rather rambling and its chief interest lies in the acting of the star. The supporting cast is suitable. The photography is especially fine throughout, and the outdoor settings very beautiful, the interiors well chosen.

The story was written by Alfred Solman and directed by Harry Millarde. The cast of players includes Clara Beyers, Helen Lindroth, Sidney Mason, John Mackin, James O'Neill and Robert Clugston.

The Story: Bonnie is a maid of all work at Joe Gaskill's "Half Way House," a lumber camp resort. She is cuffed and roughly treated by the proprietor and she fights back like a scrappy kitten. When "Bull" Dorgan, boss of the camp, realizes that Bonnie is becoming a very pretty girl, he wishes to marry her. Bonnie runs away. In the woods she meets Arthur Wharton, a young man from the city seeking to recover his health in the north woods. He is very ill and Bonnie stays to nurse him. She falls in love with him. When Dorgan learns where Bonnie is, he tries to kidnap her, and failing that, demands that Wharton marry the girl. So Bonnie and Wharton are married. Wharton leaves Bonnie in the care of his sister for a year. When he returns he is led to believe that she has fallen in love with another man. Likewise Bonnie supposes that Wharton loves someone else. After a sufficient amount of suspense, misunderstandings are cleared up, their mutual love revealed, and both are made happy.

"Treason"

Bluebird War Drama of a Thrilling Kind Released May 14. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a war story ot a spectacular sort, laid in a mythical kingdom. Elaborate battle scenes are a feature of the early part of the play, and a thrilling automobile race occurs in the last reel. A love story forms an important part of the plot.

The hero returns home.

Allan Holubar, who plays the hero's role, directed the play from a story by Robert L. Weigert. In the supporting cast are Lois Wilson, Dorothy Davenport, Joseph Girard, George Pearce and Edward Hearn.

The thrilling events and the war atmosphere of the theatrical sort form the chief appeal of the offering. It lacks the realism and the human touches which have made some of the screen war dramas so absorbing. Part of this is due to the fictitious countries chosen and to the fantastic names given the nations and the characters. On the other hand, there is none of the sadness which is inseparable from a real war story.

The picture is, in short, an excellently photographed, very exciting war drama, entertaining but not convincing.

The Story: Pettrus Baariot goes to the front as a telegraph operator. There he performs an act of heroism which saves the battle for his country. Sent home wounded, he is not given credit for his heroism but instead is forced into an inferior position by Danick Rysson, his rival for the love of Floria Natarre. At last, disgusted with his government, he sells the secret telegraph code to a spy. The spy sets out for the frontier but before he reaches it, the error regarding Pettrus is righted and he is given a high position and great honor. He, regretting his hasty action, sets out in a racing car to overtake the spy who has the code. After a thrilling race, both cars are wrecked. Both men are injured, but not fatally. They agree not to betray each other. Pettrus, on his recovery, marries Floria.

"The Guilty Party"

Second Triplet of O'Henry Stories Are Dramatic Gems. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"The Guilty Party," "The Marionettes" and "The Green Door" bring the Vitagraph O'Henry picturizations, released through General Film, up to the seventh release. These stories should prove immensely popular because the original O'Henry style and punch has been maintained perfectly. All of the stories breathe a refreshing air of originality, besides being intensely human and true to the things of life. If it is true that Ingersoll watches made the dollar famous, it is just as true that the Vitagraph O'Henry series will make the "two-reeler" famous. These pictures can be adapted to most any theater program. They are "classy" in the full sense of that descriptive word.

"The Guilty Party" shows how the education gleaned from the streets by children of the East Side of New York turns their minds when they grow older. Liz, whose negligent father has allowed her to run around at random, is highly jealous of any girl who drinks or even speaks with her lover, the Kid. The latter, determined to cure her of this, deliberately takes Annie to a dance. In intense pique, Liz, under weight of the immoral education she has acquired in the street and the rage of her impressionable young mind, goes to the dance hall and kills her lover. Then the girl, pursued by the angry mob of dancers, manages to get to the East River, where she ends her life. The story is provided with two endings, the one just mentioned, and a happy one, but the writer discards the latter with the remark that it is not true to life. Thomas R. Mills, the director, has preserved the atmosphere of the East Side, street to dance hall, without a flaw. "The Guilty Party" is a pathetic little story put over with a big punch.

"The Marionettes" is a unique story to say the least, what might be called a psychological study of the crook and the gambling mind. The story is certainly one of novel character to appear on the celluloid, and a person who had read it in an O. Henry volume might have said it would be impossible to film. But yet it has been filmed and it makes two reels of engrossing entertainment, due to good acting, direction and clever titling. Dr. James combines burglary with the practice of medicine. He is called in to treat a gambler and wife-beater. Learning that the man has money concealed in the room, he gives him a hypodermic injection which will first stimulate him to tell where the money is and then kill him. After Dr. James has secured his booty the two men begin reviling each other from their two standpoints of honor and this continues until the victim dies. Seeing the starved condition the gambler's wife is in, the doctor leaves the booty for her, saying it was her husband's dying wish. J. Frank Glendon is the doctor, Frank Crayne is the gambler and Mildred Manning his wife. The picture was directed by Thomas R. Mills.

"The Green Door" is the most delightful story of the three. As is the case with the other stories, it is not what is told that makes it so pleasing, but the distinctive, original manner of the telling. The plot itself is a mere incident, but is is supremely human, and the usual twist at the finish gives a fine comedy effect. The play has a generous number of laughs spread throughout. It shows in a highly ludicrous way the low ebb at which romance and adventure find themselves in this day of the present. At the beginning of the picture we watch Rudolf, a romance and adventure seeker, failing in all his attempts to find his Real Adventure. But he still persists. On the back of an ordinary dentist's advertising card, being dealt out to the passers-by by a man stationed outside the D. D.'s office, he reads the magic words, "The Green Door." On receiving a second card inscribed the same way he walks into the building and finds at the head of the stairs a green door. He is admitted by a poor girl on the verge of starvation. He buys her food and the affair proves to be a decided adventure, with promise of a future happy development. On leaving the house he does a little investigating, only to find that all the doors in the place are green and on regaining the street learns that the card inscriptions were only a novel means of advertising a show up the street. So it seems that the girl had not called for help and that fate had played a prominent part in proceedings.

"The Green Door" has the ingredients of suspense, mystery and human comedy in goodly portions. Walter McGrail, a happy choice for the part of the romance seeker, gives a very memorable performance, while Mildred Manning makes her character fully sympathetic.

"Kidnapped"

Forum-Edison Conquest Release of May 7. Four Reels. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

THIS Edison Conquest picture is an adaptation of Robert Lewis Stevenson's thrilling story of adventure and will be the next release on the Forum program. The tale is vividly set forth in smoothly connected incidents. There is action aplenty throughout the entire length of this production and the interest does not lag for an instant. Many of the shipboard scenes were filmed off of Sandy Hook. An old-fashioned brig was used for the purpose.

Ray McKee appears in the role of David Balfour, a lad who is shanghaied by the order of a miserly old uncle who is trying to hold on to the property that rightfully belongs to the boy. Joseph Burke in the characterization of Ebenezer Balfour, the treacherous uncle, appears to advantage. Robert Cain does fine work in the part of Alan Breck. William Wadsworth as Angus Bankeillor, Frank Hanna as Captain Hosseason, Walter Craven as Riach and John Nicholson as Shuan are prominent members in the supporting cast. Under the direction of Alan Crosland the story is well put on, and proves to be a pleasing subject.

David Balfour is shanghaied at the instigation of his designing uncle, who wishes to retain the property that rightfully belongs to the lad.

"The Frameup"

William Russell in American-Mutual Offering of May 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is one of the most fitting vehicles William Russell has ever had. It is a comedy drama of the popular type with plenty of action and thrill, with humor and human touches. Its story is well thought out and cleverly directed. It holds the interest and the suspense element is well managed. The plot is unusual, the acting good and the photography excellent.

Jeffrey wins Mother Moir's gratitude.

It is a better than average offering for any audience and will merit special advertising, for which its theme offers a particularly good opportunity.

William Russell as Jeffrey Clairborne, a young man of wealth in search of adventure, has a role full of opportunity for strenuous acting, and he is thoroughly at home in the part. Director Edward Sloman has made the most of the story and emphasized the humor and the speed. The supporting cast of players includes Lucille Ward as Mother Moir, Francelia Billington as her daughter. Harvey Clark, Alfred Ferguson, and Charles Newton. The acting throughout is good.

The Story: Jeffrey Clairbourne, whose hobby is motoring, undertakes to convert his father to his tastes. He sets out one morning to drive his father to his office in a racing car but instead takes him for a spin in the country. They overtake a taxi and Jeffrey notices that the driver of the taxi is annoying a girl who accompanies him. He leaps from his own car to the taxi, leaving his father riding on in the racer. Jeffrey overcomes the taxi driver and takes the girl home. She is the daughter of Mother Moir, owner of a string of taxis. They offer Jeffrey a position, believing him a chauffeur, and for the adventure, Jeffrey accepts.

Things begin to happen at once. Mother Moir had once been in league with a band of criminals but because of her daughter, and also because of her friendship with the chief of police, she has severed connections with the gang. Now she is forced to shelter a number of crooks or have her early career revealed. Jeffrey, her new chauffeur, learns of the situation and tries to help her. He outwits both the crooks and the police. Finally he outwits Mother Moir herself and elopes with her daughter. After much excitement and suspense things are cleared up. Mother Moir is rescued from her predicament; the crooks are arrested; Jeffrey's father, arrested for speeding, is released from jail and Jeffrey returns home with his bride.

Universal Program

To Oblige a Vampire—Nestor—May 14.—With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Olive Adair. Harold and Willie are broke. Harold finds a Russian dancer's purse and returns it to her. She takes quite a fancy to him. When he refuses a reward, she offers him a rose. Harold is delighted, but Willie is disgusted. The next day the boys are invited to the home of the dancer. She shows Harold the picture of a man whom he is to kill for her. Harold manages to stab the man, is chased by the servants, but escapes them and returns to the dancer. Here he finds her making love to Willie. She tells Harold to fade away. The boys begin to fight, and then Harold wakes up. It has all been a terrible dream.

The Voice on the Wire—Episode 10—May 14.—With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. This episode is full of excitement. Polly is in the hands of the crooks. Shirley learns that "Red" has taken Polly to "Frisco" Ida's gambling house. With his men he starts for the place. As the picture closes we see Polly lying exhausted on the bed. Slowly the mysterious hand appears and starts toward her throat. She stirs restlessly while the fingers of the hands extend toward her.

Such Is Life in South Algeria—Powers—May 13.—This is a Travelaugh with Hy Mayer through some of the unfamiliar spots of Southern Algeria. We see a view of the Bogharie Road, which changes into a cartoon of a family outing. Then we see a street in Sidi-Okba, and the famous oasis of Biskra, the first of the desert cities. Dances of the natives to the music of a drum orchestra are shown. A squad of cavalry in the picturesque Spahi rides by, and then we see a group of Nomads traveling towards the south. The gorges of El-Kantara finish the picture, which is interspersed with amusing cartoons from the clever pen of Hy Mayer.

Flames of Treachery—Imp—May 10.—With Clyde Benson, Lois Wilson and Lee Hill. James Ford is the Western representative of a big concern. He has been carrying on some crooked work, and treats the new clerk with scant courtesy. Working in the office is Ruth Chalmers, and Ford makes love to her. One night Ford asks Ruth to work late. Hatton comes back to the office to find Ruth fighting for her honor. Ford is angry and discharges Ruth. He tells Hatton that the head office will take care of him. He puts some marked bills in Hatton's desk and then brings the officers to arrest him. Hatton then causes the arrest of Ford as he is the head of the concern and has found the evidence of fraud that they sought.

Breaking the Family Strike—Victor—May 17.—With Matt Moore and Jane Gail. Mr. and Mrs. Carter have a falling out and she goes on strike. Refusing to sign the "demands" of the Wives' Club, she leaves him. Upon request, the manager of the Strike-Breaking Bureau sends him a girl from a burlesque troupe to act as strike-breaker until wife gives in. When wife sees the blonde beauty she rushes at her and there is a regular hair-pulling time. Hubby threatens to have his wife arrested, but she succumbs and tears up the "demands." Then she dismisses the blond strike-breaker.

The Puzzle Woman—Imp—May 17.—With Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. Cliff meets two crooks, Shorty and Slim. They flirt with a girl, whom they persuade to come with them. The crooks pull off a safe-robbing scheme, and use Cliff and the girl as unconscious confederates. They hide the money in a box of candy and give it to the girl. She passes it to Cliff to hold for her. Cliff finds the money and goes to the crooks, who tell her that he has been used as a tool. Detectives, overhearing this, enter and arrest the thieves. They are about to arrest Cliff, too, when he pulls out a card, with "Phil Kelly, Detective," on it, and asks them to meet his wife, who is responsible for a large part of their joint success.

Casey's Border Raid—(Two Reels)—Bison—May 19.—With Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. Casey is with the troops on the border. He is such a blunderer that he is made to do the dirty work around the camp. The sergeant's sister tells the boys that she will marry the one who secures for her the Mexican blanket worn by the leader of the bandits. They all start out bravely, but are licked by the Mexicans. Casey determines to make good. He arrives at the Mexican camp, finds the guard asleep and puts the Mexican blanket under his coat. Casey stands the abuse of the bandits until they start to trample on the girl's handkerchief, which he has long treasured. He knocks down the lot of them and runs to the gun, whirls it around, turns it loose and captures the entire Mexican army. He makes them pull the gun across the border to the American camp. The Mexicans are turned over to the captain. The girl falls in his arms when she learns that he has brought the blanket.

Fat and Foolish—Victor—May 15.—With Ed. Sedgwick and Violet Eddy. Bill finds a note in a bottle from an old maid saying that she will marry the finder. As she is rich, he consents. Bill sees Roger's girl, and stealing the old maid's purse, goes off with the girl. The dude tells Roger where they are. The old maid discovers the loss of her purse and goes after Bill. They all end up in the water, where a cop arrests both Roger and Bill. The dude rescues the women, gets the old maid's money and the girl's heart.

Universal Screen Magazine—Issue No. 19.—The reel begins with a demonstration of the making of cut glass. Then we see the school of aviation, with the army of birdmen who are preparing for war service. Compared to the European armies, our air service is almost negligible. Next is shown a modern Paul Revere, who guards the "Death Avenue," the most dangerous thoroughfare in Greater New York. His flag warns pedestrians away from the trains which run in the street. The reel ends with a "Miracle in Mud," a cartoon in animated sculpture by Willie Hopkins.

Her Great Dilemma—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—May 18.—With Louise Lovely, Lee Hill and E. N. Wallack. Mary Blaston was one of the best nurses in the Mercy Hospital. A young interne of the hospital, Marc Grayson, came into her life. When he took up private practice and prospered he and Mary were married. Mary did not tell her husband of her past life. She had been raised in the slums and had become the wife of Red Shang, a notorious underworld character. When she read the report of his death, she renounced the old life and entered the hospital. Red's reported death was incorrect. Tracing Mary to her home, he demands money. Wishing to get rid of him, she gives him a necklace. As he is crossing the street he is knocked down by Dr. Grayson's automobile and seriously injured. His death means much to Mary, but she bends every effort to bring him through the operation that is necessary. The doctor tells her there is no hope that he will ever recover from the anesthetic. Mary sinks into her husband's arms with a silent thanksgiving for her deliverance.

The Brand of Death—Big U—May 18.—A small party of surveyors invade the solitude of the Hopi country. Singing Pine, an Apache and a graduate of Carlisle, was the life of the party. He meets Laughing Water and they fall in love. Singing Pine returns to the life of his people with the Hopis. After the wedding Laughing Water discovers the brand of the Apaches on Singing Pine's shoulder. According to Indian tradition, the marriage of an Apache and a Hopi meant death to both. Singing Pine is seized and bound to the stake to await his death, but he is rescued by Great Bear, his friend from childhood, just in time.

A Good Little Bad Boy—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—May 16.—With Phil Dunham and Merta Sterling. Phil is the black sheep of the family. He is finally kicked out, and he wanders into the cruel world. Phil meets Salvation Liz, who starts to convert him. Then Lil, the villainess, flirts with him. Phil has quite an exciting time. As the reel closes we see Phil rescuing Lil out of the safe just as a train comes and crashes through station and all.

The Case of Doctor Standing—(Two Reels)—Imp—May 20.—With Charles Ogle, Frank O'Keif and Marie Wierman. Standing and Hammatt are two young surgeons. Hammatt is a drug fiend and neglects his business. Later they both meet Betty. To disgrace Standing, Hammatt puts dope in his glass. Betty thinks he is intoxicated and shrinks from him in horror. In a quarrel with Hammatt, Willard is stabbed. Suspicion falls on Standing and he is found guilty. Later James escapes. He arrives at the home of the judge who convicted him. The judge promises to help him if he, as a surgeon, will operate and save his daughter's life. James performs the operation successfully. In the meantime, Ben, in a fit of insanity, confesses. James and Betty are reunited.

The Honor of an Outlaw—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—May 15.—With Harry Carey and Claire du Brey. The president's daughter starts on a trip for the West. "Cheyenne" Harry, under a sheriff's guard, is on the same train. A band of outlaws hold up the train. They recognize Harry and free him. The girl is taken to their shack in the mountains and held for ransom. In trying to protect the girl, Harry is forced into a fight with the outlaws. He is about to lose his fight, when the girl's father and a posse arrive and place the men under arrest. The girl tells her father of the bravery of "Cheyenne." He offers Harry a position. As the time passes the young people grow very fond of each other. He realizes that the girl could not be permanently happy with a reformed outlaw, so he rides back to the wilds, hiding his disappointment in his heart.

The Gift of the Fairies—Rex—May 17.—With Baby Earle and Elise Albert. Marion was a little crippled girl who lived with her grandmother. One day the grandmother told her a story about a little lame boy who was healed by the fairies. Marion went out to look for the fairy queen to heal her. She entered a garden and asked the girl if she was a fairy, telling her the story of the lame boy. The girl made a plan to help the little girl. The next time she came there was a man with the girl, whom Marion took for a magician. He gave her a flower to smell and she went to sleep. When she awoke she found that she could walk. Marion returned to her grandmother and said that the fairies had made her well. In reality, the magician was a famous doctor, who had cured her of her lameness.

The River of Lost Souls—(Split Reel)—Powers—May 20.—With Dr. Dorsey. The Yangtze river is the busiest in China. It flows through densely populated regions. Special types of steamships are built to navigate its dangerous waters. Thousands of Chinese junks are operated by the natives. The rapids are so strong that not one man in a thousand who falls in ever comes out alive. For a hundred and fifty miles the river flows through rocky gorges. On the same reel is:

When Does a Hen Lay an Egg?—Zippy buys a hen, thinking that he will have fresh eggs every day. The hen refuses to lay. Six months later a professor recognizes the hen as a rare specimen of an almost extinct breed. He wishes to buy it and will give $1,000. Zippy invites the professor to dinner. He thinks that this will be a fine time to get the worth of the hen. It is killed and served for dinner. When Zippy learns that he has lost the thousand he has a fit.

Mutual Pictures

The Overland Disaster—(Two Reels)—Railroad Raiders Series—Signal—May 14.—Featuring Helen Holmes. There is a new general superintendent of the "K" railroad system, Thomas Desmond by name and investigative by nature. Hence the recent robberies that have drained the system of all profit are looked into. Burke, disgruntled and dissatisfied employe, falls under the cloud of suspicion and is trailed to the rear office of Lowenstein, pawnbroker, where he was overheard in a criminal conspiracy by Helen Holmes and Desmond. The latter confronts him with proof of his guilt, and third-degrees him into betraying the rest of his gang. Burke is the evil genius who contrives to wreck the private train of the railroad president, causing the death of the president. The president's son, Roy, is saved only by the wit of Helen. The gang of raiders, seeing no hope of escape from the narrowing circle of the law, plan revenge against Helen and her friends, but Helen is right on the job and for their every plot she provides the thrill of a counterplot.

When Betty Bets—(Two Reels)—Mutual—May 14.—Starring Marie Cahill. Hopeful John is in love with Mabel, the sister of Bettie (Marie Cahill). His rich uncle has some objections to the marriage and Bettie attempts to fix things up. Uncle tells her she is useless except as a spender. Betty wagers him that she can make $1,000 in thirty days and Uncle takes the bet. If she wins Uncle consents to the wedding; if she doesn't, the stuff is all off. Betty arranges an ingenius system of family blackmail by which she compels Uncle to come through with more than the thousand, and he is glad to say, "God bless you, my children."

Trixie of the Follies—(One Reel)—Caulfield—May 16.—Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco featured. To cure her husband, Jack, of flirting, wife impersonates an actress and he accosts her. He recognizes her through the disguise, but rushes home to make sure. She beats him home in a faster car and he thinks the lady of his flirtation is really Trixie. He writes to Trixie and they arrange for her to visit his home. Wife is out for the evening. Wife's friend, Jim, impersonates the husband of Trixie and Jack is pretty badly scared. His cure is complete and wife embraces him.

Jerry's Finishing Touch—(One Reel)—Mutual—May 17.—George Ovey comedy. Jerry learns the motion picture business in a short time and becomes a magnate. Realizing that costumes are vastly important in the equipment of a company, Jerry makes love to the maid of a wealthy woman who is out of town. She is told she has the qualities of a star and is induced to throw open the house to Jerry and his associates. The owner of the mansion comes back, finds the company nicely at home in the house, gets busy with a shotgun, and Jerry and his pals get away in short order, without any formal leave-taking.

The Alibi—(Two Reels)—Jimmie Dale Series)—Mutual—May 18.—Starring E. K. Lincoln. Jimmie finds himself again in the control of "The Woman in Black." She sends Jimmie a note which he believes is from the Tocsin, but finds out his mistake in time and receives his real letter of instructions concerning the robbery of "Miser" Deitrich, and the necessity of recovering the necklace of diamonds which had been among the miser's jewels. The "Woman in Black," "Larry, the Bat," and other conspirators with a plan to bring Jimmie to the end of his career, are cleverly outwitted by "The Grey Seal," who recovers the property, and, as usual, maintains his incognito.

Caught in the End—(Two Reels)—Vogue Comedy—May 19.—Featuring Ben Turpin. Ben Turpin, president of the Union Square Fishball Company, has a very jealous wife. Ben is a bit of a flirt. Linnie, Ben's wife, is suspicious. Art Currier, friend of the family, induces Linnie to put her money into oatmeal stock. Currier and Ben's stenographer are sweethearts. They inject much complication into the plot. Linnie's oat stock goes to smash, and she falls into Currier's arms in a faint. Ben catches her at it and the plot progresses merrily to a windup with all parties reconciled via the roundabout route.

General Program

Selig-Tribune, No. 36—Released May 3.—Los Angeles, Cal.—The amateur wireless operators are loyally directing their energies to the new science of electrical gardening. Washington, D. C.—The Capital greets enthusiastically the members of the French War Commission. Boston, Mass.—"Paul Revere" again makes his famous ride to Lexington. New Orleans, La.—This city's largest hotel has replaced the bellhops with bellhoppesses. Houston, Texas.—In an effort to stimulate gardening, social workers distribute 75,000 cabbage plants. New Orleans, La.—Society's front yards are made useful rather than ornamental by this huge tractor. New York, N. Y.—Before officials of the United States army, Dr. Guy Brewster submits to a test, a bullet proof headgear and body armor, of his own invention. Denver, Colo.—Old Glory now floats over a mountain cabin near Denver in which a German insisted on flying his native emblem.

Selig-Tribune, No. 37—Released May 7.—Washington, D. C.—Samuel Gompers, in behalf of the workingmen, welcomes Minister Viviani. Chicago, Ill.—Theodore Roosevelt tries recruiting. The result—Triple registration. Van Nuys, Cal.—Too young to enlist, thousands of high school students from fifty towns and cities volunteer for work in the sugar beet fields. Hastings, Colo.—The work of recovering the dead in the mine disaster at this place continues. Washington, D. C.—British and French commissioners leave for Mt. Vernon to pay tribute at the tomb of Washington. Cambridge, Mass.—Thousands of canoes enliven the placid waters of the Charles river every week end. Los Angeles, Cal.—Some call him Eucalyptus Hound, but he's more than that. On the West Coast.—United States soldiers are placed on guard around a great iron works plant where $45,000,000 worth of ships are being hurried to completion. New Orleans, La.—The smallest and lightest armored auto submitted for the consideration of the government is used to create interest in recruiting.

The Prodigal's Return—Selig—May 7.—Jim and Harry Carter each inherit $2,000 on the death of their mother and Harry immediately takes his money and goes to the city. Cora Ransom, the village belle, loves Harry, and when he writes home of his prosperity, she thinks herself forgotten and turns to Jim, hardworking and economical farmer, for comfort. Harry has really met with misfortune, fallen in with a gang of thieves and has broken into the rooms of a gambler. He becomes remorseful and returns home, to the great delight of his father and Cora. Jim goes to the city and arranges with the man that Harry robbed that a detective shall appear and arrest him on the day the feast is given to celebrate his return home. On the day the feast is given the old father brings out the Bible, reads the parable of the prodigal son, and thus melts the heart of Jim, who steps out and buys Harry's freedom from the detective with his own $2,000.

The Last of Her Clan—Selig—May 12.—Molly, an orphan, goes to live with her uncle and cousin, to whom she is betrothed. She finds that her family is at feud with Henry Allan's clan. During the fight among the mountaineers, Allan is captured and is taken inside the cabin of Molly's uncle to be used as a decoy to bring the other men back. A shot has struck Henry and affected his memory. Taking advantage of Henry Allan's loss of memory, Jim, Molly's cousin, induces Allan to shoot at his own kin. Jim then confesses the trick he has played on Henry to demean the man, for he is jealous of Allan. Henry Allan is later freed, and is exiled by his own clan for disloyalty. It is then that Molly tells of her cousin Jim's act and of Henry Allan's innocence of any wrong intentions. Later, Molly, the last of her clan, joins the Allans.

Feature Programs

Art Dramas

The Mystic Hour—(Five Reels)—May 17.—Starring Alma Hanlon. A story based on the psychology of dreams. Guido, the artist, loves Margaret, the wife of Clavering. She returns his love, her husband being a brute and a roue. Although persuaded to do so by Guido, she will not leave Clavering, declaring that while he lives she must be true to him. One night at a dinner party Clavering displays unusual cruelty to his wife and Guido leaves the party, more bitter than ever. He wakens in the night, cold with fear because he is confident that he has murdered Clavering in his sleep. Even his hands are clinched as though in the act of strangling. He rushes to the bedroom of Clavering and finds him dead, strangled in his sleep. Guido is not held for the murder. Night and day he is haunted with the vision of the murder and Margaret encourages him to paint the scene in his mind. He does this alone, and finds relief from the strain. The butler of the house is discovered, cowering in fright at the sight of the picture, and a confession is secured from him that he is the murderer. Guido's innocence is proven and he and Margaret are free to accept their happiness.

The Auction of Virtue—(Six Parts)—U. S. Amusement—May 3.—Phyllis Shaw, born with a love of luxury and thoroughly discontented with the poverty of the artist's section in which she lives, becomes a ready victim for a rich man, who is already married. He employs the old tale about himself and his wife not being able to understand each other, etc., and finally Phyllis decides to give up her artist lover and live in Kirke's apartment. But before it is too late the girl learns of the man's under-the-surface character and is saved from a life of misery. She casts her lot with the artist and both start out on a life of happiness and contentment. Reviewed in this issue.

Butterfly

The Phantom Secret—Universal—May 14.—With Mignon Anderson, Marc Fenton, Hayward Mack, Dan Leighton and Molly Malone. Jeanne is summoned to the bedside of her father. He confessed that he is "The Phantom," and urges her to marry Leroux to protect his honor. She bows obedience to his wish. After they reach America, Leroux forces Jeanne to assist him in his work. One night she enters a home and is confronted by her dearest friend, Jane. Explanations follow and Jane plans to take Jeanne to the southern home of her aunt. The train is wrecked, and Jane is killed. Jeanne, now almost frantic with fear and grief, decides to impersonate her friend. Mrs. Marston and her son, Henry, are charmed with their new relative. Leroux follows her. He threatens her with exposure. Surprised at hearing strange voices, Henry appears and Jeanne bids him enter. She quickly explains all. A hand comes through the window, a gun is fired, and Leroux falls dead. "The Rat" confesses that he got Leroux because he had double-crossed him, and then falls dead. Henry tells Jeanne that he loves her for herself alone. Reviewed in this issue.

The Soul of a Magdalen—(Five Parts)—May 14.—Starring Madame Petrova. Leland Norton, a patron of the arts, but a roue, admires Heloise Broulette, who teaches languages to support her invalid mother and a young crippled brother. Her mother needs an immediate operation to save her life, and there is no money to pay for it. Heloise tries to borrow it, but fails. Norton has a secret room, lavishly decorated, which he calls his "Garden of Eden." He entices the poverty-stricken Heloise to his home, and on the pretext of looking for a rare book shows her valuable jewels and quantities of money, telling her it will be hers for as long as she wishes. For her mother's sake she becomes the Eve of the "Garden." The daughter of the woman who cares for Mrs. Broulette, learns of Heloise's life with Norton, and tries to blackmail her. When she fails in this she proves to the mother the daughter's guilt, and the poor mother dies from the shock. Heloise then goes to a suburb where her brother is slowly gaining strength, and becomes the secretary to Carter, an author who lives with his mother and sister. Carter learns to love Heloise during the absence of his sister in the city. Alice, Carter's sister brings home her fiance, and Heloise is amazed to find that it is Norton. She tells him he must leave at once, or she will expose him. He calls her attention to the fact that she must also expose herself. She does not hesitate, but tells Carter all, not sparing herself. Louis is dying. Norton tries to force bis way to his bedside to tell him of his sister's guilt, but Carter keeps him out at the point of a gun. Carter then turns to Heloise and holds out his arms to—"a woman with the soul of an angel."

Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

Her Secret—(Five Reels)—Vitagraph—April 30.—Featuring Alice Joyce and Harry T. Morey. Clara Weston, stopping at a wild-mannered hostelry in the West, meets with a terrible misfortune when her room is entered by a drunken engineer by mistake and the inevitable happens. In later years she marries the same man, neither dreaming of the identity of the other. Her child, housed by friends, finally becomes the idol of her husband's home, he considering the child an adopted one and neither husband nor wife dreaming the child is really Fenton's. But the truth finally comes out in all its hideousness and Fenton is about to treat his wife shamefully when it is dramatically brought to the notice of both that Fenton was the culprit who nearly ruined his own wife's life. Within the Law—(Nine Reels)—Vitagraph—Reviewed in the issue of May 12.

The Captain of the Grey Horse Troop—(Five Reels).—Starring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno. Captain Curtis is sent by the Government to keep the peace on the Indian reservation, and to see that the cattlemen do not steal the Indians' land. He is hated by the cattlemen, by ex-Senator Brisbane of Washington and his daughter, Elsie. In spite of this, he wins the love and respect of the Indians, and later Elsie comes to know his worth. There are some stirring Western scenes in which Curtis protects an Indian who has murdered a sheepherder, preventing his lynching at the hands of the mob. The mayor of the town unexpectedly comes to his assistance, and, with the love and encouragement of Elsie, Curtis succeeds in bringing peace and contentment to the land.

State Rights

The Woman and the Beast—(Five Reels)—Graphic Features.—Released State Rights. A peace-loving Italian, living near a stone quarry settlement, is the husband of a hasty-tempered, almost pugilistic, wife. Their little child holds the two together pretty well, but Rose scorns her husband for what she consnders to be cowardice and admires her former lover, "Big Frank," who is as noisy and forward as he is big. Circus comes to town. Big Frank gets into a quarrel with a circus hand and kills him. Frank escapes to the woods. A lion escapes from the menagerie and a general hunt is started. Urged on by Rosa's scathing remarks, John takes his gun and starts after the lion. Fearing for John's safety Rosa sets out soon after and is attacked by Big Frank, who proves himself a brute. Rosa is saved, however, by the timely arrival of a priest. The lion enters a powder house at the foot of a cliff, followed soon after by Frank, who is seeking shelter. John, who has seen the animal enter the house, dislodges a boulder from above which hits the house squarely and causes an explosion, spelling the end of the lion and Big Frank. Rosa greets her husband as a hero. Reviewed in this issue.

Triangle

The Snarl—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Ince—May 6.—Featuring Bessie Barriscale. The star is seen in a dual role—as two twins, alike in form but entirely different in character. Marion, the selfish, shallow sister, takes everything from Helen and then proves unworthy of what she has. Marion proves unloyal to her husband in his time of suffering—when he is made blind—and plans to both rob him and elope with another man. Bruce, the husband, recovers his sight in time to learn of his wife's double-facedness and to discover what a wonderful character Helen, who has stayed by him in his suffering, is. Melodramatic circumstances throw Helen and Bruce together and finally the self-sacrificing sister is rewarded. Reviewed in this issue.

FILM MANUFACTURING CO., CARL LAEMMLE, President

"The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe"

1600 BROADWAY - - NEW YORK

Above are two scenes from the powerful Ivan production, "One Law for Both," which opens at the Lyric Theater in New York, May 13. Here in the plaque are the smiling likenesses of Leah Baird and Rita Jolivet, Ivan gleamers.

"One Law for Both"

One of the very unusual plays that have been presented on the screen of late is "One Law for Both," which enjoyed a very successful opening at the big Lyric Theater in New York on May 13.

"One Law for Both," written and directed by Ivan Abramson, is not merely a request that society should treat the sexes with equal regard on all questions of our social fabric, but goes into the question of economics and the political situation in Russia, demanding one law for those born in the palace and for the moujik ground in the dust, one law for all mankind, threatening, if same be not granted willingly, to gain it by revolution. Cleverly the author, having taken up the question of "One Law for Both" in the economic and in the political sense, laying the scenes in Russia, transfers the principle into America and begins to deal with the question of "One Law for Both" in the more minute and familiar relationship of social life in the American democracy.

Russia must have one law for both, the riches of the land, both on surface and hidden, must belong to all with equal opportunity. The soul of the people, the spirit of their poets, the innate love of fellowship, among the unschooled must receive that impetus to intelligence which comes from free education. Then truly we may say that it is time to enter into the application of "One Law for Both" as it relatively applies to the different sexes, and it is no wonder that the author-director, having dealt interestingly with the situation of Russia, foreshadowing the immediate downfall of the ruling families, comes by a peculiar and novel twist to us right in this land of liberty and following the underlying philosophy of "One Law for Both," showing the need of a yet closer following of the true spirit which will equalize all things.

CONGRESS TO VIEW FILM

"How Uncle Sam Prepares" to be Shown Government Officials—Is Patriotic Work of Highest Grade

"How Uncle Sam Prepares" is to be seen by the United States Congress. A two weeks' run of this most interesting Hanover preparedness picture has just been concluded at the Tremont Temple Theater, Boston.

The picture is not merely a romantic and patriotic theme, developed in a true spirit of devotion to the best interests of America, but it also portrays the actual drilling and training of United States land and naval forces and demonstrates a number of scientific facts relating to the activities of the United States authorities.

Professor Herbert Holton, of City College, New York, has written a glowing endorsement of the picture, which was recently exhibited before the students enrolled in the college battalion. In speaking of the picture, he says, "I know of no way that the students could so readily get an idea of the work of the various branches of the service."

At the conclusion of the long run of "How Uncle Sam Prepares" in Boston, the Hanover Film Company received a number of enthusiastic letters from prominent men in commercial and government life. In that city the picture early attracted the attention of government officials who highly commended it to the Bureau of Commercial Economics of the Department of Public Instruction, which is handling the national defense problem of publicity, and educating the people, with the aim of increasing enlistments.

Francis Holley wrote a letter as follows: "We have had many favorable comments brought to our attention with reference to these pictures and request that the government be allowed to screen the picture for the governmental officials, before the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States."

He further states that the picture will be shown in Washington through government machines in the auditorium. The government wishes to become acquainted with the patriotic value of these films at first hand and officials heartily commend the Hanover company for the patriotic spirit which has undertaken to aid the government at this critical time in the history of the United States, without any hope of reward or emolument from the government itself.

War Tax Agitation

INDUSTRY OPPOSES SUGGESTED PROVISIONS—OPINIONS OF FILM MEN

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has taken up the struggle against excessive war taxation in Washington, D. C. William A. Brady, president, in company with about twenty other film men of prominence, has been in Washington and has taken up the subject of the proposed Federal war tax with the Senate Finance Committee.

Tax Discriminates, Is Claim

The Kitchin War Revenue Bill, which is now under consideration by the House of Representatives, is the center of the film industry's attack, and the claim of the picture industry is that the tax discriminates against the pictures, and that circus, theatrical and other forms of amusement do not assume their fair share of the taxation. The film men consider the burden on raw materials and finished products as too drastic, but they will not oppose the measure. Instead, they will suggest that certain of its provisions be made less severe. P. A. Powers, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has also been in Washington.

Ligon Johnson, of New York, representing the United Managers' Protective Association, has been on hand also to present the attitude of managers toward the ten per cent tax on theater tickets.

Film Men Given Hearing

Just before the Senate Finance Committee adjourned, Saturday, May 12, the delegation headed by William A. Brady had an opportunity to present their case. P. A. Powers, of Universal, Vice-President Cromelin of the International Film Company, representing the export branch of the industry, and Expert Accountant Thornton, of Price, Waterhouse & Co., who has examined thoroughly the financial records of the motion picture manufacturers, were heard in opposition to the proposed tax of a cent and a half on films, half a cent of which would be on the undeveloped and a cent on the developed films.

Isidor Stern was heard in opposition to the ten per cent tax on admission to picture theaters and he suggested a reduction and grading of the proposed tax. This was the only phase of the admission tax presented on the first day of the session. The discussion promises to be long and arduous, as the producers have only begun to present their arguments leading towards a general reduction of the proposed law, and a more moderate scale of charges will undoubtedly be preferred before the measure is finally completed and presented for a vote before both houses of the Congress.

The exhibitors of the Northwest, through Amusements, have sent a wire pleading that a ten per cent tax on the gross receipts would drive more than seventy-five per cent of the thirty-two hundred theaters in Nebraska, Montana, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Michigan out of business. A ten per cent tax on the gross receipts instead of the net profits would surely do this, as the state and federal licenses, income tax and property tax are tremendous in that section. It would alleviate a ten per cent tax to some extent if the government would devise a plan whereby the general public would be compelled to bear part of the burden.

Other Film Men in Washington

Among the motion picture men who have been in Washington opposing the tax are:

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph Company; Ernest Horstmann of Boston, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts; Lee A. Ochs, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Isidor Stern of Philadelphia, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North America; J. E. Brulatour, representing the World Film Corporation; Sam Spedon of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League; Lucien Wheeler of Chicago, representing the Selig Polyscope interests, and Hamilton Smith, of New York, of the E. B. Sager Company.

Chicago Exhibitors Protest

President Joseph Hopp, of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, called a special meeting of the executive committee of the organization for Saturday, May 12, and the matter of the proposed war tax was taken up. Several exhibitors who were not members of the committee were present, as was also Harry Leonhardt, western Fox manager, and J. E. O'Toole, manager of the Chicago Fox office. Following the meeting, telegrams were sent to each of the senators and representatives from the Chicago district, stating the position of the exhibitors in Chicago and protesting against the proposed severe burden on the industry.

"We are patriotic citizens, all right," said President Joseph Hopp to MOTOGRAPHY, "but the proposed war tax would absolutely cripple the industry. The tax on tickets would drive a large number of exhibitors out of business very quickly. It would be more equitable to continue the present license fees and to license other businesses that the government has not up to now taxed in this manner."

The Chicago exhibitors are co-operating with the bankers and officials in absorbing the "Liberty Loan." The theater audiences are to be turned over to the official "four-minute men," who will explain to the patrons the fifty and one-hundred-dollar bonds which the government is to sell, and which will draw three and one-half per cent interest. The committee which has been co-operating with the officials is composed of Joseph Hopp, William E. Heaney, Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher.

A number of the prominent film men of Chicago have expressed themselves to MOTOGRAPHY concerning the proposed war tax. A number of these opinions follow:

Opinions of Prominent Film Men

John R. Freuler, president Mutual Film Corporation—"The war tax measure, proposing a tax of ten per cent on theater tickets, will work an unjust burden upon the public and industry. This is more than the theaters can bear, and will deprive the people of a wholesome, low-priced recreation."

George K. Spoor, president Essanay Film Manufacturing Company—"The tax as it stands at present will hit the producers a blow all out of proportion to what they should stand. Not many producers are making money now, and this one-half per cent tax on each foot of film is too high to be just."

C. R. Plough, manager of the Chicago Universal office—"The tax on films is an imposition and the ten per cent tax on amusement tickets will drive at least fifty per cent of the theaters out of business. Never has the small exhibitor suffered as much as he is now. I know, for I have five houses myself."

Harry Leonhardt, western Fox manager—"As soon as I was advised of the proposed tax by wire, we got busy and have done everything we can can to oppose the proposed measure. We have co-operated with the Exhibitors' League here in sending telegrams to all the senators and congressmen. The tax is absolutely unjust and comes from a lack of knowledge of conditions in the industry. Pictures are the poor man's pleasure, and it is wrong to deprive him of them."

S. J. Stoughton, division manager, Paramount Pictures Corporation—"The tax is high, but it is the same old story—the public will have to pay. We can do all we can to oppose the tax, but if Uncle Sam places it on us it is up to us to figure out some way to meet the new conditions. The exhibitor is hard hit. It will mean that many must leave the business. If the tax goes through, it will undoubtedly work a great reform in the industry. It will mean that higher admission prices must be charged, and that will mean that the exhibitor will exert himself to provide better shows, thus attracting a new and higher class of patrons to pictures and also creating a demand upon the producers for a higher class of productions."

C. W. Bunn, manager, Chicago Pathe Exchange—"There is no question about it, the tax is too high. We are willing to do our share for our country, but there should be sufficient investigation to make the tax just."

Alfred Hamburger, Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises—"The proposed Federal tax is the greatest injustice that has ever been imposed upon our industry. It will mean that ninety-eight per cent of the theaters will be forced to go out of business. The ten per cent tax on tickets will cost me $50,000 a year through my fourteen theaters. I am willing to pay a good per cent of my profits to stand my share of the war burden on the country, but it is absolutely unjust to tax the gross. People will not come to theaters if they have to pay eleven cents or any two other coins. If the tax goes through it will mean an inestimable damage to exhibitors and the whole industry."

W. J. Sweeney, secretary Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America—"The exhibitors are not trying to evade any just tax. They are willing to bear their fair share, but I think the tax is too high. It will be a tragedy so far as the smaller houses are concerned."

New Washburn Play

June 11 has been fixed for the release of Bryant Washburn's next Essanay feature. "Filling His Own Shoes" is the title. It is an adaptation from the novel of that title by Henry C. Rowland, which was one of the "six best sellers" a year ago. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service will handle the film.

The story has to do with an American shoe clerk in Paris, France. He loses his job, joins a Red Cross corps in the Balkan wars and during an engagement, saves an aged Turk who had been wounded. The Turk dies, but in gratitude bequeathes him a fortune of nearly $2,000,000, not to mention his harem, consisting of three beautiful Turkish maidens. What the ex-shoe clerk does with his harem forms a decidedly promising picture.

Hazel Daly, the creator of the role of "Honey" in Mr. Washburn's Skinner pictures, again appears as his leading woman in this production. Also there is a woman in the cast who actually weighs 285 pounds, and provides some excellent comedy, so it is reported.

NEW YORK TAX KILLED

Notorious Wheeler Measure Defeated Through Valiant Efforts of Film Men from All Phases of the Industry

The New York legislature has killed the Wheeler motion picture tax bill. This measure has been strenuously opposed from the very first by the entire industry, and it is undoubtedly due to the team work of manufacturers and exhibitors that it was defeated.

The bill was intended to create a state department to regulate and license the various branches of the picture industry, but the bill assumed more the proportions of a strict censorship measure. The motion was passed by the Assembly, but finally defeated in the Senate judiciary committee as a result of the caucus of the Republican members. It was sent to the Committee on Rules, and was never called out, because Majority Leader Elon R. Brown was unable to muster sufficient votes in the Senate to assure its passage.

Fought By Trade Representatives

Representatives from nearly all of the large producing companies, as well as many exhibitors and delegates from the projection end of the industry, went to Albany and vigorously protested against the passage of the bill. They convinced the Senate Committee that the bill in no way agreed with the recommendations of the Wheeler Committee, which was appointed to investigate the motion picture industry.

The committee report stated, after the various arguments had been heard, that it was not deemed proper or advisable at this time to burden the film makers with an additional tax, and that in case such a tax becomes necessary all other forms of amusement should share it equally with the film business.

Just previously to the closing of the executive session, representatives of the National Association hurried to the capital and set about securing enough votes to defeat the taxation law.

Film Men Who Fought

The National Association was represented at Albany by Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, who marshalled the forces in opposition to the Wheeler bill; Arthur S. Friend of the Famous Player-Lasky Corporation, J. Robert Rubin, Metro, members of the legal and legislative committee of the Association; Grant W. Anson, representing the Exhibitors' League; William Brandt, president of the Brooklyn Exhibitors and a member of the executive committee of the Association, who also rendered valuable assistance. Samuel H. Trigger, president of the Exhibitors' Organization in Manhattan; Earl L. Crabb, manager Strand Theater, Buffalo; Valentine O'Grady, secretary Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association; Theodore Wharton, Wharton, Inc.; L. Weill, president Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Syracuse, N. Y.; A. N. Wolff, president Rochester Exhibitors' League, and David Cohen, Binghamton, were all active in securing support against the bill.

Mignon Anderson, of Universal, has been assigned to the leading role in a three-act Decoration Day drama, "The Little Hero."

TWO ANTIFILM BILLS

Taxation Bill Before Pennsylvania Legislature—Also One to Prohibit Children's Attendance Without Parents' Consent.

The Pennsylvania House of Representatives has had a bill placed before it providing for a state tax of one per cent on all films passed by the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors. The bill is a revenue measure and, inasmuch as both parties claim that the state revenues should be raised $12,000,000 a year, a fight may be made to put the bill through. The censorship board is a strong source of revenue, for during the last fiscal year the Pennsylvania censors approved approximately 45,000,000 lineal feet of film. This was an average year and if the same amount were passed during the coming year at the proposed rate of taxation, the film industry would be forced to pay the state the sum of $450,000.

The retiring auditor general, A. W. Powell, and the retiring state treasurer, Robert K. Young, contended all during their terms that there was no need for additional revenue measures, inasmuch as Pennsylvania is without debt, but the Republicans Penrose and Vare-Brumbaugh have demanded that the revenue bill must be passed.

Minors to Attend With Guardians Only

The Smith bill, prohibiting children under 16 years of age from attending any motion picture exhibition in Pennsylvania unaccompanied by grown-ups, was set for hearing on May 15. The exhibitors of Pennsylvania are strenuously fighting this bill and have remained in the legislative halls day by day waiting any motion to bring the bill out of committee without a hearing.

It is claimed that the Pennsylvania school board is back of this bill, and representatives of the bill will attend the hearings to urge the members to report the measure out with an affirmative recommendation.

There is talk of calling a meeting of representatives of the various state and local associations of exhibitors, but if there is no organized opposition to the bill there will certainly be many individual exhibitors present to protest against it when it comes up for a hearing.

Chaplin's Next

One of the most highly qualified scenic artists of France has been commissioned to design the settings for the production on which Charlie Chaplin is now working. The picture depicts bohemian life of the Latin Quarter of Paris and is expected to afford food for memories to those of his admirers who have seen true Bohemia in the world's great capitals.

Thanks to Chaplin's wide and intimate knowledge of the ways of the world's "beloved vagabonds" this promises to be the best piece of work he has ever essayed.

New Fox Exchange

William Fox announces the opening of a new branch office by Fox Film Corporation. This branch, which is the twenty-third Fox exchange in the United States, is located at 232 North Illinois street, Indianapolis, and will cover the state of Indiana for Fox photoplays. Charles H. Phillips is manager. The Fox Film Corporation has almost two-score foreign branches—in Canada, Spain, Sweden, Norway, the United Kingdom, Australasia and South America.

Screenshine

By Mel

TROT OUT YOUR BEAUTIES.

A LITTLE social meeting of Chicago exhibitors the other day developed an interesting discussion in regard to who had the prettiest cashier or ticket pusher. One claimed to have the undeniable double of Clara Kimball Young. Another lauded his money changer's remarkable ability on the screen—"if she ever got a chance."

The weighty discussion was wound up with one fell swat when a little man with a big theater (you know him) came out with this:

"Well, maybe you fellows think you can draw 'em in with your Clara Kimball Youngs and your Wenuses, but I tell you all I want is a biddy that'll grin—all day an' all night. And I got one, too. She's fat and greasy and got a mole on her nose, but I tell you she's a peach!"

The contest is on. Submit your samples to Motog Mel.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

A Nebraska exhibitor writes us that one week his copy of Motog. didn't arrive, and he had to book a week's run without knowing what was good.

When that week's bill was run his receipts dropped off $50.

Moral: If you want to bust that cash box read "What the Picture Did for Me" every week. It's the exhibitors' cash insurance.

PUT HIM IN THE FIRST LINE.

Harry Morey very nearly caused a riot at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn recently when he announced to the assembled players:

"Well, President Wilson has made a special request that all Vitagraph players enlist immediately in the army. And after we enlist he wants to make soldiers of all the convicts in the Federal prisons."

"What's the answer?" asked Earle Williams.

"Oh, the President wants the stars and stripes to lead the procession to France."

BLIND JUSTICE.

Peter Zyla really saw Miss Hazel Daley's ankle. In consequence, he lost his suit against the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Insurance Company for $3,500 for loss of eyesight.

Zyla was employed in the plant of the Chicago Products Company. He claimed to have been made blind by alternating currents of heat and cold. The industrial commission allowed him $3,500 damages. Then the insurance company employed Essanay folks to test Zyla's eyesight.

They staged a moving picture in his back yard last December. Miss Daley is a pretty actress and when she raised her skirts a trifle Zyla, according to the moving picture people, caught the act with his eyes and apparently enjoyed the spectacle.

The fact that Zyla could not make his eyes behave may cost him the amount for which he sued.

SPEAKING OF FINANCES

At a recent Reel Fellows, Chicago, beefsteak dinner, one of the speakers enlightened the assemblage with the remark that the first three words of the Jewish Bible were, "Get the money," and the last three, "Keep the money."

When Albert Kaufman, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studio, received a check of $1,000 from George M. Cohan recently to be distributed among the working outfit of Director Joe Kaufman's company, he placed the check in—well, somewhere, and it disappeared. The bank was notified, payment was stopped, another check was issued by Cohan, and for the past four weeks no trace of the check was found.

Last week Al. sent a suit to the tailor to be cleaned and pressed. When it came back he put it on, and after wearing it for two days, put his hand in his pants pocket and found—the tailor's bill.

DOINGS IN ST. LOUIS

Exhibitors' and Managers' Association Come to Agreement with Musicians—Separate Organization Discussed and Rejected

The dispute between the Musicians' Union and the St. Louis exhibitors appears to be on the way to final settlement, to judge from the latest report of St. Louis activities forwarded us by Hector E. M. Pasmezoglu.

Theaters belonging to the Theater Managers' and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association will pay an additional ten per cent increase on the scale of wages after the first of June. Managers will have the right to discharge any musician or musicians if their services are not satisfactory and shall have the right to contract for as many musicians as they think their business requires.

At the last meeting of the association, on May 4, there were forty-five active members present. The chairman of the legislative committee reported that he had been successful in reducing the city appropriation for band concerts and moving pictures in the parks. The new constitution will soon be ready for ratification by the organization.

There is a rumor in St. Louis that another organization of exchange managers is being promoted. In speaking of this news, one of the members of the Exhibitors' and Managers' Association said: "We want to put ourselves on record that we are for any organization which will result in the upliftment of the motion picture industry and which would make the relations between motion picture exhibitors, exchangemen and manufacturers more equitable and just, but if the purpose of this contemplated organization is for the personal interest of a few exchanges who promote it, and has as its purpose to harrass the exhibitors and make conditions one-sided, we do not have to oppose it, as it is destined to fall without any antagonism on our part."

One of the exchange managers received a letter inviting him to form a F. I. L. M. club in St. Louis and replied somewhat as follows: "We have an organization which is working admirably, and we can readily understand how it is necessary for the F. I. L. M. to have the co-operation of different exchanges, furnishing service to contiguous territory. But why should we, who are having no trouble with our customers and have established a method of payment that practically insures us a 100 per cent return, join with other organizations in order to bolster them up and possibly break many pleasant relations which now exist between exhibitors and exchanges?"

F. J. Herrington, organizer for the National Exhibitors' League of America, was in St. Louis for a few days and delivered an address before the association. And Miss Rose Tapley of the Vitagraph Company, who was in St. Louis doing some special work for the Vitagraph Company, was also at the association headquarters, on May 12, where she met the exhibitors and made a short address.

"The Dazzling Miss Davison"

Frank Powell has finished the filming of "The Dazzling Miss Davison," adapted from Florence Warden's widely read mystery novel, which is the fifth of the series of feature pictures, starring Marjorie Rambeau, made by Powell for distribution through the Mutual Film Corporation.

In "The Dazzling Miss Davison," Miss Rambeau's role is similar to several of those which have been hers in notable stage productions.

Mr. Powell has surrounded Miss Rambeau with a cast which includes Robert Elliott and Aubrey Beattie, both of whom have appeared prominently in her support in several pictures, Winifred Harris, Agnes Eyre, Frank Ford, Aline Bartlett, Lillian Paige and Fraser Tarbutt, Mr. Powell's new juvenile find, and George Paige.

Mary Miles' Next

"Melissa of the Hills," by Mabelle Heikes Justice, will be the next vehicle for Mary Miles Minter. The little American-Mutual star is still at work on "Periwinkle." Immediately upon its completion Director James Kirkwood will start "Melissa of the Hills," a story of the Tennessee hills. It was originally entitled "The Circuit Rider."

Miss Minter as Melissa is the devoted young daughter of Jethro Stark, whose unappreciated duties are to instill the peace of God into the hearts of the feudest families of the neighborhood, for little or no remuneration.

Two of the unusual and delectable scenes from Vitagraph's newest Blue Ribbon, "The Sixteenth Wife," released May 14.

National Exposition Well On Way

WORK MONTH AHEAD OF LAST YEAR—BRADY BOOSTS

THERE is an old business maxim which says "Push your business. Don't let your business push you."

Most business institutions that are successes follow out this old proverb in one way or another and that's just the reason that the coming national picture exposition is bound to be a rattling success. The big show is at the present time a full month ahead of last year in the amount of exhibition space sold and in the arrangement of plans and details.

Show Way Ahead of Last Year

There is now, two months before the big show opens at the Chicago Coliseum, July 14, $20,000 worth of space contracted for. Last year there were two motion picture expositions held in New York. This year there is but one national film exposition—the one to be held in Chicago. These things mean that this year's exposition and convention is bound to break all previous records by a big margin, in spite of the rumblings of war, the film and amusement taxes and other factors that might at first thought be considered detriments to a big event.

Exhibitors all over the country are electing delegates to the convention and the men on the firing line will be present in large numbers when the gavel falls on the opening session at the Coliseum Annex on the morning of July 14. Exposition Manager Ludwig Schindler has just received a letter from Edward J. Fisher, secretary of the Theater Managers' Association of the State of Washington, who states the exhibitors of the west are highly enthusiastic over the coming convention and that his state will be represented by ten delegates. Mr. Fisher also sent in the required applications and fees.

The Exhibitors League of America has offered the Red Cross a booth at the coming exposition free of charge. With the enormous attendance that this show is bound to draw, the Red Cross should be able to gain quite a few members. The military spirit will no doubt prevail at this convention and if the offer is accepted the exhibitors hope to be able to increase the Red Cross fund considerably by having the several stars auction off articles that they themselves have made.

Exhibitors' Ideas Wanted

Remember the exposition committee is offering real cold cash prizes for the best ideas submitted for drawing crowds to the 7th National Exposition. Many exhibitors have had a great deal of experience in exploiting and advertising, and they are sure to give the committee some sound advice. In return they will be awarded the cash prizes, according to the standing of their suggestions. As you read this you undoubtedly will think of some particular plan or stunt which would create public interest in the big show and improve the attendance. Just write this down and send it to the publicity department, Motion Picture Exposition, 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago.

Exposition of Great Importance—Brady

One of the prominent men of the film industry who is very enthusiastic over the coming exposition is William A. Brady of World Pictures and president of the National Association of the motion picture industry. In Mr. Brady's opinion the Chicago show this year will be the biggest the business has ever seen.

"The psychological moment has arrived," said Mr. Brady, "when it is absolutely necessary for the motion picture industry to have a real national convention. This should include not only exhibitors but every branch of the industry and the whole body should concentrate on the various problems and actually perform some real work. Let everybody get together at Chicago and get acquainted—producers, distributors, exchange men, salesmen, exhibitors, actors, mechanical men and all, including trade paper representatives, equipment men, camera men and all.

"The motion picture industry has become one of great power and influence in many channels of the national activities. It is not only the chief means of recreation and entertainment for the masses, but has become a big additional political and religious force. In connection with the preparations for war the picture industry will play a very important role. Because of these facts the coming exposition and convention take on a large importance, and there should be a close and complete co-operation between every phase of the industry to make this an efficient and representative exposition which will accomplish measures to be of benefit, both to the industry and the people of the United States. You can count on me to do everything in my power to aid the convention and I hope everyone in the industry will lend his help or be present in Chicago, between July 14 and 22."

Exposition Committees

CHICAGO HONORARY COMMITTEE

FINANCE COMMITTEE

Peter J. Schaefer, Chairman, Jones, Linick & Schaefer Co.; Nathan Ascher, Ascher Bros. Theatrical Enterprises; Joseph Trinz, Lubliner & Trinz Enterprises.

EXPOSITION COMMITTEE

Joseph Hopp, Wm. E. Heaney, Alfred Hamburger, Robt. R. Levy, Geo. D. Hopkinson, John H. Frundt, Max Schwartz, M. S. Johnson, M. S. Ludick, Schaefer Bros., Chas. SUNDAY BILL DROPPED

New York Senate Defeats Measure Intended to Open Playhouses on Sabbath—Petition of Fans Unnoticed

The Walker bill, designed to permit the showing of pictures on Sunday, was unceremoniously defeated when the New York Senate at Albany rejected it by a vote of 24 to 17.

The Sunday exhibition of films now comes up before the Court of Appeals and will be settled by court action. The picture industry intends to make a strong fight on the cases now before the court which will soon be up for decision, and it is expected that many things of vital importance to the New York exhibitors will be threshed out at these hearings.

It is considered very probable that the next assembly of the legislature will also see a local option measure introduced and backed by powerful forces. The entire Democratic section of the Assembly voted for the bill, but they were supported by only three Republicans, Senators Mills and Ottinger of Manhattan and Wellington of Troy. No opposition was voiced on the floor of the Senate and there was no discussion of the bill other than the outspoken advocation of it by Senator James J. Walker, who was its sponsor.

Senator Walker presented a petition, signed by two million motion picture enthusiasts, requesting the opening of picture houses by law, whereas there is now a conflict of authority on the subject in the court. Senator Brown repeatedly reminded Senator Walker of the five minute rule, which was in force during the last days of the session and Senator Walker replied that he might just as well be gagged as reduced to a five minute speech. He said that the rule which made him shorten his speech was actually gagging the 2,000,000 persons who signed the petition. In part, he said, "Public opinion means nothing to you. All you can understand is the Simon Legree whip that is wielded from the second floor of this building."

The roll call was ordered as soon as Senator Walker finished and only seventeen Senators voted for the bill, which needed twenty-six votes.

Washington Association Holds Revels

The Washington Theater Managers' Association appointed several committees to look after important business matters at the last meeting. The business of these meetings is not generally made public, but it is understood that the exhibitors are making a very vigorous and united stand against the deposit system, which the association voted against during the recent visit of Lee Ochs.

A midnight frolic will be held by this association sometime in the near future at the "Palace Hip." The frolic was suggested by Joseph Muller, manager of the "Palace Hip" and was enthusiastically received by the association as an idea worthy of adoption.

Each of the vaudeville theaters will present an act and the Wilkes Players, a stock company, will give a one-act play. To represent the moving picture part of the entertainment a good rousing comedy is planned. All orchestras, from both legitimate and picture houses will be called on to do their share toward making the evening one of hilarious good cheer. A greal deal of attention is being paid to this frolic in Washington and the street cars will run specials, for the affair will not open until 11 o'clock and is not likely to be over until 1 p. m. The Seattle Daily Times has promised a great deal of publicity.

Chicago Film Men Sued

Louis Frank, manager of last year's national motion picture exposition, has filed a suit in Chicago for $50,000 damages against Peter J. Schaefer, Alfred Hamburger, Lee A. Ochs, Joseph Hopp, Thomas Furnace, and Ludwig Schindler, prominent Chicago film men and executives in the Exhibitors' League. Mr. Schindler is the exhibitor who was appointed manager of this year's exposition upon the requested resignation of Mr. Frank.

The suit is for alleged libel in telegrams and letters that Mr. Schaefer sent to the other defendants, according to Frank and his attorneys. It is charged that these communications resulted in the discharge of Frank and injury to his standing.

NEW NORTHWEST CIRCUIT

Picture Attractions will Be Handled in Similar Manner to Theatrical Companies on Pacific Coast

Calvin Helig, of Portland, is planning a motion picture circuit, with Spokane, Seattle, Tacoma and Portland as its northern point, in order to handle multiple reel features in something of the same manner in which theatrical road shows are handled.

The pictures which this circuit would handle are such films as "The Birth of a Nation," "Civilization," "Intolerance," "Daughter of the Gods" and similar large productions. Houses will be maintained in the larger cities west of the Rocky Mountains and the shows will be given with orchestra accompaniaments, traps and other mechanical contrivances.

Admissions will be the same as for road shows, seats ranging from $1 to $2. Such exhibitions as these do not interfere in any manner with the regular program houses and are expected to be a great financial success.

Manager Charles York, of the Auditorium Theater, Spokane, Washington, said, "I recently made a trip to Portland and there Mr. Helig and I talked over the new circuit. It appears to be absolutely certain that the new circuit will be established in the northwest and in that case the Auditorium Theater will house the shows here."

"Blue Laws" in Iowa

Des Moines, Iowa, is the storm center of a law enforcement campaign, started by Attorney General Havner. A general clean-up in Des Moines and threats to enforce the Sunday closing "blue laws," secret raids and similar activities of the police have led to considerable agitation.

The report is that there will be a determined attempt to enforce the "blue laws" and the clean-up campaign will be extended until picture theaters, baseball games and all other public forms of amusement are dropped on Sunday.

Marion authorities have already enforced most of the "blue laws," undertaking the campaign in earnest. The picture houses and all similar forms of amusement activities were closed. Some restaurants were also locked. The exhibitors at Cedar Rapids have employed counsel to fight the "blue laws" enforcement, in case it should be directed against their operations.

Selig Feature in Chicago

The next Selig feature production will be "The City of Purple Dreams," adapted by Gilson Willets from the book of the same name. This is a big story with scenes laid in Chicago, dealing with the meteoric career of a human derelict whose rapid rise through sheer luck and inspiration to a position of wealth, forms the basis of a story that is filled with action and romance. The cast will be headed by Thomas Santschi, Fritzi Brunette and Bessie Eyton.

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

America's Classic Picture House

THE Rialto, New York's celebrated temple of the motion picture, recently celebrated its first anniversary in a way to commemorate fittingly a year that has been successful beyond all expectation. The crowds which attended the anniversary celebration were the heaviest in the history of the house and were a tribute not only to the popularity of Douglas Fairbanks, whose latest picture, "In Again—Out Again," was the feature of the bill, but to the consistently high quality of the programs which are presented in the institution week in and week out at all seasons.

It was only natural that S. L. Rothapfel, the managing director, would develop to its highest perfection at the Rialto the sort of entertainment which won him his reputation as the country's foremost authority on the proper presentation of motion pictures. The same far-sightedness which enabled him to see the possibilities lying in an artistic combination of good pictures and high class music has served to keep him always well in advance of everyone else in his line.

Practically all the innovations in projection, illumination, scenic effects, and other accessories to the motion picture performance of today which have been developed within the past year had their birth at the Rialto.

The house slogan, "Always Worth While," has been backed up so thoroughly by Mr. Rothopfel's ever varying and always fascinating programs that the Rialto now plays to capacity every day in the week and is perhaps the most conspicuously successful theatrical enterprise in New York.

The Rialto was the first theater in the country to break away from the program system of booking and begin choosing its features from the open market. This was another example of Rothapfel far-sightedness and his judgment has been vindicated by the revolutionary developments in the motion picture industry during the past few weeks. The Rialto now holds the rights to the first presentation of the biggest drawing cards on the Paramount, Artcraft, Vitagraph and Triangle programs, besides being able to select at will from among the productions of practically all the independent concerns whose pictures are not released on a program basis.

With two exceptions, Mr. Rothapfel has not presented the same star twice at the Rialto since last December and if returns at the box-office means anything this variety of fare has proved decidedly pleasing to the public taste.

The Rialto orchestra, conducted by Hugo Riesenfeld, has become one of New York's established musical institutions. In point of size it is exceeded only by that in the Metropolitan opera house and in the quality of its work it stands unsurpassed. With this organization as a foundation, Mr. Rothapfel presents from week to week an array of soloists who have established reputations in the field of opera and concert, together with ensemble numbers, choruses, and interpretative dances that make the musical portion of the program alone constitute an attraction quite unattainable elsewhere for anything like the same price of admission.

The luxurious appointments of the theater, its classically beautiful interior, and its marvelous lighting effects are too well known to need description. It need only be added that the atmosphere of refinement and hospitality produced by this environment and by the unvarying courtesy of all the house attendants is something that in itself would set the Rialto apart from all other institutions of its sort in the world.

A Really Remarkable Program

A great architect once said that any building needs, in its interior decorations somewhere, the feminine touch. At any rate, in the case of the program of the Lyric Theater of Clarendon, Texas, that touch resulted in a remarkably tasteful composition. Miss Rosa A. Marquis is manager of the house and designed the front and back covers of the program shown in miniature in the accompanying illustration.

The program was printed in a heavy tan stock and the printing done in sepia, giving a rich and artistic effect. The piece is about post card size.

Of course, such a program would not be suited to every house or every locality, but for the high class house, particularly in a discriminating neighborhood, such a design would do a great deal to place the theater well into the good graces of the patrons, and the children would undoubtedly take the picture home and keep it.

One remarkable thing about the program is that the name of the theater does not appear on either cover. This would not be efficiency in the long run, but is effective at times, and perhaps all the time in a one-theater or two-theater town. At any rate Manager Marquis is to be congratulated in setting so fine a standard in program design and restraint.

"Roll of Honor" Theaters

For six months Paramount and its exchanges have been keeping in close touch with its every theater throughout the country, and have through the efficiency of their many exhibitors' aids departments raised the standard of theater advertising in every form in which it is used. Each week the best ideas are collected and put forth to all exhibitors through Paramount Progress, the exhibitors' weekly house organ.

These exhibitor hints when proved successful in one section of the country are passed along to the others and in that manner, many details of the exhibitor's business has been brought to a higher standard and has materially helped his box office receipts. Harry Day, editor of Paramount Progress, has chosen the following ten exhibitors for the "Roll of Honor" for the past six months.

1. Garden Theater, Richmond Hill, Long Island, Frederick Huebner, manager. Making $50 a month on Picture Progress.
2. The Majestic Theater, Columbus, Ohio. For the best house program.
3. The Alcazar Theater, Chattanooga, Tennessee, F. H. Dowler, Jr., manager. For newspaper advertising.
4. The Royal Theater, Calumet, Michigan, Geoffrey Jefferson, manager. General newspaper advertising and use of accessory cuts.
5. The new T. & D. Theaters, San Francisco, Wm. H. Jobelmann, publicity manager. General newspaper advertising.
6. The Arcade Theater, Walla Walla, Washington, R. W. Cram, manager. Newspaper advertising and use of back cover of Picture Progress.
7. New Family Theater, Adrian, Michigan. Newspaper advertising.
8. Majestic Theater, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Best lobby exterior and interior decoration.
9. The Princess, Denver, J. Bradley Fish, publicity manager. Newspaper advertising, use of trademark.
10. Clemmer Theater, Spokane, Washington. Newspaper advertising.

Uses Fake Camera to Draw Crowds

R. J. Featherby, manager of the Pearl Theater, Hutchinson, Kansas, made capital of the curiosity and vanity of the public to advertise the showing of Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street" at his house.

Mr. Featherby had a man dressed as a cameraman and carrying a moving picture camera with all the paraphernalia walk around the business streets of the town. Selecting a busy corner the cameraman would adjust his camera with a great deal of by-play as if he was trying to conceal what he really was doing, and start to crank. Of course a crowd would quickly gather, part of them curious to see just how the camera worked, and part anxious to get in front of the camera so they would be in the picture.

When they had all become very much interested in his movements and there was a good crowd the operator pulled a string and a scroll dropped down over the lense of the camera, reading, "See Charlie Chaplin in 'Easy Street' at the Pearl Theater this afternoon and evening."

The "stunt" brought a laugh, aroused interest and advertised the film to such an extent that Mr. Featherby had the patrons standing in line all the afternoon and evening.

Marguerite Marsh in Elliott Picture

Screen audiences with whom Marguerite Marsh is a favorite will be glad to learn that she has an important role in the second Goldwyn Picture of which Maxine Elliott is the star. This picture was begun last week under the direction of Arthur Hopkins and marks his entry into direction for the screen.

Goldwyn's widespread exploitation of Mae Marsh is not to interfere with the career of her lovely sister, Marguerite Marsh, who has been a star in her own right and built up a large following.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, has a new picture house, the Grand Opera House having been opened with C. R. Scott as manager. Mr. Scott is using a musical entertainment, with singers, in addition to the Vitagraph film "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," which is the initial offering of the Grand.

The Washington Theater at Dallas, Texas, is advertising "Womanhood" with a big float which represents a battleship.

Hornell, New York, is again enjoying Sunday pictures. The Shattuck Opera House and the Peerless are open for business on Sunday, but the Majestic does not open.

Manager Herbert Meeker, of the Hamilton Theater, Allentown, Pennsylvania, recently introduced an innovation in connection with the regular evening performance, when he introduced a little ten year old girl as a vocal soloist.

Patrons of 100 moving picture theaters in various parts of Cleveland have learned how to care for the baby, five-minute talks being delivered in the playhouses by members of the Federation of Women's Clubs and the Congress of Mothers.

Members of the North Dakota Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, representing theaters in more than forty towns of the state, in convention at Fargo, North Dakota, unanimously agreed to refrain from exhibiting in their theaters moving pictures dealing with so-called sex problems.

Frank G. Hall has purchased a plot at 907 to 915 Broad street, Newark, New Jersey, opposite the City Hall, as a site for a theater which will cost about $350,000. The property, for which the buyer is said to have paid $600,000, has a frontage of 104 feet on Broad street, a depth of 282 feet and a rear width of 109 feet.

Several hundred persons witnessed the dedication of the new Palace Theater, in Flint, Michigan. While the ceremonies were in progress and before and afterward two motion picture men ground out films of the scenes to be placed in a box sealed in the wall and kept there for 50 years and then opened and the picture screened.

Institution of an official censorship of cinema films is expected shortly at Brisbane, Australia. Now there virtually is no censorship, although films are subject to examination at the custom house, where the officials can refuse to pass any which they consider morally objectionable.

Rooms of fireproof construction will be used for storing motion picture films if an ordinance now being prepared by Jacob H. Hilkene, city building inspector of Indianapolis, is passed by the council. Further provisions are that no films shall be stored in any building used as a tenement house, residence, lodge hall, hotel or for any public or semi-public purpose. Motion picture show houses will be prohibited from having more than four reels in the operator's room at one time. The ordinance is the result of the Colfax fire recently, which killed six persons.

The Coliseum Theater in Seattle raised its admission price from fifteen to twenty-five cents for the first time in its history when it showed Artcraft's "In Again—Out Again" with Douglas Fairbanks.

Syd Granham, manager of the Strand Theater, San Francisco, a short time ago invited the three hundred members of the local lodge of Elks to view a special performance at his theater. The picture shown was Douglas Fairbanks in "In Again—Out Again." The manager was given a vote of thanks and appreciation.

Here is an unusual method of pleasing the youngsters. When he showed Baby Marie Osborne in "Shadows and Sunshine" R. E. Faulkinburg of the Majestic Theater, Lexington, Nebraska, distributed little toy rubber balloons to each child. Needless to say, the youngsters were very anxious to see the show and get a balloon.

"Help your country and help yourself by going to the front." "Make your family proud of you and serve your country in time of need. There's room for you and every other good man." These are samples of the announcements that are being flashed on the screens of moving picture theaters in Butte, Montana.

A theater with a seating capacity of 6,000 devoted exclusively to the showing of pictures is planned by a San Francisco theatrical concern to be built on upper Market street. It will cost $400,000 and take a year to complete. According to the plans there will be no stairs in the building, inclines being used exclusively.

Three hundred and seventy-five good sized potatoes were received by the Royal Theater management of Albert Lea, Minnesota, at a potato matinee. This means that three hundred and seventy-five boys and girls took advantage of the opportunity to see the show for a potato. The potatoes were turned over to the City Relief Society.

Moundsville, West Virginia, is to witness the erection of a modern and up-to-date theater building at the corner of Fifth street and Jefferson avenue, one of the most desirable building sites in the city. The property is located in the central part of the city and is equally distant from the city's two business sections.

The exhibitors of Newark, New Jersey, are showing a commendable spirit and recently held a get-together beeksteak dinner. The object of the meeting was to better present conditions. Dr. Hespe told of the important legislative work that has been accomplished and what might be done in the future by co-operation among exhibitors. Manager Reinlieb, of the local Pathe Exchange, brought up the question of having a common carrier for transporting film from Newark to New York. It was readily agreed that there should be such a common carrier, but the question centered on who it should be? No action was taken at this meeting. Several exchange managers were present.

A patriotic picture, showing the North Dakota National Guard in camp, was recently shown at the Grand Theater, Fargo, North Dakota, under the auspices of the Fargo Commerccial Club, the purpose being to arouse interest in enlistments. The picture is owned by the Publicity Film Co., and was brought to Fargo by Alfred Andresen, of Bismarck.

James H. Clark, who has had the management of the Isis Theater of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, for nearly two years past, recently concluded arrangements whereby the management of this well known playhouse will again be assumed by W. F. Clement, the owner. · Mr. Clement, who has been in California for some time, and who has but recently returned, will continue the theater.

An instance of how pictures educate people in first aid was recently noted in Fort Worth, Texas. A woman of the city recently saw a scene in the pictures where a woman with children was trapped in a fire and threw the children down into the arms of spectators. Soon afterwards she herself was trapped in a fire, and having the presence of mind to remember the scene, rescued herself and her two children.

Following quickly in the wake of the Gem, the Columbia Theater of Frankfort, Kentucky, has closed its doors, leaving only one picture house in Frankfort. Manager H. W. Whitney, who had been running the Columbia since January 15, said that he was forced to close on account of poor crowds. The theater has been losing money for some time, he said.

Motion picture exhibitors, in convention in Minneapolis, were urged to use the parcels post for shipping films as an economic measure by W. E. Brown, assistant superintendent of mails, who spoke in place of Postmaster Purdy at the meeting in the West Hotel. Brown says the $5,000 spent weekly in sending films out of Minneapolis may be reduced to about $4,000 by using the mails.

The Ohio Exhibitors' League held an important business meeting Tuesday, May 15. The election of officers for the coming year was the most important purpose of this meeting and delegates to the National Convention at Chicago were selected. Other very important matters were considered, including the war tax on tickets and the tax on copyrighted music. There was a large attendance of exhibitors from all parts of the state.

For the first time in more than two weeks, moving pictures are being shown in Albany houses. Following the enactment by the city council of a stringent censorship law, the picture shows closed. The pictures now being shown are in connection with a tabloid performance. One of the houses, which shows pictures exclusively, is still dark.

The Coliseum Theater of Seattle, Washington, attracted a good deal of attention recently through a scheme of its advertising manager, J. O. Hovick. Statuettes of Roscoe Arbuckle were given away to the first twelve who bought tickets at box office for Sunday morning. The theater opens at eleven, but early in the morning a large crowd of youngsters were waiting for tickets. Finally the twelve lucky boys received the miniatures of "Fatty." One of them sold his souvenir for $1.25 to an admiring fan.

More than 500 children from the orphan asylums and other institutions of Cincinnati recently attended the first free "better pictures" exhibition given under the auspices of the Motion Picture Committee of the Woman's City Club in Keith's Theater. The picture, "The Pride of the Clan," delighted the little ones. Another show of similar character will be arranged by the committee later.

The Bureau of Commercial Economics of Washington, D. C., is now engaged in making films of the original pictures made almost two generations ago. The scenario was written by George E. Nitzche, recorder of the University of Pennsylvania, who has literally unearthed the records of the invention of the motion pictures, the first of which were made under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania more than thirty-two years ago, by Edward Muybridge. Some 25,000 photographs have been recovered, mostly from rubbish heaps.

A theater goer who has had his enjoyment of pictures marred by poor musical accompaniments recently wrote to the Chicago News as follows:

> An organ is a beautiful instrument when used by an artist, but it is entirely out of place in a picture house, unless used sparingly—when the picture calls for it. My family and myself walk past several large houses for about twelve blocks in order to spend the evening at a small theater where there is good violin and piano music.

There is a very pointed suggestion in this letter to exhibitors who are careless about their musical selections. Music takes the place of speech to a large extent in picture houses, and the better the music harmonizes with the film the more enjoyment, of course, is given to patrons.

Manager Edel, of the Strand Theater, New York City, has invited four hundred officers and sailors of the visiting Franch steamships, La Lorraine and Admiral Taube, which brought the French commission to the United States, to a special performance. Mr. Edel arranged the program so as to have special features of interest to the visiting men of war. Mme. Lind, late of the Grand Opera, Paris, sang a French war song, entitled, "The Soldier's Dream." The French consul, the Hon. Henri Goran, was also invited to the performance, and the officers and men of the French cruisers marched to the theater in formation.

A certificate of dissolution has been filed in the secretary of state's office by the Majestic Theater Corporation of Hartford, Connecticut. The certificate was signed by Manager A. C. Morrison of the Majestic Theater, A. J. Moody and O. M. Morrison. Manager Morrison explained yesterday that the reason for the dissolution was that the corporation was no longer essential to the management of the house. It will, therefore, be managed by him as an individual and will in no way affect the conduct of the theater. The corporation was organized about three years ago when the theater was opened. Mr. Morrison said that within a short time plans will be made for the dissolution of the Princess Theater Corporation for similar reasons. The Princess Theater has been running about five years.

THE fact that motion picture film is one of our most highly inflammable commodities has generally been avoided as a topic of conversation. In the earlier days it was not only justifiable but essential that this characteristic of celluloid be minimized. The attitude of the public toward motion pictures was interested but cautious. The industry's precautions against fire were not popularly known. The people, thinking naturally of their own protection, did not give full value to the fact that the film men were certain to use all possible means of protection for the fragile articles that represented their whole business and investment. So the men of the industry gave strenuous attention to the avoidance of fire hazard, while they talked deprecatingly—when they talked at all—of the possible risk. It was not a popular subject.

There were occasional fires, of course. Every class of business has them. The extraordinary feature of motion picture history, in this respect, has been the really insignificant number and consequence of such fires. One of the insurance magazines for years compiled an annual list of such film fires, and it was Motography's delight to reprint these compilations as the best possible demonstration that the situation was in competent hands. Out of a total of between twelve and seventeen thousand picture theaters, the number of fires per year, large and small, was less than one-tenth of one per cent. Few classes of fire risk, outside of those with absolutely noncombustible units, could show a better record.

The history of film exchanges for the last ten years shows several fires, mostly of minor importance, but a few of serious consequence. The one in Pittsburgh in 1909 probably still stands as the worst example in point of destruction of property and demonstration of the power of burning celluloid.

Exchange fires are naturally of less concern to the public than theater fires. Fortunately, however, the picture theater fire is practically an extinct phenomenon, and the absolute safety of the theater patron is assured. Film exchanges, too, are surrounded with all the safeguards that experience can recommend. But the large quantities of inflammable material commonly carried in each exchange makes the problem a more difficult one, and anything that will add to useful experience in this direction without the customary cost of experience is welcome.

Feeling a certain moral responsibility for the safe handling of its chief product, the Eastman Kodak Company has for over a year and a half conducted an experimental study of the fire hazards of motion picture film. The company's engineers were convinced that proper use of the automatic sprinkler pointed the way to a solution of the problem. It was to test this opinion, and to determine with certainty what better methods of protection might be adopted that the experiments were conducted. They were thoroughly practical in their nature, involving the building of a succession of storage compartments and their actual destruction by fire, together with great quantities of picture film.

The experiments were conducted with the co-operation of a competent board of fire underwriters and insurance experts, and demonstrated that motion picture film can be stored and protected so that uncontrollable or dangerous fires can not occur. From their results, the company has drawn the following conclusions as to the steps that should be taken to protect film and minimize the fire hazard:

1. Protect every storage cabinet or locker used for storing film by automatic sprinklers.
2. Radically change the present sprinkler practice by increasing the number of heads commonly used, and installing ceiling baffles.
3. Install ample and adequate ventilation or gas relief openings.
4. Subdivide the racks by means of vertical asbestos board partitions.
5. Radically change the rack construction commonly used to conform to the racks used in the tests.
6. Keep all film in containers or cans, using round cans about ten and one-half inches in diameter and one and three-fourths inches thick.
7. Store all cans on edge; that is, with the diameter in a vertical position. This makes the sprinklers more effective.
8. Corrugate the tops and bottoms of all containers or cans, or use separators which act the same as corrugations. This avoids close contact of the cans and allows a flow of water between them. Cans or containers made of or lined with non-heat conducting material are superior to the metal cans in preventing the spread of fire.
9. Store valuable negatives in double wall containers or cans, lined with or made from non-heat conducting material, such as fibre board, pulp board, etc. Do not store in compartments with positives, and place negatives of great value in separate small vaults.
10. Use only substantial construction for storage vaults or cabinets.
11. Keep film in the vaults and cabinets, and not on tables, shelves and desks.

We presume the printed record of these tests has been placed in the hands of all responsible film exchange men, and received proper attention. The subject, however, calls for the consideration of the entire industry. It is of tremendous industrial importance—which explains its appearance on this page.

The thorough safeguarding of a highly inflammable product has been not the least of motion picture triumphs, and the altruistic labors of a great company toward the perfection of safety are deserving of more than passing interest.

The Cost of Business

THE proposed war tax on motion picture theaters is severe enough to cause some anxiety, with all the industry's eagerness to do its part to the full. Every business man appreciates, perhaps better than the lawmakers who are not business men, that taxes on business are of little avail if those who are taxed are forced to quit altogether, since a dead business can pay no taxes. Congress, knowing no business, is relying on those who do know to point out its errors. That is being done, and we hope and believe the net result will be satisfactory to all.

But the proposed tax on trade papers, via the second class postage route, is really a more serious matter. The zone system recommended by the committee imposes in place of the cent-a-pound rate, a scale of two, three, four, five and six cents. In the case of national distribution, like Motography's, the average is obviously four cents. It is equally obvious that four cents a pound is an increase of three hundred per cent over one cent a pound.

Motography mails about ten thousand copies a week. At one-half pound a copy that is five thousand pounds—fifty dollars a week at present rates. The proposed rate would make the figure two hundred dollars a week. An increase of one hundred and fifty dollars a week means seven thousand five hundred dollars a year.

We publish two other trade magazines besides Motography. The total postal increase on the three publications constitutes a tax of fifty per cent on our total capital stock—annually! And this in spite of the fact that the same taxing body shows a disposition to regard eight per cent as a normal profit!

The whole film industry, taxed on a similar percentage basis, would have to pay hundreds of millions of dollars a year to the government!

Optimistic by nature and inclination, we hope to see the trade paper tax adjusted to a figure that we can actually pay, and so do our part in helping the nation. We might view with a great deal more equanimity a tax amounting to ninety-nine per cent of all profits—or even one hundred per cent.

All Big Circuits Book Vitagraph Play

NEW YORK CHAINS PLACE HIGH VALUE ON "WITHIN THE LAW"

ALL precedents in the booking of motion pictures were broken last week when every big Greater New York circuit booked "Within the Law," Greater Vitagraph's screen version of Bayard Veiller's striking stage success which holds the box office receipt record of the world.

Heretofore these big New York picture theater syndicate owners have refused to book any picture booked by a competing house, arguing that no picture could be booked in almost adjacent and competing houses and obtain the maximum box office returns for all houses.

But in booking "Within the Law" these syndicate house owners do not even contend that the maximum box office receipts will not be obtained. On the other hand, they assert that if "Within the Law" were booked in twenty-five per cent of the motion picture houses of New York and were presented at the same time it still would have such tremendous drawing power that not a single exhibitor would have cause to be sorry that he had booked the production.

The Circuits

The circuits that have booked "Within the Law" are those controlled by Marcus Loew, S. Poli, William Fox, B. S. Moss, F. F. Proctor, Meyer & Snyder, and B. F. Keith. The presentation of "Within the Law" on these circuits will start on May 21 and the booking contracts call for the presentation of the pictures for one hundred and twenty days to be played within the week after the first showing of the picture. This long run will probably be extended considerably as several of the circuits have reserved the privilege of lengthening the runs.

It is believed by experienced motion picture men that this unprecedented booking of "Within the Law" is the forerunner of longer runs of pictures and the preliminary death struggle of the daily change of program which has been fought by many of the wiser men in the business.

In Sixty Theaters at One Time

Through the booking by the big circuits "Within the Law" will be playing in approximately sixty of the largest picture houses in Greater New York at the same time. Not one of the houses seats less than twelve hundred persons and several of them will accommodate two thousand. Conservatively estimated, ninety thousand residents of Greater New York will be able to see the picture at the same time in sixty houses. As many as three of these houses are grouped so that they are within a stone's throw of each other. It has been the history of the business in Greater New York that when one syndicate house owner made a success of a certain territory, that territory was invaded immediately by another syndicate owner. A third soon followed and in some cases five syndicate house owners have invaded the same district. And all of them will show "Within the Law."

This latest booking of "Within the Law" is in striking contrast with the manner in which pictures have been booked by the circuits heretofore. Instead of getting together and attempting to make some estimate as to the combined drawing power of a production, the booking agents for the circuit houses would consider it from the standpoint of their individual houses only.

The booking agents, when they wanted some attraction, would bid against each other, the highest bid taking the picture. All of them saw "Within the Law" during its run at the Broadway Theater, New York, which closed May 12 only because the run could not be extended, owing to future bookings of the theater.

Question of Competition

Immediately after seeing the picture, every one of them wanted it, but each realized that their method of bidding against each other was out of the question because not one of them could afford to even make an offer that Manager George Balsdon, of the New York V. L. S. E. exchange, would be justified in taking.

They saw Mr. Balsdon. He settled the question for them:

Gentlemen: You at last have a picture big enough for all of you to book. Bidding against each other for this production would be suicidal. Your theaters cover a territory in which there are twelve millions persons. Of those six million I venture to say, wish to see "Within the Law." Your combined holdings are not big enough to accommodate the people who are waiting for this picture.

The upshot was that all of them booked it. Marcus Loew swept aside all argument when some of the booking agents of other circuits called his attention to the fact that he was a competitor.

"Why should you care?" demanded Mr. Loew. "This picture is so big that there can be no competition. All of us haven't seats enough in our houses to take care of the crowds that will want to see it. When you fill your house at every performance, that is all you can ask."

The William Fox office in Birmingham, England, has just received a letter from George Cooke, an exhibitor in Stratford-on-Avon, in which arrangements are concluded for the showing of the Fox version of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" during the coming festival at Stratford.

Southern Beauty with Vitagraph

Miss Corinne Griffith, of the Greater Vitagraph Company, is again at work following a short illness.

Miss Griffith, in addition to being the newest recruit to Vitagraph, also is one of the youngest stars in the motion picture business.

Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph's newest star.

Eighteen months ago Miss Griffith was a popular society girl in New Orleans. She had only recently finished her education in one of the famous convents of the old city and had come into prominence through winning first prize in a beauty contest. It was at a society affair in New Orleans that Mr. Sturgeon, Vitagraph director, was introduced to Miss Griffith. He was struck by her unusual beauty, a combination of blonde hair, soft brown eyes and fair complexion, and asked her if she would not venture into photodrama.

She was willing, but it was some time before Mr. Sturgeon could obtain the consent of her mother. No other member of Miss Griffith's family had ever been on the stage or even thought of it. However, in time, Mr. Sturgeon won consent and Miss Griffith embarked in the pictures.

She was successful from the start. Added to her beauty, she had a great deal of natural talent and besides, had learned the art of posing from her participation in the several Mardi Gras tableaux. Since joining the Vitagraph, Miss Griffith has appeared in "The Last Man," "Through the Wall," "The Yellow Girl" and many shorter pictures.

Her most recent appearance was in "The Last Man" and she will next be seen opposite Mr. Williams in "Lincoln by the Nine," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature dealing with the Secret Service.

New Enid Bennett Play

One of the most charming plays that has been developed in the Triangle-Ince studios in many weeks is now nearing completion with Enid Bennett in the star role.

Miss Bennett has had the unique experience of stepping from the speaking stage of Australia and New York into immediate popularity on the screen that bears all of the indications of being both genuine and permanent.

In this new play Enid will appear as the granddaughter of a veteran of the Civil War. There is a delightful charm and novelty in the handling of the story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and there will be unique reality in its staging.

The second episode of Universal's "The Mystery of the Gray Ghost," featuring Harry Carter and Priscilla Dean, is under way.

Chicago Reel Fellows Meet

The last meeting of the Chicago Reel Fellows was a hummer. President Ralph O Proctor remarked that this was the best attended meeting since the opening of the new club rooms at 207 South Wabash avenue. The meeting was called "Universal night," and there were several men representing the Universal Company present, including Sol Lesserman, manager Laemmle exchange; L. Laemmle, brother of Carl; F. J. Flaherty, Bluebird sales manager, and Morris Hellmann, of the Universal office.

Plans were discussed for the arrangement of a "Movie Week" to be held at one of the amusement parks during the summer.

Vice-President Watkins moved that the Reel Fellows Club co-operate with the Red Cross Society in showing slides at the theaters. The thirty-three dollars necessary for the purchase of these slides was subscribed immediately by individuals at the meeting, as follows: Don J. Bell, $10; Ralph Proctor, $10; J. E. Willis, $10, and Dave Russakov, $3.

Attorney David P. Alexander called the attention of the club to the fact that at ten o'clock the following day at the City Hall would be brought up the question of increase in theater licenses. Exhibitors and film men were urged to be present to look out for their interests.

Mr. Lesserman, speaking for Universal, addressed the club, complimenting the organization on its splendid quarters and large attendance, and stating that Universal was honored to be recognized in such a pleasant manner by the Reel Fellows.

F. J. Flaherty also spoke, inviting the members to come to the big, new Universal Exchange on the fifteenth floor of the Consumers' building, when the house warming is announced.

Among those present:

Alfred Hamburger, Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises; M. G. Watkins, American Standard Motion Picture Corporation; F. M. Brockell, managing director Chicago Selznick branch; A. Teitel, film renovator; Harry C. Miller, Boston, Rose and Alcazar Theaters; Dave Russakov, Russakov Can Company; J. E. Willes, general manager American Bioscope Company; F. J. Flaherty, sales manager, Universal and Bluebird; Sol Lesermann, manager Laemmle Exchange; George W. Booth, Bridgeport Theater; L. Laemmle, assistant manager Laemmle exchange; George J. Offermann, Sunshine Film Co.; Don J. Bell, Bell and Howell Co.; Maurice Hellmann, Laemmle exchange; Wm. J. Buckley, Sunshine; Jack Haag, manager Band Box Theater; Joe McHenry and W. C. Benson, Exhibitors' Herald; Richard C. Travers, Sunshine; Frank H. La Rue, vaudeville; F. W. Wild, Jr., Wertsner & Sons Co.; M. L. Sparr, Village Theater, Wilmette; W. Teck, vaudeville; Ralph White, assistant manager, General Film; Melville R. Thomson, attorney, American Standard; W. H. Haman, General Film; Kenneth M. Scoville, general manager, Sunshine Film Corporation; S. S. Strauss, Sunshine; Wm. J. McGrath, Motion Picture News; L. W. Boynton, Motion Picture Trade Directory; John Fiske, Mutual publicity department; Wm. Henry, Virginia Theater; C. E. Elliott, sales manager, Paramount; S. J. Stoughton, district manager, Paramount.

King Directs Gail Kane

Henry King, one of the best known directors in the picture world, has been engaged by the American Film Company to direct Gail Kane productions. Mr. King will start work immediately producing "The Woman in Black," a thrilling drama of love and war, which will be released through Mutual.

Mr. King is best known for his direction of "Little Mary Sunshine" and the serial "Who Pays?"

COMING MUTUALS

Weekly Schedule Presents Jackie Saunders, Marjorie Rambeau, Further, and "Gray Seal Adventure"—Helen Holmes Continues "The Railroad Raiders"

The two Mutual star productions for the week of May 21 are, "The Mirror," starring Marjorie Rambeau, and "The Checkmate," featuring Jackie Saunders.

In your advertising play up the fact that the scenes show life in the cabarets and restaurants in New York and the gay night life of the metropolis. It shows scenes behind the curtain of a big New York theater.

"The Checkmate" gives two phases of Jackie Saunders as she plays a dual role of twin sisters. This doubling is always popular with admirers of a star and should be well exploited. Jackie appears in one of her tom-boy roles, which have been so much enjoyed by the public, and also in a more serious characterization. There are farm scenes similar to those which caused so much favorable comment in "Sunny Jane."

"Mistaken Identity" is the title of Chapter VII of "The Railroad Raiders," featuring Helen Holmes. In this chapter Helen makes a daring leap from a bridge onto the top of a speeding passenger car, makes her way along its sloping roof and reaches the vestibule by one of the riskiest bits of climbing witnessed in many a day. She has a desperate struggle with Burke on the edge of an abyss. There are more than a score of Chinamen in native costume working in this picture.

Tenth Jimmie Dale Story

"Two Crooks and a Knave" is the title of the next of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" stories released May 25, in which the Grey Seal upsets the plot of two crooks to steal the chart of a mine and $30,000 from a poor charwoman.

Four "Funnies"

On May 21 will come to the screen the second of the La Salle comedies, "Chubby Inherits a Harem," and Chubby has untold troubles trying to live in the harem and supporting the inmates in the luxurious style to which they have been accustomed.

"Two of a Kind" is the Strand Comedy, in which Billie Rhodes keeps the agile Jay Belasco in a ferment of activity. This will be released on May 23. The Cub Comedy contribution on May 24, featuring George Ovey, is "Jerry Joins the Army," a very timely topic at this period of upheaval. "Flirting With Danger" is the Vogue laugh maker scheduled for May 26. Paddy McQuire, John Oaker, Harry Huckins, Myrtle Lind, Mary Jones and Larry Bowes appear in the cast.

Timely Topicals

"Mutual Tours," ready May 22, is an echo of the war, showing the great fortress, the British guardian of the gate between the Atlantic and the Mediterranean; river life on the Marne before the war; Cadiz, Spain, and Martinique, West Indies.

"Mutual Weekly" will come to the screen on May 23.

"Reel Life," scheduled for May 24, has five interesting sections: "The Sugar Industry of the Barbados," "Plowing With a Motor Car," "Caviar," "Golfing on Wheels," and "A $1,000 Playhouse," picturing the diminutive home of a fortunate little girl and her dolls.

Marjorie Rambeau in "The Mirror"

Life on the "cabaret coast"—the hilarious existence which the gayest of New Yorkers lead—is the theme of "The Mirror," Marjorie Rambeau's latest photoplay, released by the Mutual Film Corporation May 21. The story was written by Clara S. Beranger especially for Miss Rambeau. The picture was produced by the Powell Producing Corporation under the direction of Frank Powell.

For those who hold that the subtle moods of men and women cannot be adequately portrayed in the wordless drama, "The Mirror" provides an object lesson worthy of study. It is a fascinating succession of dramatic situations each more engrossing than the last.

Marjarie Rambeau is one of the most beautiful women on the American stage. She never presented a more delightful ensemble than that displayed when Boyd, the theatrical manager and debauchee, having lured her from her husband under a promise of theatrical fame and fortune, introduces her to his professional coterie in the first expensive evening costume she is supposed ever to have worn.

Miss Rambeau is supported by a first rate cast.

A contract has just been signed by the Universal with Eustace Hale Ball to novelize the new serial, "The Gray Ghost," the instalments of which will appear weekly in 2,800 newspapers, concurrently with the release of the picture episodes.

There are some very lively scenes in Mutual-Powell's "The Mirror." This feature appears May 21.

HOLD FILMS FROM KANSAS

Many Producers Withhold Releases From State Censors as Regulations Make Profit Uncertain—Wichita Houses Hard Hit

Censorship of pictures in Kansas is so severe that the picture houses in Wichita may have to close down altogether. The large companies have threatened to withdraw their films from Kansas because of the rigid censorship which is being exercised at Topeka, and because of the alleged incompetency of the censorship board.

Practically all of the national distributing concerns are now withholding their releases from the censors until such time as they get definite contract bookings.

By withholding in this manner about thirty per cent of the film, not being booked in the State of Kansas, is not submitted to the board of censors. This has aggravated the censors as the effect is to submit for censorship (and therefore for censorship taxation and fee), only such pictures as really do business in the state, and results in a loss of about thirty per cent in the censorship revenue to the Kansas board. Universal has indirectly made the statement that their films would be removed from the state, but no definite step has been taken in the matter.

Local picture managers in Wichita say frankly that the distributing companies will surely leave Kansas out of consideration as a market if films continue to be censored as they have been in the past, or if harmless scenes are cut out as freely as they have been. This random and wanton cutting of film is very costly to the producer, and it causes a loss instead of a profit to sell service when film is butchered by people who do not realize the exact figuring which is necessary in making and releasing it.

The loss of Kansas as a film market really makes but slight difference to producing companies, for Kansas is one of the least profitable states in the Union in proportion to population. The Palace, which is the largest of the Wichita houses, would be seriously affected, for it depends chiefly on Mutual for films. Also the other houses, such as the Star, Colonial and Maple, which use Universal film almost altogether, would be in a quandary if Universal withdraws entirely from the territory. In order for these shows to run they must have a variety program, because of their small seating capacity.

Just what will be done by these small Wichita houses is not determined, but only two things are possible. Either they will be forced to close altogether, or else to run a low class of vaudeville in place of good pictures.

Jane Cowl Gives War Performance

The many activities which Jane Cowl, the popular star now playing in "Lilac Time," and who is soon to begin work on her first picture as a Goldwyn star, has undertaken in behalf of patriotic and charitable causes, were added to last week when she turned the regular performance of "Liliac Time" into a grand, gala performance, the entire proceeds from which were devoted to the benefit of the American Ambulance Field Service, and in aid of the work of the Franco-American Committee for Protection of the Children of the Frontier.

Cumberland Joins Goldwyn

John Cumberland, a popular farce comedian who played opposite Madge Kennedy in "Twin Beds" and "Fair and Warmer," has been engaged to play opposite Miss Kennedy when she makes her debut in motion pictures for Goldwyn.

This is Mr. Cumberland's first trip into filmland.

EXHIBITORS VOTE

Select "Who Goes There" as First Choice of Chambers' Novels—Comparatively Unknown Book Second Choice

"Who Goes There!" one of the latest novels of Robert W. Chambers, and "Anne's Bridge and Between Friends," an earlier effort, probably will be two of the Chambers' novels to be screened by Greater Vitagraph, under its contract with the widely known novelist, which gives the Blue Ribbon producers the right to film six of the Chambers novels.

Immediately after making the contract the Greater Vitagraph Company, through its distributor, V. L. S. E., requested the exhibitors of the country to signify by means of a vote just which of the Chambers books should be screened. This was done by sending to every exhibitor in the country a voting blank, on which was listed the names of all the Chambers works not yet produced, with a request that the exhibitor check the names of those novels he desired and thought would be the most likely box office attraction.

Prior to receiving first returns from the test vote practically no consideration had been given to "Anne's Bridge and Between Friends" by Greater Vitagraph's scenario department. The fact that many exhibitors mentioned this book as a real possibility caused the immediate assignment of a reader with the result that it was found that the exhibitors have a remarkable insight as to what should please their patrons.

Two Triangle Features

There will be an innovation in the Triangle program for the week of May 20, when Thomas H. Ince will release two five-reel subjects simultaneously. Dorothy Dalton will be presented as star in a social study by the new Ince author, Lambert Hillyer, entitled "Unfaithful." The other, and no less important, half of the program for this week will present William Desmond in an adaptation from "One Week," a comedy by W. Carey Wonderly, entitled "The Marriage Bubble."

This is entirely in the nature of an experiment, and is projected by Producer Ince to test the attitude of the public in this matter.

Michigan Convention

The Exhibitors' League of Michigan is to hold its annual convention at Grand Rapids on June 12 and 13. This will undoubtedly be the biggest show of its kind that Michigan has ever seen. The matter was decided at a meeting of the executive committee of the league held in Saginaw recently. Secretary A. J. Moeller is confident that the Michigan league is now bound for steady growth and prosperity.

Actor-Director Combination

Ethel Burton, of the King Bee Comedies Company at Jacksonville, Florida, has surprised her friends by eloping with Arvid Gillstrom, the director, thus being assured of a permanent contract. The wedding was performed in Miami and the returning couple were welcomed by Louis Burstein, the president and general manager.

All Goldwyns Will Run at Strand

BIG NEW YORK HOUSE SIGNS FOR ENTIRE YEAR'S OUTPUT

GOLDWYN pictures will be shown first in New York City at the Strand Theater, perhaps the world's greatest motion picture institution.

Mitchel H. Mark, and his associates, owners of the Strand, and Harold Edel, managing director, have signed a contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the entire first year's output of twenty-six Goldwyn productions.

Mitchell H. Mark, Strand Theater, New York.

This means that every second week in the year, beginning in September, the Strand will present to metropolitan audiences the famous stars of Goldwyn in pictures upholding the screen ideals of Samuel Goldfish, Edgar and Archibald Selwyn, Arthur Hopkins, Margaret Mayo and the remarkable group of screen and stage specialists with which they have surrounded themselves.

From the day when they first thought of building a great motion picture theater in New York to present films under conditions that would invest them with dignity, Mitchel H. Mark and his associates have adherred to a quality standard at the Strand. They allied themselves at the outset with the producers of the best pictures available at that time and not once during the time that has elapsed have they catered to other than the best taste of a large community.

The Strand's alliance with Goldwyn gives a tremendously significant indorsement of the quality and value of this new company's ideals and achievements, both as to productions and future plans.

Mitchel H. Mark in a letter to Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, says:

From the day of the first Goldwyn announcement we have expected much from your organization. The personnel of ownership places the stamp of expertness and thoroughness upon your company.

As you know, we have seen but portions of your four completed pictures—untitled and still unassembled—but on the basis of what these revealed to us we have been willing to close an annual contract for what we consider to be truly remarkable pictures.

The quality of your photography is undeniably beautiful. The novelty and fineness of your settings introduce a new note into pictures. The cleanliness and strength of your stories is another thing to be commented on. I am convinced that you will still further uplift the motion picture art.

The contract we have signed for the Strand Theater is the best proof of our belief in Goldwyn. If there is value to Goldwyn in linking our names or the prestige of our theater with your organization, this letter is at your disposal for that purpose.

We do not hesitate to tell you that the quality and excellence of your productions will further stimulate the Strand to maintain the high levels of picture showmanship which we are known to have established and for which we have received credit throughout the industry.

Mr. Mark and his associates are not merely owners of the Strand—they operate a chain of important theaters in New York state and New England. Their entry into Manhattan was made at a time when motion pictures were regarded as but a cheap form of amusement.

Immediately the Strand challenged the best elements of New York's amusement-loving public. It has been said of it many times since that, "The Strand brought the dress suit audience to the movies." In any event, not only was the Strand a tremendous financial success, but its popularity led to the building of similar theaters in many sections of the country and its type of program was duplicated by other managers. Wishing to identify their houses with the reputation and ideals of the New York parent house, outside managers chose the name of Strand for their places and the Mark type of picture theater became a national institution.

So much for the worth of an idea and the courage of an owner who could not be tempted to undermine his ideals for temporary profits. It is interesting to note that the prediction was made frequently that the Strand would be a financial failure. Another matter of interest can be revealed here for the first time.

In the week that the Strand first opened its doors to the public, Mr. Mark, desiring to strengthen his alliances and draw both the producer of pictures and the exhibitor into closer relation, offered to let three big producers purchase minority stock interests into his new venture. Two declined outright and a third failed to acknowledge the note of invitation. Two of these producers have since vanished from the industry.

The Goldwyn organization, beginning in September, will take an active part with the management of the Strand in devising an individualized type of showmanship to accompany the presentation of Goldwyn pictures.

Tod Browning Joins Metro

Tod Browning, until a few weeks ago director for Fine Arts, has joined the Metro forces. His first work will be the direction of Mabel Taliaferro in "Will o' the Wisp."

Tod Browning ran away from home at the age of 16 to join Ringling Brothers' circus. He has had experience in every branch of the theatrical business. For eleven years he appeared in sketches and monologues in vaudeville, later going into musical comedy. He has been with the Fine Arts Company for the past four years as a director.

The Mall Theater, Cleveland's new duplex house, has presented an innovation that no other show house in the city can imitate. As a usual thing pictures are shown in both the upper and lower Mall. The two theaters are separate, one with an entrance on Superior avenue, and the other with an entrance on Euclid avenue, but they are connected inside by a grand staircase. One admission fee will entitle anyone to roam at will, from upstairs to downstairs. Patrons will have the privilege of seeing both performance for ten cents.

Mae Marsh Makes Speed Record

Miss Marsh has just begun work in her third Goldwyn picture—which means that she will complete three productions in less than four months. She is helping her company to establish records for swiftness of production.

To make this possible, Goldwyn has a new director for each picture. The director of this new Mae Marsh production will be ably assisted by Margaret Mayo, the author of the celebrated play in which the little star is appearing.

One of Miss Mayo's greatest money-making successes has been chosen as the vehicle for the little girl who gained a world-wide following in "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance" and other Griffith productions.

Miss Marsh's present director will have as his assistant George Berthelon, and George Hill will attend to the photography. Hill's work in Mae Marsh's second picture stands out as one of the most notable photographic achievements in modern pictorial history.

Margaret Mayo has been persuaded to take an active part in the actual making of the picture. She has labored for weeks, making the play ready for the screen. A brief look backward will reveal that Goldwyn has set out with the seeming intention of creating some new directors schooled in its own studios. The first of the Goldwyn executives to become a director was Arthur Hopkins; and there is more than a suspicion that Margaret Mayo herself may be interested in entering this field..

In support of Miss Marsh in her newest production you will see Charles Elvidge, George Trimble, Vernon Steele and other well known players.

Many a lady, from Bangor to Bernardino, has longed for the beauty which is Elliot—a type which once seen is always adored. The celebrated Maxine is seen here in a piquant and picturesque little scene from one of her Goldwyn pictures.

National Preparedness

The motion picture is "doing its bit" in the present national crisis. Producers have been quick to produce and exhibitors to show pictures with a patriotic appeal. "Manning Our Navy," a patriotic and instructive film which will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation May 14, shows recruiting in Chicago and the training of newly enlisted seamen at the Great Lakes Naval Training station.

Great Lakes Naval Training station has, since the declaration of a state of war with the German empire, become a most important place in preparing young men for service aboard American men-of-war. "Manning Our Navy" shows how thoroughly the recruits are trained, not only from a military standpoint but physically as well.

The picture was produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago.

"One Law for Both"

"One Law for Both," the latest film drama produced by Ivan Abramson, opened at the Lyric Theater, Broadway and Forty-second Street, New York City, on Sunday, May 13, for an indefinite run. This production is the latest picture made by Mr. Abramson since the release of his extraordinary success, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," which enjoyed such an extended run at the Park Theater in New York City.

The theme of the production is particularly timely, in view of the fact that it is located partly in Russia, the Russia before the revolution, and the characters in it are the counterparts of those men and women who accomplished the freedom of the newest democracy. Throughout the story of "One Law for Both" there runs that underlying thread of realism and almost brutal frankness that seems to be the heritage of the Russian author.

The heroine of the picture, Elga Pulaski, a young noblewoman, is a new type to the American theatergoer. Heretofore, the Russian revolutionist has been pictured as a fierce, bewiskered personage, carrying a bomb under his arm, fuse burning, gazing furtively over his shoulder. The real people who have achieved the liberation of the great Empire in Europe, the intelligent student class, who made the utmost sacrifices for the freedom of their country, are seldom depicted on either the stage or the screen. In "One Law for Both" the author drew on his own personal knowledge of conditions and types, and the characters in the production may safely be assumed to be real.

The story opens in Russia, where the workings of a real revolutionary society are disclosed. Secret Service spies, betrayals, the workings of Black Hundreds under the direction of the late monk Raspoutin, the workings of the unscrupulous government officials and similar scenes are shown.

The rights for the showing of the Mutual-Chaplin specials, the present series of two-part comedies, in Argentine, Chile, Uruguay, and Paraguay, have been sold to Max Glucksman of Buenos Aires, Argentine, by the Oceanic Film Corporation, the overseas agents for Mutual productions. The price paid has not been announced but is admitted to run into five tall figures.

Bombers Terrorize Chicago

UNION TROUBLES GOING ON FOR MONTHS—PROSECUTIONS SOON

FOR several months past labor unionists have conducted a "reign of terror" in Chicago. They have damaged many theaters by means of bombs, have made use of the detestable "stink bombs" and have intimidated exhibitors and operators by means of hold-ups and other violent methods.

These union men are said to have extorted money from nearly all the large theater owners in Chicago. The story of the operations of the law-breakers has been known for some months to MOTOGRAPHY and by the local trade, but the whole matter was brought to public light in the State's Attorney's office last week when eighty-five proprietors and managers of picture theaters and many other witnesses met for the hearing.

The statement was made at this meeting that Chicago's theater owners have paid $300,000 to extortionists in the last five years. It is said that the proprietor of the Chateau Theater paid $30,000 when the alleged extortionists demanded that amount on the threat that his theater would be blown up. Following the payment $3,000 more was demanded from him. He then went to the State's Attorney's office and made a statement. Following this the law-breakers damaged his house with a bomb.

Among the other houses said to have paid extortion money are the Bandbox Theater on Madison and the Castle on State Street. MOTOGRAPHY has information which indicates that between thirty and forty other houses in the city have been forced to pay money to the blackmailers.

Trouble Between Unions

The trouble has been between Local Union No. 157 and No. 110, Local 134 of the electrical workers, the fixture hangers, operators and cheap metal workers. It is said that Local 110 had been formed first and had always abided by all the laws. Later on Local 157 was formed between electrical workers and then the trouble began, owing to rivalry between the two unions. The extortions of money from theaters have come as a result of the employment by those houses of rival union men. Only three weeks ago, it is alleged, two automobile loads of sluggers from Local 157 drove to the White Eagle Theater on 18th Street, and ordered the proprietor to replace the operator with one from 110. Following this and a number of recent bomb explosions, several suspicioned men have been arrested and a number of prosecutions will undoubtedly follow soon. These include business agents of the two unions and former union representatives and various sluggers and conspirators whom these men are said to have employed.

Exhibitors Remain Silent

It is natural, of course, under the circumstances that exhibitors keep very mum concerning the matter. They will give nothing out for publication. The theater men questioned by MOTOGRAPHY on the subject simply stated that they have nothing to say, as any manifestation of opposition on their part coming to the sluggers still at large might mean an explosion in their theaters at any time.

The city and state authorities have the matter now well in hand, and it is hoped that the whole notorious matter will be cleaned up in the near future.

FILM THEFT ARRESTS

Trap Catches New York Film Thieves—General Film Fights Widespread Looting of Reels—More Arrests Expected

As the direct result of General Film Company's steps against the widespread looting of film exchanges, two arrests have been made in New York. Two men, former employees of a prominent film exchange, were seized and arrested as they were leaving the premises of the World Film Corporation. The complaint was the theft of several reels of a feature film.

The prisoners gave the names of Alex Wolfheimer and James McSorley. The arresting officer was Detective Sergeant Van Twistern of the New York Police Department. Advance hints of a visit such as the complaint involves had been received by General Manager George Schaeffer of the World and Business Manager H. H. Buxbaum of the General Film Co., and police aid was enlisted. Wolfheimer and McSorley, after pleading not guilty, were held by the grand jury in police court, bail being fixed at $1,000.

For a long time there has been an extensive thievery of motion picture films all over the country, becoming a perfect epidemic in the last year or so. It is estimated that the losses have easily reached a total of $500,000 in film itself, to say nothing of the further losses through piracy of stolen films by duplication for sale. This unbearable situation moved legitimate film distributors to take decisive steps in order to check the evil. Under date of last February 17, General Film Company distributed to its branch managers instructions to co-operate with exhibitors and the police department to apprehend film thieves. Rewards from $50 to $500 were authorized for information leading to the detection, arrest and conviction of such offenders.

The trial of the men accused in the present instance will demonstrate whether their actions were such as to call for severe punishment. The charge against them is that they left the building with film which was the property of the exchange. Loyalty of employees is responsible for the presence of the police.

VITAGRAPH MEN ENLIST

Large Number Join Colors—Complete Chart of Employes Taken—Women Salesmen Prove to Be an Error

V. L. S. E., the selling organization for Greater Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon features, will lose approximately fifty per cent of its organization as the combined result of voluntary enlistments and the result of conscription following the signing by President Wilson of the conscription measure now before Congress.

The V. L. S. E. auditing department at 1600 Broadway, New York, alone loses six employes, all of whom already have enlisted. Immediately upon its becoming apparent that every able bodied man between the ages of nineteen and thirty-five years might be required for the protection of the country, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., caused the entire organization to be charted with the result that there has been compiled a complete chart of every male in the employ of the big distributing organization. This chart not only gives the result of a physical examination for the purpose of ascertaining if there are any disabilities that might or are sure to cause rejection by the army and navy physical examiners, but also gives the information as to persons dependent upon the employe. In cases where persons are dependent upon the employe, this may act as a disqualifying cause just exactly as much as a physical disability, at least on the first conscription call.

Several days ago a list of questions was sent to every male employe.

When the list of questions was sent out, Mr. Irwin sent with them an explanatory letter informing all of the employes that the charting was absolutely necessary in order that V. L. S. E. might be in a position to protect the employes called to colors and make every effort to keep the organization intact, so that at the cessation of hostilities, the men might return to their old positions.

It also was explained that the charting was absolutely necessary in order to prepare in advance for at least the temporary vacancies made necessary by the war.

In every case possible V. L. S. E. will advance employes to the positions made vacant thereby following the well-known policy of the company by advancing men in the ranks rather than seek men from other fields.

It was suggested that women should be engaged to take the place of the salesmen called to the colors. Two women, both of whom have been in the motion picture business for some time and were supposed to know the business forward and backward from the standpoint of the exhibitor, were assigned to territories. They were given every facility and every assistance to prove they could fill positions if necessity arose. Two weeks proved beyond all doubt that women as motion picture sales agencies are an error. They may fit in some other portion of the motion picture organization, but in the direct selling branch they are an error.

Ticket Tax in Nova Scotia

Nova Scotia now joins with Canada and the United States in a special amusement tax.

The House of Assembly has just placed a tax of one cent on every ticket purchased at twenty-five cents or less and two cents on all tickets more than twenty-five. Children are exempted. The tax will be collected by exhibitors at the time the ticket is sold, and they will at stated intervals make sworn statements to the chairman of the Board of Censors or to the government itself. As to the number of admission tickets sold, the amount of the tax will then be turned over to the government.

For his first vehicle as a picture star Montagu Love will have "The Brand of Satan," the principal personage of which has a double personality. Normally this man is amiable and of high character, but under certain influences he becomes brutal and depraved. The role, with its broadly contrasting sides, offers fine opportunities for the exhibition of that unusual versatility which has made Mr. Love's rise in the photoplay world little less than phenomenal. Featured with the actor in "The Brand of Satin" are Gerda Holmes and Evelyn Greeley, the latter a World-Pictures "find" of genuine worth.

Alice Brady Play

The current release of World-Pictures Brady-Made is "Maternity," of which Alice Brady is the star player. Of this singularly gifted young screen actress a prominent director said the other day: "If I could have my choice of all the motion picture stars under a five years' contract, I would choose Alice Brady. Many of the stars have reached their zenith and must either stand still or go back, but Miss Brady improves with each personation —and of course her popularity widens steadily under this condition. She is the best investment I can see in this business at present."

"Submarine Eye" at Liberty Theater

Williamson Brothers will present their third sub-sea drama, "The Submarine Eye," in the Liberty Theater, New York, for an indefinite run within the next two weeks. Their rapid rise in the limited field of successful motion picture producers has been little short of the spectacular.

Starting four years ago with their wonderful deep sea pictures that were exhibited at the Broadway Rose Gardens, they have met with extraordinary success in perfecting and marketing motion pictures made at the bottom of the sea.

Everitt Shinn with Goldwyn

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has engaged Everitt Shinn, the famous American illustrator and one of the world's highest paid artists, to become a member of its production staff, in association with Arthur Hopkins, chief of Goldwyn productions; Hugo Ballin, the noted mural painter, and other technical experts of high rank in pictures.

Everitt Shinn is known by his work to millions of Americans, having long been an illustrator of the better type of American magazines, and his advent into the Goldwyn organization means that the services of a great artist are placed at the disposal of this new motion picture organization.

PLANS FOR MARY PICKFORD

"The Little American" Is Next Contemplated Release, Followed by Film Adapation of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

Jesse L. Lasky, who has consulted with Mary Pickford in accordance with the recent Famous Players-Lasky-Artcraft affiliations in regard to future releases of Artcraft, announces the next two subjects following "A Romance of the Red Woods," just completed.

Mary Pickford in her newest summer frock. This picture shows one of the reasons why Mary Pickford purchased a round trip ticket from Los Angeles to New York and consumed ten days of her two weeks' vacation in behalf of her summer wardrobe. The picture also offers a striking contrast to the Mary Pickford of the days of '49 as will be disclosed on the screen shortly in her forthcoming Artcraft picture, "A Romance of the Redwoods."

Mr. Lasky stated to MOTOGRAPHY that the next Pickford play will be a timely subject of great patriotic appeal entitled "The Little American." Work has already been commenced on the building of sets at the Lasky studios and many spectacular effects will be introduced. Among the thrills will be scenes depicting the sinking of the Lusitania. For one of these scenes an immense tank measuring 50x100 feet is being built, in which the ballroom of the liner will appear to sink. This setting alone is estimated to cost in the neighborhood of $10,000. Cecil B. de Mille, who also directed Miss Pickford in "A Romance of the Red Woods," will stage this subject, and the actual filming of scenes will soon be undertaken. Although the exact nature of the film has not been announced it is understood that the picture will disclose an ideal combination in presenting "America's Sweetheart," in "The Little American," produced at this time by Cecil B. de Mille.

After the release of "The Little American," Mary Pickford will appear in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," the famous story and play by Kate Douglas Wiggin, one of the most popular sellers in the country.

It is understood that this production will also be staged at the West Coast studios. Marshal Neilan, who recently signed a two-year contract with the Famous Players Lasky organization, will film this picture. Mr. Neilan, although a man of the early twenties, has had considerable success. His most sensational success was the adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's short story, "The Bottle Imp," starring Sessue Hayakawa. Among his other prominent hits were two adaptations of novels for Lasky, F. Hopkinson Smith's book, "The Tides of Barnegat," and Gene Stratton Porter's "Freckles."

J. L. & S. Buys Big Ones

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of Chicago, are evidently not missing a bet in cornering the feature film output. After being appointed personal representative for Goldwyn productions, Aaron J. Jones announced the acquisition by Jones, Linick & Schaefer of all the Ralph and John Ince productions and the purchase of "The Barrier." Now this enterprising firm announces the purchase of the Illinois State rights for "The Crisis." Sherman & Elliott, who purchased the world's rights for this remarkable story of the Civil War period, arranged with William N. Selig to transfer their Illinois holdings to Jones, Linick & Schaefer. It is said that upward of $75,000 was paid for this privilege. The feature is now running at the Colonial, Chicago, to unusual business.

Vive Max!

Max Linder, Essanay's famous comedian, who was reported to have been stricken with a touch of tuberculosis as a result of an inflammation of a lung wound during his services in the great European war, is vastly improved, according to advices which have just been received from Los Angeles.

Monsieur Linder is at his home in Beverly Hills and is under the care of the best physicians in Los Angeles. He has not been in his studio for several weeks; however, he will soon take up his work again.

"Max in a Taxi," Linder's third and last Essanay comedy, is still booking strong, according to Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay officials. The scenario for the fourth Essanay production already has been written by Linder, and should his health permit, he will launch into its production within a short time.

New Stuart Holmes Play

Stuart Holmes, famed as the sleek villain of the William Fox productions, will soon appear in a new film and in a novel role. Mr. Holmes' next starring vehicle will be released under title of "The Broadway Sport." The make-up and the clothes which the star wears in this picture are such that even his most ardent admirers will hardly recognize him.

TRIANGLE BOOMING

C. H. Bristol of Triangle Returns to New York from Coast Studios—Studios of Ince and Sennett Active

C. H. Bristol, advertising manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, has just returned from a two weeks' trip to the coast, where he visited the studios producing Triangle-Ince plays and Mack Sennett Keystone comedies.

In commenting on his trip, Mr. Bristol stated that he was particularly impressed with the efficiency and attention to detail that is practiced at the Triangle-Ince studios. These studios are operated as efficient manufacturing establishments in which the utmost attention has been given to engineering details and to the establishment of systems.

The plant is laid out with the idea of producing pictures of the highest grade at the very least expense. For instance, in the wardrobe building, gowns and uniforms are all divided, those of a special type being placed together and subdivided as to sizes. When uniforms are required for a production, they are issued on requisition and supplied on very short notice. After these uniforms have been used in special productions they are returned to the wardrobe room and are again placed in stock in their proper position after having been carefully inspected and put in first class condition. The attention given to every detail impresses one with the fact that these studios are being operated in accordance with the very latest business system.

There are at present five enormous glass stages at the Culver City studio of the Triangle-Ince plant and arrangements are now being made for the construction of additional stages.

Every production made at this studio must conform to the highest standard of quality and it is no infrequent thing that an entire comedy is discarded after having been produced because it does not conform to the standards set by Mr. Sennett. Nearly every Keystone Comedy, when first completed, consists of from five to ten reels and must then be cut until only two reels remain.

If exhibitors throughout the country could have the opportunity of visiting these studios they could not help but be impressed with the efficiency and the close attention to detail that is practiced.

The time has come when exhibitors must co-operate with producers in the establishment of better business relations and a visit to the Triangle studios on the Pacific coast would surely be convincing evidence that these producers have laid the foundation on which can be built a co-ordinated organization which will best serve the interests of all concerned.

Ruth McCord Tours Continent

Arrangements have been completed for the start of Ruth McCord, the Ince-Triangle girl, who is to motorcycle the United States, visiting Triangle exhibitors in all of the important cities, escorted by over three hundred motor-cyclists from the various clubs in and around Los Angeles.

The mayor of San Diego, which city will be her first stop, turned the first spadeful of earth for the erection of a Triangle monument in the southwestern corner of America on May 12.

Moving pictures of the start will be taken, and the Ince-Triangle players in a body, including William S. Hart, Charles Ray, William Desmond, Enid Bennett, Dorothy Dalton, Olive Thomas, Louise Glaum, Clara Williams, Bessie Love and Bessie Barriscale, will bid her God-speed on her long pilgrimage, which will be over one year's duration. Producer Thomas H. Ince will give Miss McCord personal letters of introduction to all Triangle constituents.

"The Texas Sphinx," a two-act Western drama, is being filmed at Universal City, featuring Harry Carey.

How I Make a Picture

By Herbert Brenon

Producer of "War Brides" and many other big features.

In the making of a picture, every director uses different methods, but the first two steps are always the same—the choice of subject and the selection of the cast. Once we have decided upon our subject, the scenario writer moulds it into moving picture form. I never feel compelled to follow the scenario exactly—in fact, I never do. A director who does so is apt to become a mere machine. Sometimes, in fact, my finished picture bears little resemblance to the original scenario, so far have I wandered away with ideas of my own.

Casting is by no means a simple process. It often covers many weary days, and sometimes at the end of much monotonous sifting of players, we find ourselves entirely at a loss for the type we want and sometimes it is not until the last minute that some good spirit sends us the very actor or actress for whom we have been anxiously scouring the city.

But once our cast has been carefully selected, the days of real work and anxiety begin for the director. Bit by bit each scene is rehearsed over and over again, and when it is well nigh perfect, the camera is turned on.

Silence is one of the principal rules in my studio, and during the taking of the scenes the rule is strictly observed.

Whenever I take a scene in the studio I have music. It is not only a great help to me, but to the actors themselves, who under the influence of the music become less self-conscious and more malleable.

When every scene has been taken, the titling begins. I superintend and make my own subtitles and always make sure that my own ideas are carried out on the screen.

Fight Fake Photoplay Schools

A campaign on the part of the large motion picture producing concerns, to be directed against the scores of fake scenario writing schools that are operating throughout the country and that are making victims of thousands of people of little means, is advocated by L. W. McChesney, manager of the studios of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., who asserts that the concern with which he is connected will be glad to take a prominent part in any movement of this kind that may be organized. Unless such a campaign is set under way, an active effort to secure the conviction of some of these swindlers who are mulcting large numbers of poor and comparatively ignorant people out of their hard-earned savings is going to be made directly by the Edison Company through the United States Post Office Department.

Youngsters Please Exhibitors

Exhibitors in convention at Minneapolis were attracted by the sight of a three-year-old boy and girl dressed respectively as a soldier and a Red Cross nurse. Margaret Muir, who appeared in costume, has the distinction of being the youngest Red Cross nurse in Minneapolis. Little Stanley Meyer had his uniform sent to him from New York the day war was declared. Fred S. Meyer, manager of the Minneapolis branch of the General Film Company, and Henry L. Muir, his assistant, are the parents of the children.

Exhibitors' Association Entertained

The accompanying picture, from Tom North, manager of Pathe's super-feature department, shows the gathering of the new organization of leading exhibitors of the United States, known as the First National Exhibitors' Association. It was taken at the Astra Studios, where entertainment was furnished by Mrs. Vernon Castle, Mollie King, Creighton Hale, J. A. Berst, L. J. Gasnier, C. R. Seelye and George Fitzmaurice.

Exhibitors of the First National Exhibitors' Association at the Astra-Pathe studios. Mollie King, Mrs. Vernon Castle and Creighton Hale are microscopically seen in the front row.

The exhibitors present were:

George Blaisdell, New York City; T. L. Tally, Los Angeles, Cal.; Harry O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; Stanley Mastbaum, Philadelphia; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Iowa; Frank G. Hall, Newark, N. J.; Swanson & Nolan, Salt Lake City; W. P. Denees, Vancouver, B. C.; W. H. Brouse, Toronto, Can.; Jake Wells, Atlanta, Ga.; Nathaniel H. Gordon, Boston, Mass.; S. L. Rothapfel, New York City; James D. Williams, New York City; Bruce Johnson, San Francisco, Cal.; Tom Moore, Washington, D. C.; John Poole, Washington, D. C.; Earl H. Hulsey, Dallas, Tex.; J. Eugene Pearce, New Orleans; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich.; J. Trendle, Detroit, Mich.; Emanuel Mandelbaum, Cleveland; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee, Wis.; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; Greater Theaters Co., Seattle; Claude Jensen, Butte, Mont.; Aaron Jones, Chicago; Turner & Dahnken, San Francisco.

J. D. Williams, general manager of the new association, and George Blaisdell also added to the merry throng.

Bessie Love Play Completed

Director Paul Powell has added the finishing touches to the drama, "Cheerful Givers" in which Bessie Love is featured with Kenneth Harlan playing the leading masculine role. The other principals in the cast include Josephine Crowell, Spottiswoode Autken, Bessie Buskirk, Pauline Starke, Winifred Westover, Loyola O'Connor and Wm. H. Brown. The Fine Arts kiddies, including Georgie Stone, Tina Rossi, Thelma Burns and Beulah Burns are one of the features of this production. The scenario for "Cheerful Givers" was written by Mary H. O'Connor.

Strong pre-release bookings presage a good run for "The Night Workers," the Essanay feature which is scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service May 21. Trade showings of this picture, which presents the serious side to the fascinating night life of a big city, are now in progress at all K.-E.-S.-E. branch offices.

FILM FUTURE BRIGHT

Carl Anderson, President of Paralta Plays, Inc., Predicts Prosperity Ahead for Exhibitor and Producer with Intensive Exhibiting Development

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., the new distributing company which is to release the productions made by the Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan production corporations, lately formed, is far from being a pessimist over the future of the motion picture industry.

Carl Anderson, president Paralta Plays, Inc.

His long experience in the practical development of production and distribution, and especially his identification with a most exhaustive investigation of the entire industry as a basis for the formulation of the Paralta Plan of distribution, give marked authority to his opinions and observations.

Mr. Anderson makes the following interesting statements for MOTOGRAPHY:

The future of the picture industry never looked more encouraging than it does today. I have been identified with moving pictures for many years. During the past two years I have been concerned in the most exhausting inquiry ever made into the actual conditions existing in every part of this industry.

I am convinced that there is no irremedial trouble with the moving picture industry in itself. The discordant elements lie with the people who have created them in disregard of the fact that a lasting enterprise can only be erected on a lasting foundation.

The cleaning of the house has evidently begun. The day of elimination of irresponsibility in every aspect has dawned. Neither moral nor artistic pretence will be longer tolerated, indicated by the movement in the industry to rid it of producers of suggestive stories.

The business as it stands today has several glaring weaknesses. There is an over-production of mediocre pictures, both feature and program, and there is enormous waste in every department.

There is waste enough indeed in the production end, but when it comes to distribution and the development of exhibiting possibilities, one becomes appalled. The distributing system is really no system at all, and it is so oppressive in many ways that it is not to be wondered at that a cry of distress from exhibitors is constantly heard.

The rentals on productions, especially to small exhibitors, are too high. They cannot pay the rentals and advertising and other expenses and make money; they cannot afford to run a picture at the rates charged long enough to get back any appreciable part of the advertising expense necessary to create important patronage.

The result is that productions lie idle in cans on shelves when they ought to be making money. Every day they lie idle they lose so much of their earning power. Would it not be more sensible to rent them cheaper, have them run constantly and give the exhibitor a living profit? Every time an exhibitor goes out of business a selling factor in merchandising disappears. It is not good business to let retail distributors close up, but according to reports, about 20 per cent of exhibitors—retailers of moving picture amusement—closed their doors last year.

With practical co-operation on the part of the distributor and producer I have found a large percentage of those theaters could have been kept open. They were killed by an utterly inequitable system of distribution, under which the standard of rental is solely what can be squeezed out of an exhibitor.

There is a remedy for this evil, which will soon be applied.

The failure to develop to the utmost the exhibiting possibilities of a feature picture—and all meritorious pictures for that matter—is the greatest waste in this industry. My investigations have demonstrated to me that the average picture is shown to but about 30 per cent of its possibility of patronage. It all resolves itself down to intensive development of opportunity for exhibition, for all possible patronage which lies between the number of people who do see a picture and the number who would have seen it had they had the opportunity, is loss.

This feature of waste alone in itself is tremendous. Under the full development of the potential exhibiting possibilities of good pictures throughout the industry, the gain would run into millions. In many instances it represents the actual difference between profit and loss.

Triangles for June

Jack Devereaux and Bessie Barriscale are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for the week of June 3. Jack Devereaux appears in a comedy of rapid action and high spirits entitled "American—That's All!" The story was written by Robert Shirley and directed by Arthur Rosson under the personal supervision of Allan Dwan. Thomas H. Ince presents Bessie Barriscale in a Kay Bee production of life among the remote districts of the southern mountains, known as "Bawbs o' Blue Ridge."

General Film's New Comedies

In accordance with its plans for adding heavily to its list of comedies, General Film announces the beginning of a new group of such subjects from the George Kleine interests, for release one a week beginning May 21. They are one-reel comedies starring George Bickel, formerly of Bickel and Watson. With him work such favorites as Cissy Fitzgerald, Millicent Evans, Maxfield Moree, Della Connor and H. H. McCollum. The first picture is "The King of Cooks."

Another valuable set of comedies announced comprises five one-reel Ham & Bud subjects from Kalem, to be released weekly beginning May 22. This resumption of the Ham & Bud pictures is preliminary to the introduction of these popular fun makers in two-reel productions about July 1.

Mrs. Castle at Work

Following the announcement that Mrs. Vernon Castle has been engaged on a long-term contract at a very large salary to appear in Pathe Gold Rooster Plays, it is now stated that work has been begun on her first five-reel features at the Astra-Pathe studio. The title of this picture will probably be "Carroll of the Secret Service." As its name indicates, it is a detective play characterized by thrills and fast action.

Jean Sothern in Van Dyke Film

"A Mother's Ordeal," a Van Dyke production starring Jean Southern, is one of the recent Art Drama releases.

In this picture Miss Southern plays two roles, a mother and daughter. It is said that while the young star in her characterization preserves a family likeness between the two persons, she differentiates the parts with a nicety and subtlety, making them entirely distinct personalities.

Walter Miller is the male lead in this picture, and Alice May, Arthur Housman and Charles A. Boyd are in the supporting cast.

"Doug" Greets Lichtman and Schulberg

Douglas Fairbanks' Los Angeles greeting for Al Lichtman, general manager of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and Ben Schulberg, general manager for Paramount, was rather unconventional.

When "smiling Doug" learned that Lichtman and

Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Estella Lawton Lindsay, the Western Councilwoman who was instrumental in abolishing censorship in Los Angeles. The latter visited the Artcraft stars at their western "workshop" —the Lasky studios. Photo exclusive to Motography.

Schulberg were about to arrive in Los Angeles, he engaged forty real Mexicans, supplied them with costumes and guns and, as the train pulled into the station, Fairbanks, in the make-up of General Villa, attacked the Pullman carrying these two film executives. The Pullman conductor was ordered to deliver Lichtman and Schulberg, and as they stepped off the train they were greeted with three shots from every gun.

After enthusiastic greetings were exchanged, Doug ushered them into a typical '49 stage coach and in this manner, trailed by the Mexicans on horseback, the party arrived at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood. Work ceased temporarily while Mary Pickford and Cecil B. de Mille extended the studio key to the half-frightened Easterners. With Fairbanks as the jesting guide, they started on a tour of the studio, and stopped long enough to witness John Emerson direct Eileen Percy and Sam de Grasse in a scene of "A Regular Guy."

Messrs. Lichtman and Schulberg stopped at Chicago, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco en route to Los Angeles, where Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and Geraldine Farrar are now engaged in the making of Artcraft pictures bearing their own respective names for trademarks.

Bluebird Summer Releases

Preparations are complete for Bluebird's early summer program, and there have been completed and made ready for distribution enough subjects to keep the ball rolling until the regular season opens next fall. The program is now arranged, with titles definitely fixed, until July 2 when Dorothy Phillips will appear in "Fires of Rebellion."

"The Flashlight," released May 21, has Dorothy Phillips as star. In all of Miss Phillips' appearances Lon Chaney and Wm. Stowell are featured as her leading support.

Miss Phillips will be seen in "A Doll's House," June 11, the screen version and direction by Mr. De Grasse.

Lynn F. Reynolds contributes "Southern Justice" to the Bluebird series May 28, Myrtle Gonzalez and Geo. Hernandez being, as customary, in Mr. Reynolds' "nature studies," the leading players.

Wm. Worthington has directed Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon in "Bringing Home Fathter," from a story by H. O. Davis, as the attraction for June 4. Ella Hall will be the featured one in "The Little Orphan," June 18, with Jack Conway, the director of the piece, her leading man. Others prominent in the supporting cast will be Richard La Reno, George Webb, Ernie Shields, Chandler House, Gretchen Lederer and Gertrude Aster.

"A Kentucky Cinderella," created from F. Hopkinson Smith's story of the same title, is scheduled for June 25, directed by Rupert Julian with Mr. Julian and Ruth Clifford the featured players.

"The Haunted Pajamas"

Garden spots of Southern California, and the Bay region around San Francisco have been chosen as the location for "The Haunted Pajamas," the Metro-Yorke screen version of Francis Perry Elliott's novel in which Harold Lockwood will be starred. "The Haunted Pajamas," which is being directed by Fred J. Balshofer, shows scenes at a country estate, at a summer casino, at a golf course and on shipboard.

Betty Ware has recently been added to the cast to interpret the part of Elizabeth Billings. The prominent players now engaged in the production of the picture include the star, Harold Lockwood; Carmel Myers, who plays Frances Kirkland; Lester Cuneo, "Big" Ed Sedgwick, Betty Ware, Paul Willis, Harry de Roy and William De Vaull.

"Womanhood" Arouses

That Greater Vitagraph's big preparedness spectacle, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," has succeeded in arousing a high pitch of enthusiastic patriotism wherever it has been shown, has been convincingly demonstrated by the hundreds of inquiries the Blue Ribbon Company has received from all parts of the country asking about the $1,000 prize essay contest on "How America Should Prepare," which is being conducted in conjunction with the showings of "Womanhood."

Fox Star at Actors' Fair

At the special invitation of the Actors' Fund Fair Committee of Arrangements, Virginia Pearson has agreed to make a personal appearance at the forthcoming benefit, on Saturday evening, May 19. In addition to an invitation to appear at the motion picture booth, Miss Pearson has been asked to donate her services at the U. S. Navy Booth, which she has already agreed to do.

Frances Marion, author of many successful original and adapted photodramas and formerly head of the scenario department of the World Film Corporation, has been engaged by Jesse L. Lasky as a writer of special features for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Her first work under the new arrangements will be the adaptation for the screen of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," in which Miss Mary Pickford will appear as the star.

Essanay Men Drill

Essanay is taking the lead among picture companies in preparations to assist Uncle Sam in the great war against the Hun. A company of reserves has been formed and now is being drilled daily.

Miss Marguerite Clayton, star in Essanay's "Is Marriage Sacred?" series, and later in "The Night Workers," has arranged for an intensified course in nursing, which she plans to take next month during her vacation. Miss Clayton further has arranged for instruction at night, and will begin immediately. A regular army captain, former assistant director at Essanay, is drilling the first reserve company. For the past month, the men have formed daily at lunch time in the plant's enclosure, and, using property rifles, have given over half an hour's strenuous work to mastering the manual of arms, and company formations.

Artcraft and Film Art

By Walter E. Greene.
President Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

Artcraft is not a word that can be found in the dictionary. A year ago the word, as far as the motion picture industry is concerned, was meaningless. Today its meaning is readily appreciated as representing such artists as Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, Cecil B. De Mille and Geraldine Farrar. These are people who have contributed toward the improvement of the cinema. Clean pictures have been the watchword of Artcraft since its inception.

The talent of Mary Pickford and the genius of D. W. Griffith, for instance, have no parallel in the realization of their respective energies toward placing the motion picture on a higher plain. It is the continuous effort in this direction on the part of such acknowledged super-artists that continually improves the quality of cinema offerings. Then again, Geraldine Farrar, who will shortly commence work for Artcraft, has given the screen a new dignity and has brought it nearer to the "opera class" than ever. D. W. Griffith's productions, as well as those of Cecil B. De Mille, always disclose an improvement of current standard.

No single person has done as much to make the motion picture house a high-class place of amusement, a home of laughter and a theater of clean enjoyment as Douglas Fairbanks. Mr. Fairbanks stands alone in his particular field to just as great an extent as does George M. Cohan, whose initial Artcraft picture, "Broadway Jones," introduced on the screen a character that never has been and never will be successfully imitated. Another person who may be expected to do much to enhance the art of the silent drama is Elsie Ferguson, one of the most beautiful as well as talented actresses of the stage who will shortly make her screen debut for Artcraft.

In its latest endeavor toward new motion picture merit, Artcraft has linked together the talents of Mary Pickford and Cecil B. De Mille. Patrons of the photoplay will agree that never has there been a more desirable combination of screen arts effected in behalf of the films, than "Little Mary," the most famous actress in the screen world, aptly termed the "Sweetheart of America," and Cecil B. De Mille, the producing genius and one of the greatest exponents of screencraft as recently evidence by "Joan the Woman." The result of this affiliation will be disclosed in the next Artcraft release, "A Romance of the Redwoods," a revelation in Mary Pickford photoplays and offering various new effects in motion picture technique so conceived by Mr. De Mille. Such are the ideals of Artcraft ever since its inception. Although we have become widely established as the greatest exponent of the new art, as a result of our various affiliations, past efforts appear insignificant as compared to our plans for the future.

New Foxfilm Stars

Two new shining lights of laughter have been added to the Foxfilm comedy forces at the Hollywood studios. One of these is Mae Busch, the Australian musical comedy star, and the other is Paddy McGuire, a screen comedian of no little fame.

Paddy McGuire is a graduate from the ranks of burlesque. For several years he has been playing leads with a motion picture comedy company at Los Angeles. He is noted particularly for his pantomimic ability and his elastic face. Both Miss Busch and Mr. McGuire make their Fox debut in Director Charles Parrott's forthcoming Foxfilm comedy starring Charles Conklin.

Garfield Acquires "Submarine Eye"

Herman J. Garfield, one of the livest state rights men in the middle west, has just closed a deal by which he acquires "The Submarine Eye" for the states of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky from the Williamson Brothers, the originators and sole producers of Submarine Film Attractions. Mr. Garfield has returned to Cleveland and his temporary address in the Columbia Building. He shortly expects to open up larger offices in a more favorable location which in all probability will be in Keith's Hippodrome.

Press Lauds Mary Pickford

The papers in Philadelphia carried unusually extensive reviews on Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft picture, "A Romance of the Redwoods," which had a pre-release showing at the Stanley Theater. The fact that Miss Pickford's new characterization, under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, is entirely different from previous efforts and in direct contrast to her last picture, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," and that the little actress proved equally effective in this role resulted in many favorable comments in this connection.

Meighan with Billie Burke

Thomas Meighan, who has appeared opposite Pauline Frederick ever since his arrival in the East from the Lasky studio at Hollywood, has at last transferred his allegiance to Billie Burke and will play the leading role in Miss Burke's first Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Mysterious Miss Terry."

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

New Carbons Cause a Stir

Several weeks ago the editor of this department received some sample carbons from the National Carbon Company with a request that I give them a trial on alternating current. I tried out part of them at that time and found that they were very good. I received a letter from a brother the other day who was having carbon trouble, so I sent him the balance of the sample carbons that I had with a request that he try them and then report to me as to the result. Here is his letter in answer to that request:

I tried out the carbons that you gave me and here is the result of the test. Light as it looked on the cooling plate—blueish white. On the screen,—white. On 60 amps. carbon needle from 1¾ to 2" but arc is very steady. There seems to be greater depth and clearer definition of picture on the screen. Noise,—like when a crater is being formed on a new carbon. Flicker,—hardly any on low speed.

Used a set of the regular carbons in one machine and a set of the sample carbons in the other machine, and when the change was made to the machine burning the regular carbons the picture looked yellow. With the compensarc set at 30 amps, the carbons formed a good crater and light on the picture was as good as when I used regular carbons on 60 amps.

The manager noticed the difference the minute he saw the picture. When I asked for his opinion he said that there was so much difference in the noise and light that he was at a loss for the words to express it. He gave me to understand that I was to lose no time in finding out the price of them and how soon they could be gotten, so I guess there is no doubt that he is sincere in his opinion.

Just to have a little fun with the other operators here and at the same time get some other opinions other than my own of the carbons, I told the boys after a meeting of our Local last night that I was going to show them a new wrinkle by making D. C. out of A. C. I had them sit downstairs while I ran a picture. It looked so much different to them from what they had been used to seeing they were curious to see what I did in the booth, so I invited them up.

When I struck the arc and burned it for a while, they missed the usual roar of the carbons and started to examine that wiring to find out what kind of a device I had to make D. C. Upon failure to find anything one of them noticed a trifle amount of difference in the smoke of them and said:

"I'm wise to what he does now; he soaks them in oil."

As I wanted to get all the different opinions, I did not explain anything to them.

In conclusion, I think that one word will cover my opinion. I think that they are great. Enclosed you will find a piece of film with 51 punch marks in it that was taken out of a film that I had here Wednesday. Hoping that this may be of some assistance to you with your good work and wishing you continued success, I remain, Fraternally yours,—Charles H. Hartley, Anderson, Indiana.

Get This Operator

The film that Brother Hartley refers to is a piece about three feet long, and as he says, has fifty-one punch marks in it. If such a thing is possible, just try and imagine how this piece of film will look when projected on the screen! The punch marks are all made with one punch, and whoever the "operator" (?) is that owns that punch ought to be located, and the exchange that owns the film should prosecute him to the full extent of the law.

I am told by the manager of one exchange that he is using every effort to locate the men that are damaging his goods and will surely prosecute them if they are found. If a few examples were made out of these so-called operators that are punch marking film it would do a world of good.

About Theater Ventilation

I am an enthusiastic reader of Motography and read every department and learn a little more every time. I would like a little advice.

My theater is a converted storeroom in the middle of a block and I realize that with summer coming on the poor ventilation that my patrons will get. I have only been in the business a little over a month but mean to improve the best I can. I have two wall fans and mean to put in two more. I want to know with two extra exhaust fans one on each side of the booth.

Will they cool and freshen the circulation of the air? If not, what would you advise? I am open to any suggestions. Respectfully.—S. Rubenstein, Photoplay Theater, Elba, Alabama.

Not knowing the size of your theater or the seating capacity, it is impossible for me to say just what you will need in the way of fans to keep the house cool and properly ventilated. Wall fans will not ventilate a room, but they will keep the air moving, and by doing that they help keep the people cool. I would advise you to get an exhaust fan or two and install it in the theater. Get them large enough to properly ventilate the room.

If you will forward to me the dimensions of the room with the seating capacity I can tell you what size fan you ought to have. Give the width, height, and length of the room. Readers of this department are requested, when writing for information on any subject, to give full particulars. It is impossible to answer a question if this is not done.

Send Your Questions Right Along

I would like to have some information if you can write me. I have a small plant, so I don't think it would help any one else much, so if you will answer the questions it will save taking up so much space in Motography and I will pay you for the bother.—D. W., Augusta, Montana.

My Dear Sir: Come on in with your questions. This department is conducted for the benefit of the readers of Motography, and Motography pays me a salary to answer these questions, so you do not need to feel as though you owe me anything for my trouble. I will gladly answer your questions through the columns of this department, but on account of the number of readers who are writing in, asking for questions to be answered to them personally, I will have to refuse all such requests of that nature from now on. My time is taken up with this department, and all queries must be answered through that means. I will welcome all your questions.

State Federation Convention

At the convention of the State Federation of Labor, which was held in Anderson, Indiana, last week, the delegates were addressed by J. H. Mellett, mayor of the city. Mr. Mellett is a baker by trade and has carried a card for a number of years. He turned the key of the city over to President Fox. The committee in charge of the entertaining of the delegates outdid themselves. On Tuesday evening there was a banquet; Wednesday evening, the policemen's ball and an entertainment at both the Starland and Meridian theaters. Thursday the delegates were taken for an automobile ride. At the Starland Theater on Wednesday evening the following program was given for the men delegates:

1. Some real music by real musicians, Robinson Brothers, Starland Theater.
2. The Unfortunate Quartette, an able body of willing fighters who have been rejected by Uncle Sam on account of Vocal Disability, which they demonstrated.
3. Two reels of Max Sennett nut stuff, entitled "Her Nature Dance." This was furnished by C. C. Hite, manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation of Cincinnati.
4. Some tortures by the Unfortunate Quartette, entitled "Federation Harmony."
5. A reel of pictures announced by a slide that the reel was an art picture and so considered by the Board of Censors.
6. A few comic songs, by J. Russel Robinson.

Closing number, "Star-Spangled Banner," by all delegates assembled, and accompanied by organ.

Second French World Play

The second of the French photodramas purchased by World-Pictures Brady-Made for distribution upon the regular program is called "A Naked Soul," and its publication is listed for June 11. The star of this production is Susan Grandaise, whose old world impersonations of sympathetic roles are very popular.

Miss Grandaise is but twenty-two years of age, and has been acting upon the screen since she was a little more than fourteen. She was first "discovered" in the Gaumont studio. A German director first realized the possibilities of this little French girl. He had seen her performances in several of the Gaumont screen plays and felt sure that she was a prize worth going after.

Miss Grandaise is an orphan—in fact has no living relatives so far as she is aware. She has never appeared upon the speaking stage, and she entertains no ambitions in that direction.

The Pathe Exchange Incorporated, of Texas, has made a change in management at the Dallas office. Owing to ill health, W. G. Underwood has been relieved and C. A. Meade, special representative of Pathe, has assumed charge.

Stage Star with Essanay

The screen has won another big star from the stage. Taylor Holmes has signed up with Essanay. Filming of his first picture under that organization's banner will begin immediately. Mr. Holmes is perhaps the best interpreter of comedy on the stage. "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," was his biggest hit. In this vehicle, he enjoyed a sensational run on Broadway and later played at the Cort Theater, Chicago. for a record-breaking engagement. Then, after a tour of the country's largest cities, from coast to coast, Mr. Holmes returned to Chicago for another long run, which he has just recently completed.

Taylor Holmes doing his first picture work with Essanay.

His Essanay engagement is Mr. Holmes' debut in motion pictures, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" will be his first picture. This feature will be an adaptation from the story of that title which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. The picture will be a comedy-drama, depicting a very laughable travesty on the wave of efficiency rule which has swept the country. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service will handle all releases.

Artillery Aids Metro Production

The gun crew of the First Field Artillery of the New York National Guard, Colonel Merritt Smith commanding, assisted in the production of Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Greatest Power," directed by Edwin Carewe. These men fired the service charges which demolished by shell-fire the villages especially built for the purposes of the picture by Technical Director E. J. Shulter and his corps of assistants, headed by Patrick Carey and Frank Namczy.

"The Greatest Power," which will be presented by B. A. Rolfe, is replete with patriotic scenes of national importance. A portion of the United States fleet is shown, and there is a view of a naval engagement between two foreign battleships.

"Uncle Sam" Sold

Captain Chas. E. Kimball of the Hanover Film Company has disposed of the Greater New York and New York state rights on "How Uncle Sam Prepares" to the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, through its president, Nathan Hirsh. Mr. Hirsh, who has made such a success in marketing a number of the big productions of the year, including "Civilization" and "Marvelous Maciste," will handle this on the same elaborate scale and he is already planning to market a number of prints of this throughout the city and state in order to do his "bit" in helping "Uncle Sam" in his great recruiting task.

GRIFFITH FINISHES WAR WORK

Cables Artcraft Pictures Corporation He Will Return As Soon As Possible—"Intolerance" Scores Hit With Londoners

D. W. Griffith, who left the United States for England several months ago to secure motion picture records on the western battle front in France by courtesy of the English War Office, has concluded his work in this connection and is expected back in this country in the immediate future. Upon his return Mr. Griffith will commence activities on his initial production which he will later release through the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. A cable from Mr. Griffith received at the Artcraft headquarters in New York reads as follows: "Have finished all scenes taken in connection with the War Office. Beautiful co-operation. Returning soon as possible."

Although the nature of Mr. Griffith's first subject has not as yet been disclosed, it is understood that preparations are now under way for its production on the West Coast.

Mr. Griffith intends to concentrate his time and energy in such a manner as to create a number of subjects of wide dramatic and scenic scope and it is understood that his producing force will operate wherever necessary to obtain the scenic investitures of the stories which he selects for production.

While in London Mr. Griffith supervised the premier of "Intolerance" at the Drury Lane Theater. The Drury Lane audience fairly gasped for breath at the magnificent realism of it all.

EXHIBITORS ADVISE GOLDWYN

Free Discussion of Exchange Problems Aids Release Plan—Goldwyn Aims to Deal With Exhibitors in Ideal Manner

Although Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is as yet a company without a release, the interest which the announcements of this company have aroused among the exhibitors of the country has been so great that the Goldwyn offices have received thousands of letters from managers throughout the United States.

Many exhibitor's problems have been very frankly stated in the letters to Goldwyn with an expressed desire that the operations of the new concern could be so framed as to eliminate or avoid the friction spots.

Analysis of this constructive criticism reveals the fact that strained relations between exchanges and exhibitors is not only the chief source of trouble, but that this is so universal that the complaint may be said to exist in 100 per cent of the cases where exhibitors are not making good.

Looking closer, we read that delay in shipments of film from the exchange to the exhibitor is a frequent complaint; and the shipment of film in a bad condition is another.

Aside from the complaints over advance deposits with the exchanges, another source of trouble is found in the lack of a hard-and-fast scale of prices for pictures. A man who makes an offer for a picture and is turned down by the distributor, only to find, later on, that the same picture has been sold to his rival at a lower price than the figure he offered has been made into an enemy of the exchange.

With the buyers of regular programs the fighting phrase seems to be "Special Release." Hundreds of exhibitors have written to Goldwyn complaining of the necessity with which they have been confronted of shelving mediocre pictures released on a program, and buying at high cost special releases to take their places.

And allied to this is the great dissatisfaction many exhibitors have voiced with the state rights system. Some contend that the pictures are sold at such high prices as to make the permanent showing of states rights pictures a ruinous proposition for the exhibitors, since regular patrons are driven away by the resulting advance in admission charges. Others complain that the people who exploit state rights usually have no far-seeing policies looking to the good of the business.

Alice Joyce Stirs As Mary Turner

In connection with the presentation of the screen version of "Within the Law," Greater Vitagraph's big production, an interesting question has arisen. It concerns Alice Joyce's interpretation of the part of Mary Turner, which, in the original stage version, was played by many notable actresses.

One critic, in reviewing the screen production after its premiere, expressed thanks that Miss Joyce had not attempted to imitate Jane Cowl, the originator of the part in New York. This writer commented on the distinctive handling of the role by Miss Joyce. On the same day, however, another writer declared that Miss Joyce's work recalled sharply that of Jane Cowl.

The answer is this: Several years ago, when Bayard Veiller's great sociological drama-sermon gripped the hearts of millions of playgoers, Alice Joyce went to see it. She first saw Jane Cowl, who played the role eighty weeks in New York and then toured the Eastern cities.

All of this Miss Joyce absorbed, so that when Greater Vitagraph came to cast her for the role she had a composite mind picture of Mary Turner, "the most wonderful shopgirl in the world" and one of the greatest parts ever produced on the American stage. It is this composite mind picture that is responsible for the divergence of view between the critics, both of whom admitted that Miss Joyce had given the part a womanly touch and a sympathetic glamour that was not possible for the stars of the spoken drama.

Louise Glaum "Vamps" Again

Louise Glaum will be presented soon on the Ince-Triangle program, in "Love or Justice?" by Lambert Hillyear. The "vampire de luxe" is offered in a part that demands the work of a finished artist in every scene. The story deals with the underworld, and holds to view two characters who enact the big moments of their lives while swayed by an over-mastering passion; a passion that fuses their very souls, and ushers them into an atmosphere of peace and contentment.

Miss Glaum, as Nan, a sort of uncrowned queen of the underworld, covets that which she has not within herself—culture and refinement. And when the newcomer to her little world arrives, who possesses these things, her sudden savage interest causes eyes that have smouldered for years, to flash, and the first and only real affection she has ever known is awakened.

Charles Gunn, as the lawyer, who sinks to the lowest depths by the drug route, and Jack Richardson, as Paul Keeley, the clever criminal and leader of the gang of jewel thieves, ably support Miss Glaum in this drama.

Others in the supporting cast include J. Barney Sherry, Dorcas Matthews and Charles K. French. The extraordinary "settings" are Ince-made—a guarantee of excellence.

Forthcoming Universal Releases

Stuart Paton is the producer of "Like Wildfire," the five-act Butterfly Picture which heads the Universal program for the week of May 21. He is at present engaged in directing the forthcoming serial "The Gray Ghost," a film version of the famous novel "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, which ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Like Wildfire" is refreshing, novel and entertaining, and the acting of Herbert Rawlinson and Neva Gerber adds to the excellence of the production. It will appear Monday, May 21, and is sure to increase the popularity of Butterfly Pictures. On the same day the Nestor one-act comedy, "Moving Day," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, will be released.

The feature for Tuesday, May 22, is the Gold Seal three-act Western drama, "A 44-Calibre Mystery," in which Harry Carey and Claire DuBrey have the leading roles. The other Tuesday offering is the Victor comedy, "Who Said Chicken?" featuring Ernie Shields and Marcia Moore.

"Beach Nuts," an L-Ko comedy in two reels, in which Dan Russell and Gladys Varden provide the laughs, will be released Wednesday, May 23. Gladys Varden was known to thousands of movie fans under the name Gladys Roach. Issue No. 73 of the Universal Animated Weekly will make its regular Wednesday appearance.

Ruth Stonehouse is the star in the Victor comedy drama, "Mary Ann in Society," which appears Thursday, May 24. The Rex drama, "Unmasked," featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is the other Thursday release.

On Friday, May 25, the Laemmle two-part society drama, "Money's Mockery," in which Douglas Gerrard and Francelia Billington have the leading roles, will be released. Issue No. 20 of the Universal Screen Magazine will also appear Friday.

The Bison two-part comedy drama of Saturday, May 26, entitled "Dropped from the Clouds," is an exceptional two reel release. It is novel in conception and execution. The principal roles are played by Gypsy Hart, Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict, supported by the Universal cowboys.

The Joker comedy, "The Boss of the Family," will also appear on this date. Other Saturday releases are the second edition of Universal Current Events and the Laemmle one-act drama, "The Light of Love."

The feature for Sunday, May 27, is the Big U two part war drama, "The Smashing Stroke," and the Powers split reel, "Cupid Gets Some New Dope," an animated cartoon, and "Navigation in China," a Dorsey educational.

During the week the eleventh episode of the great mystery serial, "The Voice on the Wire," entitled "At the Poisoned Door," will be released.

More Triangle Barriscales

Bessie Barriscale will remain on the Triangle program throughout the current year. A number of unusual productions starring Miss Barriscale are being completed at the Kay Bee studios under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, prior to the expiration of her contract. "The Snarl," released May 6, is the most recent of these to be shown. "Bawbs o' Blue Ridge" follows, June 3, and every month thereafter until the end of the year, a Bessie Barirscale feature will be available to Triangle exhibitors.

The fact that Thomas H. Ince has given his personal attention and most mature judgment to the creation of these plays is a guarantee of their superior quality. No expense has been spared to give each story a setting commensurate with its dramatic novelty. In two cases, entire villages were built to create realistic atmosphere, while the costuming of "Miladi of Tags and Tatters," the scene of which is laid in the British Isles during the Gainsborough period, is said to outshine anything of the kind that has previously been attempted at the Culver City studios.

"Womanhood" Billed Nationwide

Motion picture exhibitors all over the United States awakened on May 10 to find that practically over night the entire country had been covered with flaring twenty-four sheets advertising Greater Vitagraph's big preparedness picture, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."

Every automobile road, every main artery of travel east and west, north and south, every city large and small was literally covered with the flaring posters calling upon the country to "prepare."

The big poster campaign was planned by V. L. S. E. to fulfill two uses, the first to be of assistance to the government officials who want the preparedness picture presented in every city, town and hamlet in the country in order to arouse patriotic enthusiasm and the second to bear its share of the advertising expense in order that the exhibitors in the smaller cities and towns will receive the patronage the picture justifies.

The big posters resemble as closely as possible the big recruiting posters of the army and navy. They are in red, white and blue.

Other than the fact that V. L. S. E. is following the wishes of government officials in promoting "Womanhood" with the tremendous poster campaign, it also is looked upon as a business experiment which probably will be followed on big Vitagraph features in the future if the smaller exhibitors endorse the idea and show that the experimental poster campaign has increased their box office receipts.

Art Dramas in Loew Theater

Marcus Loew has contracted to run one Art Drama a week in his New York Theater at Forty-ninth and Broadway, New York.

"The Mystic Hour," the Apollo production starring Alma Hanlon, will be the first picture to be seen there. This will be shown on May 18. Regularly thereafter every release of the program will be screened weekly. Marcus Loew has been showing Art Dramas in his other theaters for some time.

Two William Fox productions will be released on May 21. In one, "Heart and Soul," a super de luxe picture, Theda Bara will star. In the other film, "The Final Payment," Nance O'Neil will play the stellar role.

It's a Very Nice Day

Juliette Day, who has just signed up with the American Film Company to star in pictures released through the Mutual Film Corporation, started her stage career at the age of six years, when she was engaged by Winthrop Ames to play with his Castle Square company in Boston. While under Mr. Ames' management Charles Dillingham was impressed with her acting and signed her to tour in his "Little Princess" company. Following this, she appeared with the Ben Greet Players.

After these dramatic experiences, Miss Day returned to school for a period and at the age of fourteen made a tour of the world. On her return to New York she again went under Mr. Ames' management and created the part of the soul of the unborn child in his production of "The Bluebird."

Following this, Miss Day created the role of Plum Blossom in "The Yellow Jacket," and played leading roles in "Marrying Money," "Snow White," "Chin Chin" and "Twin Beds."

At present Miss Day is appearing in the long run of "Up Stairs and Down," her delightful little mannerisms and cute girlish ways, which have been the talk of stagedom this winter, are the rage among the young people, who try to effect the charm of her personality.

Klaw & Erlanger have engaged the attractive ingenue for next season in their musical production of "Csardas," in which a special part has been created and written for Miss Day by the author, Guy Bolton.

Here's the only picture of half a working week in captivity—three Days. It happens that they're all the same Day, but who will object to that when it is so good to look upon. Her first name is Juliette and she is now an American-Mutual star—one of the brightest in the motion picture heaven.

Screen Players Lose Stage Ability

"I have found out what is the matter with actors who go back to the speaking stage after any considerable stay with the moving pictures," declared William A. Brady, director general of World Pictures Brady-Made.

For a long time I could not fathem it at all. It was entirely clear that there was some detrimental influence at work in the movie studios, for the actors who returned to the theater were never the same.

The first conclusion I reached was that the players, compelled to confine themselves to dumb show, had fallen into the habit of overacting, by way of emphasis. But that turned out to be erroneous.

Not so long ago an actor playing an important and rather vehement part in one of my stage productions found that he must take a rest or break down his vocal machinery entirely. From our studio in Fort Lee I brought an excellent actor who had been appearing in the pictures for about two years, to play this part temporarily.

What happened? Why, after he had been rehearsing for two or three days he found that he had lost his stage voice completely. Of course everybody knows that what appears upon the stage to be the most natural tone in the world is nothing of the sort. It has to be acquired, and is a part of the actors' training.

Well, the leading man I took out of the studio for this temporary occupation was scared clear through. He thought that so far as the spoken drama was concerned, he was done for. But I loaded him into his automobile and sent him out into the country to practice roaring, and he managed to get through the performance creditably.

But he was pretty miserable for awhile—never sure of himself, and when it came to the big scenes, in mortal terror of blowing up. This experience tells the whole story, I believe. The actors who spend any length of time playing for the camera may improve their pantomime, but are crippling their voices and making themselves useless for the stage.

Signal Owns Complete Railroad

Any kind of a railway train from a way freight to a fast mail can be made up on twenty minutes' notice in the private yards of the Signal Film Corporation at Signal, California, out of the private rolling stock of the concern.

For instance, in production of the new fifteen chapter photonovel, "The Railroad Raiders," in which Helen Holmes is being starred, there are in use at one time twenty-five cars, including everything from the latest steel Pullman to the lowliest box car, while three 120-ton Regal locomotives, the private property of the corporation, are kept with steam up and crews aboard, ready for instant use.

The Signal Corporation also has the distinction of being on the railroad map with its own station, and trains engaged in picture productions are dispatched out of its private yards and from its private station by the regular dispatches.

Signal Players Volunteer

The players at the Signal-Mutual studio stand ready to leave their screen profession and join in the fight against Germany when their government needs them.

J. P. McGowan, director, has enrolled in the Los Angeles aviation squad to be held in reserve.

G. H. Wischussen, a former United States army officer, is at work with several men of the Polo Club of Los Angeles organizing a regiment of infantry for service at the front.

F. L. Hemphill, a veteran of the Spanish-American war, is also listed among the reserves.

Jackie Saunders in "Checkmate"

Jackie Saunders, "tomboy of the screen," has a new-fashioned role in "The Checkmate," new Mutual-Horkheimer production, released May 21. In her new play Miss Saunders starts out as a "Ye Hoyden," fighting Filipino cocks in a nice, secluded spot on her father's stock farm, but by this time Miss Jackie is wearing her hair done up for state occasions, and the male species has begun to obsess her spare moments. She is therefore ripe for adventure when the handsome young villain from New York is entranced by her childish charms, and succumbs to the temptations of life along the "Grand Canyon of the Manhattan," as Burns Mantle distinguishes his Broadway.

For those who have imagined that Miss Saunders' must needs be a riotous, rollicking kid in order to hold her public, "The Checkmate" must necessarily prove a revelation. It displays the clever young actress in far more pretentious artistry than do any of her previous offerings, and affords her opportunity for emotional work which serves to emphasize her versatility and enhance her popularity.

The cabaret scenes along Broadway are elaborately staged and very true to life. Some of the scenes in the Rialto "halls of high jinks" would be recognized by any experienced New Yorker.

The farm scenes are certain of popularity. There is a rooster fight in the first chapter that is worth going a good many miles to see even it one doesn't habitually attend cockfights.

Universal is screening Brand Whitlock's story, "The Field of Honor," with Allen J. Holubar, Louise Lovely and Millard K. Wilson.

Glimpses of Jackie Saunders in her latest Horkheimer-Mutual, "The Checkmate."

FILMS IN ITALY

Theaters Seat 600 to 1,400 and Admissions Run from Four to Thirty Cents—Italians Prefer Serious Plays

Motion picture films are rented in Italy by districts, states Consul Roger C. Tredwell of Rome. The number of film theaters in these zones, exclusive of the small towns and villages, in each of which there is always at least one house, is 404. Rome has 43 such theaters, 12 of which are patronized by the best classes of people.

The average seating capacity of these theaters is between 600 and 1,400. The entrance fee varies from 4 to 30 cents. Sometimes, when a notable subject is projected on the screen, the entrance fee exceeds the limit named. Prices also depend in some instances upon the name of the artist in the leading role as well as the theater in which the film is shown. However, a very good film can be seen for an entrance fee of 8 cents.

Slapstick Comedy Fails

Comedy and serious drama are both popular in Italy, but slapstick films do not seem to be appreciated as a rule. Historical films, which depend largely on striking costumes for favor, do not appear to excite much interest. Modern themes, with strong dramatic and realistic plots, splendid scenes, and attractive and well-dressed performers are in demand.

The program usually is made up of one print from 1,200 to 1,500 meters long, consisting of five reels. Those composed of several short-length subjects have gone out of favor, at least in the best houses of the larger cities. The length of the performance is from 2 to 3 hours, with short intermissions.

Italian dealers are said to believe that American films do not satisfy the taste of the Italian public. They prefer to buy high-priced Italian pictures featuring their own popular artists rather than the best American prints. They also find the American films too expensive. In fact, it is the prevailing opinion among buyers here that the American manufacturers make a very large profit.

It is argued in Italy that the pictures American manufacturers wish to introduce into Italy should be sold at a very small profit. In support of this argument they cite the fact that Italian films which are sold for a very high price in Italy are disposed of in America at about 20 cents per meter, with the sole object, they say, of making the Italian film productions known in America. Buyers claim that manufacturers here make most of the profits on their negatives in Italy and on the continent, and that in order to introduce their goods in America they are willing to sell at a large sacrifice.

The duty on films is approximately 16 cents a kilo (2.2 pounds).

In dealing with many renters of films in Italy it should be remembered that they conduct practically all of their business by notes of 90 to 120 days and even longer. Before being exhibited in Italy all films must be sent to the Ministry of the Interior, where they the projected on a screen and undergo the government's censorship. A fixed tax must be paid for this formality. When a film has received the ministery's approval, a stamped permit allowing its exhibition in the country is given the owner. Subjects which are forbidden include hypnotism, ghastly murders, or scenes of cruelty or debauchery.

Pictures Popular in Colon

Motion pictures are so popular in Colon, according to Commerce Reports, that another theater seating 1,000 people has recently been opened in addition to the two large ones in operation there for years.

These theaters, which receive the better class of popular films from the United States, do a good business every evening in the week. Most of the films brought to Colon are used also at the two forts near the city, at both of which motion pictures are shown every evening; on the U. S. S. Charleston, the mother ship for the submarines stationed there, four evenings a week; and at Gatun, 7 miles south of Colon, three evenings a week. A few weeks ago "The Birth of a Nation" was given in the Y. M. C. A. clubhouse in Cristobal and at many other places in the Canal Zone. In spite of the rather high prices for tickets this play drew large houses. At the Cristobal clubhouse films are shown three evenings a week.

In the Province of Bocas del Toro there are four picture houses—two at Bocas del Toro, and one each at Almirante and Guabito. It is announced that the Guabito Banking and Mercantile Company, recently organized with a capital stock of $100,000, is about to replace the old halls in Almirante and Guabito with new theater buildings to cost about $5,000 each. Almirante is at the terminus of the railway system of the United Fruit Company, where its ships take on cargoes of bananas; Guabito, which is a village of 1,000 people some 20 miles west of Almirante, is in the midst of the great banana plantations of this company.

Serial Recommended by Exhibitors

The box office receipts are what count. Here is what Claude N. York, owner and manager of the Reel Theater, Catlettsburg, Kentucky, has to say about the Mutual-Signal serial "A Lass of the Lumberlands."

"I wish to say in behalf of your new serial 'A Lass of the Lumberlands,' I have played five chapters of the same and my box office receipts are equal to my Saturday nights."

Photoplays Popular in Guatemala

By Consul Samuel C. Reat, Guatemala City.

Motion pictures shows, or "cines," as they are termed here, constitute a popular form of entertainment in Guatemala. There are five such theaters in Guatemala City, one in Quezaltenango, and one in Retalhuleu. During the week performances are given only in the evening; on Sundays there are two exhibitions. The patronage is especially good on Sunday.

The price of admission ranges from 7 to 30 cents United States gold. In case of special films the prices are advanced. Each theater gives one performance of six to eight reels, some three-fourths of the program being a single feature such as "Quo Vadis," "Nero," or an historical incident. The remainder consists generally of a comedy, a section of Pathé's Gazette, or an illustration of some industry. Film titles are almost always in Spanish, though occasionally one is in English and Spanish.

The most popular films are those of dramatic and serio-comic character. The majority of those heretofore shown have been European, the principal marks being Pathé, Gaumont, Itala, Roma, Torino, and Nordesk. Since the European war a few American films are coming in, but they seem, as did the European ones, to have had extremely hard service before being brought here. The average price paid for the European films is 10 to 15 cents gold per meter (meter = 3.28 feet). Very few films are brought from the United States, evidently on account of the cost, as the lowest price quoted was 8 cents gold per foot (equivalent to 26 cents a meter). A few films are rented from Europe at $4 gold per reel, time limit six months.

Films pay customs duty of 1 peso per kilo (2.2 pounds), including weight of inside wrappings, but not that of outside packing case, half of which is paid in American gold and half in Guatemalan currency. The latter money being worth 2½ cents to the peso, the duty paid amounts to 23 cents per pound.—Commerce Reports.

Christie Makes Metro Screen Debut

George Stuart Christie, well known to patrons of the drama and light opera, made his screen debut as leading man for Emmy Wehlen, in her Metro production, "The Duchess of Doubt," exterior scenes of which were made in Florida under the direction of George D. Baker.

Mr. Christie plays the part of Walter Gray, who masquerades as a ribbon clerk to hide the fact that he is the possessor of vast wealth, and the doing of which brings him into amusing and dramatic contact with the character played by Miss Wehlen.

Mr. Christie is well known to the patrons of drama and light opera throughout this country.

Milton H. Fahrney has signed a long time contract with David Horsley to continue as director of the Cub Comedies, which are released through Mutual. Mr. Fahrney has written and directed seventy-seven Cub Comedies, in all of which George Ovey was starred. The recent long time contract signed by Mr. Ovey means that the director and star will continue to work together for some time to come.

A couple of unique and interesting scenes from the new L-Ko comedy "Beach Nuts."

L-Ko Comedies Nifty

The progress of L-Ko comedies continues to satisfy exhibitors and is certainly a source of gratification to President Julius Stern. Through the inventiveness of General Director J. G. Blystone the nature of the "plots" are made to lend comic situations of spontaneous interest. Producing comedies is admittedly a more intricate art than any other branch of screen enterprise—a fact demonstrated in the abundance of dramatic sources as compared with the relatively few creators of strictly mirthful subjects.

Director Blystone has built up his company by a process of elimination, finally developing a force that works in perfect harmony under every possible emergency of production. Making a human machine of many composite parts is the acme of directorship, and Mr. Blystone's organization comes as near being a smooth working organization as one might possibly assemble. In the L-Kos that are ready for exhibition "Beach Nuts" will compare with the best comedies this popular brand has ever carried.

Work is progressing in L-Ko's western studio upon further addition to the series, some of the best laugh-makers yet created by Messrs. Stern and Blystone being in store for doing the exhibitor's battle against hot-weather opposition.

ABRAMS HAS BIG "PARTY"

Nearly One Hundred Film People Visit Portland as Paramount President's Guests for Opening of Baseball Season.

On Thursday, May 10, a special train left New York, carrying nearly one hundred people prominent in the motion picture industry to Portland, Maine, to attend the opening of the baseball season there. Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount and also president of the Portland baseball club, was host.

Mr. Abrams comes from Portland, and the city made this day of his return one long to be remembered. The local papers played the story up on their front pages prior to the big day, and consequently, the thirty or forty automobiles lined up at the station to transfer the party to the Congress Square Hotel were banked by an enormous crowd of people eager to see the new owner of the Portland team and his guests.

Members of the Rotary Club pinned guest badges on the New Yorkers shortly after their arrival, and immediately proceeded to show them that Hiram Abrams' endorsement of their presence meant that they were riding on a tidal wave of pleasure.

The formal reception took place at noon on Friday when a parade, composed of Mr. Abrams' party, the Portland and Lawrence baseball teams, and Rotary Club members, was escorted through the business section of the city by a cordon of police and an impressive band. The route covered about a mile, and was through two solid lines of people. Traffic and business were forgotten for the time being, and everyone turned out to do honor to the visitors.

The parade ended at the Falmouth Hotel where the Rotary Club was host at a shore dinner. In the afternoon interest and attendance centered about the raising of the flag at the ball grounds and the opening game of the season. In the evening the Elks gave a banquet for the guests at their home. There the mayor and many others prominent in the civic and commercial life of Portland were present. The party returned to New York Saturday.

The following were Mr. Abrams' guests on the trip:

Adolph Zukor, president, and Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft; William L. Sherry, vice-president of Paramount; "Fatty" Arbuckle; Norma Talmadge; Sophie Bernard; Walter Moore, Miner Lithograph Company; Eugene Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Al Kaufman, manager Famous Players studio; Ralph Kohn, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Joseph Schenck, president Comique Film Corporation; Lewis J. Writer and Director

By Hampton Del Ruth

Editor and production manager Sennett-Keystone studios.

Directors who have had no experience in character creation either as dramatists or writers of fiction, cannot hope to startle the world with that wonderful line, "Written and directed by So-and-so." The purely mechanical director is dependent on the writer. The average writer is not dependent on the director, as there is a wide field of expression for the writer outside motion pictures. The average director is entirely dependent upon pictures to give expression to any ability he may possess. The writer, having a greater field and being less subject to fixed conditions than the director, is therefore the more important man.

Hampton Del Ruth, Keystone editor and production manager.

We can hear certain objections from the continuity writer and the director. The continuity writer says, "Were it not for me, the story would not flow smoothly." The director emphatically declares, "Were it not for me, the picture would not be produced." The declarations of the continuity writer and director are only true when taken individually. But one cannot judge the form and color of a leopard by one spot. The continuity writer and director proceed from one point—the central idea furnished them by the creative man. He gives them the idea containing all the potentials of the finished picture. The acorn contains all the potentials of a great oak. A perfect central idea contains all the potentials of a perfect picture. Surely, if a man plants an acorn and cares for it until it sprouts, he cannot take the credit of being the creator of that acorn. This is exactly what some directors are doing—taking full credit for the central idea which they did not originate. This tends to make creative men chary of entering the motion picture field.

The continuity writer and the director are the interpreters of the idea of the creative man. An interpreter occupies a secondary position to a creator. This has no bearing on the master director, who can both create and interpret. But master directors are scarce.

The fact that the average director is absolutely dependent on the creative writer should have a tendency to make the former more considerate and with a greater comprehension of his limitations. Unfortunately, there are many directors who do not know their own limitations. They imagine that a knowledge of the mechanics of motion pictures is all that is necessary. A good director or interpreter closely approaches the power of the writer. If he does not comprehend the ideas of the writer, how may he properly interpret them in moving forms? The master director originates the idea and brings it to full expression in the picture. A poor director merely worships footage, says that he cannot get a story to suit him, and looks on the writer as a sort of thorn in his sensitive ego. This latter type of director, however, is fast disappearing. The man who creates the idea is now the important man. Without him the motion picture industry would rapidly sink into a slough of mediocrity and repetition of old stuff.

Producers are becoming chary of the purely mechanical director. They are beginning to see the folly of paying the salary due the creative man to merely a high class mechanic. They are beginning to understand that the man who can create, who has had story experience, makes a better director than the man whose experience has been confined solely to the mechanics. Out of the fog of ignorance and cheap egotism that has obscured motion pictures, emerges the creative director, the man whose ideas would be as interesting and attractive in the columns of any first class magazine as they are when expressed by moving forms on the screen.

Introducing New Vampire

Aileene Roberts is the name of the newest vampire of the screen. She is a native of Kansas and is supporting Hank Mann, the Foxfilm comedian.

Miss Roberts was born on a farm and never got over it. The farm was in Kansas where the Populist and the tornado thrive. The outstanding feature in the memories of those childhood days is her abiding love for things dramatic.

She played several successful seasons of stock in Kansas City, Seattle and Tacoma, and then the virulent motion picture germ attacked her. That was three years ago, and she's still pantomining.

Roth, owner of the Portola Theater of San Francisco and general manager of the new California Theater, now being constructed at a cost of $1,750,000, and Thomas H. UNIVERSAL SONG PROGRAM

Songs Telling the Story of the Play Will Be Sung as the Play Is Acted on the Screen

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has prepared for the trade the one new feature in their latest novelty, the motion picture song successes, and exhibitors throughout the country are starting song contests in connection with these films.

Arrangements have been made for the showing of the current song successes and while the song is being sung, the story that the song tells is being acted on the screen for the audience. This is an entirely new feature and opens avenues for competition in the territories of the exhibitors, who will receive the fullest co-operation of the music dealers handling the songs appearing on their programs.

The Universal exchanges are co-operating with the exhibitors and the music dealers and in conjunction with the publishers of the songs selected, a campaign of publicity has been inaugurated that will give to the popular ballad and patriotic song a new and added recitation.

A plan has been adopted whereby the local music dealers, the exchanges and the exhibitors will arrange singing contests, and from among the entrants, a singer will be chosen who will appear at the local picture houses. Aided by window displays and the interest that contests will arouse, the filmed stories of the song, and the novelty of presentation makes an unusual appeal, and the response to the first filmed songs shown by Universal proved this innovation an instant success.

"Popular Song Nights" will be inaugurated by the exhibitors, and prizes are planned for the singers making the most pronounced impressions.

These prizes will be awarded on the greatest number of times that a local singer is chosen to sing the song accompanied to Universal's filmed story of the song, and will localize the interest in favor of each individual exhibitor.

William S. Hart Traveling

William S. Hart is coming east for a month's vacation to renew old friendships in New York and incidentally to settle the final details of his new contract with the Triangle executives.

He will be greeted in the various large cities through which he will pass by local exhibitors, and in Chicago and Pittsburgh extensive plans are now under way for his entertainment.

It is now more than three years since Hart left New York as one of the featured players with Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" company. At that time he had no intention of becoming a screen actor, and it was not until he reached Los Angeles and came into personal contact with Thomas H. Ince that the possibilities of the pictures aroused his interest. Since that time Hart has taken a prominent part in the development of screen history. He now ranks as one of the greatest box-office attractions in the world, and has done more than any other individual actor to keep Triangle at the head of the procession. It is perhaps not generally known that Hart has directed his own plays for the past year. As a matter of fact, he has no rival in his own particular field of production, and if he retired from the screen tomorrow could earn an equally attractive salary as one of the great directors of the industry.

Prior to his entrance into the films, William S. Hart spent over fifteen years on the legitimate stage. He was leading man for Madame Modjeska during her farewell tour, played the heavy lead in the original company of Ben Hur, and created a veritable furore on Broadway in the part of "Cash Hawkins," with William Faversham when the latter produced "The Squaw Man" for Liebler & Company some years ago. Hart was also co-starred with Theodore Roberts in "The Barrier," when the dramatic version of Rex Beach's popular Alaskan novel was presented at the New Amsterdam Theater.

"The Field of Honor," a Civil War drama, with Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely, is nearly completed at Universal City.

"Her Secret"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Drama, Five Parts. Released April 30. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"HER SECRET" is the kind of a play to make an exhibitor roll the name Vitagraph under his tongue as a sweet morsel and to please his patrons none the less, for it is, from first to last, an absorbing, forceful drama produced in convincing manner from a well worked-out scenario. The film as it stands is nicely finished—well dressed, we might say—not like the man who in his wild hurry to catch a train starts from his home of a bright morning minus a few essentials in his outfit. The picture has real strong situations which are given additional color by the admirable acting of Harry T. Morey and Alice Joyce.

This picture is "the kind to make the exhibitor roll the name Vitagraph under his tongue as a sweet morsel."

Perry N. Vekroff's scenario calls for the suggestion of an unpleasant sex spectacle and this has been suggested or hinted at without either offending the audience or weakening the dramatic value of the incident, since it bears upon subsequent developments which are both cleverly unusual and gripping. Mr. Vekroff's direction is everywhere satisfying and convincing. A fine piece of direction is seen in the way he cuts back to the causal scene of the plot several times, each time showing a different part of the action of this same scene, a method which proves to be highly artistic as well as refreshing to the audience.

The picture, story, production and acting is well above the program standard, Vitagraph's or anybody else's.

Clara Weston, forced to remain overnight in a rough western hotel, becomes the victim of circumstance, and a drunken engineer, Fenton, who is directed to her room by a mistake of the dance-hall "queen." With only a vague remembrance of the night's proceedings, Fenton seeks to find the woman next morning and offer marriage. She, however, is gone, and the only clue to her identity—her signature on the ledger—has been obliterated by a smear of ink. In later years fate brings the two together again. Fenton asks his stenographer, who is none other than Clara Weston, to become his wife, and she consents without revealing her past. At last, down in health and spirits because the sight of her child is denied her, a way is made clear to bring the child into her presence—as an adopted one. So we have a situation where the child is residing with its parents but knows it not and where the father does not know his own offspring. At last Fenton learns of his wife's past and harshly repulses her, only to rescind his judgment in humility when it is dramatically revealed to him through a scar on his wife's arm that he is the guilty man.

"The Woman and the Beast

Graphic Features Drama in Five Parts Released State Rights. Reviewed by George W. Graves

SPLENDID atmosphere, good acting, able direction, and above all, thrills, are some of the things which characterize this entertaining piece of film. The scene is laid in an Italian quarry workers' settlement and the modes of living, character types and general atmosphere are worthy of praise. While the play is largely one of action and melodramatic thrills, the character work of the cast is not overlooked. The players give splendid portrayals; their work is so realistic and true, that it, combined with the sensational features of the film, constitutes substance worthy of being exploited state rights.

The arrival of the circus in town, the escape of the lion, the long and suspenseful hunt for the animal and his final spectacular finish, will all prove episodes of delight to the child mind, while the amusing bits of character study seen in the easy-going, reticent and pacific Italian grocer, and his quick-tempered, headlong and belligerent wife, will be amusing to the adult mind. These parts are taken admirably by Fred Eric and Marie Shotwell. Alphonse Ethier makes his "Big Frank" a thoroughly convincing "rough-neck" and bully. The others in the cast are Kathryn Adams, J. H. Gilmour and Tula Belle, a little child who proves to be exceedingly brave.

When Big Frank, the murderer, takes refuge from his pursuers in a powder cabin, only to be sprung upon by the escaped lion, we have quite a thrilling scene. This is followed by another when the hero dislodges a rock from the cliff above so that it will fall on the powder house. An explosion follows, marking the speedy end of the man and the beast, or, perhaps, the two beasts, as the story would point out (because Big Frank has proven himself to be not much better).

"The Woman and the Beast" has the character and the sensational elements nicely blended together. It makes an attractive offering.

formances yet to appear in the silent drama. One of the sisters she portrays is a noble, self-sacrificing, pure-minded and honest girl, while the younger sister is self-centered, shallow-minded and even brutal. The star's careful differentiation between the two gives the picture its aspect of character study and tends to pull it up much above the level it would have reached without this character work, for the story itself is a little extravagant in its ideas and much of the action consists of ordinary movie melodrama. One of the situations has the crippled sister singing behind the scenes in a theater while her twin sister is mouthing the words on the stage and taking the credit. The work of the supporting cast is above unfavorable comment, and Raymond B. West's direction figures as a big factor in the picture's success. The list of players includes such favorites as Charles Gunn, Howard Hickman, J. Barney Sherry and Thomas Guise. Leona Hutton is the author.

The whole offering is to be considered as a worthy box-office attraction. The story certainly doesn't lack action and it does manage to keep one in perpetual interest in spite of some of the overdrawn situations, and Bessie Barriscale's interpretation of the divergent characters of the twin sisters is extremely well handled.

Marion, the younger sister, envies Helen's success on the operatic stage. The elder sister becomes crippled in an accident and is unable to appear on the stage. The impressario hits upon the idea of having Marion, the exact image of her older sister, mouth the words and act on the stage, while Helen sings behind the scenes. The plan works admirably and Marion, with perfect ease, takes all the glory. She attends many dinner parties and good times subsequently, while her crippled sister is left out of everything.

Marion finally contracts a foolish and hasty marriage with Bruce, a young millionaire. Helen is invited, along with a party of others, on the honeymoon, which is to take the form of a trip aboard Bruce's yacht. An explosion of powder injures Bruce's eyes and he becomes blind. Marion proves her worthlessness by deserting her husband in his hour of stress, and Helen her nobleness of character by taking her sister's place at Bruce's side. Marion plans to rob her huband and elope with his secretary. Bruce's affliction heals sooner than expected, but he does not divulge the fact that he can see, as he has become suspicious. He soon learns the facts concerning his wife's treachery. In a tense scene he confronts her and the secretary as they are about to bring their plans to a culmination, accuses them and reveals the knowledge that he can see. At the same time a fire breaks out upon the vessel. Bruce rescues Helen from the flames. It develops that the shock has healed her infirmity and indications are that she will be rewarded for her self-sacrifice, in the future.

"The Primrose Ring"

Lasky-Paramount Offering in Five Reels. Released May 7. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

THIS is what might be termed a "pretty" story. It is simplicity itself, almost without plot complications, but it has that one great requisite—human interest. With its tale about the child-minded, trusting girl whose very faith is a power for good, manifested in her childish way through a profound adoration of the fairies, has aided in lifting her up from the couch of pain and transforming her "incurable" body to soundness, the story holds from the start. After her own restoration to health, Margaret devotes her time to the care of the other little sufferers in the incurable ward, spreading sunshine and hope wherever she goes and combatting the coldness of science which regards the little humans as mere "cases." This same unthinking science, seeing only the technical aspect of things, finally abolishes the incurable ward in favor of surgical research. So it is that the young doctor who never stops to think about the purely human side of things robs Margaret of her cherished children. How the girl runs away, how the doctor is injured and thus led to see patients as human beings rather than "cases" and how he finds the girl whom he has grown to love and springs a great surprise upon her, restoring her to her little incurables on a farm in the country, brings us to the finish of this very charming story.

All throughout runs the theme of the power of the "primrose ring" which calls the legions of the fairy world to do the works of kindness, bringing in many extraordinary double exposure effects. The atmosphere of the play is fine all through, from the incurable ward to the country farm, and the photography is up to standard. Mae Murray was a happy choice for the role of Margaret, for she preserves well the thought of youthful simplicity and innate kindness which characterizes the part. Margaret is a truly delightful character. Tom Moore as the doctor is a splendid opposite, registering finely in all of his scenes. Two more delightful characters of the play are portrayed by Winter Hall and little Billy Jacobs and the others in the cast give good performances.

"The Primrose Ring" is a pleasing, wholesome play, to be enjoyed by any one, but perhaps especially to be appreciated by children. Little bits of comedy, pathos and human touches run all through and the underlying thought is a most wholesome one. Because of the fascinating way in which the story is told and acted the picture can be called a decided attraction.

"Sacrifice"

A Lasky-Paramount Feature Starring Margaret Illington. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

MARGARET ILLINGTON, the distinguished star of the speaking stage, will make her debut in the stirring and vivid drama, "Sacrifice." Miss Illington is recognized as one of the country's foremost emotional actresses. In this production the star plays a dual role—the daughter of a foreign diplomat and a notorious dancer in an adjacent principality. Today the uppermost thought in the minds of all is the war situation. This engrossing topic is the theme of "Sacrifice."

The story, written especially for Miss Illington by Charles Kenyon, was put into scenario form by Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun. The scenes are laid in mythical principalities and attain the Lasky standard through the direction of Frank Reicher. Good exposure is shown in the scenes where Mary and Vesta meet. Miss Illington's work throughout is attractive and cleverly acted. She is surrounded by an excellent cast, including Jack Holt, Winter Hall and Noah Berry. The settings are appropriate and the photography is excellent.

The war department of Zandria plans a quick attack upon Nordhoff. Stephen Stephani and his daughter, Mary, visit Zandria to discover the plans. Stephani appeals to Vesta Boris, a notorious dancer, who is also his illegitimate daughter. For the sake of her country she agrees to secure the maps held by Count Wenzel. She is successful in gaining possession of the papers, but in the struggle Count Wenzel is killed. The same night, at a military ball, Mary meets Paul Ekald, a young Zandrian captain, and he falls deeply in love with her.

Vesta copies the plans on her petticoat, with invisible ink, and leaves for the border. The continued absence of Wenzel causes the authorities to order Vesta back to the capital. At the station she appeals to Mary, and the two, resembling each other, exchange passports. The plans reach Stephani in safety.

Held as Vesta, Mary is humiliated by the insults of the officers. Ekald, realizing that she is not the dancer, comes to her assistance. Knowing that Vesta is now safe across the border, Mary discloses her identity. The young officer is at a loss to know what to do, but Mary forces him to notify the commanding officer, who orders her to be shot as a traitor. Mary is saved by the return of Vesta, through whose great sacrifice the lovers are reunited.

With Myrtle Gonzalez in the leading role, Director Lynn F. Reynolds is filming a five-act photoplay entitled "Back to the Primitive." In the supporting cast are George Hernandez and Jean Hersholt.

"The Millionaire's Double"

A Five Part Metro-Rolfe Drama Featuring Lionel Barrymore. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

THIS is an amusing comedy-drama in which a young man, in order to baffle the plans of a crook, poses as himself and claims his own property. Lionel Barrymore is seen in the role of Bide Bennington, the young millionaire. A touch of romance is added to the story, and is made doubly pleasing by the appearance of Evelyn Brent in the part of Constance, the unwilling accomplice of the treacherous Glendon.

Many interesting incidents are found in "The Millionaire's Double."

Lionel Barrymore is well fitted to play the part of the rich young man, and does so in a very capable way. Many interesting incidents will be found in "The Millionaire's Double" which will prove excellent entertainment to the average amusement seeker. The story is by June Mathis and was directed by Harry Davenport. Others in the supporting cast are Harry S. Northrup, H. H. Pattee, John Smiley, Jack Raymond and Louis Wolheim.

Bide Bennington's house is robbed while he is away traveling. The thief is killed by two thugs who throw his body into the river and leave the stolen coat on the pier. The clothes are identified as Bide Bennington's, and he is reported dead. Upon reading the account of his supposed death, Bennington is much amused. Later, when he reads that his widow has gone to New York, he decides to return and see what his "widow". looks like.

There he enters into the conspiracy and on account of his "likeness" to Bennington, impersonates himself and claims the property. Constance confesses to Bide the reason of her becoming the accomplice of Glendon, and pleads with him to give the whole affair up. Bide promises to go straight. Glendon attacks Bide as he is telephoning the police to give him into custody. There is a terrible fight, during which the police arrive on the scene.

The two men are arrested and held as prisoners until the arrival of Bide's valet who identifies Bennington. Bide is released, while Glendon is taken away to receive his just punishment. When Constance returns from the death-bed of her father she finds that Bide is the real Bennington. Later Constance becomes his wife in reality.

Marjorie Rambeau in Powell-Mutual Feature of May 21. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AGAIN the dream plot is used in order to set forth a rather lurid series of adventures of the "vampire" type, and still to provide the happy ending upon which the Great Photoplay Public seems to insist. The result is a fitting vehicle for Marjorie Rambeau and a picture which will hold the interest of most patrons. It seems to have been built to meet popular demand, especially the demand for the sensational. Since the events were only dreamed, we suppose we must overlook inconsistencies of character and plot. Most of the characters are conventional and easily played by the capable cast. Miss Rambeau's role introduces her as a pretty, rather placid wife of a suburban artist, and then takes her through a series of vivid adventures in the higher class demi-monde of a great city. Her acting meets all requirements.

The photography, by William Wagner, is very good, and the settings are distinctive. The direction, by Frank Powell, is good. The supporting cast of players includes Robert Elliott as Bob Merrill, an artist; Irene Warfield as Maizie Goddard, an actress; Paul Everton as Boyd, a theatrical manager; Aubrey Beattie as his stage director; and Frank Ford and T. Jerome Lawlor.

The Story: Bob Merrill, a struggling artist, submits a portrait of his wife to an exhibit where it attracts the attention of Boyd, an unprincipled theatrical agent, who is interested in the original, not in the painting. He manages to meet the Merrills and loses no time in convincing Mrs. Merrill that with her beauty she can win success on the stage. He offers to star her in his next play. She elopes with him and as his mistress becomes the center of a certain theatrical set. She fails as an actress, and becomes very much entangled in a number of love affairs. Then she wakes up and discovers that her wild career was a dream.

"Annie-For-Spite"

Mary Miles Minter-American Play Released Through Mutual, May 14. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE latest Mary Miles Minter offering contains the same sort of appeal which has won favor for her previous plays, and it will probably be liked as well as any of the earlier issues.

Annie explains her philosophy of life.

It has humor and pathos and a love story, and, most important, it has Mary in a fitting role. Miss Minter's admirers will be interested in her playing of Annie Johnson of the Brooms and Mops Department of a store, an unprepossessing little waif who fits the title, the "ugliest girl in town," but who, in her new home, reveals a gift of philosophy and a talent for interior decorating and later develops into a beauty.

Under James Kirkwood's direction, the story is interestingly set forth. The photography and settings are good. The supporting cast is a clever one, and Gertrude Le Brandt is especially good as Mrs. Nottingham, who adopts Annie-For-Spite. George Fisher's role requires little of him. Eugenie Forde, George Periolat and Charles Newton have important parts.

The Story: Mrs. Nottingham, a wealthy but unhappy and crabbed old lady, in a fit of anger at her daughter-in-law, Emily, decides that instead of leaving her money to Emily's son, Willard, she will adopt the ugliest girl in the city as her heiress. Her lawyer selects Annie Johnson, who works in the basement of a department store and who seems to fulfill all requirements. Annie, however, proves a surprise. She wins first the interest and then the affection of Mrs. Nottingham and when dressed in pretty clothes, becomes a beauty. She orders the house redecorated in a more cheerful manner, and makes other changes in the household plans.

Then Mrs. Nottingham dies, and Emily and her son, who are traveling, learn of the adoption of Annie and of the new will. They at once take steps to break the will, and in the meantime Willard, the son, obtains a position, under another name, as Annie's secretary, in order to learn more of this "adventuress." The will is settled in Willard's favor. Then he marries Annie, with whom he has fallen in love.

"The Flashlight Girl"

Bluebird Photoplay With Mystery Plot. Released May 21. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A MYSTERY story written by Albert Treynore serves as the basis for this five-reel picture which Ida May Park directed, with Dorothy Phillips and William Stowell in the leading roles. The plot is simple but, skilfully set forth, it holds the interest to the last scene. It is a pleasing picture, almost all of the action taking place out of doors in a wooded country. These scenes have been beautifully photographed by Cameraman King Gray. With its flavor of adventure and mystery, and with its refreshing locations, this offering should find favor with any audience which likes pretty plays, well directed and well acted. It is a welcome relief from heavy, morbid dramas.

The continuity of the story is unbroken; the mystery is not revealed until the close and the suspense is well maintained. The acting, by a capable group of players, is good throughout. In addition to Miss Phillips and Mr. Stowell, there are Lon Chaney in a dual role, Alfred Allen and George Berrill.

The Story: Jack Lane (William Stowell), traveling in the forest photographing birds and wild animals, arranges his camera in a trap fashion so that a flashlight is automatically set off by any disturbance near it. In this way he accidentally gets a picture of a girl with a gun apparently coming from the nearby cabin of a hermit of the mountains. . The next day the hermit is found shot to death and Jack himself is accused of the murder and is pursued by a mob of the villagers. Then he meets the girl, who says that she is lost in the forest. The two travel together, and Jack is torn with doubt regarding the girl's part in the murder. At last, moved by sympathy for her, he destroys the picture which would seem to prove her guilt.

Later the two are separated and Jack is captured by the villagers and brought to trial for the murder. The girl, Delice, is an unwilling witness against him. Then she herself is incriminated. But before sentence is passed, the mystery is cleared up by the appearance of Delice's father, who had killed the hermit, his brother, in self defense.

"The Saint's Adventure"

Henry B. Walthall in Essanay-K. E. S. E. Feature of May 7. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

GOOD acting by Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson, who make the leading characters of the story real and sympathetic, is the best feature of this picture. The plot is not an easy one to picturize, for there is not very much action or many dramatic situations. It is a psychological story, and the important changes take place in the minds of the leading characters. Only players as skilled in subtle interpretations as these two could prevent the play from being vague. Instead, it is very human. It will be liked by the average audience because the viewers will like and be interested in the principal people.

It is as a whole a satisfactory offering, with technical details well attended to, in the best Essanay fashion. Its chief appeal as a drawing card will be in Walthall's name, and his followers will not be disappointed. Miss Charleson's work is sincere and pleasing and the supporting cast is capable. Ellis Paul, a child actor, works well and is an appealing figure in the play. The play will appeal to all who enjoy good acting and human stories and who can appreciate pictures not sensational.

The Story: Paul Manson, who succeeds his father as pastor of fashionable church, grows disgusted with the selfishness of his wealthy charges and especially with their treatment of the poor. His efforts to change the situation result in a nervous breakdown and he goes on a hunting trip to recuperate. A stranger, who resembles Manson strangely, is accidentally killed in the woods and the body is identified as that of Manson. So Manson is amazed to read of his own funeral.

His distaste for his work in the fashionable parish leads him to stay "dead," and he goes into the slums seeking adventure and knowledge. There he is mistaken for Sid Farley, the man who was buried as Manson. He steps into the dead man's shoes, but of course leads a better life. His gradual reformation of the people around him is set forth. Matters are complicated when he wins the love of the wife and little son from whom Sid Farley had been separated.

Manson, as "Farley," becomes a political as well as a moral influence, and in this connection is recognized by a former parishioner. He confesses his deception, but chooses to remain with his new friends and to marry Mary Farley, whom he has grown to love.

"Brodsky's Trip Through China"

Offered State Rights. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

ONE of the most interesting travelogue pictures ever offered is this fascinating trip through China. The picture is practically complete. It goes minutely into the industrial activities of the country and customs of its people, including everything from religious rites to the ways in which the people amuse themselves. The ten reels of the picture constitute a revelation of life as it is in the commonly frequented as well as the remote parts of this vast nation with its population of four hundred million people. The film combines beauty, educative instruction and novelty in a manner that is seldom matched in travel pictures. People who congratulate themselves on an extensive knowledge of China will find that there are an infinite number of things they didn't know when they view this film. Perhaps the biggest feature of the picture is the visit to "The Forbidden City," into which neither camera nor outsider has penetrated until recently. Among the most beautiful scenes of the picture are those showing the natural fascinations of the city of Hong Kong. A very remarkable view is that of the harbor, taken from a lofty summit back of the city. Among the noted places visited are Peking, Shanghai, Canton, Tientsin and Aberdeen.

The completeness, the practical all-inclusiveness of the picture bespeak the five years consumed in its making. This travelogue is good enough to be welcomed in most any theater as the featured attraction. People have been surfeited with the drama and such a distinct attraction as this should prove a refreshing departure from the usual photoplay bill. The chance for novel, artistic and effective advertising, especially lobby displays, is limitless.

Seven Part Mary Pickford Production Released by Artcraft. Reviewed by G. W. Graves

THE story for this film, by Cecil B. DeMille and Jeanie Macpherson, proves to be another excellent medium through which the dainty star can sway her audiences. Laid in the great redwood forests of California this tale of the reformation of a rough, uncouth and even brutal man—by profession a highway robber—by a dainty and demure, yet courageous girl from the East, with all its unique touches and bits of human nature portrayal proves to be highly entertaining from start to finish. Cecil B. DeMille's direction, too, is splendid throughout, being not only a valuable asset but an essential to the picture's complete success. The idea of laying the story in the "big tree" section of California was a happy one. This setting affords all the romantic element that any one could wish for. Superb photography reveals dark backgrounds of underbrush and huge tree trunks, and foregrounds of sunlit gauzy foliage, as one of many artistic scenes. The interior details of the cabin, even down to the dirty frying pan with its burden of the remnants of one or two meals back, are scrupulously looked after, furnishing the required atmosphere as directly as the beautiful out-door scenes. To the direction, both mechanical and of the cast, the picture owes more than it does to the story itself.

The star's role is a true Mary Pickford role; it is as sympathetic as some that number among her best. The part leaves nothing for "Little Mary's" admirers to wish for. Every one by this time is familiar with the star's appealing personality and her histrionic ability, therefore it suffices to say that she is at her brilliant best. Elliott Dexter does fine work in a part extremely "heavy" at first, but becoming lighter with the advancing of the story. Mr. Dexter makes a very convincing "heavy" and a likable hero. Strictly, there is no hero. The heroic glory is all given to Miss Pickford, although the story's ending might have been more convincing otherwise. Charles Ogle pleases constantly as the unlucky suitor. Other good players are Tully Marshall, Walter Long, Raymond Hatton and Winter Hall.

On the decease of her mother, Jenny Lawrence travels all the way from Boston to California to live with her uncle. The time is during the gold rush of '49. Her uncle, however, has been killed by Indians. "Black" Brown, a road agent, finds his body and decides to impersonate the uncle as a cloak for his crimes. Soon after Jenny's arrival he has her in his power, since the girl is obliged to acknowledge herself his niece to escape some ruffians. Little by little the girl forms the rough highwayman anew, beginning with table manners. At last Jack gives up his "profession" and goes to work. But he is not successful in mining and Jenny is obliged to wash miners' clothes to obtain money for the two to live on. To save the girl from this work Jack decides to rob one more coach. But the sheriff has a clue and he is caught. Jenny saves him from hanging by a clever ruse. With the noose already around his neck, she appears on the scene with a dress she has just taken from her doll. The sheriff and his men take this in the significance intended, and out of pity for the girl, whom they deem is approaching motherhood, they let Jack go. Soon after the departure of the two the posse finds the forlorn looking doll. A start is made after the pair, but the sheriff orders the men back, saying: "Boys, I reckon when twenty men have been fooled by one small woman they had better take their medicine." So Jenny and her lover are allowed to escape unmolested.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Universal Program

Money's Mockery—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—May 25.—With William Wayne, Francelia Billington, Douglas Gerrard and M. Titus. Old Jabez Peterson disinherited his son when he married Nancy. Times were hard for Billy and his girl wife. Nancy decides to pawn her wedding ring and have a big dinner, for it is Billy's birthday. Returning home she meets Jabez, who is dressed in old clothes. His heart is touched when he learns the sacrifice the girl has made to celebrate Billy's birthday. Making an excuse, he hurries home. Billy returns. He notices the ring Jabez insisted that the girl put on to hide the absence of her own and recognizes it as his mother's. Old Jabez comes in, hustles the bewildered couple out to his waiting car, and tells them that Billy's birthday celebration will be on him.

Mary Ann in Society—Victor—May 24.—With Ruth Stonehouse. Mary Ann is the daughter of a washwoman. Geraldine decides to bring a little sunshine into the lives of the poor. She invites Mary Ann to spend the afternoon at her home. Geraldine puts her in a riding habit and makes her ride a horse. Mary Ann stands it as long as she can. Rebelling, her clothes are changed to a frock and socks, which embarrass her very much. She has a horrid time until she sees a man with a hose. Mary Ann takes the hose away from the man and proceeds to enjoy herself. They all try to get it away from her and every one is soaked. Mary Ann goes home determined to do without "sunshine."

The Smashing Stroke—(Two Reels)—Big U—May 27.—With Jack Conway. When the war broke out Robert joined the Northern army, while his brother, Jack, joined the Confederates. Helen, the sweetheart of Robert, will not say good-by to him till he changes his mind about the South. Later Jack is captured by the Union army. Randall, who is a spy of the Confederates, though in the Northern army, determines to aid Jack to escape and put the blame on Robert. The escape of the prisoner is reported. Robert is accused of aiding him and is put under arrest. In the meantime Randall is accidentally shot. Dying, he writes a note to say that Robert is innocent, as he alone aided Jack to escape. Helen rides with the note to the Union camp. Robert is freed. Jack is killed in a fierce encounter. Helen and Robert meet over his body and renew their vows.

Navigation in China—(Split Reel)—Powers—May 27.—With Dr. Dorsey. The Chinese have navigated the Yangtze River for thousands of years, but the gorges are so deep and narrow that there is a terrible toll of human life every year. The channel keeps changing on account of the constant rise and fall of the tide. The junks must be towed through the ravines by means of a line from the top of the mast, pulled by from 20 to 150 men. Every available foot of land along the river is cultivated by the villagers of the small towns which line the coast. On the same reel is:

Cupid Gets Some New Dope.—Sammy Johnson finds some love potion. Seeing a colored woman about to wake her lazy husband with a mallet, he squirts some of the potion over her and she kisses the man instead. Then he comes to a man proposing to a spinster. She is about to refuse him, but some of the liquid makes her accept him. Next he sees a policeman going to arrest a nurse. The potion makes him love her instead. Just as he thinks he has reformed the world, Sammy wakes and finds it a dream.

Universal Screen Magazine—Issue No. 20—May 25.—The issue begins with the making of a bronze statue, the celebrated "Hiker," by Allen C. Newman. We see the sculptor working on his clay model for the plaster cast, which is then taken to the foundry for casting. A reproduction of the famous Virginia Dare caverns which has been set up in the American Museum of Natural History, is shown next. The scene changes to New York's harbor police, who maintain a constant surveillance of the river and harbor in their swift craft. Nature studies taken in New York's great Aquarium of the fish of the Seven Seas follow. The reel closes with a "Miracle in Mud," on a patriotic subject, by Willie Hopkins.

Unmasked—Rex—May 24.—With Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. Francis steals a valuable necklace at a masked ball. Meg, another crook, follows him. She goes to his rooms and they see each other unmasked for the first time. To get even she steals his watch. Detectives trace the crook to his home and he is arrested and found guilty. Meg visits him in jail. He tells her where the necklace is hidden. She returns it to Mrs. Montague. Francis is released. The two crooks marry and resolve to reform.

The Boss of the Family—Joker—May 26.—With William Franey, Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti. Pat, a plumber, is in love with Maggie. When she hears that he is heir to a million, she is willing to marry him, but he turns her down. He gives a dinner of celebration to his whole union. In the midst of the festivities he receives a note from his lawyer saying that Maggie is suing him for breach of promise. He decides to marry her. She rules the house and Pat is not allowed to have his friends come to see him. One night she gives a musical. Pat and his friends break up the party with gas pipe for weapons. After this Maggie is subdued.

A 44-Caliber Mystery.—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—May 22.—With Harry Carey and Claire Du Brey. Believing that Pete is the masked bandit called "Lone Jack," Horton insists on capturing him unaided. Flanders is prospecting in a ravine known as "Echo Canyon." Pete follows Flanders, who is on his way to the mine. Deputy Horton sees Pete and follows him. Flanders, realizing that he is being followed, draws his revolver. Horton and Flanders both fire. Horror-stricken, Flanders believes that he has unintentionally killed the deputy. Pete confronts him and encourages the mistake. Pete agrees to close his lips if Flanders will deed him one-half of the mine and "fix it" for him to marry Kitty. Kitty loves Billy, the sheriff, but bows to her father's wish. Billy decides to examine Pete's gun. He finds that his gun is a .44 steel-jacket, while that of Flanders is a .38 soft-nose. A gun battle ensues and Pete is slain. Billy and Kitty find happiness together.

Light of Love—Laemmle—May 26.—With Jessie Arnold and Thos. J. Crittenden. Louise Morgan does not care to give up the butterfly life for the duty of motherhood. Her husband is very fond of children and visits the orphan asylums, bringing cheer to numberless little waifs. Louise becomes jealous of her widowed sister and her child. One day she dreams that she tries to kill the child. She awakens to find little Amelia with her arms around her.

Moving Day—Nestor—May 21.—With Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts, Lee Moran and Harry Nolan. Eddie and Edith, a young married couple, are ready to move. Edith goes to the new house to wait for the furniture. The movers induce Eddie to take a drink and he becomes a little muddled. They finally get the van loaded and start. They find what they think is the right house. After the furniture is all moved in, they are informed by the landlord that they are in the wrong house. They move out again, and after further adventures move back into the house from which they started. Edith returns to find Eddie paying off the movers. They start to carry the furniture back to the van.

Dropped From the Clouds—(Two Reels)—Bison—May 26.—With Gispy Hart. A salesman introduces a new drink, Turkish Opal, into the town. The drink wins favor with the boys from the Bar U. Returning to the aeroplane, which they had towed to town, the boys have a wonderful experience. They approach a Turkish city, where they have a very exciting time. They rescue an American girl and are about to escape with her when their dream comes to an abrupt end. Accusing the new drink, they return to the saloon, resolved to run the salesman out of the town.

The Thought Machine—Episode 11 of The Voice on the Wire—May 21.—With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. Shirley receives a call from "The Voice," telling him that, though he is very clever, Welsh will die in the Cafe at 12. The lights in the Cafe are turned out. In the darkness, Shirley hurries over to Welsh's table. Welsh screams with fright and the hand disappears. Polly, still in a trance, is seized by Red, who tells her that she must kill Shirley. In the meantime Shirley and Renolds go to the home of the inventor. Shirley sits down before the inventor's "Thought Machine." In the mirror he sees Polly's face. Looking up he notices her standing in the doorway with a gun in her hand. The picture fades as she presses the gun to his body.

Who Said Chicken?—Victor—May 22.—With Ernie Shields and Florence Noar. Ernie's wife is much older than himself. He flirts with Mrs. Lane, whose husband threatens to have his life. Mr. and Mrs. Lane go to Bear Lodge. When Ernie arrives, Lane thinks he has come after his wife and is madder than ever. Mrs. Lane tells Ernie's wife that her husband has sworn to kill Ernie. In the meantime Ernie and Lane have met. They have explained to each other and are friends. The two men come back to the house as Sally and Fatty are picking the chickens, and they are nearly choked with the feathers.

Beach Nuts—L-KO—May 23.—With Dan Russell, Bert Roach, Gladys Varden and Walter Stephens. Ima Knutt is the lifesaver on the beach and the idol of all the girls. Knutt Sunday, the clerk of the soda fountain, is the sweetheart of the beautiful Hazel Knutt. Hazel decides to go in swimming, and Ima is delighted with the chance to teach her. The reel closes with the police rescuing Ima and the girl from the bath-house. Knutt Sunday is drowned.

and he takes the oath of enlistment. The process of training to be an efficient army private, Jerry discovers to be a painful one. He is drilled hard and constantly, and with his proverbial good luck finds friends among the soldiers. When Jerry undertakes to play a trick on the drill sergeant, things begin to happen and the story develops very amusing complications.

Mistaken Identity — (TWO REELS) — SEVENTH CHAPTER OF RAILROAD RAIDERS—MAY 21.—Featuring Helen Holmes. Helen Holmes and Webb try to trap the thieves who are stealing luggage from the station. There is a struggle between Helen and the thieves and they fasten her head in the coupler of a car being switched in the yards. Webb rescues her from this position, throwing her and himself flat on the ground, underneath the wheels of the train. They escape unhurt. Helen is sent on the special to the ball which Lord Melbourne is giving. The thieves have heard of a Chinaman who will give $1,000 for a white wife. They locate Helen at the ball seated near a fountain. The lights are turned out and the woman is kidnaped, but proves to be Lady Melbourne. When she faints they pack her in a trunk and put her on a train bound for the city where the Chinaman lives. Helen gets the number of the automobilt as the thieves escape. and this she gives to the police, who send out a call to watch for it.

Flirting With Danger—(TWO REELS)—VOGUE COMEDY—MAY 26.—Featuring Paddy McQuire. This is a corking funny story in which Harry Huckins, as a gay old blade whose young wife is frequently mistaken for his daughter and his daughter introduced by mistake as his wife. John Oaker, a wealthy young man, and Larry Bowes, the owner of a bowling alley, are both in love with Huckins' wife, whom they believe to be his daughter, a situation that develops its own train of singularities and results in a smashing funny climax, the difficulties being nicely smoothed over by our familiar funny friend, Paddy McQuire.

Chubby Inherits a Harem—(TWO REELS)—LA SALLE COMEDY—MAY 21.—Chubby Huggins lives in a quiet village, a bashful, timid fellow, the exact opposite of his chum, Percy, who lets nothing pass him by. Chubby's father had been a missionary, and one day he receives a letter from the Turkish consul, stating that his old friend, Ali Hassan, is about to be executed and is consigning to his care his "little family." Chubby and his sister prepare a welcome for the "little family" with toys and games, and great is their consternation at the sight of twelve beautiful harem girls in charge of a big servant. Percy now makes it interesting, using Sister to aid him in his scheme of eloping with the whole bunch. Zora, the most beautiful, makes love to Chubby, and the scheme falls through. Percy ends by marrying Sister.

Two Crooks and a Knave—No. 10 of the Jimmy Dale Series—MAY 25.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Robbing a safe to get back lost documents from a thief who has robbed his own safe to disarm suspicion in connection with a mining swindle is the job performed by "Jimmy Dale, alias The Gray Seal." The Tocsin sends Jimmy Dale warning of danger that Moriarty and Mittel, underworld harpies, may try to prevent him from receiving the papers, but Jimmie robs the safe, puts the gray seal on it and is away before the police can identify him.

Much Obliged—BLACK CAT FEATURE—ESSANAY—(SCREEN TIME 29 MIN.)—MAY 19.—A burglar, in order to have free rein in robbing the apartment of Wayne Chisholm, a newspaper reporter, sends him an anonymous note directing him to be at a certain corner at midnight, if he seeks adventure. Through this accidental medium, Chisholm meets with the adventure of his life. Hilda Norwood, daughter of a millionaire, had been kidnaped the day previous. As Chisholm arrives at the designated corner a girl's sidecomb falls at his feet. It bears a note from Miss Norwood announcing that she is a prisoner in the building above him, and pleading for aid. After a series of thrilling experiences, including a desperate battle with Hilda's captors, Wayne succeeds in rescuing her and registering not only a scoop for his paper, but her own sweet gratitude. This more than compensated the reporter for what the burglar got.

Sundaying at Fairview—BLACK CAT FEATURE—ESSANAY—(SCREEN TIME 25 MIN.)—MAY 26.—"The Hellion," as Dick Farragut is known to his friends, looks mild enough, but he has an awful punch. It is the unfortunate experience of "The Rat," a cabaret viper, to learn this fact when he attempts to insult a girl before Dick's eyes in the Moline cafe. Farragut is panic-stricken as he sees his victim fall, apparently lifeless, and escapes from the cabaret. He catches the first train out of the city and lands in Fairview on a Sunday. Here Dick seeks to hide, but meets Ruth Small, daughter of the village pastor. She takes him to church, and by his marvelops execution on the pipe organ makes a decided hit. Thus it is, when friends finally discover him and inform him that "The Rat" was not really injured, that Dick refuses to return to the city, but marries Ruth and remains many more Sundays in Fairview.

The Wonderful Event—"Do Children Count" Series—ESSANAY—(SCREEN TIME 26 MINUTES)—Featuring Mary McAlister. Jane Wilson, aged 7, is very anxious to have a baby brother. For days she wonders where the baby supply is located, and finally asks her mother where she, herself, came from. Mrs. Wilson informs Jane she found her on a park bench. Strolling with her nurse in the park later, Jane finds a baby right on a bench and carries it home. The frantic parents of the baby engage the police, who track the baby to Jane's home. They pacify Jane by informing her that the baby is not a boy, anyway, but a girl baby. Jane is heartbroken, but her wish is soon granted, for the story brings another baby to the Wilson home, and this time it is a boy.

Steps to Somewhere—"Do Children Count?" Series—ESSANAY—(SCREEN TIME 27 MINUTES).—Featuring Mary McAlister. Nonie Kayliss is a very much spoiled child. When her father scolds her, her mother takes her part, and vice versa. This treatment teaches Nonie to disregard the orders of both parents. And it brings about a violent scene between Jack and his wife, which results in the former leaving his home. Nonie's grandparents, who are practical old folk, take a hand, and in punishment of the child tie her to a chair. Nonie has a wonderful dream of going up a long flight of stairs and coming to a beautiful room filled with lovely toys and nice, friendly children. They tell her she cannot enter because she is a bad girl. Nonie awakes and is so much impressed by her dream that she resolves to become a good girl. Her first move is to get her father to effect a reconciliation between him and her mother.

Sowers and Reapers—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—MAY 7.—Featuring Emmy Wehlen. Annie Leigh is a factory girl who meets and falls in love with a rich man's son. The rich man wants him to marry an heiress and proceeds to work for that end. Annie and the son are married, but when she is on the verge of starvation and in disgrace because the proofs of her marriage have been destroyed, a motion picture director discovers her. She is a pronounced success and soon becomes famous. She turns the tables on dad and buys up his mortgages, etc. She writes a play which is the story of her life, and appears in this for the benefit of the Red Cross. Her husband and his father see it and the husband realizes that his father has tricked him into a false position. The affair ends happily, after several dark clouds have been dispelled.

Sowers and Reapers—(FIVE REELS)—METRO—MAY 7.—Featuring Emmy Whelen. A wealthy and proud man whose son has married a poor factory girl against his will, determines to break up the marriage, give the girl "her price," and marry the boy to another. The son is imprisoned by his father aboard his yacht, and when he (the son) tries to telegraph to his wife that he will come back, the father changes the telegram to read that all is over between John, the son, and his wife. John is later led to believe his wife dead, but such is not the case. She is alive, suffering her "darkest hour" alone. Later the woman rises to fame and position and has a chance to "get back at" the wealthy man and his son, whom she thinks is also to blame. The father finally confesses his wickedness and John and his wife are reunited. Reviewed in this issue.

Moving—KLEVER KOMEDIES—MAY 21.—Featuring Victor Moore. Vic and his family live in a city flat and the heat becomes intolerable. He decides to move to the country and get cooled off, and he finds an agent who sells you a bungalow, a dollar down and a dollar every once in a while later. The agent shows him a bungalow on a map. "Swept by ocean breezes, no mosquitoes, and a short distance from the station." He rushes home with the map and his wife is so delighted she insists that they move at once. When the furniture is loaded on the van the family all climbs on, to see that nothing is broken, and the start is made. The trip from the flat to the place where they think the house is is full of funny incidents, and Vic resolves that the next time he buys a bungalow, he will look at the house, not the map.

Undying Flame—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY PARAMOUNT — MAY 24. — Starring Madame Olga Petrova. In the ancient days the daughter of a Pharoah is loved by a humble shepherd, but her father forbids her to marry the man of her choice. The shepherd is bidden to die, since he will not give her up. Before he dies he breaks in two a large scarab and gives her half of it, telling her that when the two halves are brought together, in the ages to come, it will portend the reuniting of the lovers' souls. In the second half, Grace Leslie, the daughter of an English army officer, in charge of the garrison at Wady-Halfa, is in love with a young officer named Paget. One day as she leaves the polo grounds she is stopped by a fakir, who sells her a half scarab. Later she is rescued by Paget, when the two meet in a dance hall, where he is in the company of Aicha, a dancing girl. When Paget is on duty one night he receives a note from Aicha telling him that she is dying and asking him to come to her. Grace's father, the general, has decided upon a general inspection of the post that night, and in spite of her efforts to warn him, Paget is found off duty. Rather than be dismissed, Paget chooses to be assigned to a post which is known as White Man's Grave, located in a fever-ridden swamp, where no white man can live any length of time. Aicha sends him a keepsake just as Grace comes to bid him farewell, and it proves to be the other half of the scarab. When the two parts are put together, Grace and Paget read the inscription about the undying love of the mortal souls, and the girl bravely permits him to go, knowing he will return, even from the swamp of death.

The Highway of Hope—(FIVE REELS)—MAY 17.—Starring Kathlyn Williams and House Peters. Lonely Lou, a maid-of-all-work in a mining town saloon, run by Missouri Joe, is an attractive girl, despite her untidy appearance. Missouri Joe is in love with her and is about to be married to her when Steve King, a cowboy on a nearby ranch, takes an interest in the proceedings, and, being intoxicated, thrusts him aside and marries her himself. Steve is really the son of a good Eastern family who has been ordered from his home after a series of escapades. He wakes up from his drunk to find himself discharged from the ranch and with an ill-mated wife. They decide to make the best of things and start with pack mules for the gold country. They stumble on a rich claim, but Steve soon wearies of the silence and ceaseless toil. He prepares a dose of poison which he intends to drink, but is discovered by his wife, who thinks it is for her. She pretends to swallow it and Steve rushes out of their little hovel, falls and breaks a leg. He is cared for by a miner, and after he regains his health he goes from one job to another. One day he wanders back to his claim, finds a prosperous village surrounding the mine. Lou has risen to wealth, purchased suitable clothing and given some thought to her English. Lou is saved from marrying Missouri Joe by the arrival of Steve, and they come to a mutual understanding.

Christie Comedies

The Milky Way—Christie—(One Reel)—May 14.—Margaret, an heiress from another city, is visiting Ethel. Margaret is a hero-worshipper of the author of the moment, Mr. Arling. Ethel's housemaid is to enter the service in the Arling household, and Margaret, seeing her chance to be near her idol, goes as the maid. Ethel's brother, George, who has never seen Margaret, arrives home. Ethel tells him the joke, and he resolves to go as a plumber and win the maid. At Arling's, Margaret has tidied up the novelist's study, which so irritates him that he has her reduced to kitchen-maid and the kitchen-maid, Stella, promoted to her place. The news has gotten out at the club and the unmarried members rush in a body to win the heiress. Neal, as the milkman, is one of the first to arrive. He thinks Margaret a real maid and loses all interest in the rich housemaid. Meanwhile, the men make furious love to the bewildered Stella. George is leading, when Arling hears the news, and he, too, enters the race. Margaret and Neal have really fallen in love as kitchen-maid and milkman. George gets Stella to the church, but Ethel arrives just in time to tell him the truth and save him from a misalliance. Margaret and Neal are just behind and are married.

Dear Sir:-

I should like to tell you that I have been watching Motography closely for the past few months and I find that it is stronger than ever before. You give all the news of the industry in a condensed form so that the busy exhibitor does not have to read too much to know everything that is going on and he also gets the valuable helps needed in running his theatre so as to make the most money. And the news departments are presented in a bright and attractive form so that it is a pleasure to pick up Motography and read it.

Another thing I want to congratulate you on is that Motography has always been a clean paper, doing everything possible to build up the industry in the way it should go and doing everything it could to be of service to its exhibitors and to help them to be better showmen and to make more money.

Yours very truly,

Alfred Hamburger Co

This letter, from a theater man who operates fourteen first class houses, merely speaks a truth that exhibitors throughout the country are coming more and more to realize—that Motography is the cleanest, finest and most useful trade paper for the man "on the firing line."

"Welcome, Wholesome Films"

From Exhibitors Herald, May 12, 1917

olume IV MAY 12, 1917 Number 20

Welcome, "Wholesome Films"

THERE has been born into the motion picture world a company committed to the policy of publishing pictures that are scrupulously clean in theme and in presentation.

It is the Wholesome Film Corporation and its plans contemplate interest only in such productions as will be thoroughly consistent with the name of the company—wholesome productions

The birth of this company can justly be acclaimed a great step forward in promoting the best interest of this business as the purveyor of wholesome, inspiring and educational entertainment for the masses.

The logical future of the motion picture is not to be the purveyor of erudite plays for the sophisticated few, nor morbid dramas for the lovers of sensationalism, but to be the purveyor or the clean, wholesome picture to that vast army of amusement-seekers whose own lives are tempered to the dictates of decency and who will not tolerate moral filth in whatever form it may be presented.

The "Exhibitors Herald" has frequently pronounced its conviction that the risque picture is commercial suicide and that the best interests of the business are entirely away from that type of picture and toward the goal of the wholesome film, depending for success not upon cheap sensationalism or the delinquency of society's unfortunate few but upon the ability of its author, the art of its players and the judgment and capability of its director.

Hence, we welcome the Wholesome Film Corporation as a great, potential force for the advancement of the high ideals of this art-industry.

This clean cut, unqualified endorsement, coming from Exhibitors Herald, proves Wholesome Films have met the crying need in the business of motion pictures.

Wholesome Films mean greatly increased box office receipts. Prepare now for the Wholesome landslide.

War Tax Still Undecided

ACTION ON MEASURE DELAYED—EXHIBITORS' ORGANIZATIONS PROTEST

WITH all eyes turned on Washington and more especially on the Senate Finance Committee, which just at present is considering the greatest tax levy the American people have ever had to face, it is little wonder the motion picture industry is listening with ear to the ground for the first definite word as to what their share of the burden will be.

And according to a statement issued by Senator Simmons a few days ago it is probable that the provisions of the Federal War Tax bill will not be definitely decided upon for a month or more. This senator thinks that the bill cannot possibly come out of committee for at least two weeks yet as every clause and detail is being seriously discussed and considered. Further time will be consumed while the Senate argues over the bill after the committee has made its report and recommendation. After the Senate arrives at a decision it has yet to reach an agreement with the House so that the time for the new tax bill to become a law is still off somewhere in the future.

On this account the motion picture industry will be held in suspense for a much longer time than was expected. Nothing definite is being attempted by the trade pending the outcome of the present legislation. The motion picture committee of exhibitors and manufacturers has already offered its suggestions to the Senate Finance Committee but no word as to the recommendation or decision of the latter will be known until they make their report before the Senate.

Wisconsin Exhibitors Protest

Asserting that the proposed war tax of 10 per cent on the gross receipts of motion picture theaters would drive the majority of the houses here out of business, Milwaukee members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at a meeting in the Wisconsin Hotel decided to call a State convention to consider the question on May 31 and June 1.

The imposition of the tax would be oppressive, it was declared. Because of the heavy overhead cost of producing and exhibiting the pictures, a considerable percentage of moving picture houses in this city and state are not now making both ends meet.

The exhibitors declared they are willing to stand a tax of 10 or 15 per cent on the net receipts, but, they take the stand they should not be compelled to pay a special tax on a losing business.

Protest against the proposed assessment will be sent to the Wisconsin members of Congress, to whom it will be represented that the exhibitors are willing to pay any just tax that may be devised.

Carolina Exhibitors Protest

In their appeal to the Senate Finance Committee, the Carolina Exhibitors made the following plea and presentation of their case:

We represent the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of North and South Carolina, the owners or operators of nearly three hundred and fifty moving picture houses. Most of these are small houses, located in small towns and the average seating capacities will not exceed three hundred seats. Our admission charges rarely exceed fifteen cents—in a few instances, where special films are displayed, as much as twenty to twenty-five cents, but in the main our regular prices are five cents for children all day—five cents for afternoon performances for adults, and ten cents for adult evening admission.

Our houses are limited as to patronage because of the strictly local relation, and yet competition is such as to demand the display of the best service; hence our expense for films is in the highest ratio of cost to capacity. In our entire field there is not one single operator who has been more than ordinarily successful—naturally when the capacity of a house cannot exceed fifty dollars a day gross admissions—six days in the week—where excessive summer heat cuts the year to an average not to exceed forty weeks and where the Race Line so complicates the problem of marshaling an audience, the profit at best cannot be large, and on a basis of investment the most successful house merely returns good interest on the money.

The payment of one cent on a ticket in accordance with the terms of the House bill becomes an immediate physical impossibility. Stamping 200 to 300 tickets within twenty minutes and making change in pennies in the same period can only be accomplished by the employment of a stamping-clerk, who, like our present cashiers, would have to be on duty twelve hours a day at twelve hours' pay, in order to render less than an hours' actual service. The other side of the argument, granting that the government would issue tickets, including stamps, reduces the physical problem to "change making," but you must bear in mind that fully half of your patrons come in because the price is "only a nickel," or "only a dime," and they would not "change a coin" in order to "go to the show," which they would have to do if we asked them to pay the tax and which we cannot afford to assume for ourselves.

For instance: the writers are part proprietors of the Piedmont Amusement Company, operating nine houses in Winston-Salem, Greensboro, High Point, Charlotte, Thomasville, Durham, Lexington, North Carolina, and Danville and Lynchburg, Viriginia. In 1916 we lost $26,000.00. This was an operating loss; and had we paid a tax of 10 per cent on admission as here proposed, before earning it, our loss would have been $12,000.00 additional, or $38,000.00 in all.

This was due to the general poor business in our section, coupled with standard expenses, which could not be reduced. The return of prosperity put all of these houses on an earning basis and we are now earning very decent profits, out of which we are paying the indebtedness incurred during the season of loss. To tax us 10 per cent of our gross admissions—our only source of revenue—might be tolerable during six months of the year in 50 per cent of the houses, but impossible for the balance of the time for the best of them, and absolutely impossible in the balance of the houses, which by this process would pay taxes out of our capital.

The twenty-five cent houses or fifty cent houses with a seating capacity of 1,000 to 3,000 might be able to carry this burden, but even in their case it would be fair to tax their profits after they have earned them.

We recognize, under the extraordinary conditions now facing the country, we must contribute a larger sum in taxes for the uses of the government than at present—and we are willing and ready to do so, but we ask co-operation in the same measure that we offer it. A tax upon our net profits would be fair, just, equitable and sane. Give us the opportunity to make the money before you take it away. Take as much as you need of this—a fair proposition, but do not throw our investment into the "scrap-heap"; do not destroy our livelihood; help us keep it intact until normal times will re-establish normal opportunities for us.

A tax of 10 per cent of the net earnings of our theaters would be enough to start with; if it isn't, come back for more in your next bill, but bear in mind that if you start by taxing us to death, there won't be "any more" to come back for.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION SOON

Grand Rapids to Be Mecca for Michigan Exhibitors This June—Necessity of Collective Consideration Promises Record Attendance

The prospects for the Michigan State Convention of Exhibitors, to be held this year on the 12th and 13th of June, are the best they have ever been, according to a statement issued recently by A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Michigan branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

"It looks now," said Mr. Moeller, "as though the Michigan exhibitors have at last awakened to the fact that organization is not only a possibility but a necessity. It is gratifyng to note from the flood of letters I am receving from all parts of the state the assurances that the exhibitors not only expect to attend but to take an active part in the proceedings. The feeling of 'get together and talk it over' seems to pervade the state.

"I am more than pleased at this display of renewed energy and initiative in an organization that has been tottering along on rickety legs now for too long a time. In view of the strenuous period through which we have passed, every exhibitor in the state of Michigan should put all his energy back of the organization. Many things are at stake and in many cases entire businesses. And only through concerted action can any satisfactory and definite conclusion be arrived at. Only by getting together and discussing the vital issues can we arrive at a definite solution.

"You know yourself that when your business is not up to standard you start looking around for the cause. You give your business machinery an overhauling. You go into all angles, you put your whole mind into the thing and finally you solve the difficulty.

"That's just what we have got to do. Only this is not a problem that we can solve individually and each man for himself. If it can be solved at all it will have to be done collectively.

"Petty jealousies must be laid aside. We have business interests to protect and unjust issues to combat. We must make a supreme effort to make the Grand Rapids convention a huge success, and it will be, too."

Uncle Sam at Sea

The Selig Polyscope Company believes that the Selig production, "Uncle Sam Afloat and Ashore," the forthcoming release in General Film Service, is worthy of especial notice. The film shows United States soldiers and sailors at work and at play. The battship fleet, a portion of which is now reported fighting in European waters, is presented in battle line formation in this production.

The jackies are shown working the big guns, drilling, and performing other duties. A division of the Regular Army has been ordered to France. General Pershing and his soldiers are presented in this film. The Infantry are shown in army maneuvers and on the long, dusty hike. "Uncle Sam Afloat and Ashore" is said to be particularly interesting to the parents of the thousand of young men who will soon become soldiers of Uncle Sam. The pictures show the life of the soldier and sailor and proves that the army and navy are schools for the making of men.

Kitty Gordon is putting the finishing touches upon her new World-Picture "The Beloved Adventuress," which is literally Brady-Made, inasmuch as William A. Brady actually directed most of the details, great and small. There are an unusual number of "big scenes" in this play, and it also affords many opportunities for emotional acting, in which Miss Gordon has developed uncommon skill in her recent picture dramas.

"I ASK every woman as she comes out how she liked the show and chuck every baby under the chin," said a small town exhibitor to Motog. a few days ago.

We did some inquiring about him around the exchange where we met him and found, not to our surprise, that he owns very prosperous houses in five Illinois towns.

It's only another example of the fact that personal attention is the letter A in the A. B. C.'s of any business success.

The Valentine Girl, with Marguerite Clark (Famous Players-Paramount)—"An excellent production which played to excellent business."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

The Valentine Girl, with Marguerite Clark (Paramount)—"A very good picture which drew fair business in spite of bad weather."—Martin J. Saxe, Knickerbocker Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

The Bottle Imp, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"A fair picture which brought fair business."—B. A. Nomikos, De Luxe Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

The Bottle Imp, with Sessue Hayakawa (Paramount)—"This star is very unpopular here. Patrons took the trouble to complain on this picture. It might go well in Tokio or the Hawaiian Islands."—J. E. Alford, Jacobs Theater, McComb, Mississippi.

As Men Love, with Myrtle Stedman (Paramount)—"We ran this on Saturday. It went over big. Everyone liked it; I even liked it myself."—J. E. Alford, Jacobs Theater, McComb, Mississippi.

The Witching Hour, with J. Aubrey Smith (Art Dramas)—"Full of intense action and realism. Star and support very good. Better entertainment than the stage version. Photography averages good. Good stuff for any audience."—George V. Booth, Bridgeport Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Witching Hour, with J. Aubrey Smith (Art Dramas)—"This deals with telepathy, but the title gives a transient patron a different idea of its story. It did not prove a money maker. The cast has no big star."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Great Bradley Mystery, with Alma Hanlon (Art Dramas)—"The star is very good. Brought pretty fair business considering the bad weather."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Moral Courage, with Muriel Ostriche (World)—"Story fair. The star is not strong enough to draw. Picture was run on our first warm day. Business fair."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation (Vitagraph)—"During wartime this picture, although praised by the critics, was not praised by the audience. This is because it shows too many battle scenes, with people being killed, scenes which at this time do not appeal to the people, especially not to women and children. The picture itself is nothing to scream about, although it is a fair sermon. It ought to be shown to the Kaiser! We ran it two days with fair results."—Edward Trinz, West End Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Happiness, with Enid Bennett (Triangle)—"A very good picture."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Villa of the Movies, with S. Summerville (Keystone)—"Best burlesque on the Mexican muddle ever made. Went over big."—Robert Sparks, Mission Theater, Amarillo Texas.—In high class neighborhood.

Those Without Sin, with Blanche Sweet (Lasky-Paramount)—"A splendid Civil War production. Star does fine work in the last two reels."—Robert Sparks, Mission Theater, Amarillo, Texas.—In high class neighborhood.

Indiscretion, with Lillian Walker (Vitagraph)—"Everyone was well pleased with this one, but the star doesn't draw very well."—Robert Sparks, Mission Theater, Amarillo, Texas.—In high class neighborhood.

Back of the Man, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"A splendid story with a corking finish. Drew big against strong opposition."—Robert Sparks, Mission Theater, Amarillo, Texas.—In high class neighborhood.

Marvelous Maciste (Itala Films)—"The picture is wonderful. One of the best comedy dramas we've ever had. Maciste is a coming star. Business was big and the audience was pleased."—James Poro, Casino Theater, Astoria, L. I., New York.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Soul of a Child, with Em Gorman (Eclipse Feature Film Co.)—"A very good picture. Ran two days

The Hawk, with Earl Williams (Vitagraph)—"This broke all house records."—S. P. Skourey, Pagent Theater, St. Louis, Missouri.—In his class neighborhood.

Souls Triumphant, with Lillian Gish and Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—"A good production. Good business."—S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

The Lonesome Chap, with House Peters (Paramount)—"A very ordinary production. Business poor." S. Trinz, Covent Garden Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

The Girl Phillipa, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"This feature is some attraction. They don't make them much better. Acting, photography, direction and production are excellent, with much stress to be laid on detail, locale and the scenes of mobilization."—Manager Jones, Isis Theater, Pensacola, Florida.

The Power of Decision, with Frances Nelson (Metro)—"Not enough action. Star is not very popular. The title will attract. Average business."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Sin Ye Do, with Frank Keenan (Triangle)—"Great drawing card. Pleased our patrons."—Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

The Cure, with Charlie Chaplin (Mutual)—"A good comedy but not Chaplin's best. Played to capacity business."—Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

Dulcie's Adventure, with Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual)—"Very pleasing. Mary Miles Minter at her best."—Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

The Matrimanic, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"Fairbanks gets them. A good comedy, no slapstick."—Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

The Devil's Prize, and A Price for Folly (Vitagraph)—"I do not consider either one of these two features up to the Vitagraph standard of excellence. Patrons were disappointed."—W. A. Peterson, Scenic Theater, Mt. Vernon, South Dakota.

The Girl Phillipa, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"A fine picture. Drew well and pleased the patrons."—P. C. Estee, Star Theater, Alexandria, South Dakota.

Faith, with Mary Miles Minter (Mutual)—"Mary Miles Minter is one sweet little girl. 'Faith' is a remarkable picture. There seems to be little, if anything, lacking. The world is general and the silent drama in particular would be immensely benefited by the production of more of the same kind."—H. W. Barnes, Forum-Orpheum Theater, Hillsboro, Ohio.

The Railroad Raiders, with Helen Holmes (Signal-Mutual serial)—"This serial opened well, more than filling the house and sending people away pleased."—P. G. Estee, Star Theater, Alexandria, South Dakota.

The More Excellent Way, with Anita Stewart (Vitagraph)—"Miss Stewart seems to draw better all the time. This was well liked by the patrons and brought good business both days."—B. A. Nomikos, De Luxe Theater.—In high class neighborhod.

God's Law and Man's, with Viola Dana (Metro)—"A well produced picture but it did not draw very good business."—B. A. Nomikos, De Luxe Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

The Spirit of Romance, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"The public does not seem to care for pictures like this. Only a fair drawing card."—B. A. Nomikos, De Luxe Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

My Fighting Gentleman, with William Russell (Mutual)—"This picture is what I and my patrons call 'one fine picture.' All of the new Mutuals are very good, but this is an exceptionally good one."—H. Hoffman, Lyric Theater, Moline, Illinois.

Motoy Comedies (Motoy)—"These comedies worked out with animated toys are very novel and should please any audience."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Sunny Jane, with Jackie Saunders (Mutual)—"I always give credit where credit is due and will say 'Sunny Jane' is a real comedy drama, a good, clean, funny picture, as full of laughs as a prairie dog is full of fleas."—John C. Green, Temple Theater, Galt, Ontario, Canada.

A Lass of the Lumberlands, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"I ran the first episode of 'A Lass of the Lumberlands' last night and it was fine, had a packed house and every one was well pleased."—H. J. Walrad, Moran, Kansas.

Sacrifice, with Margaret Illington (Lasky-Paramount)—"This first Illington picture is drawing fair attendance but the people are not very enthusiastic about it. For one thing, this scenery is too artificial. One would expect better and more elaborate settings for the first picture appearance of so well known a player."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Paddy O'Hara, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"Very good. The star plays his part exceedingly well. It is a comedy drama. The patrons thought it a strictly military picture on seeing the one-sheet, but it is a little of everything."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Mystery of the Double Cross, Chapter two (Pathe serial)—"Nothing very great about the second part in the way of exciting events but the interest is kept very much alive by good production and acting. They are eager for the third chapter. Photography, stars, settings and direction, perfect."—George V. Booth, Bridgeport Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Our Navy (Zenith)—"These are pictures showing scenes at the Great Lakes Naval training station and proved very popular. A great many people who had relatives and friends at the station visited the theater to see these pictures."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

The Butcher Boy, with Roscoe Arbuckle (Paramount)—"A clean comedy which the women like on account of Fatty's female disguise in the second reel. A fill-in comedy but not a box office attraction."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Aladdin From Broadway, with Edith Story (Vitagraph)—"A costume play. Why do producers make them? I have not talked to any one yet who liked them, no matter what star is in them."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Uncle Sam's Defender's (Mutual)—"These in my estimation are the best reels on patriotism that I have ever seen. I have run all six of them and wish there were more of them. They brought forth many rounds of applause."—H. B. French, The Grand, Mankato, Minnesota.

Be My Best Man, with Edward Arnold (Essanay "Black Cat" Feature)—"An unusual detective story, which keeps them guessing. Went over fine. The ending is a surprise for everybody. Cast very good. Photography and settings perfect."—George V. Booth, Bridgeport Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

In Again, Out Again, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"I cannot help but say how pleased I was with Douglas Fairbanks' first picture, 'In Again, Out Again.' The huge crowds that tried to get into the theater and couldn't, the great enthusiasm of those who were in the theater, made it not alone an event to be long remembered but it created new moving picture history. Never in my career have throngs, who persistently waited in line four and five deep for fully two blocks that I had to call out reserves to keep the crowd in line, shown such patience and determination to get in as they did during the engagement of this picture. We did well over $17,000 with it, and had our house been twice as large we doubt if we could have taken care of them. Our anniversary bill has been acclaimed the finest moving picture bill that was ever given in any moving picture house in the world, and when I say that Fairbanks' picture, 'In Again, Out Again,' is fit for this house, I think it is sufficient."—S. L. Rothapfel, Rialto Theater, New York City.

Files Exhibitor Reports

Motography, Chicago:

Permit me to congratulate you upon your pages devoted to the department, "What the Picture Did For Me." They surely afford exhibitors an opportunity to profit by the mistakes or the good fortune of fellow-managers. It surely is more conservative information regarding the drawing power of features than a "feature-buyer" can procure from a naturally enthusiastic salesman selling his wares. I file these opinions for future reference. Trusting that more exhibitors will, through this commendable medium, spread the news to each other, I am respectfully yours, *F. F. Industry Aids Liberty Loan

PICTURE INTERESTS TO ABSORB $1,000,000 OF UNCLE SAM'S BONDS

REPRESENTATIVES of the motion picture industry met last week to aid in the floating of the United States Liberty Loan Bonds. William A. Brady was appointed by the assembly, sitting as a committee of the whole, to act as their chairman with power to appoint a committee of fifteen or more to devise plans and means for giving the loan publicity.

The meeting was called at the request of Robert W. Wooley, formerly director of the Mint and at present in charge of the publicity of the loan. Following Mr. Brady's election as chairman, he asked for a motion giving him power to appoint an Honorary National Committee. This was immediately granted. He laid particular emphasis upon the fact that it was of the greatest importance for the whole industry to feel its responsibility at this time and to aid the government in every way possible to give the Liberty Loan publicity. Mr. Brady declared it was the first time in history that the trade had an opportunity to become a great national institution on the same basis with the newspapers, and it was up to them to make the most of it.

It was made clear at this meeting that the publicity offered was not merely in the hands of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, but was a matter in which those out of it as well as those in it were equally concerned.

Lasky Corporation Takes $100,000

In order to set a good example to the trade and show folks how much water the film industry draws The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just subscribed to $100,000 worth of the bonds. The bonds are to be subscribed for through the Broadway Trust Company, the president of which is Fredrick G. Lee, who is also a director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and has been ever since its inception.

Adolph Zukor, head of the film concern, has been made chairman of the National Association committee to promote subscriptions to the Liberty Loan within the industry itself. It is the aim of this committee to raise at least $1,000,000 for the loan among producers, exchangemen and those in the various branches of the industry.

Committee Members Chosen

Mr. Brady's committee is as follows:

Walter W. Irwin, vice chairman; William L. Sherrill, treasurer; Frederick H. Elliott, secretary.

Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky; Walter N. Seligsburg, Triangle Film Corp.; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corp.; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph V. L. S. E., Inc.; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement; David W. Griffith, D. W. Griffith Entrprises; Harold Bolster, General Film Co.; E. A. McManus, International Film Corp.; J. T. Berst, Pathe Exchange; P. A. Shullberg, Associated Motion Picture Advertisers; Fred Hawley, Motion Pictures Directory Co.; I. E. Chadwick, Ivan Film Corp.; Carl Laemmle, Universal; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky; J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph Co. of America; Frank H. Hitchcock, Vitagraph Co. of America; H. T. Edward, United Theatrical Equipment Co.; H. E. Aitken, Triangle Film Corp.; J. J. McCarthy, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; Theodore Mitchell, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; William Brandt, Brooklyn Exhibitors; Sam L. Rothapfel, Rialto Theater; H. Edel, Strand Theater; Marcus Loew, Theodore Wharton, Inc., Herbert Brennon; A. M. Du Mahut; Ricord Gradwell, World Film Corporation; William Wright, Kalem Co.; Mitchel H. Mark, Strand Theater; Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph Co. of America; John J. Whitman, El Dodaro Theater; Edgar Selwyn, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Archie Selwyn, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Joseph A. Golden, Crystal Film Corporation.

Trailers and Slides

The new motion picture committee met for the first time on Thursday at the headquarters of the National Association of the trade. Owing to the short time left in which to give publicity to the loan, the idea of making a one-reel film devoted to the cause has practically been abandoned, but trailers and slides will immediately be sent to every film house in the country. It is planned to send with each consignment of publicity matter a letter requesting the use of the slides signed by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and also a personal note from Mr. Brady as president of the National Association. It is proposed to have throughout the country a Loan Week, one day of which will be devoted to the film interests, when subscription blanks will be distributed in every theater.

Sub-Committees Appointed

Thursday's meeting was chiefly taken up with the selection of sub-committees, which are:

Finance Committee—Arthur S. Friend, chairman; William L. Sherrill, J. E. Brulateur, R. H. Cochrane, E. A. McManus.

Publicity Committee—Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Arthur James, president and chairman. Representatives of each of the motion picture trade papers.

Committee on Trailers—Walter W. Irwin, chairman; P. A. Powers, B. N. Busch, Lee A. Ochs, Lewis J. Selznick.

Committee on Securing Subscriptions to Liberty Loan—Adolph Zukor, Lee A. Ochs, N. T. Edwards, Lewis J. Selznick, Walter J. Moore.

Committee on Slides—Joseph F. Coufal, Fred J. Hawley, and B. F. Shulberg.

President's Advisory Committee—William L. Sherril, I. E. Chadwick, Arthur S. Friend, Louis F. Blumenthal, William A. Johnston.

Committee on Proclamation—Arthur S. Friend, William A. Johnston.

These committees were instructed by Mr. Brady immediately to start work.

The Pathe Company's aid to the loan is seen in the fact that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, has offered to receive subscriptions for the bonds from employes, giving each subscriber the privilege of paying for them at the rate of $5 per month for each $50 of the purchase price.

George Archainbaud has "signed up" with World-Pictures Brady-Made to direct a new series of photoplays. He has just completed "The Brand of Satan," in which Montagu Love makes his first appearance as a star, to be published June 18. Mr. Archainbaud's next World picture will be "Partnership," in which Arthur Ashley, Gerda Holmes and Edward Langford have the leading roles.

New Motography Men

Two additions have been made to MOTOGRAPHY's staff. C. J. Ver Halen has been put in charge of advertising and L. M. Albright has been added to the editorial department. Charles R. Condon continues as eastern representative of the magazine.

C. J. Ver Halen, experienced film and advertising man, who has been appointed MOTOGRAPHY'S advertising manager.

Through his various connections with the film industry, Mr. Ver Halen is well known as one of the most active young men in the business. He was for a number of years Chicago representative for the Billboard. He also opened the Chicago office of the Motion Picture News and was for two years connected with that publication. Among his other activities were connections with the publicity department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and director of publicity with Harry R. Raver. Before joining MOTOGRAPHY Mr. Ver Halen was asistant manager of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service of Minneapolis and editor of Brass Tacks, the striking little Paramount organ of the northwest.

Mr. Ver Halen was an organizer of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago and is well known by practically every film man in the Zephyrous Village.

Mr. Albright, who is now one of MOTOGRAPHY's reporters and rewrite men, is a graduate of Northwestern University and was formerly a reporter on the Chicago Herald and assistant advertising manager of the Cable Piano Company.

GENERAL FILM'S RECORD

Nearly Five Hundred Million Feet of Product Handled Within Six Years and Statistics that Bring Those Figures Home

At a recent directors' meeting of the General Film Company, Harold Bolster, vice president and general manager, presented a summary of the operations of the company which graphically expresses the wide scope of this film marketing company. Since its incorporation General Film had received from various manufacturers affiliated with it a total of 494,614,976 feet of positive film for distribution. This was for six years ending December 31, 1916. The 1917 product is not included. The figures show General Film to be the world's most extensive dealer in film product.

The object of the discussion of the figures was to plan for future efficiency in handling the huge bulk of film that is expected again to pass through the selling machinery of the company. The great number of short length features now being distributed by General Film is to be greatly augmented, to bring the business up to its former highest records. Handling vast quantities permits of net economies of immense proportions when applied to each separate transaction. Plans were laid to adopt the most modern methods to avoid preventable waste of product and delays in service. To direct the machinery of the big enterprise along the most efficient lines is Mr. Bolster's particular task.

Incidentally, some astonishing comparisons are available with the mere bulk of General Film's record of business to build upon.

For example, the nearly 500 million feet of film handled from the manufacturers since and including 1910, represent a screen time, to run the film just once, of 140,000 hours—each foot requiring a second.

The 494,614,976 feet of film represent in round numbers 500,000 reels. Each reel of film weighs about 5 pounds—over 1,200 tons altogether. Reduced to this term the quantity does not sound so great, but its immensity can be got at in other ways. Each reel in its tin container has a thickness of two inches. When piled one on top of the other they would make a stack 82,436 feet high, 110 times the height of the Woolworth tower—or if one chooses to pile them another way, 110 stacks as high as the tallest skyscraper in New York.

The length of film, end to end, also presents staggering proportions. It could be wound nearly four times around the earth. It is 26 times as long as the River Amazon, with perhaps the River of Doubt thrown in.

In conclusion, if all men were 6 feet tall it would take 82,435,829 of them laid end to end to equal the length of General Film's total product—a bigger army than even Germany would want under any circumstances.

STATE RIGHTS MEN MERGE

Sol L. Lesser, Prominent Western Independent Exchange Man, Promoting Big Combine of Exchanges—Final Plans Come Later

Word has just come to hand that a big national organization of the leading exchange men of the United States is being promoted by Sol L. Lesser of San Francisco.

Mr. Lesser announces that the organization has been perfecting its plans for many weeks, and that the final plans are practically complete, there being but few remaining details to be consummated. The organization will consist of big representative buyers from all portions of the country, a list of same to be announced at an early date.

Thousands of dollars have already been pledged by the various members of the new organization. Investigation shows that it will also carry with it groups of leading theaters in the various territories, that are also already pledged to the organization. Although definite details will not be announced until a later date, it is understood that the plan of operation will be the purchase of big feature productions for the United States, fixing a definite percentage of the cost on each territory, which will be assessed to the individual theaters that are pledged to the combination.

From all information that can be gleaned at the present time, it will be safe to say, that, backed by Mr. Lesser's reputation and his enterprising genius, this organization promises to be the biggest of its kind operating in the country.

The New Orleans office of the General Film Company is now under the management of A. S. Parker, according to an announcement by General Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent. He succeeds F. E. Garner, who has been transferred to the Dallas office. Mr. Parker was formerly office manager at Memphis.

The Neighborhood Idea

AN INTERVIEW WITH BRUCE GODSHAW, COSMOPOLITAN THEATER, CHICAGO

By Genevieve Harris.

THERE is an eternal fascination in doing something which apparently "can't be done." It is a challenge to adventure in any field. To Bruce Godshaw, a prominent Chicago exhibitor, now manager of the Cosmopolitan Theater, one of the Ascher string of picture houses, this challenge takes the form of a theater which can't be managed profitably. That is the kind of house which interests him. To it he gives all his attention, until the thing that "can't be done" is accomplished and the theater that was losing money becomes under his magic a money-maker.

Mr. Godshaw's methods with children's programs have already been set forth in Motography. His most recent and most ambitious "stunt," the filming of a picture containing the children of the neighborhood, had attracted the writer's attention and, in search of a story, she visited the Cosmopolitan Theater. As a result of the interview, the account of one "stunt," however original, seemed less important than the glimpse of the "big idea" back of everything Mr. Godsaw does.

Seven Years of Success

Mr. Godshaw's success as a theater manager is founded on "the neighborhood idea." For seven years Mr. Godshaw has been working out this idea as a Chicago exhibitor. Seven years ago he came to Chicago with scarcely money enough to pay street car fare across town, and secured a position managing a West Side theater owned by the Ascher Brothers, a house considered hopeless and about to be abandoned as a picture proposition. Under his guidance, the fortunes of the theater took an upward turn. It became so prosperous that Mr. Godshaw turned his attention to "booming" another failing theater. When that was built up, he turned always to the weakest of the string.

"I believe that the success I have had is a result of winning the confidence of the people," says Mr. Godshaw. "Speaking from my own experience, the first bit of advice I would give to a theater manager, especially of a neighborhood or small town theater, is, 'Study your people. Be in the lobby of your theater as much as possible, and know your patrons personally. Listen to their comments. Get their ideas on the pictures, the music and the theater.'

"The only way to run a theater successfully is to spend all your time and energy and enthusiasm on it. Oh, of course there are houses that will almost run themselves, but I could never be interested in one like that. It is the theater with a handicap that appeals to the real exhibitor.

"And right here I have something to say to the theater owner in the small town. If managing the picture theater is a 'side line' with you and your main interest is in your grocery store or other business, then hire some young chap as your house manager. Get a young man who is of the friendly, wideawake kind. He will attend to all the details about the theater, little things you overlook, ways to please your patrons, to overcome conditions they dislike, to think up 'stunts' and advertising schemes.

Managing Is a Matter of Personality

"I believe that managing a theater successfully is a matter of personality. If your theater is fine and well ventilated, your pictures and music good, and still your patronage not what it should be, perhaps you yourself are to blame. Are you a friend of your papatrons? Do they like you? Do they feel free to talk to you about your offerings? Do they feel that you are trying to give them their money's worth, to please them? Do the children and the young people know and like you? Are your own employes loyal? The picture theater is becoming so intimately a part of the neighborhood life that all these are vital questions.

"Besides pleasing the people when they come to your house, there is the question of getting them to come—a question of advertising. And this is one way, in which your effort is to enlarge your 'neighborhood.' I have always believed in advertising widely. The money always comes back. You can figure up the number of increased admissions you will need to pay for it and you will find that you usually get them. And many of these mean new regular patrons for your house, and wider publicity. We advertise the Cosmopolitan Theater in the daily papers and in the neighborhood papers, as well as by circulars and a large mailing list. Then we give special attention to the wording of our programs.

Honest Advertising

"This is another point at which the 'neighborhood idea' comes in. You must know what kind of pictures your patrons like so that you can recommend the ones sure to please. There is no value in using superlatives about each attraction. Pick out the one you know they will like best. Give them as much definite information about the picture as you can.

"When I have to run a picture that I know will not appeal, I turn my attention to the other features of the bill. I select unusually attractive short length additions. I state frankly in my program that the bill is pleasing because of these short length pictures. Another method I sometimes use when I am scheduled for a feature which will not draw is to run with it, in place of the short subjects I book, some re-issued feature that I have not formerly run and which contains stars especially well liked in my neighborhood. The expense is not greatly increased and is usually met by the increased attendance.

Win Confidence of Patrons

"My patrons have come to rely on my statements in the programs so confidently that when I tell them a feature is unusually good and that everyone should see it, the house is packed. With the usual recommendations, the usual business results.

"We take the children into consideration in writing the programs. As you know, we give special matinees for children and this lessens their attendance in the evening. Also, we frequently refuse to admit children unless with adults to plays which the censors have not labeled a 'no children admitted' play. We state in the program that we do not believe the play suitable for children and that parents may use their own judgment in bringing them. And when a play is very sensational, we sound a note of warning to this effect in our program. In this way, those who might be offended can avoid the play and those who want sensational pictures will find what they like. We also include in our programs any unusual stories about production or players, anything to interest the people. Some of them may not read these, but many do.

"In short, managing a theater successfully is a matter of personality, of personal contact with your patrons. Be the center of your neighborhood, the friend of your neighbors."

Mr. Godshaw just at present has his neighborhood very much interested in the making of a picture with "local talent." An account of this clever entertainment as well as advertising stunt will be given soon in MOTOGRAPHY.

NEW CHICAGO FIRM

Originator of Prison "Honor System" Forms New Chicago Film Corporation—Plans New Theater in "Loop" District

An announcement of big interest to the trade comes from the recently formed Edmund M. Allen Film Corporation of Chicago.

It is disclosed that plans and specifications for a theater seating 2,800, to be used exclusively for motion pictures, have been prepared for the new company. The new theater is to be located in Chicago's "loop" district, and is to be immediately adjacent to the Randolph street "Rialto" zone.

The Allen Company, which was formed both for state right exploitation of features and for exhibition purposes, states that it already has obtained an option for a long term ground lease on a very desirable location, and plans commencing work on the new theater building as soon as general business conditions permit.

The president of the new company is Edmund M. Allen, well-known Chicago business man and former warden of the Illinois state penitentiary. Mr. Allen is credited with being the originator of the "Honor System" for the care and discipline of convicts in penal institutions.

Associated with Mr. Allen are Joe M. Harris, a prominent figure in theatrical activities both in New York and Chicago; Harry J. Ridings, Chicago manager for Cohan and Harris, and manager of Cohan's Grand, Chicago; Fred Aitken, formerly connected with the General Film Company and others. It is stated that the Allen company represents a number of men connected with big Chicago business enterprises, who have determined upon becoming identified with the film industry.

In connection with its state right activities the Allen company has taken over Illinois and Michigan rights for Selig's "The Garden of Allah." The company plans releasing this production in the near future and, immediately following, announcement will be made of another feature based on a big dramatic success.

The temporary executive offices of the Allen company are located at 121 N. Clark street, Chicago.

The Universal Joker company is making a one-act comedy, "A Sleuthy Pair," featuring Gale Henry.

Charlie Gets Rough with Kaiser

La Baionnette, a French magazine, of March 22, devotes all its pages to a series of facetious interviews which Charlie Chaplin is supposed to have had with the manager of a big canning factory, the captain of a submarine, and the Kaiser.

The front cover carries a three color caricature of Charlie as correspondent of war—and the pages are profusely illustrated showing enthroned Charlot and the adventures of Charlot as an interviewer.

In his interview with Wilhelm, the emperor objects to the way in which Charlot wears his mustache. He says the ends should turn up and not down, and taking off his own presents it to Charlot. He further decorates Charlot with his helmet. There appears a two page portrait of Charlie adorned with Wilhelm's mustache and Wilhelm's helmet, and an immense mallet in place of his usual cane.

The emperor then becomes playful and offers his crown to Charlot for a plaything but Charlie grows rough in his frolic with Wilhelm and ends by placing the crown on the Kaiser's head, wrong side up, and with his immense mallet pounds the spike down into the head of Guillaume Empereur D'Allemange.

Summer Bluebirds Ready

Nobody around Bluebird is worrying about features—there are enough made and ready for distribution to last until the new season begins. Meanwhile Bluebird directors are working on future releases, going at a leisurely pace to make sure that in all particulars the standard of excellence Bluebird requires is fully maintained.

Here are the Bluebirds for June and three issues in July: "Bringing Home Father," with Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, June 4; Miss Phillips, in "A Doll's House," June 11; Ella Hall, in "The Little Orphan," June 18; Rupert Julian and Ruth Clifford, in "A Kentucky Cinderella," June 25; Miss Phillips, in "Fires of Rebellion," July 2; Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, in "The Car of Chance," July 9, and Lynn F. Reynolds' production of Chas. Wilson, Jr.'s story, "The Code of the Klondyke," July 16. This last mentioned feature was made at Truckee, amid the peaks of the Sierras, last winter.

Century Comedies

Following the announcement of a different title for the Alice Howell comedies, Julius Stern has decided to affix a different trade-mark to the product and has decided to adopt Century Comedies as the permanent name of the series. In all Century plays the star will be Alice Howell, a young lady who has established an enviable reputation for her work as a screen comedienne in several season's past.

"Balloonatics," the first Century offering, was shown at the New York Strand on pre-release, an immediate recognition of Miss Howell as a lone-star as well as establishing Century productions in the best field of exhibition.

New Sherman-Elliott Officials

A change in the officials of the Sherman-Elliott Company of Minneapolis, has been announced. Edward Nelson was elected president to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of H. A. Sherman. F. H. Peterson was made secretary-treasurer in place of John Elliott, secretary, and Edward Nelson, treasurer, who, upon his appointment as president, resigned his old position. The offices of the company are in the McKnight Building, Minneapolis.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

From $25 a Week to $568 for One Day

BY A. R. M. SUTTON.
Special Representative for MOTOGRAPHY.

R. K. DUNHAM has in his office at the Rex Theater, Mt. Vernon, Washington, many queer souvenirs of interesting events in which he took part when deputy sheriff of his county, but the tales he tells of those "wild and woolly" days are no more interesting than those with which he occasionally favors particular film friends about the beginning of his career as a pioneer exhibitor in his county.

It was back in 1910 that it came to a showdown between the sheriff and deputy sheriff, and it became very evident that one of them must get out. As Mr. Dunham had for some time had a "hankering" to try the motion picture business, then little known in that vicinity, he decided that this was a good time to begin; so he bought an old saloon in Mt. Vernon, had the bar removed and the front remodeled. Then he went up to Seattle to see about furnishings and equipment.

First he bought 250 plain folding chairs and ordered them shipped to Mt. Vernon. Then he went around to the old General Film Company's office to see about a projector and film service. A. T. Lambson, who died recently in Seattle, was then manager of the General office. The question of films was soon settled at a rental of $35.00 a week; then they began discussing machines.

"What kind of current have you got down there in Mt. Vernon, alternating or direct?" asked Mr. Lambson.

"I don't know," answered the would-be exhibitor. "What's the difference between them?"

After that the manager of General concluded that his Mt. Vernon customer needed someone on the spot who knew something about running a picture theater, so he went down and opened the newly christened "Rex" for its owner. That was on the night of June 30, 1910.

Mr. Dunham was not long in learning the difference between direct and alternating current, nor any of the finer points of running a motion picture projector, and he soon taught it to his older son; so, while he attended to the business part of operating the theater, his son looked after the mechanical part, and Mrs. Dunham sold the tickets. With such a family combination they managed to clear enough that first year to encourage the "business manager" to add space for one hundred more seats to the Rex, and various other improvements were made.

Business continued to improve until the "business manager" began to look about for "other worlds to conquer" and, as there were only 1,300 people in Mt. Vernon, he thought he could hold that territory with the one house; so he went over to Burlington, four miles distant, and bought the old Grand theater, remodeled it, and started a first-class motion picture show. By this time the younger son had learned to operate a projector and he took charge of the new Grand.

In the meantime Mr. Dunham had not stopped trying to learn things about the picture business after he had found out the difference between direct and alternating current, nor even after he thoroughly learned the mechanics of operating. Every time the film salesmen came around to see him he talked to them about new and live ways of presenting pictures and the best methods of advertising, and when he went to Seattle he talked to the film managers and to the successful exhibitors of the city about bringing his business up to a higher standard, and always he read the trade journals, finding in them inspiration to do bigger things and concrete suggestions for attaining them. He became ambitious to give his patrons the chance to see in their own small towns the biggest and best shows that could be seen in Seattle.

Some of his well-meaning friends advised against this, saying that he would be sure to lose money; but he had confidence in the work he had done in trying to cultivate the taste of his patrons for good pictures and in what he could do by putting big things before them in a big way.

At length he made the plunge and booked the first big super feature of his career, "The Birth of a Nation," for one day, the sixth of last January, at the Grand. He did not, however, depend upon the people in the small town of Burlington alone to make his venture pay. He advertised in the newspapers in the neighboring towns of Mt. Vernon and Sedro Woolley, as well as in that of Burlington, and he began two weeks before the showing.

He also arranged with one or two store managers to fix up window displays, and by the night of January 6 everybody in the surrounding countryside knew about the wonderful picture to be shown at the Grand. Nearly everybody must have gone, too, for the receipts for those two shows, the matinee and evening performances, were $568.00, a great deal more than the average daily receipts of the "Birth of a Nation's" seven-day run in the neighboring city of Bellingham, which boasts 14,000 inhabitants.

Mr. Dunham has arranged for "The Birth of a Nation" to be shown at the Rex soon, and he says he will not be afraid to trust any of the biggest films to the mercy of his patrons after this; he is going to give them the best that is to be had.

Put Personality Into Your House

That the little things in life and in business are the ones that count most in the long run, is forcefully pointed out by Harry Day, editor of Paramount Progress, the exhibitors' weekly house organ of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, when, in an editorial which will appear in a forthcoming number, he tells the members of the Paramount family that they should talk in terms of quality pictures and make their theaters a place that the most fastidious would desire to visit regularly. In this editorial is stated that:

"We have heard the story recently of a salesman, possibly one of the greatest in the United States today; his name is Harry Campbell and he is selling more Overland cars a week than any four Overland salesmen.

His method—though, of course, such success also depends upon the personality of the man—is to enlarge upon the pleasure of owning an automobile—to tell of the pleasures one may have by motoring through the country, to picture a man's wife and family enjoying such a car—to outline the influence it would have on the people around him—in fact he draws a complete illustration of the profitable pleasure of owning an Overland car.

He does not point out this or that mcehanical feature, he does not as a general thing give a demonstration of the car. He does not say this is the best and only car on the market. In fact, he rarely mentions the car itself. But he does draw such a picture of the pleasures and profits of motoring that it is practically impossible for the prospects to get along without the car he is selling to them. Salesman, showman or adman, whatever you wish to call it—the same applies.

If, by a careful use of your lobby you sort of draw a picture, a half-finished picture of the greater pleasures, the more interesting entertainment to be seen on your screen, then people cannot very well help going on into your theater.

Do the same in your newspaper or program advertising. Draw a word picture; draw such a picture that it will be practically impossible for the reader not to come to your show. Tell about the comforts of your theater, the courtesy of your employes, and last but not least, the pure enjoyment to be gotten from seeing Paramount Pictures on your screen.

Did you ever realize that the man or woman in your box office, the ushers and other employes of your theater stand between you and your public?

That if they are alive, alert, on-the-job it increases your profits and builds permanent patrons?

Whereas if they are dopy, sleepy, careless about their dress and appearance, it means that your theater is just that much lower grade and is losing—bound to be losing money on this account.

Jack them up. Have their clothes pressed and freshly laundered.

Remember your patrons notice these things. You can't wear a sweater at the theater and expect your patrons to come in evening clothes. It isn't being done,

Looks like an auto show, doesn't it? But it's only a few of the cars used by Universal actor folk, parked out by the studio while the owners are inside immortalizing themselves.

"Mary Pickford Waltz" Appears

The screen activities of Mary Pickford and George M. Cohan, both Artcraft Pictures stars, are being accompanied by special songs written about and by these famous artists, "The Mary Pickford Waltz," by Leon Bennett, offers a captivating tune that bids fair to take a great hold upon public favor, particularly among the vast army of Pickford admirers. Copies of these songs are being furnished Artcraft exhibitors at five cents a copy.

"There's Only One Little Girl," by George M. Cohan, who has just made his screen debut in "Broadway Jones," is another hit published by the William Jerome Company, and which will be used by exhibitors in connection with the showing of the initial Cohan picture. This song is also on sale at the Woolworth stores in every city where the film is being exhibited.

BILLS proposing state censorship of pictures were introduced in the legislatures of twenty-five states during the past winter. We are glad to report, however, that as yet not a single one of these bills have become a law. Michigan, New Jersey, Delaware, West Virginia, Florida, Vermont and Missouri appeared in opposition to legalized censor.

Each of the high schools of Cleveland will be equipped with a motion picture apparatus the coming fall. The students of each school have agreed to raise the funds for the purchase of machines and films.

The Strand Theater of Louisville, Ky., is now charging 20 cents admission without difficulty. Another exhibitor of the same city reports that he has had no more difficulty in getting 10 cents admission than he did in securing 5.

A chamber of commerce of exhibitors is possible in eastern Pennsylvania following the recent luncheon of the theater men held at the Hotel Columbia in Harrisburg. Another meeting is to be held soon to consider further plans for such an organization.

The exhibitors' league of Iowa will hold a convention at Des Moines in June. Besides electing officers and directors, the league will choose delegates to represent it at the national convention to be held in Chicago 14 to 22. A picture ball will also be a part of the Des Moines convention.

There is to be a new Screen Club in Cincinnati, which will include exhibitors, film men, members of the press and any others connected with the business, as well as the public. Various women's clubs and civic organizations will also be represented in the new club.

The Strand Theater, New York, baseball team played a game with the Mutual Welfare League team last week. Two years ago when the Strand boys went to play the Welfare League team in the prison yard, they beat the prison team badly. As the Sing Sing team could not arrange to come to New York to play, the Strand boys went to Sing Sing to play again this season.

An audience of 800 last week viewed the children's matinee, given by the Visual Library of St. Louis, which is a branch of the National Committee on Films for Children. The performance was held at the Delmar, one of the Cornelius chain of theaters. The league has worked out a plan of co-operating with exhibitors in giving a regular children's matinee, with proved films from the newly created Visual Library.

According to the honest press agent, F. C. Burhans, Pittsburgh manager for V. L. S. E., has started a school for motion picture theater ushers as a result of having visited a Pittsburgh theater to find patrons packed in the back of a house unable to reach their seats owing to the demoralization of the ushering staff. Mr. Burhans helped straighten out the mixup and then proceeded to give some free lessons on the proper manner of showing patrons to their seats.

When Colonel W. S. Butterfield completes his new Palace Theater at Flint, Michigan, he will be the owner of 3350 seats in that city. He owns two vaudeville houses besides the Garden Theater, which shows pictures exclusively.

W. R. Howat, manager of the Airdome, Plainville, Kansas, has arranged to give a series of benefits for the boy scouts. These to take place every Thursday night.

The musicians and exhibitors of Cleveland are not harmonizing very well at present. The unions have raised their scale of wages by two to three dollars a week. Some of the smaller houses may put in automatic instruments. However, the matter is still being threshed out.

Here is an oldtimer dead. The Knickerbocker Theater, the oldest picture house in Rochester, N. Y., passed out of existence as its last foot of film flickered off the screen last week. The house was always very prosperous but was inadequate as it seated but two hundred.

When the recent fire broke out in the Empire Theater at Dunkirk, N. Y., the audience of several hundred walked safely out of the house, due to the fact that they were assured by the manager and employes that there was no danger. The film had been ignited and the fire spread to other films.

The theater, however, was not damaged. The operator and Manager Brooks controlled the fire by means of hand chemicals and were aided later by the fire department.

Can your pianist play for 52 hours without stopping? If he could, would anybody want to hear it that long? This record was set by A. Crain of the Crystal Theater, West Toronto, Ontario. Shifts of attendance aided Mr. Crain in the test and he was given the required food and refreshment.

The patrons of the Isis Theater of Indianapolis were immensely pleased last week when Barton & Olson, the owners of the house, arranged for the personal appearance of W. S. Hart, the notable good-bad man. Hart was on his recent trip from the film coast to Manhattan.

The last report of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce shows that the United States leads the world in the manufacture of motion picture film and in the production of film plays; also the control of distribution of films has become centralized in this country. This, of course, due to a great extent to tne European war.

Theoretically, the ordinance for Chicago, requiring all film used in the city to be non-inflammable, came up for hearing on May 17. The hearing was, however, only theoretical as the subject did not come up at all.

The exhibitors were represented by Fred Hartman and George Laing and the operators' union, local 110, by G. C. Anders, of the Kenmore Theater. M. S. Mayer, of the Sosman Landis Scenery Company, was present, as was also a representative of MOTOGRAPHY.

Exhibitors of Memphis, Tennessee, are still having a great deal of difficulty with the Sunday closing law. They have been keeping open on Sunday in spite of the city ordinance which forbids it. Public sentiment is said to be strongly in favor of the recreation day pictures.

The exhibitors league of Cincinnati is aiding the local Red Cross movement by means of taking subscription at the box offices and running slides on the screens. Chicago houses are also running slides to aid the movement, as are also theaters in various cities throughout the country.

In Ontario, Canada, the law requires that no film can be run through a machine at a speed faster than 65 feet per minute. This means about 15 minutes for each reel. The idea of the government is to prevent the danger of fires. That will, of course, mean better performances for the spectators.

Another Ontario ruling is that no exhibitor can alter a film after it has once been passed by the censors.

How would you like to have your theater inspected three times by a woman's club? The exhibitors of Omaha have just gone through such an ordeal and the medicine has proved to have been valuable treatment. The women gave the verdict that theaters were found in good condition and the nature of the film was good. Fifteen cases of poor ventilation were reported but these were promptly remedied.

Los Angeles is still having trouble in connection with allowing minors to attend theaters unescorted. Tht city has a ruling which makes it necessary for every child to have a chaperon. The question is now being investigated by the Public Welfare Committee of the city council and by the representatives of various of the city's social organizations.

Manager Patch of the Pitt Theater of Pittsburgh has again resorted to living players to get around the censor's ruling. The players enact certain portions of "Twenty Thousands Leagues Under the Sea" which were ordered deleted by the film vivisectors. When it comes time for the objectionable scenes the screen is raised and the players present the tragic parts which the screen is not allowed to show.

In "Films and Foot Lights," the elaborate little magazine issued by the Royal Grand Theater at Marion, Indiana, has been reprinted several of MOTOGRAPHY's editorials. These have been found to be not only of value to the exhibitors but instructive and of interest in many cases to patrons of the films. Various stories from MOTOGRAPHY have also been used on the program with good effect. This is a word to the wise as to where to get good material.

Through the enterprise and initiative of Manager Harold Edel of the Strand Theater, New York's largest motion picture theater, the Strand was able to show on their screen the departure of the American destroyers for European waters on the same day their arrival at Queenstown was announced in the newspapers. The negative, which had been specially taken by a camera-spondent of the Cinema War News Syndicate, was released by the censor when the story was given to the newspapers. A print and title were immediately made and rushed to the Strand, where it was probably the first intimation of the event to be received by most of their patrons.

A splendid and dainty little sepia colored picture of Alice Joyce, about the size of a business card, is used by E. O. Weinberg, Manager of the Elmwood Theater at Elmwood, N. Y. He enclosed this in his vest pocket program for the week of May 20, on the back was an announcement of the coming play, "Her Secret," in which Miss Joyce is featured. It is safe to say that the picture was held on to by everybody who secured one, as it is very attractive.

Exhibitors of Philadelphia were recently made jubilant by the decision of Judge Patterson to permit the showing of "The Easiest Way" with Clara Kimball Young. Only a few subtitles were eliminated. Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley chain of theaters, was one of the witnesses for Selznick. "We consider this decision a victory for picture interests," said Mr. Mastbaum.

A convenient little folder, distributed to patrons by the Mystic Theater, Petaluma, California, announces the weekly list of showings. Metro and Paramount features are supplemented by program comedies and educational subjects. World and V. L. S. E. in connection with news films complete the weekly run. These small vest pocket folders are very efficient as result getters, for they are carried easily, and if the cover is attractive and set with some catchy phrase, such as "Yours for Amusement," which is on this one, then they always attract attention at first glance.

Kansas motion picture exhibitors in a meeting at Hutchinson have voted to notify exchanges that after a certain date they will not pay deposit money in advance for film service. Charles Barron, of Augusta, was elected secretary. The following delegates to the national convention in Chicago were chosen: Merrit L. Beeson, Dodge City; Lee Gunnison, Atchison; Fred Savage and C. B. Yost, Hutchinson; William Mein, Kansas City, Kansas; W. H. Willey, Mulberry; J. J. Marshall, Manhattan; C. E. Glaman, Wellington; Stanley Chambers. Wichita. The next meeting of the state convention will be held at Wichita June 4 and 5.

Motion picture house managers of North Dakota are meeting in Fargo for a two-day session, during which matters of interest to the business will be threshed out. The process of conducting film exchanges is up for consideration at this time as well as other problems confronting moving picture houses. Sunday programs in the motion picture houses, which it was reported were made legal by the law passed by the recent legislature, have been abandoned, according to local theater managers. An investigation of this law, it is said, has disclosed that picture houses cannot operate on Sunday in North Dakota and the proposed attempt to test it in court has been dropped, it is said. Representatives from virtually all the theaters in the state are attending this convention.

Putting on a Real Show

EVERY exhibitor considers himself a showman, because he owns a show. The man from whom you buy your oatmeal is a grocer because he runs a grocery store. Nowadays the grocer never sees the oatmeal, because it stays in the original package. The exhibitor cannot sell the film in the can; but to all intents and purposes he does pass it on to his customers in the original form. It goes on the screen just as it went on the screen in the manufacturer's testing room. The exhibitor usually adds nothing to it. He practically sells it over the counter.

It is the business of a showman to entertain the people. That is not the business of the film manufacturer. The producer merely supplies the exhibitor with the materials for making a show. It is up to the exhibitor to make the show.

A hall with a door at one end and a screen at the other, with somebody to take in money and somebody to turn film through a machine, does not properly constitute a show. Running such an establishment is not showmanship. Even if the room is nicely decorated and the film is carefully selected, it is merely selling goods in a pretty store, and that is not showmanship.

True showmanship can make a great deal out of opportunities that are pretty small. A mighty poor film can be presented so cleverly that the people think it is the best show they ever attended. We have already cited Lyman Howe's case; everybody knows his program was made up of old stuff that would have emptied an ordinary house. Yet he never had any trouble getting twenty-five cents admission, because he didn't just flash his stuff on the screen—he put on a show. The film was only part of Lyman Howe's entertainment.

Lots of exhibitors wonder how "Roxy" Rothapfel gained his reputation as the king of picture showmen. A good many criticize his methods, and lay his success to "luck," which is the sort of credit that most successful men get from the mediocre. But Rothapfel never allows the film to be the whole reason for people to like his shows, and he is very successful. Thousands of exhibitors offer practically nothing to please their patrons but the film on the screen, and they are not successful—not in a big way. That argument is unanswerable.

Any dub can show a film on a screen and get another dub to beat a piano. It requires no brains to rent service, turn a machine and sell tickets. Yet people who do just that and practically no more, expect to be called showmen, and complain because they don't get rich at it.

The film supplied by the producers to the exchanges, and rented by them to the exhibitors, is just so much raw material out of which entertainment must be manufactured, with several other ingredients added to make it real entertainment and not just pictures on the wall.

In this whole industry there is too much inclination to regard the producer as the entertainer. He isn't. He cannot give entertainment any more than the manufacturer of cars can give transportation. It is up to the exhibitor to do the entertaining, and to use his ingenuity in making it the best possible entertainment.

The word "ingenuity" is really the keynote of showmanship. Showmen who have it will know just what we mean. Exhibitors (note the distinction) who do not have it will probably think we are talking nonsense.

But the records we print of the things a few bright minds are doing prove that there is such a thing as applied ingenuity in the picture show business, and that those who have it, and use it, are successful. Even those who lack show ingenuity of their own original brand can still profit by the ideas of others—which course has been pursued by some of the most successful men.

The well rounded picture showman today must know a lot of things that were not necessary ten years ago when film of any kind was a complete show. For the biggest kind of success he must know human nature, and advertising, and the possibilities of lighting effects, and music, and decoration, and most of all must be master of that intangible, unexplainable quality that throws a glamour over some shows that is totally missing in others.

Lots of exhibitors get by without any of those qualifications. That is because the picture show business is so very good—in spite of reports to the contrary. The exhibitor who simply puts on a picture, as any human being could do, is overlooking his greatest opportunity.

Time to Repeat the Call

JULY 14 still seems a long way off, with a hint of frost still in the air and folks throwing their wraps around them when they take the quarter mile walk from home to the nearest show.

But time passes swiftly. This has been said before, and we claim no new discovery in it. But we have to say it, because most people don't seem ever to realize the truth of it. You think of the big convention at Chicago, six weeks from now, and you say "Oh, Shucks! Why, we've got all kinds of time to think about that."

But if you are like most mortals, your thirty or forty or fifty years of experience has not taught you how astonishingly short six weeks are, especially if, as we hope, you are very busy.

Now the busy ones are just the people who should go to the League convention—and generally just the ones who "haven't got time." A busy exhibitor is generally a successful exhibitor, and that kind always wants to be more successful. When a man has to spend all his time running one house, it is kind of hard to see how he could find time to run a dozen houses.

Yet men are doing it every day. Those men, you can bet, will come to Chicago July 14; and if you are here to meet them you can see how it is done.

The exhibitors who are not busy, on the other hand, not only have time to go, but they had better go while they still have their houses, and find out what is the matter. It is possible, you know, to run a theater without being busy—at least for a while. You can rent a house, install an operator and a doorman and a cashier, and just loaf around. It's pretty soft while it lasts, but it doesn't last long enough. If you are that kind of exhibitor, don't let anything keep you away from the convention. It doesn't need your attendance, but you need it—decidedly.

On the other hand, if you are the busy, hustling, ambitious sort of exhibitor, as most of our readers are, the convention needs you as much as you need it. Get a bunch of fellows like that together and there is always something stirring. Not one of them is satisfied until he knows all the other fellows know. And so they all go home about a hundred per cent richer in wisdom than when they came. You have heard men of that kind grumble because they HAD TO go to a convention, but you never yet heard any of them say they were sorry they went.

And that is the point of convention-going; the successful men feel that they have to go. It isn't a case of vacationing or pleasure jaunting; it is just a necessary part of the business. They figure that man who would avoid a convention because an excuse was handy would be pretty apt to avoid some other part of his business that was necessary for success.

Practically all the separate branches of the industry have pledged themselves to make the League convention at Chicago a big event. With the individual producer and accessory men the National Association, the F. I. L. M. Clubs and the League itself each giving all it has to insure the magnificence of the affair, there is no doubt at all about the desirability of being there.

And particularly the country exhibitor, the small town fellow who knows he is behind the times and thinks nobody is interested in him—particularly the exhibitor from the little places should be in Chicago on July 14.

It will do him a lot of good to find out just how important he is to the industry, and how many of him there are, and how the manufacturers want to cater to his wants, and how his fellow exhibitors want to help him.

Altogether there is so much to think of about this convention that it is none too early to start thinking and planning for it right away.

Vitagraph has produced a steady schedule of remarkable productions during the past weeks, and not the least of them is "The Sixteenth Wife," the new feature built around the charming Peggy Hyland. These pictures give a hint of the play's unique appeal.

VITAGRAPH INNOVATIONS

Albert E. Smith, President Greater Vitagraph, Glad to Get Back from West—Makes Plans for Bigger and Better Vitagraph

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, after the first vacation he has taken in five years, is back at the big Brooklyn studio of the company, brown as a berry, and with more dynamic energy than ever. During his absence the contracts with several of his stars expired but no person in authority at the studio would attempt to usurp the duty of the president, and for a few days the stars were without their renewal contracts. So sure were the stars of the treatment they would receive at the hands of President Smith that they agreed to work without a contract. As a result immediately upon his return these renewal contract matters were adjusted and Greater Vitagraph's big family of stars remains undisturbed.

Several weeks ago Mr. Smith started for California on what he called a vacation but which resolved into making an exhaustive study of the western studio of Greater Vitagraph at Hollywood. Just after arriving in California Mr. Smith was taken ill and was confined to his hotel suite for several weeks during which time his physician forbade him to receive any callers.

Upon his recovery Mr. Smith investigated the affairs of the Western studio and before he finished he had awarded contracts for the rebuilding of much of it and for enlarging the plant in many ways.

"I desire to make the Western studio the Pacific Coast monument of Vitagraph," Mr. Smith said in explaining the improvements, "the same as our Eastern studio is the monument on the Atlantic Coast."

While stationed at the Western studio President Smith did one thing that never has been even dared by the executive head of a motion picture corporation before. He caused to be posted on the studio bulletin board a notice that he would be in his office every day between noon and one o'clock for the purpose of hearing complaints from any employe.

"This applies to the day laborer, drawing the smallest wage, to the extras, both men and women, and to the highest paid star," the notice explained.

For eight days President Smith remained at his office awaiting complaints and he did not have a single caller. President Smith declared that he purposed to install his "complaint hour" at the Brooklyn studio just as soon as he had finished with the accumulation of work caused by his absence.

"I want every Greater Vitagraph employe to feel that I can be reached at a certain hour each day and I wish to share their business troubles with them. If there is the slightest friction in any business concern I believe that it may be eliminated by a good heart to heart talk between the person in authority and the employe."

"We have our purchasing departments, our scenario departments, our advertising departments, etc.," said Mr. Smith, "and we have men at the head of each of those departments to run things. They should run those departments and be held responsible for their dealings with outsiders, but when it comes to our employes they are entitled to a heart to heart talk with the head of the concern and with Greater Vitagraph—that is just what they will have."

Mr. Smith said that he saw absolutely no reason for the air of despondency that appears to be hovering over plants of many of the producing companies and the headquarters of some of the distributing companies.

"Insofar as I can see," he said, "there is no reason for despondency among the producing companies that started to put their affairs in shape when they should have sensed the storm clouds gathering several months ago. I am glad to say that Greater Vitagraph was one of those companies that realized that safe and sane business methods could be applied to the motion picture industry, and that these methods have been applied. For that reason I and my associates know we are absolutely secure and that our business will suffer to no appreciable extent from upheavals caused by the war."

Title of "A Regular Guy" Changed to "Wild and Woolly"—Story of the Western Plains—Released June 17

The second Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft offering will be released on June 17. The title of this production, originally "A Regular Guy," has been changed to "Wild and Woolly," and as its new name would indicate, the picture offers a story staged chiefly in the atmosphere of the great plains.

The real west is being used as the background, most of the scenes having been screened in Arizona and California. In his new role "Doug" performs many new athletic stunts which he has been practicing for months, such as leaping into the saddle of a galloping horse, bulldozing a steer, riding a bucking broncho, throwing the lariat, etc.

The story has to do with a city youth whose wild fancies of the great west eventually get the better of him. Clad in an immaculate cow-boy attire such as is worn at a masque ball, he travels to the land of his dreams only to find that his outfit is as unique as it appeared to be on Fifth Avenue in New York. Many incidents of typical Fairbanks variety are disclosed together with various thrilling situations such as confront the young man from the East, who soon learns the ways of the rough cow-boy.

Supporting the smiling comedian in this picture are Eileen Percy, who recently deserted the Broadway footlights for the screen, Sam de Grasse, Joseph Singleton, Tom Wilson, Doc Lytell, Ruth Allen, all well known among patrons of the photoplay. As in the case of the initial Fairbanks-Artcraft picture, "In Again—Out Again," Director Emerson has succeeded in obtaining various remarkable types for "Wild and Woolly." Ed Burns, a dyed in the wool ranger, who was foreman of Col. Cody's Wyoming ranch for seven years, is one of the most pronounced of these types. Anita Loos, the petite scenarioist of the Fairbanks organization, prepared the story for the screen. Victor Fleming is supervising the camera work.

Mary and Doug. had a little game with Al Lichtman, manager of Artcraft, and Arthur Kane, western district manager, when these officials visited the Lasky studios. M. H. Lewis, Los Angeles Artcraft representative, was also in on the fun.

Public Likes Fixed Stars

By William A. Brady
President World Film Corporation

"We have been quietly working out a plan for some time past which seems to have been very cordially favored by the public, said William A. Brady, director general of World-Pictures Brady-Made. "This plan calls for associating certain players continually, even in the leading support of our stars. I have reason to be sure that audiences attracted by the name of a star of whom they have grown fond in the artistic sense also like to see the same players in the supporting company.

For example, we have been casting June Elvidge for the biggest female role in each of Carlyle Blackwell's plays for several months now. Others of our favorite actors and actresses also appear from time to time with Mr. Blackwell, such as Dion Titheradge, Arthur Ashley, Evelyn Greeley, Johnny Hines, etc., but Miss Elvidge is always there, and expecting her has become a habit with the Blackwell following.

In the case of Alice Brady I have tried out the same idea by appointing John Bowers her leading man in all her plays since "Darkest Russia," in which he had the main masculine part. These picture dramas include "Maternity," just issued, and "The Divorce Game," "A Self-Made Widow" and "The Spurs of Sybil" for future publication.

I had fully intended to form a similar combination by featuring Montagu Love with Ethel Clayton, but he came along so rapidly that I had to give up the notion and star Mr. Love by himself. He will have his own productions from now on, beginning with "The Brand of Satan."

In this picture he has the assistance of Gerda Holmes and Evelyn Greeley, and quite possibly we may make this alliance permanent—dependent upon the manner in which the public takes to it.

One thing is certain, at any rate: We have gone far enough to see that established stars, each with his or her regular and well known associate player or players, provide a great help toward that absolute dependability for which we have been striving in our output.

Preparedness Productions

The following are timely Bluebird productions:

"Eagle's Wings"—written by Rufus Steele, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Viola Smith, Grace Carlisle and Charles Mailes; 5 reels. "The Bugler of Algiers"—produced by Rupert Julian from the famous novel, "We Are French," by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Five-reel production featuring Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, with Kingsley Benedict. "Behind the Lines"—featuring Harry Carey, supported by Edith Johnson, directed by Henry McRea; 5 reels. "Treason"—written by Lee Weigert, Allen Holubar, Lois Wilson, Joe Girard and Dorothy Davenport; 5 reels.

BOOST THEATER LICENSES

Would Have Chicago Down Town Theaters Pay on Seating Basis and Raise Licenses from $1,000 to $1,500

If a plan submitted during the past week is adopted by the Council loop theater licenses in Chicago will be increased from $1,000 to $1,500 a year.

The proposal, submitted by George F. Lohman, deputy city collector, would also make motion picture theaters pay for their licenses on the basis of their seating capacities. The new theater license program would swell the city's revenue by $36,000 a year, according to Mr. Lohman.

The plan was devised to make up for a $200,000 loss in revenue in saloon licenses this year. Action was postponed for two weeks and theater owners were invited to appear before the committee.

City Collector Forsberg has sent notices to Chief of Police Schuettler to close forty saloons whose owners have not yet made application for new licenses. "Last year we issued 7,000 saloon licenses," said Mr. Forsberg. "From what I am told by brewery agents we will lose 200 this year or a loss of $200,000."

The present fee for theaters charging 20 cents or under is $300 a year. Mr. Lohman said that last year the city lost revenue from eighty-three motion picture theaters which had a seating capacity of 300 or less.

Under the proposed new rates forty-three picture theaters which have a seating capacity between 300 and 1,000 will have their fee raised from $300 to $500. There are twenty-three motion picture theaters which have a seating capacity of more than 1,000. Their fee will be raised an additional $450.

Last year's revenue from all theaters was $102,000.

A second hearing on the proposed ordinance will be held on June 1.

Charles Ray is fast learning that his athletic training will stand him in good stead in his screen work. During the production of the latest Ince-Triangle drama, "The Millionaire Vagrant," by J. G. Hawks, in which he is presented as star, Ray was called upon to run over tenement house roofs, vault yawning apertures, clamber down water spouts and balance himself on window ledges, during his efforts to escape pursuing officers.

Can You Answer These Questions?

I am very much pleased with Motography. I like "What the Picture Did for Me." I am sending in my reports.

Please give me all the information you can on the following pictures: "Carmen," a four-reel Chaplin feature, released by K. E. S. E.; also "Buffalo Bill," released by the same exchange. How do the "Seven Deadly Sins" go over? I would also like "dope" on "The Chaplin Review," released by Reliable Film Company. What about the five-reel feature "Unborn," released by Unity Sales Corporation? Yours.—E. L. Schoepski, Manager, Star Theater, 215 S. State Street, Belvidere, Illinois.

Foreign Films in Japanese Theaters

The Kobé consular district has between 50 and 60 motion picture theaters. Their supplies are obtained from two exchanges—the Tennen Shoku Katsudo Shashin Kabushiki Kaisha (Natural Color Moving Picture Corporation), with the head office at Suyeyoshibashi 3 chrome, Shinsai-bashi, Nishi-iru, Osaka, and the Nippon Katsudo Shashin Kabushiki Kaisha (Japanese Moving Picture Corporation), with the head office at Kamimaki-cho, Nihonbashi-ku, Tokyo. These two firms import all the foreign films used in this district, and control the sale of films manufactured in Japan. They also import and sell the projectors and other instruments used in exhibiting moving pictures.

Show Both Foreign and Domestic Films

There are no low-price, continuous-performance motion-picture theaters in that district. Ordinarily only one performance of 6 to 8 reels, lasting about three hours, is given each day. The prices of admission vary from 5 to 30 cents, depending upon the seats taken. Some of the theaters show a complete program of Japanese films and others a complete program of foreign films, but the great majority of the houses combine the two classes in about equal proportions. The theaters which cater to the laboring class make a specialty of native films, while those patronized by the better class of Japanese and by foreigners exhibit either a combination of foreign and domestic films or only foreign films. The program is changed every week or 10 days.

Most of the foreign photoplays are French, Italian, or English dramas or American comedies. Very few of the better grade of American plays have been seen here. The exchanges explain this fact by stating that European films are cheaper, and that they can not afford to pay the high rates charged for the Japanese rights to good American plays. A tendency to exhibit the serial adventure films so popular in America has developed recently, however.

Plays of Adventure with "Thrills" Popular

Detective plays with plenty of hidden staircases, airships in action, "slap-stick" comedies, and plays of adventure with many "thrills" are demanded. The "sob plays" also are well patronized by the Japanese women. Society and problem plays are not in demand.

American exporters will not be likely to succeed in any attempts they may make to sell films direct to the theaters. The motion picture houses are usually controlled by the film exchanges, and they must take the films that are given them. Tht fact that titles, subtitles, leaders, and inserts in the foreign films are printed in English results in a demand for translations and explanations of the action. These are made by men in the exchanges, and are read by a sort of lecturer who, standing beside the screen, translates the action as the play proceeds. It would be impossible for each small theater to employ a man conversant with English and with foreign customs to interpret each play.

Export Business Possibilities

The films manufactured in this district are not likely to find appreciative audiences in America. The photography is often poor, and the action is slow, on account of long intervals during which the actors converse. Films produced there under foreign supervision, however, probably would prove acceptable, as the beautiful scenery and many charming customs of the Japanese could be utilized to great advantage.

As the exchanges do not stick to any one film service, but buy their films all over the world, it would not pay to advertise heavily in the local papers for the sake of the one or two films that might be sold each month. Advertising posters for use in front of the theaters are of little value, as the exchanges furnish with the films hand-painted posters in the Japanese language. Photographs of the actors and of scenes in the play are used to some extent. No projectors or other supplies for the exhibition of motion pictures are produced there.

The import duty on films is $3.10 per pound, including the inner packing, if developed. The duty on moving-picture projectors and on moving-picture cameras is 50 per cent ad valorem.—Commerce Reports.

See China in New York

"A Trip Through China," which opened at the Eltinge Theater, New York, May 21, is a ten reel art motion picture that required five years of time and 100,000 feet of film to complete.

The Militia of Mercy will receive the proceeds from this engagement of the picture at the Eltinge Theater.

The picture shows a number of scenes, the first ever permitted to be taken in the "Forbidden City." It takes you through all the principal cities of the Celestial Empire and holds a glass over the life and customs of the people.

Industries and commercial pursuits, agriculture, games, sports, amusements and the various forms of labor of these 400,000,000 people are faithfully shown.

A wedding ceremony, a funeral and views of Chinese theaters and dramatic companies are among interesting scenes shown that are not the work of a motion picture director. Games, sports, Sacred Gods with temples and historic tombs mingle with remarkable scenic pictures through the entire ten reels of "A Trip Through China."

China Preparing is an important section of the picture, providing the first views of the present day Chinese army in its drills and exercises.

The motion picture as an educational factor is strongly exemplified in this picture as it is an animated geography and history as well as a screen newspaper of current events in the wonder country of the world so little known and understood.

What would happen if New York were attacked by a fleet of German Zeppelins is pictured in "A Zeppelin Attack on New York," a one-reel production manufactured by Rothacker for release by Mutual May 21.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, and Juliette Day, the newest American-Mutual star.

Clever photography was used to make the picture realistic to a startling degree. The advance of the Zeppelins off the coast and their bomb dropping flight over Manhattan, the defense of the aerial rifles from the top of Brooklyn bridge and the ensuing conflagration which sweeps north from Battery park are vivid and thrilling.

The picture shows the activities of the American aviation squad and the hasty preparations of the United States naval forces to repel invasion by both air and water.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox in Films

That honesty and integrity in the film business is the biggest possible asset, has been proved by the culmination of the contract between A. and H. M. Warner and Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Involving over $200,000, this arrangement brings to the screen the fertile field of the mind of one of the most wonderful women of the last century.

Only after the most scrutinizing investigation and the most careful inquiry, would Mrs. Wilcox consent to ally herself with the motion picture. The past reputation of Warner Brothers and the willing co-operation of leading bankers in their enterprise was all that finally enabled Mrs. Wilcox to determine upon the photoplay as a medium for the dissemination of her beautiful thoughts to the world.

Long life to any proposition that brings to the film the brain of "the poet of the people," Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Children Pictures Liked

That there is a general demand for photodramas featuring children is indicated by the strong pre-release bookings of Essanay's new series, "Do Children Count?"

Manager Jenner of the Chicago branch of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, which is releasing these films, reported last week that already he had booked the series for two hundred theaters in his territory, and expected to double that number before the end of the month. Equally glowing reports have come in from Kansas City and San Francisco exchanges as well as the Eastern offices. Viewers of "The Guiding Hand," the first unit, were highly pleased. It appears June 6.

Recruiting Film

The leading roles of "The Slacker," the five-part production which is being produced by the Emerald Motion Picture Co., which will be ready for release shortly, are filled by Ed. Arnold, who has the title role of Frank Allen, the slacker, Berdine Zuber, Rhea Catto, Laughlin, Gustave Kleman and Oscar Briggs.

Work on this picture which is to be used to assist in the recruiting movement in Wisconsin under the auspices of the Wisconsin Defense League, and throughout the country, under similar organizations, is being rushed and it will be ready for screening within a short time.

The Scandinavian rights for King-Bee Billy West Comedies have been acquired by E. Mattson, Times Building, New York. The territory embraces the countries of Denmark, Sweden and Norway.

"The girl with a thousand faces," Mae Marsh has been called. We will show the rest of them in succeeding issues.

Huge Cast with Mae Marsh

Mae Marsh's third Goldwyn Picture will be one of the most spectacular screen productions of the past five years in picture annals.

In her first picture, finished in January but not to be released before fall, the drama is confined to a few persons with but two resorts to so-called "mobs" or numbers for the big scenes. This picture is the work of Irvin S. Cobb, and is from one of the most popular stories the big Kentuckian ever wrote for the Saturday Evening Post.

The second Goldwyn Mae Marsh production, the work of Mary Ryder, identified in the past with several of the most successful Mary Pickford stories, is even more compact, in that the principals are fewer and the drama confined to Miss Marsh and Bobbie Harron, as lovers; to the screen father of Mae Marsh and a wayward brother.

When the time came to take one of Margaret Mayo's most popular stage successes for conversion into a motion picture, Miss Mayo saw pictorial possibilities in her work that could never have been attained even on the largest stage in the world. So, for the first time since her appearance in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," Mae Marsh will now have the leading role once more in a picture of Hippodromic proportions.

One of the incidentals of picture-making is travel to distant points, and Miss Marsh and her company are expected to do more than 3,000 miles of traveling principally in the state of Michigan to achieve the results that the picture calls for.

In the cast of this production are:

Forum Aids Exhibitor

C. S. Nordlie, a practical and efficient sales specialist, advertising and service man, has just been appointed general manager of the New York Exchange of Forum Films, Inc., to carry out the unique plan of distribution instituted by W. W. Hodkinson.

The whole policy of the distribution of Forum Films under Mr. Nordlie's direction will be to combine clean pictures and a direct appeal to the large class of people in every community who want clean, amusing entertainment in the motion picture theater.

Productions such as the Edison Conquest Pictures, which will be distributed by Forum Films, Inc., will be free from those features which have caused the reformers of motion pictures to regard them as a menace to the morals of the young. Where local or state censorship exists the exhibitor who takes the service of Forum Films, Inc., will not have to worry over the possibility of having his bookings interfered with by some arbitrary action of the board. Schools, churches, women's clubs and civic and social organizations of all kinds interested in the movement for better films have endorsed these programs and the plan of distribution worked out by Mr. Hodkinson and Mr. Nordlie.

Beban, bear and bees—shake thoroughly and serve hot—that is the recipe for the Pallas-Paramount picture, "A Roadside Impresario," in which George Beban stars under the direction of Donald Crisp.

"A Roadside Impresario" offers a delightful combination of comedy and of real heart interest, supplemented by swiftly moving dramatic incidents such as the final meeting between Guiseppe and the little daughter for whom he has searched many years.

SPECTACULAR PICKFORD SCENE

Al Lichtman, Artcraft's General Manager, Describes Thrilling View that Held Lasky Studio Spellbound—Ten Cameras Used

The largest and most spectacular scene ever staged at the Lasky studios in Hollywood was produced last week under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille for the new Mary Pickford-Artcraft picture, "The Little American." The scene depicted the luxurious ballroom of the Lusitania when the famous liner was torpedoed and has created considerable interest among film producing circles around Los Angeles.

Al Lichtman, general manager of Artcraft, upon his return to New York from California, where he viewed the presentation of the scene, expressed great enthusiasm over the spectacular effect of this offering. He said:

"Mary Pickford's patriotism burst into eloquence at a recent patriotic rally in California." Anyway, it's a pretty picture.

Never have I seen staged such a spectacular bit of realism. The entire Lasky studio ceased activities to view the big scene in which some two hundred extras were used. Among the spectators were Douglas Fairbanks, Geraldine Farrar, John Emerson, Mrs. Pickford and other well known motion picture people.

The set was built in an immense water-tank measuring 50x100 feet and showed the wonderful ballroom of the Lusitania with all its lavish furnishings and crowded with fashionable people in evening dress. At the command of Director De Mille, the ten cameramen began to grind, a large orchestra started to play a lively dance and soon Miss Pickford was in the midst of a scene of great merriment. Just as the festivities were at their height an explosion that to my mind seemed only too realistic, but which as the film will show had the desired effect, shook the entire set and immediately one end of the floor rapidly began to sink into the water. Chairs and tables toppled over and slid down the floor to where men and women fought and screamed. Waist high in water Miss Pickford was picked up by a sturdy young fellow who struggled toward the stairs with her in his arms just as the immense grand piano crashed into the corner where they had been standing. Gowns were torn from backs, men fought with each other and women screamed in actual terror as parts of the heavy mirrors, walls and ceiling tumbled down upon them. No one thought that the scene would turn out to be one of real danger to this extent and even the spectators were screaming with excitement.

Through it all Director De Mille kept a cool head. He seemed to be everywhere and to know just what would happen during every minute of the scene. Above the din his quick commands were given at close hand to those for whom they were intended. Time and again he saved an actor from real injury. With one end of the floor pointing toward the ceiling and the other deep in the water where hundreds of people struggled to save themselves, the scene was brought to an abrupt end. The floor was quickly raised through a mechanical device and the players hurried to their dressing rooms to patch up cuts and bruises that could not be taken off with a little grease paint, and to remove what was left of gorgeous evening gowns and immaculate dress suits. Several ladies had fainted in the turmoil and had to be treated by the studio physician, and one young actor had his arm broken by a falling chandelier.

Miss Pickford and various other members of the company had to discontinue activities for the day after this ordeal. Mary held up well during the excitement but after it was all over it was found necessary to rush her home for quiet and rest. When the affair was all over the sentiments of everyone present was expressed by Douglas Fairbanks as he resumed work on his forthcoming Artcraft picture, "Wild and Woolly," also being staged at the Lasky studio: "If that scene don't pull a fellow right out of his seat," said "Doug.," "it will be because he is nailed down."

Art Dramas Bustling

The Erbograph, Apollo, Van Dyke and United States Amusement studios are the centers of unusual activity these days. All four companies are working on pictures far in advance of schedule time, besides completing the unfinished productions of the next two months.

As many of the male actors are anxious to take part in carrying on the war, the directors realize that time is more than valuable now, and they are getting the utmost work out of all their players.

Alma Hanlon, who is just finishing "The Golden God," the Apollo release for June 14th, is practically exhausted with her season's work. As soon as this picture is completed she intends to leave the city for a two week's rest, after which she will return to work again on the late summer and fall productions.

At the United States Amusement Studios in Fort Lee "House of Cards" is in its final stages, and preparations are already being made for the production of a new picture, whose nature will be announced next week.

At the Erbograph studios work is progressing on two pictures, one of which goes under the working title of "Charity Castle," while the other is untitled.

At the Van Dyke studios scenes are being made by Walter Edwin on "A Mute Appeal," starring Jean Sothern. His company has just returned from Pennsylvania, where the exteriors of this picture were taken.

This last picture is due for release some time in June.

Reel Fellows Meet

That energetic social organization, the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, held another fine meeting at its attractive club rooms at 207 South Wabash avenue on Friday, May 25.

It was "Sunshine" night, the meeting being dedicated to the Sunshine Film Corporation, and a number of the representatives of that growing firm were present and made informal addresses. A buffet lunch was served, a la cabaret.

The All Star Features Distributors recently completed the removal of their San Francisco office to 191 Golden Gate avenue at the corner of Leavenworth street.

Big Stars at Exposition

NATIONAL SHOW AT CHICAGO BOOMING—SEND IN YOUR SUGGESTIONS

EVEN though the national convention and exposition at Chicago is nearly two months in the future, the main arrangements and the completion of detailed plans have reached an unusual state of advancement.

Managing Director Ludwig Schindler has been exerting all his energies toward a successful show for the last several weeks and his managerial abilities are beginning to show results. He has again been in New York City the past few days crystalizing the interest in the big show there. His faithful committees are also back of him at every step handling the work which is impossible to be brought to his personal attention.

Many Stars to Be Present

Exhibitors and film men in all branches of the industry, as well as the public, are always of course particularly interested in the stars who are to be present at the exposition. The management has arranged to make every day at the show a particular star day. Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Garden, Douglas Fairbanks, Clara Kimball Young, W. S. Hart, and a number of other screen celebrities will be present. Illinois exhibitors have estimated that, due to the meeting and greeting between stars and fans at last year's exposition, the drawing power of the various stars in Chicago was increased at least twenty per cent. Naturally all of the fans who met a certain personage wanted to see him in the next picture that appeared in the neighborhood theater. A national exposition thus tends not only to stimulate business throughout all of the channels of the industry but also does a great deal toward cementing the interests of the public with the picture business. This is one of the most valuable phases of the big event.

Contracts for Space Closed

Although the Chicago coliseum is one of the largest buildings in America, the space already sold for the coming exposition, July 14-22, makes a big hole in it. Among the contracts which have already been O. K'ed and the space alloted are the following:

Send Delegates' Names

A large number of the exhibitors' organizations throughout the country have already elected delegates to send to the convention. The management is desirous of having the number and names of these representatives. If the reader is connected with an organization which has elected delegates, he will confer a favor upon the management if he will aid in seeing that this is done. If your branch of the league or your local exhibitors' organization has not yet taken up the question of the convention, please urge it to do so at once, as the progress of the various sections of the country and the various theater men is shown by the number of men sent to the national exposition and convention, where all the latest developments of the industry are displayed and where legislation is conducted affecting vitally every phase of the business.

Send in Your Suggestions

Remember that exhibitors and film men throughout the country are invited to send in ideas for making the exposition attractive and unique. Cash prizes are offered. Aaron Cohn of St. Louis, Missouri, has sent in several valuable suggestions. One is that the convention should consider ways and means whereby the exhibitors would be allowed to operate on Sundays in the states that now bar Sunday performances. This question affects a great many localities at the present time.

Chicago Newspaper Boosts Exposition

H. C. Holah, formerly manager of the Chicago Pathe office and who is now manager of the motion picture department of the Chicago Herald, is a great booster for the coming exposition. He has mailed 1,000 special letters to exhibitors and manufacturers throughout the United States calling attention to the big July Show.

Remember the time and the place: July 14 to 22 at Chicago.

NO ADVANCE DEPOSITS

R. C. Cropper, President Standard Film Corporation, Announces Abolition of Deposit System in Answer to Appeal of Exhibitors

Another film corporation struck a blow last week at the deposit system which has proved so obnoxious to exhibitors. R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film Corporation, in answer to the appeals of the Kansas State Exhibitors' League and the Northwest Exhibitors' Association, has decided to abolish the deposit clause henceforth from his contracts.

In announcing the change in policy Mr. Cropper sent telegrams to the associations notifying them that henceforth they would be able to purchase art drama pictures without paying the deposit in the territories which include Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, upper Wisconsin, and southern Illinois.

"This action," Mr. Cropper said, "is costing us thousands of dollars in immediate outlay that we have to post before we have a chance to get a cent back in rental from the exhibitor.

"We are willing to make this great investment because we believe in the honesty and integrity of the exhibitors as a whole. And we must trust on being able to drive the unscrupulous, dishonest business man who operates a theater from the field. We are throwing the responsibility of fair dealing square upon our customers.

"This decision on our part involves no little expense and it certainly shows that the Standard Film Corporation is not in any sense dependent upon the exhibitors' money in order to continue operating."

Mary Pickford's recent Artcraft release, "A Poor Little Rich Girl," was shown by Rev. George Savary of the North Congregational Church, Haverhill, Massachusetts, in serial form and proved a great inspiration for church-going.

The fishing season is open and in this costume Edith Valk of the Mack Sennett-Keystone Company should be very successful. We have always fished in Michigan. Hereafter it will be the San Gabriel canyon for ours.

Motion Pictures in Honduras

There is not a playhouse for the spoken drama on the north coast of Honduras, and in the Ceiba consular district the only public amusements are motion-picture shows, of which there are two, one in Ceiba, the other in Tela. The house in Ceiba gives three shows a week—Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays.

Both of these houses secure their films from Guatemala City. The Ceiba theater presents from 5,000 to 8,000 feet of film at each performance—French and Italian, and occasionally one from the United States; in the latter case usually a "wild west" film with cowboys and Indians, always popular with local audiences and provocative of boisterous applause. All comic and western films go well there. The foreign films are frequently of the society-drama type, which are less favored.

Refreshments Served in Ceiba Theater

The Tivoli Theater in Ceiba seats 1,000. The entire front of the frame structure is occupied by the "cantina," where soft drinks, beer, wines, and liquors are served, as well as sandwiches. On the first presentation of a film the admission prices are 1.25, 1, and 0.50 pesos, local currency, equivalent in United States gold to 51.25, 41, and 20.5 cents. On the second presentation of a film the scale of admission is 1, 0.75, and 0.25 peso (41, 30.75, and 10.25 cents). When the lower scale prevails the house is often filled to capacity.

Usually the show begins at 8 o'clock and lasts until 11, with an intermission, which gives an opportunity to visit the "cantina," although drinks are served to patrons in their seats. Outside several little carts dispense popcorn, which meets with a ready sale, and the street venders also sell native cakes and sweetmeats and "frescoes," or cool drinks, consisting mostly of shaved ice and fruit sirup. The local American population contributes but little to the attendance.

Expenses are comparatively heavy. Frequently the box-office receipts do not meet them, but the bar makes up the deficiency. The cost of the films is $18 gold a night. The proprietor (Mr. J. Figols) says that if he obtained his films from the United States they would cost him $23 a night, but he has had an offer from the Cuban office of an American concern to supply him with films for a period of three months at 1 cent per foot. As his contract for the Guatemala films has six months to run, he has not been able to close with this offer.

Theater Negotiating for American Films

Dr. R. H. Wilson is lessee of the theater in Tela, which seats 400 persons and does a good business one night a week. Formerly it gave four shows a week, but now it is open only on Sundays. Like the Tivoli Theater, in Ceiba, it is on the Guatemala circuit, and therefore it has to use French and Italian films, although the American films are more popular. The price paid is $4 per 1,000 feet for 30 days.

Dr. Wilson has been in negotiation with the manager of the cinematograph in San Pedro Sula for the use of that theater's films, which are procured from the United States, but the best terms offered him, he says, are 50 per cent of the gross receipts. The Tela theater presents 8,000 feet of film at a performance, which lasts an hour and a half, and the admission price is 1, 0.50, and 0.25 peso (41, 20.5, and 10.25 cents).

There is no duty on rented films.—Commerce Reports.

Selznick Tightens Hold

Since Lewis J. Selznick announced that he would no longer permit exchanges where "junk pictures" were handled, to distribute Selznick-Pictures, five branches of the Selznick Enterprises have been formed in as many cities to carry out this policy.

Under the direction of Ben S. Cohen, one of the Selznick division representatives, the following branches of the distributing system were organized on the Pacific coast: San Francisco, 985 Market Street; Los Angeles, 736 South Olive Street; Seattle, 1215 Fourth Avenue.

In Atlanta, Georgia, and Detroit, Michigan, similar action has been taken, and from time to time, wherever it is found necessary in order to maintain control, other branches of the head office will be established.

Marcus Loew, who recently purchased the New York state rights to "The Whip," has turned them over to Mr. Selznick and is marketing this picture through his exchanges.

Heeding the appeal made by the Secretary of the Treasury, William G. McAdoo, Miss Theda Bara, the world-famed William Fox screen artiste, has subscribed a large amount for the purchase of the Liberty Loan Bonds, the proceeds of which are to go towards helping our Allies in the war with Germany.

Pictures such as this are sure to be popular right now. This one is from "The Field of Honor," one of Universal's June Butterflies. It features the lovely Louise Lovely.

Bessie Barriscale in "Milady of Tags and Tatters," Triangle-Ince, and the nurses' class formed at the Ince studios. Enid Bennett, Olive Thomas and Sylvia Bremer are taking charge of the work. Below are Bills Farnum and Hart, chumming together a bit in the open.

Nurses at Ince Studios

That the patriotic spirit shown by Producer Thomas H. Ince in offering his personal services and the facilities of his mammoth motion picture plant to the government has permeated the whole staff, may be gathered from the announcement that a class has been formed at his Triangle studios to learn something of Red Cross nursing.

The class is being instructed in the elements of hospital work by Dr. R. S. Moore, a former army surgeon, now permanently located at the studios.

Dr. Moore numbers Enid Bennett, Sylvia Bremer and Olive Thomas among his star pupils. They are being trained according to American Red Cross requirements in the use of anesthetics, various methods of bandaging wounds and general practice of administering first aid.

The prospective nurses have had little difficulty in obtaining willing "subjects" upon which to demonstrate their skill since the personnel of their staff was announced. The extremely fortunate—though seemingly battered up—man in the photographs is Lambert Hillyer of the scenario staff. We know of no more effective stimulant to recruiting than the announcement that these young ladies will offer their services to Uncle Sam if needed.

Bessie Barriscale, Scullery Maid

Some of the most beautiful costumes and sets that have been seen since the establishment of the Ince studios, will be shown in the production of "Miladi of Tags and Tatters," a forthcoming Triangle feature in which Thomas H. Ince will present Bessie Barriscale.

The opening scenes of this play are laid in an old castle on the isle of Saint Mary, near the mainland of Scotland. The time is during the American revolutionary war. Word is brought that Paul Jones in his famous Bon Homme Richard is hovering off the coast, and the inhabitants of the castle, from the Lord and Lady on down, with the exception of one little scullery maid, played by Bessie Barriscale, all flee. Then the courageous mistress of the pots and pans has a glorious time masquerading in the fine Gainsborough silks and satins of the castle guests, and is mistaken for the Lady of the Manor by both the British troops sent from a nearby garrison, and the landing party from the Bon Homme Richard, who drive the redcoats back. And Bessie finally trips lightly down to the shore and sets sail for American with Paul Jones and his famous ship.

Julia Sanderson Capitulates

Julia Sanderson, who has capitulated to the lure of the screen, and signed with Mutual to appear in the productions made at the Empire All Star studios, needs no introduction to theater goers. Her name blazing forth in electric lights in front of Broadway houses is a familiar sight. Her success on the legitimate stage is well known.

The daughter of an American actor, Albert Sackett, Miss Sanderson made her stage debut in Philadelphia, playing child parts with the Forepaugh Stock Company. She remained with this company five years, concluding in important roles in extensive drama repertoire. Abandoning drama she appeared in chorus roles on tour in 1902-1903, scoring successes as Mrs. Pineapple in "A Chinese Honeymoon," and as Mataya with De Wolf Hopper in "Wang."

In 1907 she appeared in vaudeville for a brief tour, and later returned to musical comedy, her most recent successes being in "Kitty Grey," "The Arcadians," "The Siren," and "The Sunshine Girl."

Griffith Returning

D. W. Griffith, now in Paris, after a month in the trenches, where he has made some special pictures for the French Government, cabled his office last week that he was hurrying home to make a special picture for the Liberty Loan campaign in this country. He will handle a new subject showing what this mammoth loan means to this country in carrying out its part of the world war.

"Black Beauty" Filmed

"Your Obedient Servant," a three-part dramatic story suggested by Anna Sewell's justly famed book, "Black Beauty," will be the next feature Edison Conquest Picture to be distributed by Forum Films, Inc. With three other subjects, it will be released on the Forum program May 21.

Like "Black Beauty," the story is the autobiography of a horse, told in such a way that one's interest in the human characters making up the background is as strong as, or stronger than, that in the career of the steed itself. Through the story told by Black Beauty runs a wide thread of romance concerning Black Beauty's master and the girl whom he loves better than anything else in the world except—his country. The short subjects on this fifth Forum program consist of the following short Edison Conquest Pictures: "Robinson Crusoe," a silhouette version of the book; "Feeding Birds in Winter," a short nature study, and "Struck Out in the Ninth," a two-reel baseball comedy.

Marjorie Rambeau Starts New Play

Marjorie Rambeau, under the direction of Frank Powell, has started work on the sixth of the features in which she is appearing for Mutual.

This is a screen adaptation of "Mary Moreland," the story by Marie Van Vorst, which attracted wide attention when it was published serially in Harper's Bazaar. Following its appearance as a serial Miss Van Vorst's story had wide circulation in book form. "Mary Moreland" has been described as the story of a wonderful woman and its picturization affords a splendid opportunity for Miss Rambeau to display her talent.

Mr. Powell has surrounded Miss Rambeau with a cast which includes Robert Elliott, Augusta Burmester, Agnes Ayre, Aubrey Beattie, Gene La Motte, Frank Ford and Fraser Tarbutt.

"Freckles" Coming May 28

The Lasky adaptation of Gene Stratton Porter's popular novel and play "Freckles" has been scheduled for release on May 28 by Paramount. It presents Jack Pickford and Louise Huff as co-stars for the third time, their previous appearances having been made in the Famous Players' adaptation of "Seventeen" and "Great Expectations."

Harold Lockwood in Metro's unusual story, "Hidden Children."

Among those in the supporting cast is Hobart Bosworth, who once again reverts to the powerful type in the role of the head of the MacLean Lumber Company.

"Freckles" is regarded by producers as being a type of story which is particularly adaptable to motion picture purposes because of the fact that nearly the entire action transpires in exterior settings. After a few scenes in the orphan asylum in which the one-armed Freckles is goaded to fury by the jokes of the other orphans, the boy runs away and we follow his experiences as a fugitive until his strong personality and heroism arouse the interest of MacLean, the lumber man. By MacLean he is given the position of watchman of the valuable Limberlost, the swampy forest which contains almost priceless trees. Practically all the action from this point on takes place in either the lumber camp or in the Limberlost, where Freckles and the Angel have their remarkable romance that so nearly terminates fatally for the youthful hero.

Review Board Lauds Film

A stirring and forceful exposition of one of the greatest problems confronting the human race—a picture millions will wish to see, and yet by its careful and intelligent treatment of a delicate subject there is not one line, scene or situation which could possibly offend the most fastidious.

Such was the unanimous verdict of the National Board of Review, a committee of whose members recently sat in judgment of Edgar Lewis's new nine-reel photodrama of race equality, "The Bar Sinister," which will begin an engagement of indefinite length on May 27 at the Broadway Theater under the direction of Frank G. Hall.

Not a single objection, not a suggestion was made by the censors who reviewed the production, but all complimented Mr. Lewis for his able handling of a theme which, under the guiding hand of a less efficient director, might easily have been marred by scenes that would be apt to offend those who have extreme views on the mooted question of race equality. The race question has been handled with superlative skill by Mr. Lewis, whose experience acquired in the making of such productions as "The Nigger" and "The Barrier" paved the way for his latest success.

Featured Players in "Gray Ghost"

The full cast for the new Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," based on the story written by Arthur Somers Roche—which appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post, as a serial story, is herewith announced:

Hildreth, Emory Johnson; Morn Light, Priscilla Dean; The Gray Ghost, Harry Carter; Hildreth's secretary, Eddie Polo; Morn Light's maid, Gypsy Hart; Jerry Tyron, Lou Short; John Ormstead, Richard La Reno; Jack Ormstead, J. Morris Foster.

The first episode will be in three reels, instead of two. The first seven episodes are entitled as follows: Episode 1, "The Bank Mystery"; Episode 2, "The Pearl Necklace"; Episode 3 has not yet been chosen; Episode 4, "What Happened at Bishops"; Episode 5, "Jerry Tyron Goes to Headquarters and Leaves"; Episode 6, "What Happened at Arabin's"; Episode 7, "Jerry Tyron Obtains His First Clue."

Mary MacLaren and Eddie Polo are featured in a Butterfly release, "Money Madness," issued on May 28. Mary MacLaren is a new star to Butterfly pictures. Her work will be remembered in that Bluebird production, "Shoes." Eddie Polo is known for his work in the Universal serials, "The Broken Coin" and "Liberty," and is also featured in the forthcoming Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost."

Goldwyn Pictures Set New Standards

In an address delivered before the committee on motion pictures of the Federation of Women's Clubs at Hotel Vanderbilt last week, Edith Ellis, playwright and play producer, and chief of the literary staff of Goldwyn Pictures, told her audience of some phases of artistic advancement in motion picture play-production. A brief presentation of Miss Ellis' remarks follows:

By Edith Ellis.

My association with the Goldwyn Picture Corporation has been quite as complete a surprise to myself as to my friends and acquaintances, who are aware of my long-standing conviction that the pictures are far from the artistic influence that has been claimed for them. When Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo and Samuel Goldfish told me of their plans for picture-making, however, I was glad to become a part of an organization that was taking the whole question seriously, from an art standpoint.

I am not speaking of the stars alone nor even of the plays. To have secured such artists as Mary Garden, Mae Marsh, Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy was an extravagant but legitimate pledge of the firm's desire to offer their public the best of stellar acting. To film the play successes which have been produced by Selwyn and Company, and to employ their judgment in the selection of dramatic material, were long steps toward bringing the art of the theater into the productions of the screen world. These, however, were but the high points in the public view. My own experience as a member of the Goldwyn staff has been a satisfying revelation of the tremendous pains and expense to which they are willing to go in order to assure themselves of real art quality in every department.

All the forces marshalled in the Goldwyn service are unique and praiseworthy yet perhaps the most important way in which the public will benefit from this company's productions will be in the wonderful treatment of the settings, in the backgrounds and properties used in screening the plays.

"The Will O' the Wisp"

Mabel Taliaferro, screen and stage star, has returned from Boston, where she starred in Hall Caine's play, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," and has resumed work at the Metro Rolfe Studio. The first of a series of new plays purchased for this popular star is "The Will o' the Wisp," a delightful story of Ireland today. It was written by Katherine Kavanaugh and will be directed by Tod Browning, who recently came east from the Fine Arts studio to become a Metro director.

Miss Taliaferro will play the role of Sheila Desmond, an Irish lassie, the daughter of Magistrate Anthony Desmond, landlord of an impoverished estate. Her beauty attracts, rich and poor, from all parts of the Emerald Isle, who fight for her hand in marriage. The part is a very difficult one and affords Miss Taliaferro an excellent opportunity to display her acting ability.

New Enid Bennett Play

Enid Bennett, the charming bit of femininity who is fast entwining herself in the hearts of the amusement loving public, will soon be seen again on the Triangle program when she is presented by Thomas H. Ince in "The Girl, Glory," by C. Gardner Sullivan. This is a story of a simple village girl and other kindly folks, that will revive the cherished memories of our own home town. It presents, in a pathetic manner, the one failing of Jed Wharton, a Civil War veteran, and the unselfish efforts of his granddaughter, Glory, to wipe out the evil that has mastered him.

Helen Holmes Saved from Death

Knocked unconscious in a fight with a gang of bandits, dragged across the railroad yards, propped up against the front end of a baggage car with her head between the couplers while an oncoming train approaches, Helen Holmes is saved from horrible death in Chapter VII of "The Railroad Raiders," new Signal-Mutual photonovel.

The scene provides the most hair raising thrill of the sensational moving picture serial. Helen's plight is discovered by Thomas Lingham, who plays opposite her in the picture, just in time to pull her to the ground. He throws himself flat on the ties and the train passes over them.

More than a score of Chinamen, in native costume, take part in Chapter VII.

Chapter VII reveals again the superb lighting effects which Director John P. McGowan arranged for "The Railroad Raiders." Trains rush through the night, their blazing headlights, the glow from the firebox and the light from the windows of the coaches forming a most wonderful scene. Much the same effects are obtained for the automobiles which take the guests to the garden party at the home of Lord and Lady Melrose. The garden party scene is beautifully illuminated.

These two striking scenes from chapter seven give you an idea of what "The Railroad Raiders" is like.

VITAGRAPH PLAY SCORES HIT

"Within the Law" Takes New York by Storm—Plays to Sixty Theaters at One Time and Packs Them All

More than sixty theaters, all within a radius of twenty-five miles with New York's city hall as the hub, on May 21 displayed tremendous electric signs announcing that "Within the Law" was being presented. All of these theaters are under the direction of the seven big New York City motion picture circuits, consisting of Marcus Loew, B. S. Moss, B. F. Keith, Mayer and Schneider, William Fox, F. F. Proctor and Sylvester Z. Poli.

The non-competitive booking of all these big circuits is the direct work of Walter W. Irvin, general manager of V. L. S. E., and of George Balsdon, manager of the V. L. S. E. New York Exchange. "Within the Law" is a masterpiece produced by Greater Vitagraph after Bayard Veiller's record-breaking stage success which played to more than four thousand audiences to the tremendous box office receipts of just less than three million dollars.

Some of the theaters in which "Within the Law" opened in the New York City territory on May 21 are:

The contracts with these big city circuit motion picture theaters call for the showing of "Within the Law" for one hundred and twenty days in the week beginning May 21. Several of the big booking agents have obtained options which allow them to extend the runs and it appears as if the picture may be shown indefinitely in several of the houses.

The showing of the same picture for more than three or four days in any of these big circuit houses is the exception rather than the rule. Most of them have a change of program twice a week but in the case of "Within the Law" they have been forced to place their program pictures on the shelf in order to obtained the increased box office receipts as a result of showing "Within the Law."

L-Ko's Ready for June

Julius Stern makes the anouncement that L-Ko's for June are ready for distribution to exhibitors, through the unusual channels—Universal exchanges.

"Dry Goods and Damp Deeds," the L-Ko for June 6 will have Phil Dunham as the featured comedian with Lucille Hutton, Myrtle Sterling and Chas. Inslee in the supporting company. "Chicken Chased and Hen Pecked" will be released June 13 with Mr. Dunham also featured. Miss Sterling, Al Duffy, Mr. Inslee and Katheryn Young will be in the company. These two releases were directed by Vin Moore, under Mr. Blystone's supervision.

"Where Is My Che-ild," June 20, will feature Dan Russell, with Gladys Varden his chief assistant. "A Mexican Mix-Up," in which Sammy Burns will be the featured one, will be distributed June 27 and "A Baby Mix-Up," directed by Noel Smith, and featuring Dan Russell will be the succeeding release.

KERRIGAN TURNS PRODUCER

Noted Screen Artist Heads Corporation Which Will Begin Producing About June 5 in Conjunction with Paralta Plays, Inc.

J. Warren Kerrigan, about June 5, will begin his career as an independent producer at the studio of his own company in Hollywood, Cal.

On the expiration of his contract with Universal, several months ago, he took up the organization of a company to make productions on lines laid down by himself, assisted by his own directors and employees.

Mr. Kerrigan has been appearing on the screen for eleven years and in that time has accumulated a very comfortable competency. Beyond the spur of monetary requirements, his ambitions naturally turned to work which would more fully enhance his standing as a screen star by identifying his name and personality with picture productions of greater magnitude and higher artistic excellence.

Professional friends, producers and exhibitors, believing in his proved dramatic ability, attractive screen personality and popularity, volunteered to help him finance his company by taking the stock which he might desire to allot to them. From his own purse and that of his friends, Mr. Kerrigan, in a few weeks, found himself at the head of his own corporation with a bank account of $200,000 in real money to put into big productions. With this cash in bank, preparations for the work of production were taken up.

While Mr. Kerrigan was at work forming his company, he came in contact with Carl Anderson, Herman Fichtenberg, Nat. I. Brown, Robert T. Kane and Herman Katz, who were then making a nation-wide investigation of conditions in the moving picture industry as a basis for the formation of Paralta Plays, Inc., and the launching of a new co-operative system of booking productions. Learning the details of their plan, Mr. Kerrigan arranged with them to release his new photoplays on the Paralta Plan.

The organization of his staff and the equipment of his studio at Hollywood was placed in the hands of Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta company.

Oscar Apfel will be the supervising director. Mr. Kerrigan hopes to produce from eight to ten big productions a year. All the plays will range from five to nine reels, in accordance with the importance and merit of the stories.

Paul Powell with Fox

Paul Powell, probably the only recognized photoplay director of genius who has not a long career of acting behind him, either on stage or screen, is announced by William Fox as his newest filmmaker. Mr. Powell will join the directorial forces in Hollywood, California.

Mr. Powell will screen the subjects starring gingery George Walsh and Otis Turner. He has had charge of "Smiling George" for the last eight months, and will take Gladys Brockwell under his direction, immediately he finishes "Some Boy!" the picture in which Walsh is working at present.

Paul Powell began his screen career in 1912.

EVELYN NESBIT FILMED

Appears With Russell Thaw, Her Son, in Big Feature Production, "Redemption," Showing at Cohan Theater, New York

The George M. Cohan Theater, Forty-third street and Broadway, New York, became the home of motion picture productions for the first time on May 21, when "Redemption," the big film spectacle with Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, opened there. Hundreds were turned away on the opening night, and if the effect of the film on the audience is any criterion of its worth it is one of the most magnificent productions of the present season.

The story is based on the former life of Evelyn Nesbit, yet is distinctly away from it. The audience came to see the initial performance without knowing what to expect and without knowing how closely the film would follow the life of Evelyn Nesbit. Never before in the pictures has a situation of this kind arisen, in which the actual life of the player was used as a basis upon which to build a story.

The outstanding feature of the production, which was conceived and executed under the direction of Julius Steger and Jos. A. Golden, is the magnificent work of Miss Nesbit herself. After a trade showing she received several offers from big producers to tie herself up with a contract, indicating the estimation in which she is held by the makers of pictures. Having no previous screen experience, and practically no dramatic stage experience, she did wonderfully well, handling a difficult part with a charm of manner and strength which became more evident as the picture progressed. Below are two scenes from the play.

It is not known what disposition will be made of the film. The run at the Cohan Theater is indefinite, and if the enthusiasm of the opening night audience is any criterion it will remain there for a long time. It represents something absolutely new and unique in the field of photoplays.

Distribution of the feature will be announced in MOTOGRAPHY later.

Earle Williams, star of Greater Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon productions, has just received word that he was declared the winner of a popularity contest conducted by the Minneapolis Journal.

Car Rolls Down Embankment

Helen Holmes, daring young heroine of the screen, manages to roll down a railway embankment in a Pullman car and escape without a scratch, in Chapter VI of "The Railroad Raiders," Signal-Mutual photonovel. Chapter VI is entitled "The Overland Disaster" and is released May 14.

Helen Holmes has never been seen to better advantage than in this latest chapter of "The Railroad Raiders." Miss Holmes is everywhere in the picture, flipping cars on fast moving trains, boarding engines and remaking train schedules after cutting into the train dispatcher's wire from all sorts of remote mountain way stations, fording rivers up to the neck in icy water and holding up members of the raiding gang at the point of her trusty automatic.

Tourneur Directs Elsie Ferguson

Elsie Ferguson has arrived in New York following the conclusion of "Shirley Kay," one of the season's most successful theatrical offerings, and has commenced her picture activities for Artcraft Pictures. Miss Ferguson's first picture, "Barbary Sheep," by Robert Hitchen, will be staged under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, producer of the Mary Pickford pictures, "A Poor Little Rich Girl" and "The Pride of the Clan," as well as various other recent film successes.

The story of "Barbary Sheep" is laid in Algeria and as a book proved Robert Hitchen's greatest seller since "The Garden of Allah." Mr. Tourneur several years ago spent many months in the northern part of Africa and his familiarity with the country will prove a great asset to him in the production of this picture.

Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Evelyn Greeley will appear as the leading personages of "The Price of Pride" early in July. In this World-Picture Brady-Made Mr. Blackwell plays two half-brothers who are so much alike that one is convicted of a train hold-up committed by the other. This hold-up, by the by, is said to be a remarkably realistic affair, particularly in the phase showing the bandits "going through" the Pullman sleeper and relieving the startled passengers of their money and jewelry.

Two of the scenes from "Redemption," which opened at the George M. Cohan Theater in New York on May 21, and Evelyn Nesbit, who is the star of the production.

You Should Know This

MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago:

Old reliable MOTOGRAPHY has scored again! She calmly stood by and watched all the picture papers swallow hook and all—first, on the Essanay-Doris Kenyon story, and then on the Sunday question in Indiana. These are but two examples in which MOTOGRAPHY got the authentic dope and got it first.

And by the way—MOTOGRAPHY's editorials hit their mark.

MOTOGRAPHY is one of life's necessities. It is determined in its purpose to depict faithfully the various phases of motion picture life.—Very truly yours, Chester W. Cleveland, 410 East John Street, Champaign, Illinois.

Coming Universals

"Money Madness," a five part Butterfly Picture, heads the Universal program for the week of May 28. This is an unusually strong film production in which Mary MacLaren and Eddie Polo have the leading roles. The action throughout is rapid and the situations thrilling while the suspense is maintained from the very opening of the picture. The story tells of the attempt to wreck a strong financial institution by an unscrupulous official who places the guilt on an innocent man.

The feature for Tuesday, May 29 is the Gold Seal, three part society and mountain drama, "The Stolen Actress," with Ruth Stonehouse in the stellar role. The Victor one act drama, "The Gunman's Gospel," featuring Jack Mulhall is the other Tuesday release.

Heading the releases on Wednesday, May 30, is a two part L-Ko comedy, "Roped Into Scandal." The regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly will also appear on this date.

"An Eight Cylinder Romance," a two part comedy drama featuring Rena Rogers and J. M. Foster, will be released Thursday, May 31. Margarita Fischer in the Big U drama, "Defiance," is the other offering of this date.

Little Zoe Rae, the child actress, has the principal role in the Victor comedy drama, "By Speshul Delivery," which will appear Friday, June 1. The Imp drama, "The Puzzle Woman," with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford and Issue No. 21 of the Universal Screen Magazine are the other Friday releases.

A drama of railroad life in two reels is offered Saturday, June 2, under the Bison brand. It is entitled "No. 10 Westbound," and features Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict. The third issue of Universal Current Events and the Joker comedy, "Uneasy Money," with William Franey will also be released on Saturday.

"The Purple Scar," a two act human interest drama, featuring Constance Johnson and the Powers split reel "When Noah's Ark Embarked," a comedy cartoon, and "The Perils of the Yangste," a Dorsey educational, are the offerings for Sunday, June 3.

The twelfth episode of the Universal msytery serial, "The Voice on the Wire," entitled "The Fifth Victim," will be released during the week.

"The Impostor," is the title of a five-act drama being filmed at Universal City and featuring dainty Molly Malone.

Mary Garden—the Remarkable

From The Little Review.

Mary Garden! She brings a sharp, new ecstasy of life, an inexorable sadness of love; she brings an energy that is grace, and the calm that is energy; she brings a frankness that is mystery.

I don't know where to begin to write about Mary Garden's art. There is art within art—and then there is Mary Garden. I wish I could tell beautifully what a great creative artist Mary Garden is. It is one thing for the artist to create a character within the outlines drawn by the composer; to put himself in the place of the character and act as he would act. But the creative artist takes the character to himself, and then creates from his imagination in his own image—the image of his soul. The more universal the artist, the greater his power to reveal his soul in different images. What an infinite thing Mary Garden has shown her soul to be: Thais, Carmen, Tosca, Salome!

Mary Garden is a great decorative actress. She can give you the whole spirit and atmosphere of an historical costume by a mere silhouette of its lines. And she can draw in the whole psychology of a scene with one line of her body—the line of her walk. If she is to dominate a situation with her intellect or her beauty, she walks from the center of her intelligence which is the head, giving a length of line that makes the slightest step a stride; if it is a matter of the soul, she walks from the center of her presence, which is the top plane of the chest, moving like a Presence—not like a being; when it is love she walks straight from her heart, with a line that repeats a pain; when it is passion she sinks the line to a point lower than the hip, and prowls destructively.

Mary Garden is the biggest thing on our horizon today. To think that flesh could be so intelligent! She gives as generously of her undraped body as a Rodin statue, and the audience gives her back their applause, grudgingly, not knowing the great art of her.

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Ventilation and War Tax

I am writing you in regard to ventilation. Now I want to know if one 18-inch exhaust fan will be sufficient to ventilate a building 75 feet long and 23 feet wide with a 14-foot ceiling. There are 202 seats in the house.

There are five openings 18 inches square above the front doors, also two windows and one door in the back of the building. I have nine wall fans, two 16-inch and seven 12-inch fans. Please let me know at once, as I have a chance to buy an 18-inch exhaust fan but I do not want to make any mistake in ventilating my room.

In regard to the war tax. Do you think that the exhibitor will be taxed a cent a foot on every foot of film that he runs?

Please let me know at once about the above questions.—Wm. T., Carlisle, Indiana.

In regards to the size fan for your theater, I would advise you to buy a 24-inch fan. According to the size of the room and the seating capacity you should have that size fan to do the work properly. Of course you could use the 18-inch fan and it would help considerably in the ventilation of the room but it would not be large enough to ventilate the room properly.

Install the fan at the rear of the room, that is over the rear door if possible. To get results from the fan, you will have to keep the rear door and rear windows closed. With the wall fans that you have and a 24-inch exhaust fan you should be able to keep the patrons of your house very comfortable and at the same time have good ventilation.

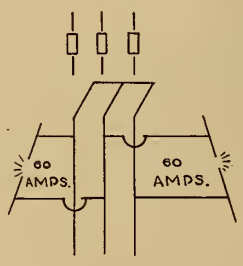
Regarding the war tax on theaters. As near as I can find out, I am told that there will be no tax on houses charging five cents admission and that ten per cent of the gross receipts will be charged on houses charging ten cents or more and that the ten per cent will be added on the admission in the way of a stamp. At the present time I do not believe that anyone knows exactly just what the tax will be or how levied but the above information was given me by one of the attorneys for the Exhibitors' League and I take it for granted that he is pretty well posted on the subject.

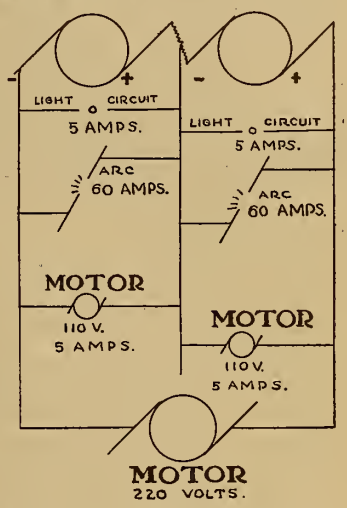
What Do You Think About It?

I am learning to be an operator and would like to have you answer the following simple questions for me. I saw an answer that you gave to an operator in MOTOGRAPHY as follows: The question was: "If you were working on the three-wire system and you were drawing 60 amps. off of one side of the line and 60 amps. off of the other side of the line and the neutral fuse was blown or removed, what would be the effect?"

I saw your answer and it seems to me that it would cut the arc off completely, instead of throwing the two lamps in series. Have I got this diagram connected up right? If I wanted to leave the 220-volt motor off could I run on a single line instead of the three-wire system? What is the difference between the positive and negative wire? Why is it imperative that the positive be the top carbon in the arc?—Robt. Cummins, Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Below are the two diagrams referred to.





In regard to the question and answer in reference to the fuse blowing or being removed with two 60 amp. lamps on a three-wire circuit, I think that you will find that the question stated that both lamps were supposed to be burning when the fuse blew or was removed.

Take it for granted that both lamps are burning when this happens. Then the two lamps will be in series and both will continue to burn as long as the length of the two arcs are equal. Whenever either one of the lamps are shorted through the carbons, then the other lamp will be thrown on 220 volts and the fuse on that line will be blown out. If the carbons on either lamp are separated far enough apart so as to lose the arc, then the other lamp will go out too.

I think that if you will read the question over again and then study the diagram with the above explanation you will understand it.

The diagram of the three-wire system is all right except you do not show any switch or fuses on the mains, but it is understood that you intend for them to be there. I do not quite understand what you mean by running on a single wire. I suppose that you mean on a two-wire circuit. If you do, then you could use a two-wire circuit, providing you did not use the 220-volt motor.

You could even run on a single wire, by grounding one side (negative side) of the line and pulling the fuse on that side. Ground it between the fuse box and lamps and motors, but this is not allowed by the board of fire underwriters nor the electric light companies, so do not try it.

I am merely telling you this to answer your question. Positive electricity expresses the condition of the point of an electrified body having the higher energy from which it flows to a lower level. Negative electricity is a reverse condition of the above. The reason that it is imperative that the positive wire be connected to the top carbon is this.

The crater of the arc always forms on the positive carbon when using D. C. and therefore the entire energy of the current is used toward the forming of a crater of ample dimension on one carbon, the positive; and for that reason it is imperative that the positive wire be connected to top carbon.

About Rheostats

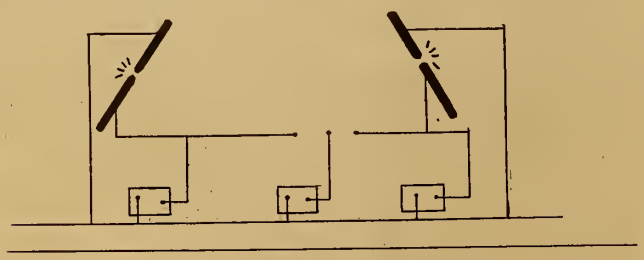
I am using two machines in the booth and have been using one rheostat on each machine, but the ampereage is not high enough and I want to use one extra rheostat that I have in the booth in multiple with the one that I have on each machine now. Can this be done?

The idea is this: I want one rheostat connected so that I can use it in multiple with either rheostat on either machine, and at the same time have the other machine with one rheostat in series as before. If you can figure this out, will you please give me a diagram of it in the near future? Thanking you in advance, I am, Yours—Harry F. Caplin, Great Falls, South Dakota.

I will be frank with you. I never attempted to use one rheostat in multiple with another and then switch it to another but I will give you a diagram on it and I am sure that it will work all right.

You will have to use a single pole, double throw switch and connect one contact of the extra rehostat to the center contact of the switch. Then run a line from one end connection of the switch to the connection that feeds to the lamp on one rheostat and then run a line from the other end connection to the connection that feeds to the other lamp from the other rheostat.

All three rheostats must be connected on the same main feed. The following diagram will explain the above directions. When connected up you will have one lamp in series-multiple with two rheostats and the other lamp will be in series with one rheostat, and by leaving the switch open, both lamps will be just the same as you are using them now.



Are Women Good "Roadmen"?

"Are women a success as motion picture salesmen?"

This question answered in the negative last week by the publicity department of V. L. S. E. has caused such a furore in several motion picture booking centers that several women have issued a challenge to any of the men now booking pictures to prove that men are better bookers than the women.

Miss Edith Sullivan and Miss Josephine Hernon, assistants to George Balsdon, manager of the New York branch of V. L. S. E. are two of the young women ready to place their abilities in competition with any men salesmen in the business. Both have had a long experience in booking pictures and both point to their records with pride.

When V. L. S. E. answered the question "Are women a success as motion picture salesmen?" in the negative, the answer was not meant to apply to young women who administered to the wants of the exhibitors in the offices of the different film distributing concerns. The answer applied only to traveling salesmen.

"Punch" Scenes in Selznick-Picture

While most melodramas, both stage and screen varieties, depend for their success upon one big "Punch" scene, Herbert Brenon's production of "The Lone Wolf" for Selznick-Pictures contains three big incidents, any one of which would be sufficient to establish the piece as a supreme thriller.

The first of these is the burning of Troyon's, a Paris hotel. This, in the story, is done by a gang of criminals to conceal a murder which they have committed. When Mr. Brenon produced the scene, in the grounds of his studio on the Palisades, opposite Riverside Drive, it created a sensation on that aristocratic thoroughfare. It was one evening in the course of the festivities attending the visit of Marshal Joffre and Viviani, and thousands gathered along the parkway speculating upon the cause of the conflagration. The curious blue lights of the studio added a touch of mystery to the scene.

Jane Grey in New Play

"Her Fighting Chance," produced by Arthur L. Jacobs and starring Miss Jane Grey, was given a trade showing at the Broadway Theater, New York, and was pronounced a success. Replete with red-blooded situations, all of which were deftly handled by Edwin Carewe, the director, "Her Fighting Chance" will rank among the best six reel productions of the season.

A photodrama in the creation of which are linked together the names of three persons so eminent in their respective fields as Miss Grey, James Oliver Curwood, from whose novel "The Fiddling Man," the photoplay was adapted, and Mr. Carewe, offers a combination of star, author and director of unusual interest to devotees of the silent drama, and already there has been spirited bidding for the territorial rights.

Norma Talmadge in "Poppy"

Norma Talmadge in "Poppy," an adaptation of Cynthia Stockley's charming novel of South African life, is the next Selznick-Pictures release. Director Edward Jose has finished cutting and assembling the picture and it will be shown for review this week.

Joseph M. Schenck, president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, Mr. Selznick and all his executive staff attended a private showing of "Poppy" last week and all enthusiastically pronounced it by far the finest production in which Miss Talmadge has yet appeared. The central role affords the talented young star an extraordinary chance to display the versatility that has made her famous, a gift that enables her to make the transition from childhood to maturity with remarkable ease.

Miriam Cooper will soon appear in another production by R. A. Walsh, William Fox's famous director who produced "The Honor System." The picture will be known as "The Innocent Sinner."

Perhaps you wouldn't guess from this meditative likeness that Madge Kennedy is one of the stage's best comediennes, but she is. Comedy is serious business, you known—it takes brains to be funny.

Praise for Madge Kennedy

Madge Kennedy has youth, freshness and beauty. Her smile has won the friendship of a nation. She is rated as the finest and ablest comedienne in the entire world of the theater and she will for a long period of years be starred exclusively in Goldwyn Pictures. She has left the stage, where she earned a very large salary for herself and made enormous profits for her managers, to devote all of her time to the screen.

Here are some of the things the critic says of her:

Cleveland Plain Dealer: Goldwyn can well afford to announce Madge Kennedy as "the girl who makes friends." She will be America's most popular screen comedienne.

Jackson, Mich., Patriot: Madge Kennedy is a noteworthy addition to the Goldwyn collection of stars.

Boston Journal: Madge Kennedy has had the most sensational success of any of the younger actresses. . . . If there is anyone quite like her we know three managers who will give a fortune for her services. . . . Madge Kennedy is matchless.

Chicago Examiner: All hail Madge Kennedy of Goldwyn Pictures. She is the greatest popular favorite among comediennes and the only one of her type.

Philadelphia Ledger: And now Goldwyn has captured Madge Kennedy, a star of immense appeal and nation-wide popularity. Who next?

San Francisco Examiner: Madge Kennedy is a California native daughter and the ranking comedienne of the American stage.

N. Y. Morning Telegraph: Goldwyn has robbed the stage of another great favorite by signing Madge Kennedy.

Rocky Mountain News: Goldwyn is fortunate in signing Madge Kennedy. . . . No other comedienne can touch her.

New York World: Madge Kennedy is considered the best farce actress in America. . . . She is a Goldwyn star.

Atlanta American: Madge Kennedy has been starred in "Over Night," "Little Miss Brown," "Twin Beds" and "Fair and Warmer"—the last two being America's greatest farces.

Managers Tour South and West

Jules Burnstein, general manager of the Monmouth Film Corporation, has returned to New York from an extended tour of the West in the interest of his organization. W. E. Kesting, his assistant, returned the week previous from a similar tour in the South. They visited the various Mutual Branches in order to acquaint the Branch managers with their product, the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal."

Harry McRae Webster, president and director of the company, has just finished another production called "The Devil's Playground," which promises to be a great success. It is also understood another big production is under way in the studios of the Monmouth Film Corporation. Details, however, are lacking on this new feature.

To assist in the taking of the military census in the City of New York, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have offered space on the seventh floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, for the purpose of maintaining a place of registration.

Patriotic Preparedness Film

Every angle of the movement of the United States to enter the great war as a determining factor is shown in a new film "Uncle Sam Afloat and Ashore," issued by Selig and distributed through General Film Company.

All the activities of the American navy and army are presented—dreadnaughts, submarines, torpedo boats, aeroplanes, hydroplanes and coast defense batteries, being shown in battle practice, while every detail of army preparedness is reviewed graphically, with a great deal of attention also to the manufacture and transport of munitions. Altogether the aim has been to present in a concise and forcibly interesting form the more picturesque military preparations of the country. Besides having the popular appeal so much desired in the film houses, the film has especial use as an educational subject adapted to display in schools and colleges. It is expected to stimulate enlistments greatly and to promote an ineradicable patriotic spirit.

Mine Plot in "Jimmie Dale"

The story of "Two Crooks and a Knave," the tenth of the Mutual series of pictures, "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal," revolves around the plots and counterplots to gain possession of the chart of a mine in Alaska.

The adventures of the said chart are many:

It is given to Mrs. Breen, a charwoman, by her husband.

Mrs. Breen entrusts it to Mittel for safe keeping.

Mittel robs his own safe of the paper and reports to the police that someone has robbed him.

The head of the underworld offers a crook $10,000 to get the paper out of Mittel's safe.

The Tocsin warns Jimmie Dale of both these schemes for securing the chart.

Jimmie Dale looks for the paper in Mittel's safe and finds it gone.

Jimmie Dale surprises Mittel and forces him to give up the chart.

Jimmie Dale is chased by the police as the safe robber.

Jimmie Dale returns the chart to Mrs. Breen with a warning to use the banks in the future.

The Monmouth-Mutual, "Jimmy Dale" series, episode 10, "Two Crooks and a Knave."

Triangle Releases for June 10

William S. Hart and Louise Glaum are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for June 10. Hart is starred by Thomas H. Ince in "Wolf Lowry," a smashing drama of the wild desert country, written by C. T. Dazey, and personally directed by Hart. Louise Glaum has a vehicle well suited to her vivid personality in "Love or Justice?", written by Lambert Hillyer, and directed by Walter Edwards, under the supervision of Ince.

As "Wolf Lowry," William S. Hart takes the part of a ranchman, a grim, taciturn man, who is a virtual king of his vast domain. The story is woven about the one big love adventure of this solitary man's life. Hart's realistic characterization is worked out against a background of typical western color. Many of the scenes show life as it is lived on a big cattle ranch with all the old-time "pep" and strenuous romance incident to the handling of wild "longhorns" and an equally untamed band of Mexican and American knights of the saddle. Hart is capably supported by Margery Wilson, who has one of the most sympathetic roles of her screen career.

In "Love or Justice?" Louise Glaum takes the part of a beauty of the underworld, who, despite her environment is gifted with brains and a sense of single-hearted devotion to the one who has aroused her love. Like many women of her type, she does not flinch from making a supreme sacrifice when convinced that it will add to the prestige of the man she has become attached to. Unusual photography and a strong supporting cast, including Charles Gunn, Jack Richardson, J. Barney Sherry and Dorcas Matthews, raise this production far above the average.

Helen Gibson Joins Universal

Helen Gibson has joined the Universal forces, and is now at Universal City looking over scripts for forthcoming productions in which she will be featured.

President Carl Laemmle, upon his arrival at the Coast last week, signed a contract with Miss Gibson to appear in a series of two reel pictures of railroad life, a type of photodrama that has brought fame to the adventurous heroine of more than a hundred thrilling pictures, in which sheer nerve and absolute fearlessness were the dominating requisites of the role played.

Wholesome Stories Coming

The literary works of Miss Clara E. Laughlin are to be presented on the motion picture screen by the Wholesome Films Corporation, the newly organized Chicago producing and distributing company, headed by Milton Daily, A. M. Allen and W. P. Stanhope.

Miss Laughlin, known to millions of American readers for her popular fiction, is contributing a remarkable series of daily articles to metropolitan newspapers. The subject matter of these articles, as well as Miss Laughlin's novels, will be presented to the screen.

"We believe that the film presentation of Miss Laughlin's novels will bring to the vast American picture loving public, a new standard of screen wholesomeness," declared M. J. Weisfeldt, general manager of the Wholesome Films Corporation. "Miss Laughlin's works are typical of what we shall offer on the Wholesome Program."

Among many other stories, Miss Laughlin wrote "The Penny Philanthropist." A unique feature in connection with this work is the fact that a certain Minneapolis capitalist purchased 1,000 copies, which he distributed among his friends.

Other stories of Miss Laughlin's pen are: "Stories of Authors' Loves," "The Evolution of a Girl's Ideal," "The Gleaners," "Everybody's Birthright," "When Jay Begins," "When My Ship Comes Home," "The Work-a-Day Girl," etc. There are two more books by Miss Laughlin now on the presses.

It is the plan of the Wholesome Film Corporation to begin production on some of Miss Laughlin's writings as soon as she can put them in scenario form. Other "Wholesome" announcements are expected soon.

Goldwyn in Canada

Simultaneous with the releasing of its productions in the United States and elsewhere in September, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will enter actively into the Canadian field through the medium of Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., a company just organized as the distributing medium for the Dominion.

Goldwyn offices will be in active operation in six important Canadian cities in June, by which time the American offices will also be opened for business.

The head offices of Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., are already in operation at 37 Yonge street, Toronto, Ontario, and correspondence with Dominion exhibitors is all handled from that city.

The five other cities in which Goldwyn offices will be operated are Montreal, St. John, N. B., Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

Publications will be begun at once from Toronto for the "Goldwyn Pictures Bulletin," a Canadian news and service sheet for exhibitors, to fully acquaint them with the pictures of this rapidly expanding organization.

Music for "The Mirror"

The special music suggested in the cue sheet of the Mutual star production, "The Mirror," featuring Marjorie Rambeau, the Broadway favorite, is selected with a view of emphasizing and pointing some very intense and characteristic action.

The love theme for Blanche (played by Marjorie) and Bob, the artistic husband, is an appealing, tender melody, "Told at Twilight," of Huerter, and depicts the true and tender love of Blanche.

In her dream, induced by the alluring description drawn of the delights of the great white way, by the theatrical manager who tries to persuade her to forsake the domestic life for that of the stage, she is transported to the hectic and riotous life of cafes, which affords the opportunity for introducing some of the latest popular hits, such as "Allah's Holiday" by Friml, "You're the Girl," from the great musical comedy success, "Go to It," "Jazz" Fox Trot, and others.

Married Flirts' Difficulties

The difficulties which beset a flirting husband when he sought to "keep a date" with a woman other than his wife are pictured in "Two of a Kind," the Strand-Mutual comedy which is released May 23. The troubles which the wife met when she attempted to carry out a similar affair furnish an interesting contrast and add to the amusement of the photoplay.

Both affairs end in a double raid on a gambling resort in the slums and Billie Rhodes, the wife, and her husband, are both arrested.

NEW ESSANAY PROGRAM

Schedule to Be Devoted Mainly to Comedies and Comedy Dramas to Dispel Depression Caused by War

Essanay has re-arranged its entire program for this summer, and probably for the winter to come. Anticipating a depression which will sweep the country as a result of the war, George K. Spoor, president of that organization, has announced that practically all future Essanay feature releases will be of the straight comedy or comedy-drama type. To make people laugh and forget their trubles—the suffering of their relatives in the war zone—will be the one and only aim of these pictures. Acting along that line, Mr. Spoor announces he has purchased the rights to many fiction stories written in the light vein. These will be picturized and put on the market as soon as possible.

Among the noted stars, both of the screen and stage, who will appear in these productions will be Taylor Holmes, late of the stage success, "His Majesty, Bunker Bean;" Bryant Washburn, creator of the famous Skinner of the screen; Jack Gardner, one of the best known of musical comedy celebrities, who already has been launched in a series of screen comedy-dramas of far Western life; Marguerite Clayton and others.

"Moving Pictures will play an essential part in this great war in which our country is now engaged," said Mr. Spoor. "The sooner exhibitors come to a realization of this fact, the better they will be enabled to meet the demands of their patrons.

I have just received elaborate reports from our offices in London and Paris. These reports cover the changes which the war has wrought in pictures in those countries. Whereas photo-dramas which tore at the heart and unfolded the depressing conditions of life were in vogue prior to the opening of the war, the fact is just the reverse now. The people have enough to depress them with the suffering which their kinsmen are undergoing on the battlefields. They demand pictures which will ease their minds momentarily. Comedy-dramas and straight comedies are what they want, and are about the only pictures they will patronize.

It will be up to motion pictures to do in this country the major part in stemming the swelling tide of depression which in all probability will seek footing in this country, because motion pictures reach the greatest number of people in the widest range of territory. In fact they come within reach of all.

Therefore exhibitors should be forewarned to provide their summer and fall programs with pictures of the lighter vein—pictures which will make their patrons laugh away their tears and fears of what may be happening to their loved ones across the seas.

It is for that reason that Essanay will give preference in their productions to comedy-dramas and straight comedies—pictures which will make the women and children forget the butchery going on in the outside world.

"Filling His Own Shoes," presenting Bryant Washburn in a screen version of a novelette by Henry C. Rowland, is the first of Essanay's program thus outlined. This comedy-drama of the adventures of an American shoe clerk in a Turkish harem, will be released June 11.

The first of the Essanay-Westerns, featuring Jack Gardner, will follow. "Land of Long Shadows" is its title. The release date will be June 18. "The Man Who Was Afraid," a feature with Bryant Washburn in the lead, will be next.

Following these at the rate approximately of two per month will come "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," presenting Taylor Holmes in his debut on the screen. This feature will be a picturization of the story by Clarence Buddington Kelland in the Saturday Evening Post, then "Skinner's Baby," the third of the famous Skinner pictures with Bryant Washburn, supported by Hazel Daly and the original company; "The Range Boss," the second of the Essanay-Westerns; "The Golden Idiot," "Lost Paradise," and others.

The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service will release all these films, and already has opened its bookings on them.

"Daughter" in England

The premiere performance in England of William Fox's beautiful million-dollar fantasy, "A Daughter of the Gods," in which Annette Kellermann is starred, took place at the famous London Opera House in the metropolis on Monday night, May 21. A symphony orchestra of fifty pieces played the elaborate musical score.

New Gail Kane Drama

Gail Kane's second production for Mutual under her contract with American, "The Serpent's Tooth," has been scheduled for release May 28. It follows closely the release of "Whose Wife?", which won the general approval of reviewers and exhibitors, and has been heavily booked.

In "The Serpent's Tooth" Miss Kane is a Puritan maid, the sweetheart of the village doctor, the bride of a wealthy New Yorker, the suffering wife of a drunken husband, the unconscious victim of morphine and eventually again the sweetheart of her first love.

Gail Kane was pronounced by dramatic critics one of the most fascinating of Broadway favorites, and her success in "The Hyphen" resulted in a literal bombardment of offers to enter motion pictures. She left Broadway in January for Santa Barbara, and has been hard at work at the American studios ever since.

Gail Kane as ministering angel in her second screen production for Mutual. Not so bad to be saved by a woman like Gail Kane, eh?

PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

"Freckles" and "Unconquered" the Pictures Par Excellence to Be Released by Paramount Week of May 28

Louise Huff and Jack Pickford in "Freckles" and Fannie Ward in "Unconquered" are the two featured pictures which Paramount will release the week of May 28.

Surrounding these features will be the 68th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 69th of the series of weekly trips around the world, conducted by Burton Holmes, in which he takes his fellow-journeyers on a trip through Java, and a Black Diamond Comedy entitled "Susie of the Follies."

"Freckles," a story by Gene Stratton Porter, is one of the greatest fiction successes of the generation. It has already succeeded admirably as a play. The opportunities offered the Lasky Company for picturesque outdoor settings and speedy, thrilling action, make the success of this picture inevitable. It is one of the big love stories that "gets" you right from the start.

There is no stronger theme in all the dramatic roster than motherlove, the main subject of "Unconquered," in which Fannie Ward plays the leading role. The story is vital, big and gripping.

In the 68th edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, there are three tremendous subjects dealt with; the story of "The Awakening of America," a cartoon, which is a remarkable piece of animation, is sure to receive a patriotic response from any audience. "The Training of an Eight-Oared Crew," is another interesting subject, dealing with the rowing races, a sport that can be compared in popularity, with no other taken up by the universities and colleges. These pictures show how the young giants pull the shells to victory, how they are trained, the story being told in a very interesting manner.

Another "Picto Puzzle" by Sam Loyd, is also contained in this week's magazine.

Burton Holmes, that ever interesting traveler, takes his travelers on a trip through Java in this week's picture. This journey might well be called a trip through the Netherlands' India, where everything is different from what you have ever seen anywhere else.

The Black Diamond Comedy for this week is entitled "Susie of the Follies," and tells the story of how a husband, being given a short vacation by his dutiful wife, goes back to his old life and takes a flier at the Follies and meets one of his old flames; the story tells of a little escapade which follows, and how he gets himself into all sorts of trouble.

Vitagraph Plays Break Records

"The Girl Philippa" and "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," two of Greater Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon features, have broken all booking records of the motion picture industry in the United States, according to Albert W. Goff, assistant general manager of V. L. S. E., the distributing company for the Greater Vitagraph product.

"The Girl Philippa" was released on February 12th last and has been booked in every city in the United States of more than one hundred thousand population, with the exception of Omaha, and in ninety-two cities with a population of between twenty and one hundred thousand.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," was released on April 9 last and has been booked in every city in the country with a population of more than one hundred thousand, with the exception of Boston, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. Like "The Girl Philippa," it has been booked in hundreds of smaller cities..

Since February 12 the V. L. S. E. sales force has closed 792 bookings for "The Girl Philippa," very few of which were for less than two days following the V. L. S. E. idea of persuading the exhibitors of the country to do away with the daily change of program and run a picture just as long as it proved to be a money maker.

Philip O. Gross, Jr., manager of the Strand Theater, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, appeared to have voiced the sentiments of the great majority of the exhibitors who have run "The Girl Philippa" when, under the date of May 13, he wrote:

"'The Girl Philippa' is one of the greatest productions I have ever shown, with Anita Stewart, at her best, supported by an all star cast. My audiences were amazed at this stupendous production; and I can truthfully say all box office records were broken."

A postscript to the letter of Mr. Gross reads:

"Impossible to handle the crowds. Hundreds turned away but I am sure they will return during the week."

TO HAVE OWN COMPANY

Bessie Barriscale Will Begin First Independent Production in June Upon Expiration of Present Contract with Triangle Corporation

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Plays Corporation, who has established offices in Los Angeles, has taken over the studio of the Clune Company for one of the Paralta subsidiary producing concerns.

This studio, located at Melrose avenue and Gower street in Hollywood, is one of the best equipped in that center of the industry. The grounds cover an area of about 18 acres.

As soon as Bessie Barriscale finishes her contract with the Triangle Company in June she will begin work on one of her own plays in this new studio. Robert T. Kane, acting for the Bessie Barriscale Feature Company, has already engaged James Young as one of the three directors who will supervise the dramatic side of Miss Barriscale's productions.

In the next twelve months she expects to produce eight or ten seven to nine-reel features. Mr. Young is now in Los Angeles conferring with Miss Barriscale in relation to the details of the first story to be filmed, which is founded on Grace Miller White's novel, "Rose O' Paradise."

Pending the completion of Miss Barriscale's own studio, which is now well under way, she and her company will work at the Clune establishment.

New honors are coming to Anita Stewart, the dainty star of Greater Vitagraph. At the recent Actor's Fund Fair in the grand Central Palace, New York, Miss Stewart, acting as auctioneer, introduced the dainty pajama style that has since been called the "Anita Stewart Pajama." About the same time, a big store in Seattle named a gown after her, and now a song has been dedicated to her; it is entitled, "My Mother's Lullaby," the words being written by Charles Louis Ruddy and the music by Harold Brown Freeman. Her picture appears on the cover and the dedication reads: "To Miss Anita Stewart, the Sweetest Star in Filmdom."

COMING MUTUALS

Gail Kane Makes Second Appearance on Schedule of May 28—Serial Chapters and Good Comedies Appear

"The Serpent's Tooth" is Gail Kane's second American feature production, and will be released through Mutual on May 28. It is a melodramatic story which affords Miss Kane opportunity for heavy emotional acting.

Gail Kane firmly established herself in the favor of the public in her first Mutual production and this second feature will therefore be doubly valuable. There are a variety of points which can be used for advertising which will be sure to appeal to all tastes.

It is a sermon against the drug evil and shows the way in which the habit will break down health and morals. It shows how money and fast friends will change a man's whole life.

It shows how a woman can use her love to make or break a man's life. It shows that there is nothing more despicable than a false friend.

Added Thrills in "The Railroad Raiders"

"A Knotted Cord" is the title of Chapter VIII of the photo-novel "The Railroad Raiders." Play up the fact that in this chapter Helen Holmes performs one of the most daring "stunts" she has ever attempted. In an auto, she makes a leap of twenty feet between the pier and a moving vessel, and lands right side up with care, on the deck of the boat, with the engine still running.

Manufacturers, salesmen and owners of automobiles will be interested in seeing this spectacular feat performed in a machine, and a special invitation sent to all of these in your town will undoubtedly bring a record crowd.

Eleventh "Jimmie Dale" Story

As the title of the story, "A Rogue's Defeat," suggests, Jimmie Dale, as the Grey Seal, foils the attempt of a scoundrel to force a man to make him a payment of $50,000 which is not yet due. This two-reel featurette is released on June 1.

Comedy Offerings

On May 28 will come to the screen the second of Marie Cahill's comedies, entitled "Patsy's Pardner," in which the fun centers around Miss Cahill's pardner, "Judge Barker," her bulldog.

The Strand comedy of the week, ready May 30 and featuring Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco, is "Bluffing Father."

"Jerry's Master Stroke," with George Ovey playing the lead, is the Cub comedy for May 31.

One Reel Topicals

"Mutual Tours Around the World," scheduled for May 29, shows views of Notre Dame, the great church of Paris and intimate views of its gargoyles, expensive Gothic structure and the clock gallery. Another section shows Teneriffe, one of Spain's Canary Islands; and still another, a pretty Bavarian lake, Koenigsee.

"Mutual Weekly," released May 30, contains the latest news of the world as well as fashion pictures.

"Reel Life," ready May 31, shows the making of barrels by the natives of Barbados. A patriotic section advocates the conservation of all resources during wartime by the saving of tin cans and using them again. How to camp out while touring in an automobile is an interesting section. How 80,000 pounds of dynamite acts when it is moving 400,000 tons of rock is a spectacular feature.

Military Film Praised

"Our Fighting Forces," a special two-reel Pathe release, prepared under the direction of high military officials, is praised by the Los Angeles Examiner as "A novelty from a dramatic standpoint, while pictorially it is a surpassing work."

"It will flash its message to millions of Americans over the country," says the Examiner.

The predominating principle of "Our Fighting Forces" is an argument for enlistment.

At the film's termination, an inspiring picture of "Liberty," garbed in the symbolic colors of the Union, calling the sons of America to her defense, is flashed upon the screen.

"The Fall" Crowds House

The drawing power of "The Fall of a Nation," the timely preparedness spectacle, released through Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., has again been strikingly demonstrated by the recent experience of the management of the Lona Theater, Sedalia, Missouri.

"The Fall of a Nation" was booked by the Lona Theater for one day and long before the opening of the performance the sidewalk and street in front of the theater were jammed. The theater was unable to accommodate all who wished to see the picture, even though four performances were given, so the management booked it for an additional day.

Bachelor Inherits Twelve Wives

A bashful, small town bachelor, afraid of all women, suddenly is bequeathed a ready made harem of twelve beautiful wives. This is the situation which causes all the fun in "Chubby Inherits a Harem," the La Salle comedy released through Mutual on May 21.

The sudden deluge magnifies Chubby's natural terror of women until he is about in a position to make his will and pass on the little family to his next of kin. His chum, Percy, however, is made of different stuff. He thinks nothing could be nicer than a harem of this kind, and plans to elope with the whole harem. Chubby tricks him, however, and is finally left with one wife, the beauty of the family.

"Chubby Inherits a Harem," a new LaSalle-Mutual comedy.

NEW VITAGRAPH BRAND

Clara Kimball Young, Sidney Drew, Anita Stewart and Other Stars to Appear in "Favorite Film Features"

V. L. S. E., under the trade name of "Favorite Film Features," is preparing to release numerous of Greater Vitagraph's short reel subjects, a great many of which are the comedies that caused packed houses three or four years ago and for which there has been an insistent demand by exhibitors ever since they were withdrawn from the market.

The casts of these re-issues read like the roll of honor in the performing branch of the motion picture industry. They include Clara Kimball Young, Sidney Drew, Anita Stewart, Harry Morey, Edith Storey, Rose Tapley, Josie Sadler, E. K. Lincoln, Ralph Ince, Charlie Edwards, Harry Northrup, Herbert L. Barry, Hughie Mack, Templar Saxe, William Shea, James Young, Kate Price, Naomi Childers, Bobby Connelly, James Lackaye, Ned Finley, Flora Finch, Etienne Girardot, Helen Connelly, Louise Baudet, L. Rogers Lytton, Alberta Gallatin and Ethel Lloyd.

"Why don't you give us some of those wonderful pictures you made years ago, as an increased service?" one of the largest motion picture exhibitors of the Northwest recently asked Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E. As an example of just what he meant the exhibitor cited the two reel comedy, "A Regiment of Two." The cast of this comedy consists of Sidney Drew, Anita Stewart, Harry Morey, Edith Storey, Rose Tapley, Josie Sadler, E. K. Lincoln, Ralph Ince and Charlie Edwards.

"That," said the big northwestern exhibitor," is probably the greatest all star cast ever brought together in one picture."

As a result of the suggestion by this big northwest exhibitor, who is given the credit of being one of the best judges in the entire country of just what an audience wants, an inventory was taken by the Vitagraph Company of the pictures in the vaults at the big Brooklyn studio. The inventory showed something more than eight hundred two and three-reel comedies and dramas, every one of which has an all star cast, and every one of which may be rehabilitated, re-edited, and made the same big money makers for the exhibitors today as they were years ago.

Clara Kimball Young was the star in many of these short reel subjects at the time when she was considered the "prettiest woman in films," and in a great many of them she is co-starred with Sidney Drew.

Eight of the re-issues already are ready for release but the date for the new service has not been announced as V. L. S. E. wishes productions to be so far in advance of release that an exhibitor may figure on his service for several weeks, if not for three or four months ahead. The pictures ready for release, the release dates of which will be announced shortly, are: "A Regiment of Two," "Beauty Unadorned," "Jerry's Mother-in-Law," "The Late Mr. Jones," "The Violin of M'Sieur," "The Test," "Goodness Gracious," and "When Women Go on the Warpath, or Why Jonesville Went Dry."

Another and most important reason for these re-issues is that V. L. S. E. branch managers all over the country have ascertained that a great many of the exhibitors desire to do business with one exchange. With the new release footage of V. L. S. E. this is impossible as it is practically confined to one five-reel feature a week and one short reel subject. With the addition of the re-issues to the stocks of the V. L. S. E. exchanges, the service shortly will be increased to twelve reels a week, consisting of one five-reel feature, one Big V comedy, one three-reel part of a fifteen episode serial and three reels of the super re-issues. This will increase the weekly footage of releases available at V. L. S. E. exchanges to twelve thousand feet and make a service so diversified that every exhibitor who has realized the fallacy of daily changes of program can deal exclusively at V. L. S. E. exchanges.

NEXT PICKFORD PICTURE

"The Little American," a Patriotic Photoplay Presenting "America's Sweetheart," Staged by De Mille to Appear July 4

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, last week announced that the next Mary Pickford picture following "A Romance of the Redwoods," now scoring another triumph for Mary in first run houses throughout the country, would be released July 4. "The Little American" is the title of the forthcoming Pickford vehicle now nearing completion under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, at the Lasky-Hollywood studios in California.

Said Mr. Greene:

We decided to release this production on Independence Day, in that it presents "America's Sweetheart" in a powerful, patriotic appeal, making it a most fitting presentation on this day. The photoplay will offer a stirring theme that will strike a responsive chord in the breast of every American and will, without exaggeration which is so often the tendency in such subjects, bring home effectively the duty of every citizen in the country. Miss Pickford in a role of such great appeal is in her element, as will be appreciated by every one of the many thousands who are acquainted with her talents.

For the first time in many months "Little Mary" will be seen in this picture as a grown-up American girl in modern gowns. As the young society girl of the U. S. A. she is caught in the terrible tide of the German invasion of France. Many thrilling scenes of spectacular nature have been staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille and it is readily felt that as a popular success, this picture will prove Miss Pickford's greatest achievement on the screen.

Lichtman Dines Artcraft Stars

Upon his arrival in California, on his cross-country tour, Al Lichtman, general manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, recently tendered a dinner to the Artcraft celebrities now appearing before the camera at the Lasky-Hollywood studios. The affair was held at the Alexandria Hotel and a sumptuous repast was served. Among those present were Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Geraldine Farrar, Mrs. Pickford, Edward Hemmer, Kenneth McGaffey, Anita Loos, John Emerson, Eileen Percy, Arthur S. Kane, M. H. Lewis, Ben Schulberg and Bennie Zeidman.

Farrar to Commence Work

Geraldine Farrar, the famous operatic and screen star has just arrived in California and is now busy househunting. On her transcontinental trip Miss Farrar was accompanied by her mother and father and at Los Angeles was greeted by her husband, Lou Tellegen.

Live New Producer

The offering to state rights buyers of the new Jane Grey feature, "Her Fighting Chance," calls attention to the latest activities of Arthur H. Jacobs, well known in picture circles as the head of several producing corporations. Mr. Jacobs made his debut as a producer in Chicago with the Cosmos Feature Film Corporation. Later he came to New York as president and general manager of the Triumph Film Corporation, and was soon also identified with Crystal Films, Inc., as vice president.

A. H. Jacobs, of A. H. Jacobs Productions, Inc., who has produced a new play starring Jane Grey.

It was not long before he decided to establish himself in the business on a larger scale and started "A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc.," to produce special pictures under contract with Hearst's International Film Service. His first notable success under his new company was Jane Grey in "The Flower of Faith" to be followed shortly by a dramatization of the well known story by Gouverneur Morris, "When My Ship Comes In," which was a stage vehicle for the same popular little star.

"Her Fighting Chance," which is a picturization of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "The Fiddling Man," is Mr. Jacobs' latest important achievement as a producer and is to be followed by a new special picture in the near future.

The world rights for "Her Fighting Chance" were purchased by Frank Hall who recently bought the much discussed Edgar Lewis feature, "The Bar Sinister," and is offering both attractions to state right's buyers from his new headquarters in the Longacre Building, New York.

Edna Goodrich in "Reputation"

Miss Edna Goodrich, beauty of the drama, is to be starred in "Reputation," one of a series of feature productions in which she will appear for release through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Miss Goodrich, whose successes in big New York productions have made her name known from one end of the country to the other, is perhaps most widely celebrated as one of the original sextette in "Floradora," though her best work was done as Nell Ruthen in "The Gilded Fool," and as leading woman with Nat Goodwin in "When We Were Twenty-One." With Charles Frohman as her mentor Miss Goodrich created a sensation as Felicia in "The Rollicking Girl" and as Nell Graham in "The Genius and the Model." She was equally successful as Madge Kederly in "What Would a Gentleman Do" and as Grace Morton in "The Easterner."

Miss Goodrich's plays are being directed by John O'Brien, who has had a lifetime of experience in stage direction.

The cast supporting Miss Goodrich in "Reputation" is a distinguished one, including, as it does, some of the best known men and women of the screen.

William Hinchley, leading man in "Reputation," is a Chicago man, and a graduate of Northwestern University. His best known motion picture successes were in "Lilly and the Rose" and "Children in the House."

Nellie Parker Spaulding, who plays "Mrs. Williams" in "Reputation," made her fame in "The Governor's Lady," "The Vicar of Wakefield" and "The Pillory," though her stage career included many parts of equal prominence.

Esther Evans and Carey Lee are both performers of considerable note, as also is Frank Goldsmith.

The stage settings of "Reputation" are sumptuous to prodigality. Few productions have been more splendidly equipped with all the dramatic accessories.

Photographically the production serves to illustrate the perfection to which the motion picture has been brought.

"Reputation" is a big play with a big star and its appeal is of the sort that cannot be resisted—it is a pretty love story with a happy ending.

CONTEMPLATE NEW EXCHANGE

Harry A. Sherman, at Present Engaged on New Ten Reelers—May Release Through Own Exchange System

Harry A. Sherman, of the Sherman-Elliott Company, is rushing back and forth from coast to coast, working over time on two big features, which he expects to have ready for release about September. What they are, he will not say, other than that they are two big pictures with a kick in them. In commenting upon them recently, Mr. Sherman said:

I am preparing for two big pictures—ten-reelers at least, which are now being adapted from well known books. They are stories that have appealed to millions—stories that will never die. I expect to start producing very soon in order to have these pictures ready for release early in the fall—probably in September. They will cost a fortune, but they will be worth it.

Just at present, I am contemplating an exchange of my own, with offices in the leading cities of the country, say in Chicago, Minneapolis, Portland, San Francisco, Denver, St. Louis, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, New York, Boston, etc.

If I produce several big features each year I shall want some means of properly releasing them. I hardly think I will want to sell them all on the state rights basis, so I am considering an exchange system of my own. If I do organize my own exchange system, I shall go into the open market and purchase all the big features that I think are good, and release them myself. I will not tie up any exhibitor to take the full series of pictures that I contemplate producing myself; neither will I tie him up to a program of pictures that I buy. I believe in buying on the open market myself, and I also believe in selling that way.

There are far too many exchanges today, and I doubt very seriously if any of them are making any real money, and several, I am certain, are on the ragged edge. This condition must stop. There should be only two or three exchanges, and they should be big ones, competing with one another. This would stop the production of poor or mediocre pictures. An exhibitor can make more money with a picture he pays $100 a day for than any $10 picture.

The film game is somewhat like the newspaper service game was a few years ago. Then, there were several news associations, each giving a poor and incomplete report of the day's happenings in the world. Then the Association Press was organized, taking the place of many of the minor organizations. Today it is the greatest news gathering organization in the world. It has eliminated the cheap news stories, and deals only with real, big, live stories. So it should be with the film industry, and I am confident that it will be so in a few years.

Motion Pictures and Eyestrain

BY GORDON L. BERRY

Acting Secretary, National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness.

Editor's Note: The following article, which appeared in a recent issue of the "Monthly Bulletin of the Department of Health of the City of New York," is interesting to the exhibitor and will aid him in instructing the picture-going public.

"WILL frequent attendance at pictures affect my eyesight?" Probably no question has been put to oculists and physicians generally, so many times during the past decade, as has this. That such has been the case is not strange when we realize that from a very modest beginning this industry has become almost within ten years the fifth greatest business in the United States, with billions invested, with more than twenty-five thousand theaters devoted to it, and with an average daily attendance at these theaters of more than twenty million men, women and children.

To that question, there are two answers: First.—"Motion pictures with defects of photography, manufacture and projection apparent, may prove injurious to eyesight" and second—"Eyestrain caused by viewing motion pictures may indicate a subnormal condition of the eyes which should demand immediate attention on the part of your physician."

There has never been an extensive study made of the subject, but occasional investigations by interested oculists, illuminating engineers, et al., have developed conclusions which time is proving logical, and which are coming to be generally accepted. Their studies have been in large part based on a few well known principles relating to illumination and eyestrain, and proceeding on the theory that motion pictures may be a source of eyestrain, let us see what may be the causes, and the methods of prevention. The chief points involved are:

Effect of glare from a poor screen or as the result of improper radiation from the screen. There are two distinct types of screen, one consisting of a smooth surface dressed with aluminum powder and lacquer, the other of plate glass, the back of which has been painted with the whitest and most opaque paint obtainable. The first of these is, of course, the least expensive, and unless the surface is pebbled or roughened, the picture thrown thereon is not entirely discernible to a spectator sitting at one side, without the angle of incidence. Furthermore, color distortion may be produced due to the metallic tint which usually obtains, and unless the screen has been properly mounted in a perfectly flat plane, there will result a serious glare. The plate glass screen is the ideal reflecting surface, and is productive of far better pictures, without glare, and with the minimum of distortion.

Radiation of light from the surface of a glass screen should not, in itself, prove any menace to vision, as the intensity of illumination on the average screen is far less than is generally supposed. Through the lens system generally in use, a 10,000 candle power brilliancy at the point of contact of the carbon arcs back of the film in the projecting machine transmits but .0022 candle power of light upon the screen itself.

The general surrounding illumination of the auditorium. The auditorium should be as light as may be consistent with securing satisfactory detail in the picture. All sorts of light sources which might cause glare should be eliminated, especially chandeliers, wall brackets, orchestra lights, etc., which may fall within the spectators' range of vision. Illuminating engineers recommend that the intensity of illumination should be graduated from the screen outward toward the rear of the auditorium with the greatest amount possible at the back, and that the indirect system of lighting should be used, as it best prevents glare. In spite of the fact that the light intensity on the screen is, in itself, small, yet in contrast with the surrounding illumination, it may appear very great. A good example is provided by comparing the apparent brilliancy of an incandescent light seen (1) in a room painted black throughout, (2) in a room where light walls prevail, (3) in broad daylight—each surrounding condition providing the reason for the decrease in glare from the light source.

The position from which the spectator views the pictures is also a matter of considerable importance. Make it a rule to sit in the center of the house, never nearer to the screen than twenty feet, and the further back the better. Seats placed far to the side should always be avoided, as the pictures are almost certain to appear distorted, when seen from these outside seats.

Unsteadiness in the pictures due to bad "direction" in acting, poor photography, film blemishes and poor projection are all causes of eyestrain, and are inexcusable, because entirely preventable. The rapidity with which changes occur on the sscreen, producing rapid, jerky motions of the picture, may call for a greater agility in the process of focusing the eye than Nature can possibly produce. Inexperience, or lack of care on the part of the camera man, may result in certain sections of a photodrama being out of focus, which always proves most trying to the spectator. Films should not be used after they have become scratched and "rainy." The life of a film in constant use is but a period of a few months even under best conditions, and it is likely to show deterioration after but a few showings, if operators are not careful in handling, packing, shipping, etc. The showers of light spots produced by scratched and worn out films cannot help but cause eyestrain, which may show up in headaches the following day, or even result in permanent injury to the eyes. "Poor projection" is responsible for many deleterious eye conditions, chiefly caused by the unsteadiness of the picture as thrown upon the screen. In order to produce that steadiness which is most desirable, and which should be demanded by every "movie fan," the projecting machine should be mounted on a concrete, or some other equally rigid, foundation.

More serious than any of the foregoing possible causes of eyestrain, and one which is most generally apparent, is the flicker, which will be readily noticeable in most of our motion picture houses. It is due partly to faulty mechanism of the projecting apparatus, and again to the failure of the operator to properly adjust his machine. Unless the shutter is properly adjusted to the finest point so that the tiny segment of film which separates the little pictures is accurately cut out at the proper instant, flicker will result. It is a fault which involves the basic principle of motion picture projection, both mechanical and including the personal equation. However, if the intermediate section of film were not thus cut out, we should have an unendurable succession of contrasting light and dark thrown on the screen.

tion must be considered as a possible cause of eyestrain from the motion picture. The statement has occasionally been made that motion pictures should be no more productive of eyestrain than viewing the constantly changing panorama of country from a train window. Such a statement is doubtless based upon the belief that if our eyes do not tire when watching scenery change at the rate of about 3,500 feet per minute (the train's speed being forty miles an hour) they should not tire in watching a picture change at the rate of but seventy feet per minute (the average speed at which films are run). The theorist has evidently failed to take into consideration that the foreground of Nature is in colors least apt to tire the eyes, and moreover and more important, there is a constant unconscious relaxation of the muscles of the eyes. On the other hand, in order to follow the rapidly changing story of the motion picture, it is essential to miss nothing. Resting the eyes for even a minute may lose an important clew in "The Mysteries of Mary." As many of the popular films of today are run in five reels, each reel of a thousand feet, there is demanded constant concentration of the eyes upon a flickering surface for a period of from an hour to an hour and a half. To offset the fatigue caused by this concentration, every spectator should demand, and theater owners should make every attempt to provide, the best in screens, surrounding illumination, seating arrangements, film and projection. Otherwise there can be no doubt but that the "movies" will be an increasing cause of affections of the eye. Very few people have perfectly normal eyes. The rest are either far-sighted, near-sighted, or astigmatic, and many have muscular defects as well. Bearing this, also, in mind it may readily be seen that the element of continued intentness in large measure prevents a complete muscular relaxation—so essential to the well-being of the eyes.

It is not the purpose of the author of this article to frighten the habitue of the popular picture house, but rather to reassure him to the effect, that if all conditions are as nearly ideal as it is possible for them to be, there is not much danger of serious fatigue resulting from a moderate attendance at the silent drama. If, under such suggested conditions, however, there are evidence of eye fatigue, such as headache, smarting or itching of the lids, sensitiveness to light, excessive flow of tears, or if circles of light seem to appear on the screen—one should lose no time in consulting an oculist. The trouble evidently is not with the pictures, but with the individual, and Nature is sounding her tocsin of alarm in time to make it possible for him to remedy the trouble if he will but give it attention. Indications of serious diseases of the eye, like glaucoma, which will result in blindness, if neglected, may thus be recognized and treated in time.

The National and State organizations which are devoted to the Conservation of Vision and Health are endeavoring to develop ideal conditions in moving picture theaters and should have generous support. The general public can have practically everything they demand, and if a popular theater is operated under poor conditions, complaint should be made to the management. Competition in this new business is too keen for requests of that nature to be ignored and better service will be the result, with better eyesight the final outcome.

The Frohman Amusement through Jesse J. Goldburg sold the New York state rights to their super-feature, "God's Man," to Harry A. Samwick, one of the controlling princapls of the Ivan Film Productions, and whose enlarged offices are in the Godfrey building. "God's Man" is released in seven parts.

FILMS IN SALOONS

English Government Picture Shows in Munition-Making Sections a Failure—Doubled Liquor Consumption—An American Minister's View

The English Government Liquor Board is adding motion pictures to its saloons in the munition-making areas in the north of England and south of Scotland, with the thought of adding to the comfort and pleasure of the workers. Temperance reformers in England, however, are very critical of the experiment and point out that since the innovation the consumption of liquors in these saloons has doubled.

This fact justifies the regulation in force in many American cities prohibiting the showing of motion pictures in saloons and drinking places. The motion picture is the natural enemy of the saloon and should not be allowed to become an ally.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick Betts of Syracuse, New York, in recently discussing the film and the saloon, Sunday observance and similar matters said: "No one believes that moving pictures are evil. It is the Sunday question which is at issue. If I could legally close one saloon on Sunday and on the other six days of the week and send the crowds to the movies, I would do it with a firm conviction that it would make for moral betterment. Let us close up the abominable road houses where prostitution, gambling and drunkenness are going on every day and every Sunday. When we have healed these raw sores there will be time enough for us to quarrel over many less important questions of our moral and spiritual life."

The late Robert Grau, dramatic critic and writer, in reviewing the history of the motion picture recently said: "Around 1908, which was the year of amateuring in filmdom, it had just been discovered that moving pictures could be utilized as a vital factor in the life of the people. In that year Edgar Strakosch, one time impresario, suggested the title 'photoplay' to describe the product of the screen because, he, with a truly fine perspective, had observed that already the film was worthy of something more important than to be used as 'chasers' to create an exodus of the seated audiences, as was the case in that year.

"Twelve years after the dawn of the industry, which is now the sixth in importance in all the world, the very sight of the big white sheet would almost create a stampede for the door of the playhouse. Why it took so long to discover the real future hidden amidst the phenomena of the camera man's new born art will be related by the moving picture historian when the effort is made to describe the evolution and growth of a great industry which is even now merely in the primitive period as far as artistry is concerned."

Five hundred feet of the funniest and cutest "Dog Cartoon," covering the history of seven little puppies, will be released by the Universal about the end of May. Each takes its turn in getting into all sorts of mischief—and there is a riot of fun in their antics from beginning to finish.

Roping an unruly bronco from a "flivver" is William S. Hart's latest accomplishment, and was performed while he was in Calexico, on the Mexican border, filming scenes for the latest Triangle drama, "'Wolf' Lowry," by Charles Turner Dazey, in which he is presented as star by Thomas H. Ince.

A Newspaper Story Is Essanay-K. E. S. E. Release of May 21. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE many sided and always interesting newspaper profession provides the material for this story. J. Bradley Smollen, the author, formerly a newspaperman, has taken as his theme the effect of night work, especially the nervous, intense work of the newspaper profession, upon those who come under its fascination. The idea is a good one and the picture, because of its subject, should be a box office attraction. It offers excellent opportunities for special advertising.

The average patron will not be disappointed in the play, which is interesting throughout, although it does not quite measure up to the high standard set by previous Essanay features. The reason is that the story is not very clearly told. The viewer cannot tell whether it was the fault of the author, who has put so many incidents into his plot that some of them are vague, or of the director, or whether the trouble is in the cutting and assembling of the film. But there are parts of the story which are confused and the continuity is broken.

The acting, photography and settings are up to standard. The night effects show clever camera work. The cast of players includes a number of Essanay favorites, and Jack Gardner, who is a recruit from the speaking stage and who makes his first appearance on the screen in this play. His acting of the leading man's role conforms to all picture requirements. Marguerite Clayton plays the girl reporter, and others who do good work in important roles are Julien Barton, Mabel Bardine, Arthur W. Bates, and two clever child players. J. Charles Haydon is the director.

The Story: Clyde Manning, when a youngster, had run away from an orphan asylum and had been given a job in a newspaper office in a small town. Later he went to the city and became an office boy on a metropolitan daily. Years later we find him a reporter, clever but beginning to yield to dissipation. Then a young girl is added to the staff of the paper. This girl, Ethel Carver, is the granddaughter of the country town newspaper editor who had first befriended Clyde. She recognizes in the reporter her former playmate and aids him in getting a number of stories, one of which wins him the position of managing editor.

But Clyde's growing fondness for drink causes him to neglect his new position and he loses it. Just at this time, the girl's grandfather dies and she goes back to the little town. Before she leaves, she learns of the identity of Clyde's parents and of their tragic story, which confirms her opinion that night work, though fascinating, is dangerous to health and morals, and she persuades Clyde to leave the city and to aid her in managing the newspaper she has inherited. In the little town, under more normal conditions of life, Clyde overcomes his evil tendencies. The fascination of the city yields to his love for the girl. He marries her and remains as manager of the paper.

"The Candy Girl"

Gladys Hulette in Thanhouser-Pathe Five-Reel Play. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a pleasing play, presented in a clean-cut, workmanlike fashion with no weak points. It is up to the standard set by the preceding Gladys Hulette pictures which have come from the Thanhouser studios to delight audiences generally. Exhibitors whose patrons have enjoyed the earlier releases can promise an equally fine entertainment in this. Like Miss Hulette's other pictures, it will find its most appreciative audience in the neighborhood house catering especially to women and children.

The story, by Philip Lonergan, is interesting and well told, and forms an excellent vehicle for Miss Hulette. Her role is very pleasing and as usual in the Hulette characterizations, humor and human touches counteract any tendency toward too much sweetness. The supporting cast is consistently good. Little Helen Badgley and her numerous pets add to the fun. William Parke, Jr., plays well his role of Jack Monroe, the wealthy youth who marries "The Candy Girl." J. H. Gilmour and Thomas Curran play important roles. Settings and photography have been well taken care of.

The Story: Nell (Miss Hulette) and her little sister (Helen Badgley) live with an aunt who runs a poultry farm in a small town. Nell has a reputation in the village for the excellence of her fudge, and when the poultry farm proves unsuccessful, she decides to go to the city and open a candy shop. So the family moves to the city and after a number of adventures the candy shop is opened. In spite of Nell's ability to win friends, the candy project is not very profitable. Then Nell wins the love of Jack Monroe, a wealthy youth, whose father opposes the romance. The two are married and then Nell learns that her husband is an opium fiend. She sets out to cure him, aided by his father. After a number of discouragements, she succeeds, and the story ends happily.

"Southern Justice"

Bluebird Photoplay of May 28 an Enjoyable Offering. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

"IT WAS springtime in Kentucky," so a subtitle states, when this story occurred, and the refreshing springtime atmosphere seems to have been imprisoned in the film, to be given back by the screen wherever this picture is shown. The photography, the beautiful outdoor scenes, and a number of quaint characters contribute to the enjoyment of the offering quite as much as do the story and the leading players. In fact the plot seems to have caught something of the southern languor and its progress is leisurely, but enjoyable, nevertheless.

ture, and the pleasingly presented incidents, humorous and pathetic, throughout the story, maintain the interest and prevent dragginess. The acting of the entire cast is good. Included are Myrtle Gonzalez, George Hernandez, Jack Curtis, Jean Hersholt, Charles H. Mailes, Fred Church, Elwood Bredell, Maxfield Stanley and George Marsh. Lynn F. Reynolds directed.

The Story: The scenes are laid in and about a small southern town. Ray Preston comes to the town and arouses much interest in the sleepy community. He buys a large tract of swamp land, to the amazement of the villagers. He also wins the interest of Carolyn Dillon, who had been engaged to Wallace Turner. Then comes the announcement that oil has been discovered in the swamp land; then Preston offers to sell the land back at an increased price to the villagers. But through a little detective work on the part of Turner and Daws, Anthony, a young lad who had been adopted in the village, Preston's "planting" of the oil is discovered. Preston is given his choice between returning the money to the purchasers and leaving town or being given a coat of tar and feathers. He returns the money and leaves. And the engagement between Caroline and Turner is renewed.

actress of Pauline Frederick's appeal, supported by Thomas Meighan, Alice Hollister, Frank De Rheim and others, it has a mainstay of interest that keeps the offering from sinking into the lowest depths of the commonplace in photodramas. Thomas Meighan has a part towards which considerable sympathy is directed and his playing of it gives more pleasure than has that of any of his recent roles. Miss Frederick's role lacks that certain individuality which her best roles have had, and in sympathy it does not surpass that of Thomas Meighan, yet the star has a few scenes in which she registers big. But "Her Better Self" does not make a powerful story medium through which Pauline Frederick may really stir an audience and it is not to be numbered among Margaret Turnbull's best scripts. In the capacity of director Robert G. Vignola has done all that he could do, perhaps, to make the picture more real. His sets are realistic. In fact, one of the court room sets is said to be a replica of the Supreme Court in New York.

Vivian Tyler, a wealthy girl with a longing to do something worth while, makes a proposition to young Dr. Keith that she come and work in his sanitarium which dispenses comfort to the poor. Contrary to the doctor's expectations she makes good and a latent love interest springs up between the two. But Aggie May, a girl whose life has been wrecked, comes under their roof. While relating her story to Vivian the latter discovers that Aggie has a picture of the doctor in her locket. The girl explains this, saying that while Keith was at college he boarded with her mother and he pacified her romantic mind one day by giving her the picture. Aggie then proceeds to relate the story of her downfall, but in some way mystifying to the audience doesn't make it plain that Keith and the man who caused her fall were two different men.

Vivian, bitterly disappointed, renounces her work among the poor, but finally decides to return and verify her beliefs as well as give the doctor a chance to explain. She arrives in time to witness the suicide of Aggie May and flees in horror. Soon we see Keith on trial for murder. At the last moment, when things are looking black for the doctor, Vivian, who has been suffering an illness, happens to read in the paper of the trial. Her automobile speeds to the courthouse at 60 m. p. h. or so (a puncture being resorted to for suspense) and arrives in time to have her testimony accepted. The ease with which it is accepted is rather mystifying, but then, the movie fan has a flexible imagination. As the story ends, the count, who has been encouraged for spite, is jettisoned for good, and Vivian marries the doctor without having evidence palpable to the audience that he is innocent of the crime she first imputed to him.

"Her Fighting Chance"

A. H. Jacobs Drama Released State Rights by Frank Hall. Reviewed by George W. Graves

WITHOUT wasting any time getting at the meat of the matter the exhibitor can count on this picturization of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "The Fiddling Man," as a feature of exceptional merit, a live, red-blooded story of the land of deep snows, rough and free mannered people, sledges and "huskies." There is action, plenty of it, and it is all well defined and convincing. The director, Edwin Carewe, has taken the big, tense situations of the book and told them in screen language with a constant, consistent punch. With snowy backgrounds, dark woods, sledge trails, etc., the atmosphere of the great Northwest is finely preserved. The characters have real character—they are entirely away from the puppet class.

There are three principal characters: Jan, a timber-man, Marie, his wife, and Corporal Blake, a corrupt officer of the mountain police. The latter, after Jan for a murder which he really never committed, makes an agreement with the wife to let his prisoner go the next morning if she will give herself up to him. The woman cleverly gets the officer into a besotted state through tempting him with liquor and Jan makes his escape. On returning to soberness, Blake, furious at the double-cross, sets out from the cabin telling Jan that her husband will pay the price for her refusal to play fair. Thrilling incidents follow which culminate in the death of Blake and the establishment of Jan's innocence.

Jane Grey is hugely appealing as the dainty, courageous wife. In any number of tense scenes she registers big and allows no sympathy to slip from the part. She is an emotional actress of marked ability. Thomas Holding as the husband and Percy G. Standing as Corporal Blake, both give excellent renditions. Other players in a cast which presents no weak spots are Fred Jones, Edward Porter and William Cohill.

The picture is worthy of being "state righted." It is way and above the average five-reel program offering. It stands the test in the three big essentials, story, acting and production.

Two-Reel Selig Comedy Released by K-E-S-E May 28. Reviewed by Lapearl Waggoner

THE dear public will welcome a really funny comedy in which there is no throwing of blueberry pies, no chasing of a "Weary Willie" and no policemen of odd dimensions that move as if pulled by strings. Such a comedy is a "Hole in the Ground," one of the series Selig is making in two reels for release on the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay program. There is a refreshing absence of stock antics, and silly gestures usually found in funny films. If the story were more closely knit, some of us would like it better, but the usual audience will be amused at the clever turns and never miss the thread.

The Story—The station agent at Twilight Sleep does his very best to care for company property. When a stranger awaiting the train which is four hours late, endeavors to make himself at home he incurs the enmity of the agent. The lunch girl waits on the stranger who finds himself unable to devour the food offered. A tramp appears and he and the stranger and the agent enjoy a card game. The poor stranger encounters a string of misfortune and rigs up a "swear room" where he may swear without disturbing the others. Finally when the stranger is in the basement of the depot changing his shirt, the train, detained by a hole in the ground, rolls into the yard, and the stranger arrives in time to see the rear car disappearing around the curve.

mother that she will some day prove her right to her husband's name. The story then proceeds to relate in interesting fashion how the woman wins her way to a point from which she can attack the men who have caused all her suffering, one willfully and the other ignorantly. In a novel way she makes the stone-hearted millionaire see his own cruelty and the son the awful result of his father's deception. As the film ends husband, wife and child are brought together, while the father, his pride brought low, and punished by the pangs of remorse, rejoices in the happiness that he denied himself long before.

With its story of pride, misunderstanding, heart-aches, revenge and remorse, the picture gives its star, Emmy Whelen, a good part and one which she never ceases to make deeply sympathetic. The star's work truly is a vitalizing influence in keeping the spectator absorbed. She is given splendid support by George Stuart Christie, Peggy Parr, Frank Currier and others. The acting to be seen in the picture is of a good quality throughout. The story itself, while it has plenty of tense situations and a novel development at the end, presents the fault of "old stuff" in the maneuvers of the scenario. Some of the subtitles are amateurishly over-emotional, tempting one to laugh when he should be gloomily long-faced. But the work of Emmy Whelen enlivens the interest constantly. She lends her striking individuality to the story and makes the whole a good piece of entertainment. George D. Baker's direction includes a well handled thrill or two. He has injected a deal of telling realism into his picture. The photography, by Joseph Shelderfer, averages high.

THE distinguished work of both the stars, House Peters and Kathlyn Williams, in this, intensifies the interest immeasurably and keeps the spectator entertained in a way that the conventional story, unaided by this talented work could hardly effect itself. One is tempted to get a little nearer the edge of his seat, if anywhere, in the first reel or so and the last reel. There is a slump in the action and the interest in the middle because of a long drawn out situation.

Director Howard Estabrook has plugged for realism and created the proper Western atmosphere with fine effect and his work is no small item in making this story of the desert solitude register. In support of the stars are Jim Farley, as the heavy and Harry De Vere. Willard Mack is the author.

Outside of the acting of House Peters and Kathlyn Williams there is nothing particularly impressive about the picture, which averages on the whole as luke-warm entertainment—at least for those with whom the movie theater is a habit.

Steve King, a cowboy, enters the saloon of Missouri Joe just as the latter is trying to force his pretty maid-of-all-work to marry him. Steve, under the influence of liquor, knocks the bully down and marries the girl himself as a mere favor. The following morning, in full realization of the gravity of his position, he takes his wife and goes into the desert solitude to search for gold. Almost at the end of his endurance, Steve finds traces of the precious metal. The solitude of the desert tells upon both, who cannot understand each other, and aggravates their condition. The real cause of the husband's lack of interest in his wife is the sloppy attire in which she dresses. Steve takes to drink and is finally reduced to the level of committing suicide. Lou's arrival prevents his quaffing the poison. Thinking he intended the cup for her she pretends to drink it and die.

Steve leaves the hut and goes to other parts. In the months following Lou's mine is recognized for its worth and she becomes rich. She comes to the East and acquires polish. On returning to her mine she is attacked by Missouri Joe, who is bound to have her this time, but she is saved by Steve, who has come back to the scenes of old. The truth about the poison cup is revealed and the two are reunited, Steve, a refined man himself, happy now in the wife whom clothes and gentle manners have transformed.

Five-Part Triangle-Fine Arts Offering Released May 27. Reviewed by George W. Graves

ADAPTED from the story by O. Henry, "Madame Bo-Peep of the Ranches," this film starts in to agreeably entertain from the first scenes and doesn't cease performing this estimable function until the end. The story has action, enjoyable situations and interesting, true-to-life characters. Beginning with the thoughtless escapades of a young society girl whose chief ambition seems to be to see how many proposals she can get, the spectator does not lose interest in what fate has in store for her until her pride and coquettishness has its fall. Coming to the West to take charge of a ranch she thinks belongs to her she finds that one of her former lovers, Teddy Westlake, is in charge. With all the pride and willfulness at her command she tries to make Teddy realize how she can "lord it over" him when he refuses to be "old friends" with her and sticks coldly to business.

Teddy finds that in reality Octavia does not own the ranch and he buys it for himself, thinking later to present it to "Madame Bo-Peep," as the ranchers call the girl. Alvarez, a Mexican employee, secretly loves Octavia and plans to get her. Juniata, a Mexican girl, loves Teddy. Together they plot to bring Octavia and Teddy to a break. They are successful, and Teddy leaves. But Octavia, learning that the ranch is not hers, starts after the man she really loves, only to be hindered by Alvarez, who "means business." In a thrilling episode, in which Teddy chases on horseback the train on which is Octavia and Alvarez, and boards it, Teddy saves the girl from the hands of the ruffian, and all ends happily.

Chester Withey's direction is that of a skilled hand. He has produced his picture with realism first and last. He has selected as members of the cast some fine types for the parts. Seena Owen as the pampered daughter of the rich, does admirably and A. D. Sears as the ranch boss is manly and convincing. Sam De Grasse and Pauline Starke take the parts of the Mexicans, while

James Harrison offers some good comedy. He is Willie, the indefatigable lover who tages around after Octavia with a bouquet in his hand. Willie finally breaks his serenading ukulele in disgust.

"Madame Bo-Peep" is all in all a pleasant, wholesome picture, dealing with interesting characters, with a good share of comedy and a thrill or two in the last reel. Good direction and good acting are noticeable throughout the play, which should prove an up-to-the-standard but not exceptional box-office attraction.

"The Marcellini Millions"

Five-Reel Morosco - Paramount Offering Released May 14. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN THIS film George Beban is again seen in one of his vivacious, inimitable Italian characterizations in a story which he wrote for his own use. The story is not remarkable in any other way than that it provides the famous exponent of Italian character work with a chance to appear at his individual best. It is a simple affair, rather draggy at times, but containing some excellent spontaneous comedy, telling the tale of a simple truck gardener who acquires an enormous fortune and who is imposed upon by social parasites. The poor farmer longs for the simple life, but his wife, easily influenced by the two glib mentors in her home, tries her best to become a lady. She is led to see her husband in the wrong light. At last, when the latter unceremoniously ousts a throng of drunken merry-makers from his house, Antoinetta decides—or rather, it is decided for her—that she will get a divorce. Guido, her husband, returns to his little farm. Then it is found that the millions really belong to some one else and it is not long before the little misguided wife returns to her Guido and the simple life.

The interior sets used in this picture are the most tasteful and solid looking that we have ever seen in any picture. There is nothing canvassy about any of them. The reception hall set with the staircase on the right and the archway leading to another room in the back on the left, is one of the many convincing parts of the mansion shown. In other parts of the house are shown panelled paintings on the walls and other indications of money lavishly spent. The "House Palatial" of John Wanamaker's New York store will have to look to its laurels if the film people start building interiors like these. The designer of these sets evidently knows something about interior decorating.

Helen Jerome Eddy looks the part as well as acts it—that of the Italian farmer's wife. Her performance is excellent, making the story just so much more real. The supporting cast, including Eugene Pallette and Adele Farrington, as the crooks, is strong.

"Heart and Soul"

William Fox Drama Featuring Theda Bara Released May 21. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THERE is excitement all through this, which as a melodrama with thrills and surface action is very passable. Daring horseback riding, thrilling rescues, violent scenes, villainous brutality and the like are all there and the audience, or those members of it who are able to fancy the proceedings as real and logical, will be kept on edge by the very swing of the action. But the story itself fails to register as a thoroughly prepared, logical sequence of dramatic events. The villain is so villainous that he is practically blind to reason. In fact, he has more ambition than reason. He sets about to conquer an island under the government of the United States and set up a little republic of his own, doing his operating not far from a strong U. S. Army post, but although he is successful for a time and has the governor up before the firing squad at sunrise for declaring he "would rather die under the Stars and Stripes than live under a traitor," his (the villain's) operations are put to an end then and there by the arrival of the U. S. troops, who have been summoned by the heroine. In the fray at the troops' arrival the heroine is shot, making the last of a long list of sacrifices for her sister and consigning the latter to the care of the man she (the heroine) really loves.

Miss Bara's part as the self-sacrificing sister certainly does not stand out as the featured role. The story proper would still be intact without her at all. It could have been made a bigger part by subordinating some of the others but this was not done and as conditions stand the Theda Bara fans will feel disappointed. Walter Law as the rabid villain has the most dominant part. His wild moral madness carries the picture through with breathlessness on the part of the spectator. Mr. Law makes the villain detestable. He constantly carries a leather lash in his hand ready to strike man or beast that crosses his path. Harry Hilliard is acceptable as a rather negative hero, and Madelaine Du Nard is pleasing as the heroine's younger sister.

The settings, mostly outdoors, and taken in a very beautiful section of the South, lend a great deal of charm to the picture. To make the melodramatic effect more certain a raging fire is staged and it has its effect.

The picture will make a big hit with those who enjoy theatrical melodrama but it will be rather empty entertainment for the discriminating.

FEAR of motherhood, inculcated through the experience of her forbears, several of whom died at the birth of their children, is what keeps the principal character of this story, interpreted by Alice Brady, from leading a natural life and provides the basis for dramatic developments. The latter have the full measure of action and are generally well produced, but neither they nor the characters concerned convince sufficiently to provide intelligent, sustained interest. Things happen, but the reasons therefor are left more to the imagination than anything else. Alice Brady makes the character she portrays an interesting one, in spite of its want of conviction, and lends a distinct note of grace and beauty to the picture. There are one or two good dramatic scenes in which she, as well as other members of the cast, score. "The Neglected Wife"

First Three Episodes of Balboa-Pathe Serial. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

A HUMAN interest story by Mabel Herbert Urner has been worked into photoplay form by Will Ritchie as a basis for this latest Pathe serial, which Balboa produced with Ruth Roland in the leading role. Miss Roland does not play the title but appears as "the other woman," a young writer. Corene Grant plays the neglected wife and Roland Bottomley is the husband.

A simple version of the "eternal triangle" situation is set forth at the beginning of the story and the characters and their problem clearly and carefully worked out. There are several thrills of the serial order, but these are subservient to the human problem. The acting, the settings and photography are good. The story progresses rather slowly for a serial.

These stories of Mrs. Urner's were very popular when they were published in a magazine, and there seems to be general interest in themes of this sort, which promises well for the drawing power of the serial. It will be liked by audiences which prefer society and problem plays to the more spectacular adventure serials. The story of the first three episodes follows:

The Story: Horace Kennedy is a brilliant young lawyer. He and his wife have drifted apart because Mrs. Kennedy has failed to progress with her husband. Kennedy becomes interested in Margaret Warner, a young magazine writer who aids him in a series of legal articles. Margaret is having a hard time getting a foothold in the literary world and is at the end of her resources financially. Kennedy and Margaret are together on a train which is wrecked and Kennedy saves the girl's life. He realizes that he has grown to love her.

In the second episode, Mrs. Kennedy has gone into the country for a vacation and Margaret accepts Kennedy's invitation to take dinner with him. They are seen together by a political enemy of the lawyer's and by a rejected suitor of Margaret's. Both of these plan to use the knowledge against Kennedy and Margaret, and later they receive anonymous letters. In the meantime, in the country, Mrs. Kennedy meets an editor friend who tells her he is going to buy a story written by Margaret Warner. Mrs. Kennedy reads the story and discovers that it is based on the home life of the Kennedys.

In the third chapter, before Margaret receives the check for the story, she is forced to leave her boarding house and to seek employment in a department store. Her rejected suitor, now a bitter enemy, is a shipping clerk in the same store. This clerk shoots a fellow worker who tries to save Margaret from annoyance and Margaret is accused of the crime and arrested. She is in prison when this chapter ends and has decided to request Kennedy to act as her lawyer.

"The Sixteenth Wife"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Released May 14. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IN this unusually amusing comedy-drama, written by Molly E. Seawell, we have serious, even melodramatic action "kidded along" as it were by clever substitles, the latter being a distinctive feature of the picture. They poke fun at the dramatic action in a way that wipes out all possibility of taking the story seriously and provides humor of a very rare sort. In passing, the subtitles show the modus operandi of movie plots in general in a funny light, predicting in spots what is going to happen—what must happen in a story of this kind. Peggy Hyland as the beautiful dancer with an erratic temperament, the latter being a part of her press agent's scheme for monopolizing newspaper space, has a part more suited to her by far than any of her recent roles. Wearing pretty gowns amid beautiful distinctive settings she is ever a charming figure and she catches the spirit of the comedy in a very praiseworthy manner. Marc MacDermott as the indefatigable Turk makes that character shine forth in all its obstinate purpose and wicked determination cloaked in eastern suavity, and Templar Saxe does great work as the ingenious press agent. One more character, that of Warburton, the "boy journalist" taken by George J. Forth, completes the extra fine cast.

"The Sixteenth Wife," an unusually amusing comedy drama.

Director Charles Brabin's sets are unusually distinctive. They range from everything from a harem in Turkish Byzantine architecture to an ultra-modern set in pure white. This latter, and some others of like bizarre character are the manifestations of the dancer's temperamental changes. Mr. Brabin deserves a good deal of praise for the way he handled Miss Hyland's dancing scenes. Few among the spectators will question that the star executed all of these—the effect is that she did, at any rate.

"The Sixteenth Wife" is a clean, humorous, tastefully produced play straight through. It is high class in every particular and will cause many a movie theater-goer to walk out on the street "a pleased patron."

custody of the child. How the child is won back by the mother willing to sacrifice her own life is shown in an unusual manner.

At all times Miss Ward is effective in her part and she is as captivating as ever. Tully Marshall gives an excellent characterization of Jake, the half-crazed negro who is in mortal fear of the Voodoo Woman. Little Billy Jacobs plays the role of the small son in a very clever way. In the support of Miss Ward are Jack Dean, Hobart Bosworth, Mabel Van Buren and Jane Wolfe. Some beautiful exterior scenes were taken in the fashionable district of Florida. The settings and photography are appropriate. The story from the pens of Beatrice DeMille and Leighton Osmun was directed by Frank Reicher.

Mrs. Lenning is clever enough to turn Mr. Jackson against his young wife by intimating that she is winning the love of their son Billy. He tries to win the boy's love with toys and candy. Jackson commands his wife to invite Mrs. Lenning to visit them at their Florida home, threatening to take only Billy with him if she refuses.

Richard Darcier, a writer, is ordered to Florida for his health, and he and Billy become great friends. Jake, a half-crazed negro, is frightened into making a sacrifice to the Voodoo and is about to kill Billy when the boy is rescued by Richard and Mrs. Jackson. A wonderful friendship grows up between the two.

In the meantime Mrs. Lenning is slowly winning Jackson, who demands a divorce from his wife. They purposely allow Mrs. Jackson to overhear a conversation which will induce her to run away with Billy. Mrs. Jackson leaves with Billy and goes to Richard's home for help. There she is found by her husband. He secures a divorce and Billy.

Jackson realizes his wife's mother-love for Billy when she is about to sacrifice her own life to save that of her child's. He allows Billy to go to his mother. Mrs. Jackson finds additional joy in her new-found love for Richard.

"Chris and His Wonderful Lamp"

Edison Conquest Comedy-Drama and Shorts Released by Forum. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"CHRIS AND HIS WONDERFUL LAMP" is one of the most entertaining and original little plays that has come along in some time. According to the custom of the Conquest features the picture is in four reels but as far as the field for endless development along its particular theme is concerned it could be stretched into a serial. The story tells of the adventures of a modern day boy into whose hands falls a sort of a second edition to Aladdin's lamp. All he has to do is to rub the lamp and an obedient genie appears ready to do his bidding. Chris orders the genie to take his form and go to school in his stead, take his punishments, win honors for him on the athletic field, beat up the village bully and do a long number of deeds just as gratifying to the mind of a young schoolboy. This theme certainly opened up the way to a long number of really comic and dramatic incidents, but we would not say that it could have been successfully carried for more than four reels—that is, in one release. This was a good stopping point and as it is the film is just so many feet of constant enjoyment. The picture will make a wild hit with all boys the age of the little leading man, Thomas Carnahan, and will make pleasant entertainment for those who can remember the feelings and experiences of this particular period of their youth.

Thomas Carnahan proves to be an exceptionally clever boy actor. His style would be a credit to a person of greater years. Joe Burke, as Professor Cipher, provides plenty of laughs, and the other members of the cast do their work convincingly. Among them are William Wadsworth, P. J. Rollo and Nellie Grant. The telling of the story entails a number of double exposures, which being effectively handled by the director, Alan Crosland, constitute a very notable part of the picture.

The third program of Edison Conquest short subjects includes the following: "South African Sea Birds" (200 ft.); "On the R. F. D.—10,000 B. C." (855 ft.); and "Story of the Willow Pattern" (986 ft.). The first of these combines scenic beauty and instruction in showing us glimpses of a desolate, rocky island off the coast of South Africa where annually for a certain period hundreds of thousands of large water birds congregate. The number of birds caught in one sweep of the camera is spectacular, to say the least. Glimpses of bounding waves beating their fury on the dark rock ledges gives the picture a high value in art.

"On the R. F. D.—10,000 B. C.," is a manikin comedy which to explain is made by photographing consecutive poses of manikin forms, apparently made of plaster. The weird effects aid the comedy considerably. This sketch is all about the adventures of a prehistoric letter carrier and the dinosaur that hauls his wagon.

The "Story of the Willow Pattern" is an artistic Japanese phantasy. The picture is framed inside a china platter where the willow pattern is found. With miniature gardens, etc., for backgrounds, a romantic love story is unfolded before the spectator's gaze entirely calculated to hold his interest for the short period of its duration.

A very entertaining and original play.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Mutual Pictures

Jerry's Master Stroke — Cub Comedy — (One Reel)—May 31.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry and "Boston Bill," the latter a high class crook, seek to impersonate an East Indian potentate, who has been chosen by Father as the husband for Daughter and the potential purchaser of the family jewels. "Boston Bill" decides to have his pal, "Flash Jack," impersonate the prince, but Jerry, seeing him receive his costume, switches bundles and gives "Flash Jack" a costume that "plants" him as an international spy, and then informs against him. Jerry then calls on papa-in-law, disguised as the prince, and foils the other worthy, "Boston Bill," in his attempt to steal the jewels. When the police arrive and arrest Bill they unmask Jerry and disclose him as the bogus prince.

A Rogue's Defeat — Eleventh Story "Jimmy Dale, alias the Grey Seal."—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. The Tocsin warns Jimmie Dale that a scoundrel named Merkel is forcing his friend, Henry Wilbur, to meet a demand note for $50,000 or forfeit rights to some valuable mining property. Merkel has presented a presumably valuable diamond necklace to his wife, for which he has obtained a great deal of publicity, but the gems are really paste. The Grey Seal visits Merkel, takes the necklace and also the demand note, which latter he returns to Wilbur just in time to save him from suicide, making Wilbur promise to pay Merkel the $50,000 as soon as possible, and agreeing that when it is paid the Grey Seal will return the necklace to Merkel. To save himself the humiliation of having it known that the jewels are paste Merkel promises to keep quiet.

Patsy's Partner—(Two Reels)—Marden—Mutual.—Featuring Marie Cahill. Patsy (Marie Cahill) attempts to be a lawyer, but only bill collectors call. She installs her bulldog in a connecting office, and all bill collectors are referred to "Judge Barker," but it is always impossible to secure an interview with him. Growing impatient, the bill collectors force an entrance into Judge Barker's office and find him missing. The clues point to his murder at the hands of Patsy. At the trial things are getting hard for Patsy when the real Judge Barker—the bulldog—drops into court room and Patsy is freed.

Bluffing Father—(One Reel)—Strand Comedy.—Featuring Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco. Father, who had promised $5,000 dollars to Jay, his son-in-law, as soon as he has furnished a home, writes that he is coming for a visit on the very day the unpaid for furniture is being taken away. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are moving and the truck driver inquires the way of Jerry, who directs them to his own house. The furniture is delivered, father arrives and is just about to present the young couple with the promised five thousand when the Smiths come in and have all the furniture removed. Father understands, and, admiring the nerve of Jay, promises the newly-weds to buy them the furniture they will be able to keep.

Universal Program

No. 10 Westbound — (Two Reels) — Bison — June 2.—With Eileen Sedgwick and Babe Lawrence. Jim McLaren is the oldest and most trusted engineer on the White Rock Division. At the end of the run he is met by his daughter, Edith, and her sweetheart, Jack Shannon. Jim favors Pete, his assistant, but does not like Jack. The superintendent of the road is being harrassed by hold-up men. "Handsome" Harry, a hobo, arrives in the town and makes his way to the saloon. Pete and the bandits plan to rob the express containing a shipment of gold. The robbery works out as planned, but they soon find themselves covered by Harry's gun and under arrest. Jack and Edith arrive at the station just as "No. 10" comes in on time and the handits are turned over to the authorities. "Handsome" Harry is unmasked as the chief special agent of the road.

The Stolen Actress — (Three Reels) — Gold Seal—May 29.—With Chester Bennett and Ruth Stonehouse. Robert Carleton spends his last money to see Margory Manning, a famous actress. He is inspired by her acting and at once starts to write a play for her called "Little Miss Moonshine." When it is finished her manager refuses to read it as the actress wants a society drama. In despair Robert accepts a job as a revenue officer and leaves for Kentucky immediately. Jimmy, a reporter and friend of Robert's, kidnaps Margory and forces her to read the script. She is delighted with it and leaves for Kentucky to absorb the necessary atmosphere. While there she meets Robert and is unaware that he is the author of her play. Later, on the night of the first performance, Margory and Robert meet again. At the end of the play she finishes her dance in his arms, as he stands waiting in the wings.

Roped Into Scandal — (Two Reels) — L-Ko — May 30.—With Harry Lorraine, Eva Novak and Bert Roach. Mr. Wildcherry flirts with the wife of Samson Hercules. His daughter Eva has two suitors, Mr. Beer and Mr. Buller. They both come to call at the same time, and while they are there Papa goes over to see Mrs. Hercules. Hercules comes in and throws Wildcherry out. Later Eva receives a note from Beer asking her to elope with him. Buller reads it and makes a plan with Wildcherry to circumvent them. Many exciting incidents occur but in the end the lovers are reunited.

An Eight Cylinder Romance—(Two Reels)—Victor—May 31.—With J. Morris Foster, Billy Human, Rena Rogers and Perry Banks. Ethel thinks that her brother's chum, of whom he is always talking, is really a pretty girl. She decides to find out the facts. When Jim goes out that night she wears the chauffeur's clothes and drives the machine. Jim, however, is aware of what Ethel is doing. When Jack hears the story he joins the plot. They plan to scare Ethel. Jack commands Ethel to hold up her hands. Getting into the car she drives according to his directions. After many adventures, Ethel is finally rescued by her father. The next day she learns that Jack is her brother's chum. He tells her that he stole her picture two years ago and has been in love with her for a long time, even though he had never met her.

Universal Screen Magazine—Issue No. 21—June 1.—The first subject of this issue is the State Hospital for the Insane at Kingston, N. Y., and shows modern methods in the care of the patients. Pretty girls costumed in the laces characteristic of Italy, Spain, Belgium, Ireland, France and other countries which formed a part of the famous "Century Girl," are next shown. The next shows the diligence of the New York Department of Health in confiscating and destroying any food which is unfit for consumption. A hospital for disabled ships, photographed in one of the drydocks of the latest type, is a timely and interesting bit. The reel closes with a study of "Bobv," the Universal lion, who poses for his portrait, modeled by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor. The statue comes alive before our eyes.

Defiance — Big U — May 31.—With Margarita Fischer. The scenes of this picture were taken at the famous San Gabriel Mission, built in 1771. Don Enrique Carillo has a pretty daughter Rosa, who falls in love with George Curdy. Carillo does not want his daughter to marry an American, and opposes the match. Rosa and George elope. The monk at the mission has just finished the ceremony as the angry father arrives. He attacks George and the two men fight. The monk interferes, and Rosa and George ride away.

The Fifth Victim—Episode 12 of "The Voice on the Wire"—May 28.—With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. This episode is as exciting as the last. "Red" Warren and the gang of crooks receive word from the "voice" that Polly has failed to get Shirley. After many attempts the gang are successful in causing the death of Welsh, who is the fifth victim. Polly is again kidnaped by Warren's men. The reel is brought to a close with the capture of the crooks by Cronin and Shirley. "Red," however, makes his escape.

By Speshul Delivery—Victor—June 1.—With Zoe Rae, Gertrude Aster, Val Paul and Frankie Lee. Zoe is visiting her aunt. She and Tom play post office with some old letters they find in the attic. Zoe sees a man on horseback, and writes a note asking God to send her a horse like the one she has just seen. She tells Tom to send it by "Speshul Delivery." John Watkins stops to see an old friend. Tom takes the horse and leads it to Zoe. John comes out and Tom tells him what he has done with the horse. He follows her, and on the way picks up the letters, which are strewn over the grass. John recognizes them as his own. Years before he had left town on account of a quarrel with Muriel. Entering the house he confronts Muriel. Reading her face, John tells the child that he thinks they can arrange to keep the horse.

Uneasy Money—Joker—June 2.—With William Franey. Bill is the editor of the country paper and Suza is his assistant. Suza is sent to interview Lil and Milt. Bill sees an ad offering $500 for the return of a diamond ring. He buys a diamond ring from Milt for $200. Suza thinks it is for her. She shows it to a jeweler who tells her it is worthless. The two rush to the depot to catch Lil and Milt, but are too late. Suza consoles Bill by telling him that it is worth $200 to her and places it on her engagement finger.

Tell Morgan's Girl—Nestor—May 28.—With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts and Fred Gamble. Clarence leaves home in the country to seek a musical career in the city. He secures a job as piano player in a dance hall. His music is awful. He is about to be thrown out by Bill, the bouncer, when "Two-Step" Sadie takes his part. Bill drags Clarence to the bar. A drink fires him with pep. After a few more drinks he "cleans out" the place, compelling the toughest of them to drink buttermilk with him.

The Gunman's Gospel—Victor—May 29.—With Jack Mulhall and Ann Kromann. Having a reputation of a gunman causes Larry Donovan to leave for Tombstone Flat, a small and notorious Western town. Parson Brown and his daughter Betty are on the same stage. They become friends. The Marshal, owner of the only saloon in town, persuades the boys to send the Parson back on the next stage. Larry thinks differently. He goes to the Mayor and is appointed in Bill's place. Larry locks Bill and his deputy in the jail. When the Mayor goes to the saloon he finds a prayer meeting in progress, with Larry leading the singing with his gun for a baton.

The Purple Scar—(Two Reels)—Rex—June 3.—With Page Peters, Constance Johnson, Eugene Pallette and Jill Woodward. Van Sant rescues Teresa from drowning. In the struggle she scratches his face so deeply that it leaves a permanent scar. Years later, Van Sant has become the head of the Vice Commission, and is on the track of the men higher up in the "Dope Trust." Unknown to him, the head is Jeffrey Deane, the father of his sweetheart. Grip has become a paid gunman, and lives with his sister, Teresa. Deane wants to dispose of Van Sant, so Grip is hired to do the job. He sees the scar on Van Sant's face and recognizes him as the man who saved his sister from drowning. He goes to Van Sant and tells him all. Then he leads the way to Chin Loo's, where Deane is. In the struggle that follows Deane is killed. Later we see Miriam, still the happy wife of Van Sant in ignorance of her father's life, and Teresa and Grip as their near neighbors in the country.

Perils of the Yangtze—(Split Reel)—Powers—June 3.—With Dr. Dorsey. The Yangtze courses through a great plain of material deposited by floods, therefore its perils consist largely of shifting channels. The approach to the gorges is not difficult, but the current becomes very swift and treacherous. In some parts the river is quite safe, while in others there are dangerous whirlpools and currents which engulf the unwary captain. At the end of the gorges we see the ancient river town of Wanshien. On the same reel is:

When Noah's Ark Embarked.—Noah has completed the ark, and calls the animals to go on board. The monkey gives him a lot of trouble. The other animals all go below, but the monkey runs around the decks. Finally the animal leaps ashore and Noah goes after him. Then he jumps back again, undoes the rope which secures the ark. Noah realizes that they are going without him, and he plunges into the water and swims after it.

General Program

The Quarantined Bridegroom—(Screen Time 29 Mins.)—June 2.—Essanay—Black Cat Feature.—On the eve of Dick Ross's wedding to Lillian Clay, he is made the victim of a practical joke. Arthur Lyons and other friends kidnap Dick, bear him to the Lyons home and there, by prearrangement, a servant informs him that the house has just been quarantined for smallpox. Dick attempts to force his way out but is halted by policemen. Night breaks into dawn, and as the hours quickly turn into minutes until the wedding time, Dick becomes frantic. Finally he escapes through a coal chute and reaches the altar a few moments before noon, but still in time for the ceremony. His bride gets revenge, however, by having the same motion picture "cops" arrest Arthur for speeding off with her husband-to-be.

Movie Stunts—Selig—(Two Reels)—Featuring Tom Mix. In this production we see Tom Mix at his best. He performs deeds of courage and skill in horsemanship and marksmanship, as well as in roping. The long series of sensational film exploits by Tom Mix have been assembled in this production, and are given as a convincing presentment of the hazards that necessarily accompany the work of a motion-picture "stunt" actor.

Selig World Library—(ONE REEL)—The world of Wonders; the Wall of China traced; Things you should know about bees; Bees loyal to their queens; Moving Day for the bee family; Architects design the honeycomb.

The Framed Miniature—SELIG—Eric, an artist, loves Rosalia Dale, the beautiful one, but Arnold Dale, her father, does not approve. Therefore some obstacles. A stable boy, working for Dale, seeks revenge for fancied wrongs and steals a pearl necklace and a framed miniature of Rosalia. He throws away the miniature and keeps the pearls. When the theft is discovered, Dale thinks Eric has stolen them both. Eric has found the miniature, which he thinks is a token of Rosalia's love. After some months Dale and Rosalia visit Eric's studio and the father sees the framed miniature of Rosalia, from which Eric has painted a portrait. He touches a hidden spring and the real pearl necklace is found, the one stolen by the stable boy being but paste. Dale then makes no further objections to the courtship of the artist and his daughter.

Uncle Sam Afloat and Ashore—(Two REELS)—MAY 28.—SELIG—Details of life in the navy and army are interestingly shown in this picture, showing the soldier boys at drill, in line of battle and in camp. The cavalry is shown in activity and the artillery is presented in action. Battleships are also shown in formation and otherwise. The marines are drilled and the handling of the big naval guns is presented.

Feature Programs

Paramount

Her Better Self—(FIVE REELS)—FAMOUS PLAYERS — MAY 21. — Featuring Pauline Frederick. Vivian, a society girl, tries to prove her worth to a doctor she admires by working in his sanitarium which cares for the desperate poor. She is well on the way to demonstrating that she is something but a drawing room flower when an unfortunate circumstance pops up and she misinterprets a street walker as intending to say the doctor caused her downfall. Vivian abdicates the sanitarium without waiting for explanations, but some time later returns and witnesses the unfortunate woman's suicide. The doctor is about to be found guilty after a tedious trial when Vivian, who has been ill and who has just in time learned of the trial, arrives, gives her testimony and saves the man she loves. Reviewed in this issue.

Freckles — (FIVE REELS) — LASKY — MAY 28.—Featuring Louise Huff and Jack Pickford. Freckles is the butt of all the jokes at an orphanage. Finally his splendid little spirit rebels and he runs away. Faint with hunger, he makes his way into the lumber camp owned by John McLean. Liking the manner of the lad, McLean appoints him watchman of the Limberlost, a valuable timber swamp. There Freckles meets the "Angel," and her guardian, the "Bird Woman." It is the Bird Woman who finds and rescues the boy when timber thieves bind him and throw him into the swamp. Although exhausted from his hard fight with Black Jack, he protects the Angel from a falling tree. The tree falls with the greater part of its weight across Freckles' chest. When the news of his inheritance reaches him, making him feel on the same social scale with the Angel, he rejoices. Soon he recovers and the young couple are married. Reviewed in this issue.

Unconquered—(FIVE REELS)—LASKY—MAY 31. Featuring Fanny Ward. Mrs. Lenning, a designing widow, tells Jackson that his wife is weaning Billy's affection from him. Jackson commands his wife to call upon Mrs. Lenning and invite her to visit them at their Florida home, threatening to take only Billy with him if she refuses. In Florida Mrs. Jackson and Billy meet Richard Darcia, a writer, and become very friendly with him. In the meantime Mrs. Lenning is gradually winning Jackson, who demands a divorce from his wife, asking for the custody of Billy. They purposely allow Mrs. Jackson to overhear a conversation which will induce her to run away with Billy. They surprise her in Richard's home. Jackson secures a divorce and the boy. Jackson realizes his wife's mother-love for Billy when she is about to sacrifice her life for the boy. Mrs. Jackson is made doubly happy by the return of Billy and her new-found love in Richard. Triangle

A Royal Rogue—MACK SENNETT—KEYSTONE—MAY 20.—With Juanita Hansen and William A. Armstrong. One of the most laughable comedies of this renowned brand yet to appear. With a zestful, efficient cast and a snappy, full-of-action story, produced with an endless number of tricks in photography and ingenious directorial conceptions, the picture gets over with a bang that exceeds that of even the average Keystone. Other actors who help to make the picture register as a whirlwind of fun are Ray Griffin, Hal Cooley, Raymond Russell and Martha Trick. Outlining the action of one of these comedies gives only a faint idea of the situations. The latter, of themselves clever and humorous, need only to go through the inimitable process of Mack Sennett's Keystoning to come out laughing pills which will not fail to work. Suffice it to say that the action is all about the escapades of two rival lovers who are after the hand of the beautiful heroine, and a count who is laying for her moneyed aunt. Mistaken identities offer complications aplenty, and the count is finally exposed as a low-down jewel thief. Everybody gets what they are out after and some more when the picture ends.

The Sixteenth Wife—(FIVE REELS)—VITAGRAPH BLUE RIBBON—MAY 14.—Featuring Peggy Hyland. Olette is a faucy dancer enjoying success in Russia, thanks to the energies of her press agent. Kadir Il Raschid, a wealthy Turk, influences the latter to cancel the Russian engagement and bring Olette to Turkey. Once she is inside his harem the Kadir tries to keep her there as his sixteenth wife, but the dancer escapes in spite of his well-laid plans and comes to America, where the harem story finds space in all the papers. Kadir follows her to America with the intention of securing the beauty at all costs, but Olette, in league with a young reporter lover, sets a neat trap for him and the Turk sails back to the other side, a complete loser in the game. Money Madness—UNIVERSAL—(FIVE REELS)—MAY 28.—Featuring Mary McLaren. George Fuller, the president of the Grand National Bank, is presiding at a meeting of the directors when there is a run on the bank, due to the failure of two other financial institutions. He calls for the cashier and receives assurance that there is money enough to stop the run, and wishes to give the depositors their money, but the other directors tell him it is not good business. His daughter, Ethel, is interested in the cashier, Tom Williams, and he in her. His uncle, "Whispering Smith," is a famous detective, and he it is that solves the mystery of the stolen bank funds, after Fuller has taken the money home with him and put it in his wall safe, thinking to force the directors to his way of thinking. One of the directors, Simmons, turns out to be a crook, with a gambling house on the side, and after Tom has been arrested for the theft, Simmons is found to be the real culprit. There are some exciting scenes when Simmons and Dr. Mercer are mixed up with a train crew when they attempt to get away on a locomotive. Simmons confesses and the lovers are reunited.

Recent Motion Picture Patents

BY DAVID S. HULFISH

WE GIVE here brief reviews of some of the recent patents in motion picture apparatus. It is understood, of course, that we make no statements one way or the other in regard to the practicability of the devices mentioned.

No. 1,173,212. Cleaning Attachment. Issued to I. B. Parker, Dallas, Texas. Brush fingers rest upon the film to clean it of foreign particles before it passes into the film gate.

1,173,521. Method of Producing Motion Pictures. Issued to T. H. Hunter, New York, N. Y. By staging dramatic action upon a black stage, the background and floor and side walls, if any, being a dead black and photographically invisible, the projected picture becomes wholly dramatic and illusory in any way. This patent actually covers in its claims the dead-black stage and subsequent projection.

1,173,898. Continuous Printing. Issued to J. E. Thornton, assignor to J. O. O'Brien, Manchester, England. The negative strip is wound upon roller guides in a cabinet and the ends joined to form an endless belt. The sensitive stock then is fed upon the negative belt at one point and is fed from the belt at another point, the printing being done while the two are in contact.

1,173,899. Developing Apparatus. Issued to J. E. Thornton, assignor to J. O. O'Brien, Manchester, England. (Application filed June 21, 1911.) Two pairs of rollers are provided, and the film is wound in a spiral upon them. The four rollers are so arranged that the film is dipped alternately into two solutions. The method is suitable only for processes of long-time development.

1,174,144. Process of Making Color Films. Issued to A. Hernandez-Mejia, New Rochelle, N. Y. The process of making a color film which comprises the following steps: (1) Making simultaneously two color negatives through screens of complementary colors, one of the negatives being "directionally reversed" as may be done by a mirror or prism, (2) printing from one of the color negatives upon one side of a single transparent positive film sensitized upon both sides, (3) printing from the other negative upon the other side of the same positive film, with the images matched, (4) developing and treating one side of the positive film so that the image will appear thereon in color and (5) developing and treating the other side of the positive film so that the image will appear thereon in the complementary color.

1,174,249. Film Feed. Issued to A. F. Gall, assignor to New Jersey Patent Co., West Orange, N. J. Between shaft 13 and intermittent shaft 32 is an ordinary Geneva movement, but shaft 13 revolves irregularly by means of an auxiliary movement. Pin 9 on plate 8 on drive shaft 2 projects into a slot in wheel 12 on shaft 13. Shaft 13 is out of alignment axially with shaft 2 so that sometimes pin 9 is nearer the axis of shaft 13 and thus once in each revolution shaft 13 moves at a higher speed than its average speed. By engaging the Geneva at the period of high speed, the time of shift is reduced.

1,174,499. Rewinding Attachment. Issued to A. F. Hetherington, Franklin township, Somerset county, N. J. The take-up spindle holds two spools and as the spindle turns to take up the film from the motion head upon one spool, it also turns the second spool to rewind the reel previously projected.

1,175,281. Producing Illusion. Issued to C. R. Macaulay, New York, N. Y. The illusion of a picture drawn by invisible hands is produced by covering a drawing with a transparent sheet, then painting out the lines gradually by white paint upon the transparent sheet, and running the resulting print reversed. By using the transparent sheet, the drawing is uninjured.

1,175,961. Color-Focus Corrector. Issued to W. H. Kunz, Boston, Mass., assignor to Kunz-Garniss Co. In red-green color projection with a non-achromatic or uncorrected lens, the focus of the green image is shorter than the focus of the red image. To adjust this difference, a compensator for images of one color only is carried upon the revolving ray filter of the projecting machine.

1,177,137. Film Feed. Issued to Enoch Rector, New York, N. Y. The intermittent device is of the claw type and comprises several co-operating levers with revolving pivots and sliding movements to produce just the movement desired at the film-claw of the projector.

1,177,163. Camera Film Feed. Issued to C. E. Akeley, assignor to Akeley Camera, Inc., New York, N. Y. The film feed is mechanically simple. Pivot 25 is fixed in position and carries a rocking guide for the intermittent-claw carrier 22. Drive shaft 19 and cam 20 then advance part 22 and claw 38 to engage the film, rock the claw upon pivot 25 to shift the film, withdraw 22 and 38 to release the film and then rock the parts upon the pivot 25 to enable the claw 38 to engage the film at the next picture position.

1,177,165. Camera Mounting. Issued to C. E. Akeley, New York, N. Y. A tripod head especially designed for a camera having a round, flat body, and arranged to give rocking and panoramic movements.

1,177,697. Developing and Treating Apparatus. Issued to Leon Gaumont, Paris, France. (Application filed Feb. 17, 1909.) A row of tanks with different solutions has a system of rollers for carrying the film to be developed or toned. The film passes over the rollers and passes in loops through the different solutions in the tanks, the loops having the emulsion face outermost. An alarm sounds in case a film should break.

1,177,928. Fire Shutter. Issued to J. A. Cameron, New York, N. Y., assignor to Cameron Picture Machine Co. A fire shutter shuts light from the film gate and may be released to admit light by the act of closing the feed magazine door.

1,177,970. Intermittent. Issued to William Stevens, assignor of part to S. M. Barnes, Santa Ana, Calif. A much modified Geneva. The striker member is cup shape with the cup edges against a wall plate. The Star member is within the cup cavity and the engaging surfaces thus are protected from dust.

1,178,062. Projector. Issued to Thomas A. Edison, assignor to New Jersey Patent Co., West Orange, N. J. (Application filed June 6, 1910.) A device for tinting the projected light is controlled automatically from the film so that only predetermined portions are tinted when projected.

1,179,068. Method for Animated Cartoons. Issued to John Randolph Bray, New York, N. Y. The fixed objects or stage setting is drawn upon opaque paper and trimmed out. The moving objects are drawn in successive positions and placed behind the fixed "cutout" which thereby obscures parts. A third sheet of transparent material may be used for additional moving objects.

1,180,255. Coating Film. Issued to F. M. Cossitt and L. D. Castor, assignors to Ansco Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The process patented requires the sensitive coating to be spread upon the celluloid in a vacuum and dried while in the vacuum.

1,180,655. Flicker Reduction. Issued to Isidor Kitsee, Philadelphia, Pa. A row of lamps around the edge of the screen, and shielded from the eyes of the audience, give the screen a partial illumination while the lamps are flashed. Projection is made without a shutter and the lamps are flashed during the film shift. The patent appears to be based upon theory rather than the result of experiment or observation.

EDWARD EARLE—STUDENT

IN "The Beautiful Lie," the Metro-Rolfe screen version of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "A Reverie in a Station-House," starring Frances Nelson, Edward Earle plays Paul Vivian, an artist.

Edward Earle gets under the skin of every part he plays.

Of interest in this connection is the fact that Mr. Earle is himself an artist, having studied with Clarence Underwood, Lester Ralph and other well-known illustrators, and artists who witness the picture will be delighted to observe that he does actually paint with actual colors. As a rule, motion picture artists do their painting with a dry palette, which invariably causes artists in the audience to smile.

Mr. Earle is a studious young man, who takes his work seriously, and he makes a point of looking up details in connection with the professions and characteristics of the parts he plays. In "The Light of Happiness," a Metro feature with Viola Dana as star, he had to play a blind youth. Not only did he study the Braille system of raised lettering, used by the blind in reading, but he spent hours watching the walk and actions of blind persons, in preparation for playing the part. The average player might consider it too much trouble, but "Eddie" Earle's large following of screen admirers testifies to the fact that a little trouble pays in the long run.

Mr. Earle likes to "get inside the skin" of any part he plays. He does not like to play parts—he likes to be them. That is probably one reason for his increasing popularity.

Among this leading man's previous Metro productions have been "The Gates of Eden" and "The Light of Happiness," starring Viola Dana, with whom he appeared in a number of pictures at the Edison studio. He has also played for Famous Players and for Pathe. Among his best known productions have been "The Innocence of Ruth," "The Phantom Thief," "The Lost Melody," and "The Unopened Letter." Mr. Earle has had valuable experience on the dramatic stage, having played with Henrietta Crosman, Bertha Galland, Mary Mannering, and William H. Thompson, and in musical successes with James T. Powers, Marie Cahill and De Wolf Hopper. His first stage experience was gained in the Valentine stock company in his home city of Toronto, Canada.

ATLANTIC COAST NOTES

Billie Burke and Douglas Fairbanks are said to be the most popular screen stars with picture patrons in Australia.

May Allison is again in New York. Miss Allison announces that her withdrawal from the Metro Company was due to the impossibility of securing suitable co-starring vehicles in which she and Harold Lockwood had an equal division of the story.

Norman S. Rose, publicity manager of the Triangle Company, states that the Triangle features made at the Triangle Yonkers studio, of which "Her Father's Keeper" was the first, are not to be called

Fine Arts features. The Eastern studios under the supervision of Allan Dwan are not Fine Arts studios and the productions made here will be known as Triangle Productions.

An English marriage certificate and a French cable blank were among the necessities in the filming of "The Millionaire's Double," a Metro-Rolfe play starring Lionel Barrymore. P. Thad Volkman, delegated to get them, wrote to England and France. He got the cable blank, but the authorities in England refused to send the marriage blank. Volkman obtained one from the New York Public Library and a satisfactory reproduction was made.

"The Ruby of Kishmoor," a story which is to be filmed soon by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., was written by the late Howard Pyle, the noted artist.

The latest vaudeville artist to enter pictures is Don Fulano, a wonderful performing horse which is to play the leading role in "Your Obedient Servant," a film version of "Black Beauty," which the Edison Company will make for release through Forum Films, Inc.

Pauline Frederick is already beginning to commute to her country place at Mountain Lakes, New Jersey, the "commutation" being accomplished in her new Stutz runabout. Miss Frederick has begun a series of week-end parties, the guest of honor at her latest one being Robert Vignola, her director.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES

The fifth offering of the Pollard Picture Plays, directed by Harry Pollard at the studio on the Fair grounds in San Diego, is a light comedy-drama. Marguerita Fischer is the star of these features, which Mutual is releasing.

Virginia Pearson, who is starring in Fox Films and who is one of the finest types of womanhood on the two-dimension stage.

Grace Cunard, who recently left the Universal Company and is taking her first vacation in several years, states that she does not wish to direct pictures again for several years, but will continue acting, with some scenario writing.

Roberta Arnold, who in private life is the wife of Herbert Rawlinson, the Universal actor, intends to spend her summer vacation on the west coast. She has been playing in "Upstairs and Down" in New York City this winter.

Alan Forrest, after completing an engagement with the Fox Company, is again with the American Company at Santa Barbara. Forrest appeared opposite Mary Miles Minter in one of her American pictures, and also played in the Kolb and Dill comedies.

Agnes Vernon, Universal star, will be known in the future as "Brownie" Vernon.

Carol Halloway has the distinction of being the only woman playing in William Duncan's Vitagraph serial, now in the making at this company's Hollywood studio.

Helen Holmes, the Signal star, let her adopted baby go away to her ranch for two weeks; at the end of the time she sent for the child and says she will never let her go away again.

Paul Willis made his long-trouser debut in the Yorke-Metro feature, "The Promise."

Sincerity in Film Plays

The success of all great undertakings —by men or by nations—depends primarily on Sincerity of Purpose.

And in direct proportion as this sincerity of purpose has been adhered to, have temporary successes become permanent achievements.

Triangle Plays are built upon sincerity —the sincere conviction that only by giving the public picture plays that are better—and by continuing to give them better plays, each one as good or better than the last—can Triangle succeed as a permanent institution.

Film Men Convene

MEET AT WASHINGTON TO FIGHT FOOTAGE AND ADJUST AMUSEMENT TAX

IN answer to a summons sent out by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, representatives of every branch of the trade expected to assemble June 1 at the Belasco Theater, Washington, to register a vigorous protest against that clause of the federal tax bill placing a levy on one cent a foot on all positive prints and one-half cent a foot on raw stock.

It was the opinion of the National Association, which authorized Mr. Brady to call the convention, that if the business was to be saved from much hardship that clause would have to be left out when the bill was finally passed.

Many Film Men Working

Mr. Brady named every member of the National Association on the committee to seek with him a hearing before Senator Simmons, chairman of the finance committee. The film men did not ask any diminution in the tax on admissions, seeking rather to make it more drastic in order to eliminate the footage tax. Suggestions were made as to the best methods of collecting and placing the admission tax, but the fight centered against the levying of the footage duty on the producers. The claim was made that this tax would force a large number of concerns out of business and, furthermore, that it is unfair, being the only tax on production levied against any form of amusement. The film interests feel that if they are taxed on the cost of production, theatrical and other entertainments should bear a similar burden.

The Washington convention was called to impress the legislators with the seriousness of the purpose of the industry. Only a small committee, headed by Mr. Brady, called upon Senator Simmons, but the other film men were asked to see their respective senators personally.

Exhibitors' Amusement Tax

The suggestions which were made as to the means of collecting the admission tax are in accord with a resolution passed a few days ago by the executive committee of the National Association. This advocates a levy of 10 per cent on all admission tickets, to be paid by the public, and to be collected by means of stamps bought and attached to the tickets. The exhibitor shall also be permitted to keep 10 per cent of the tax collected for the expense and trouble of collecting it. The original resolution of the executive committee carried a proviso that the five-cent houses should be exempt from the tax, but this clause was thrown out at the request of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which claims that all should bear the burden. Moreover, the inclusion of the small houses will materially increase the revenue of the government, and the hope is that in the face of this the Senate will be inclined to abandon the footage tax.

The meeting for June was called at the request of Lee Ochs, national president of the Exhibitors' League, who had just returned from Washington with full knowledge of how serious matters were. He pointed out that many other industries were strongly represented at the capital at this time, and that while, when the war revenue bill was passed by the House, many representatives made objections for the other trades, not a voice had been raised in behalf of the screen.

Amendments Already Secured

The revenue measure which passed the House has already been the subject of several important film amendments. The chief change is one which removes from the producer and places on the buyer or lessee any taxes imposed by the bill where the contract was entered upon before the date when the bill was brought before the House, May 9. This has to do with the clause placing a levy of one-half cent a foot on raw stock and of one cent a foot on all positive prints. Worn out or damaged films brought into this country from abroad, but originally made here, are also exempted from the ten per cent ad valorem tax placed upon all imports.

The film clauses passed by the House and now before the Senate Finance Committee are still considered too drastic, but it is certain that the Senate will make great changes, and among them, it is hoped, will be reductions in the burden on the film industry.

Express Tax Reduced

One important change that has been made already in the war revenue bill reduces the tax from ten to six per cent on all express shipments. This will be of interest to all exhibitors and exchange managers who will effect a saving of about fifty per cent in transportation charges through the prompt action which was taken by the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Films Exempt from Tax

ACCORDING to the latest newspaper reports films have been exempted from tax by the Senate Finance Committee in its consideration of the federal war tax bill. At the time of going to press this report was unconfirmed, but it is very probable that it is true, due to the efficient work of the picture men. An account of their activities is found in the accompanying story.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION

Annual Meeting to Be Held at Grand Rapids, June 12 and 13—Prominent Exhibitors to Take Active Part

According to all reports, the Michigan State Convention, to be held at Grand Rapids on June 12 and 13, is going to be a huge success. A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Exhibitors' League in that state, is working overtime to put over the largest state convention yet held, and a business program that will appeal to every exhibitor, large or small, is being arranged.

The program included numerous addresses by prominent Michigan exhibitors which, in view of the turmoil of the times and the big bills pending in congress which will affect the whole industry, promise to be of unusual interest.

Booster material sent out to exhibitors declares that other states holding conventions have had present in the majority of cases not less than one hundred and fifty exhibitors. Members of the State Exhibitors' League are exhorted to turn out in a body, and in order to make the affair a success from the numerical standpoint each fellow is requested to bring another member with him.

Election of officers, delegates to the National Convention, a new constitution and by-laws, are among the important things to be considered. Other issues of importance which will be brought up and discussed, with the view of adopting a concerted policy toward them, will be the new war tax, the semi-inspection fee, the deposit system, etc.

Those in a position to know declare that if you are in the motion picture business in Michigan it will be worth your while to attend this convention.

About Shipping Films

The transportation committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has just secured a ruling from the bureau of explosives providing that films may be transported on steamers carrying passengers under the same conditions as are laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission as regards the packing and labeling of the same.

The bureau of explosives filed several complaints covering shipments of film which were not in accordance with the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission and requested the committee to notify the exchanges and exhibitors whose names were given that it will be necessary for them to comply with the rules in making future shipments.

The American Express Company, through Traffic Manager E. E. Bush, requested the suggestions from the committee regarding the return of film shipments which are not delivered within forty-eight hours. Mr. Bush stated that his company has not returned undelivered shipments, but has been obliged to store the films while endeavoring to locate the consignees. Lack of sufficient or incorrect addresses cause inconvenience and additional expense and the exhibitors and exchange managers should exercise greater care in addressing shipments.

Robert Brunton has severed his connections with Triangle and will be studio manager and art director for Miss Bessie Barriscale's new producing company. He will have the Clune studio in Hollywood ready for her early in June, when the production of "Rose o' Paradise" will be begun. During his recent visit to New York, Mr. Brunton purchased complete sets of new properties and studio equipment for the Barriscale organization. Returning to Los Angeles, he assumed charge of the work of alterations and additions to the Clune studio, employing forty men to work on night and day shifts till it is ready for Miss Barriscale's occupancy.

WANT TO MEET THIS MAN?

THE West End Theater, Cor. Cicero and West End, Chicago, Ill., to the Manager:—

I have written a five-reel feature photo-play entitled "The Fire Fighting Zouaves." A powerful war play. I got $10,000.00 for this great five-reel feature. I would like for you to have this war picture in your theater. You would be making lots of money with it I tell you. You can get the films from the Fox Film Corporation, 5 South Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., 515 Mallers Building.

Now, Mr. Manager, if you want me to send you my five-reel feature entitled "The Fire Fighting Zouaves" for you to follow when the picture is going now, I will let you have it at $100.00 per hour; I mean that when one show is over with you pay me $100.00 for the use of my five-reel feature photo-play which I let you have to follow when the pictures is going on. Or pay me $1,000.00 for one day's use.

Now, your theater holds 3,000 seats. Now, you can charge as high as $1.00 admission for each person. I know that if you show this five-reel feature entitled "The Fire Fighting Zouaves" that you will be making $3,000.00 for one show. You run your theater from 1:30 P. M. to 11:00 P. M.. You can make about from $30,000.00 for one day's showing my five-reel feature entitled "The Fire Fighting Zouaves."

(Name of writer upon request. Here's your chance to make money.)

Bill Hart startled the natives when he arrove in Chicago and paraded around in the costume of the traditional wild and wooly west. Many Chicagoans glared daggers at him, thinking he was a German.

Anita King, another visitor in the Zephyrous Village last week, was not glared at at all—simply stared at. She entertained the north siders at the Wilson vaudeville house, who declare she is not only a King but a queen. Theda Bare-ah and Rose Tapley are also in our midst.

There was a lot of sunshine out the other night—when the Chicago Reel Fellows Club dedicated their regular meeting to the Sunshine Film Corporation.

There was Watty and Scoville and Strauss and Davidson and Travers and Buckley and Williams and mebbe some others—all Sunny Jims.

The Victim, with Valeska Suratt (Fox)—"Very well liked by our patrons. Miss Suratt is not so extreme in costumes in this as in some other plays."—Mrs. M. M. McFadden, Lincoln Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Maternity with Alice Brady (World)—"This brought very good business. The picture is fine and pleased the people."—M. Berling, Madison Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Battle Cry of Peace (Vitagraph special)—"I did fine business on this picture. Everyone who saw it was delighted with it. More people saw this feature than any other picture in Kentwood."—Manager Daspit, Atherton Theater, Kentwood, La.

The Law of Compensation, with Norma Talmadge (Selznick)—"A very good production, big box office attraction on a two-day run. This star has the public coming her way."—George L. Madison, Logan Square Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Shanghied, with Charlie Chaplin (Essanay re-issue)—"Chaplin always packs them in."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

American Methods, with William Farnum (Fox)—"The best picture we have ever run in this theater. Everyone liked it and it brought good business."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Aladdin From Broadway, with Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno (Vitagraph)—"A very good picture, which pleased the people very well."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Wild Winship's Widow, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"This went over pretty fair."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Cheerful Givers, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"A clean picture that can be shown anywhere without offense to anyone. A picture the children will like as well as the grown folks. Fair as a box office attraction."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

A Magdalene of the Hills, with Mabel Taliaferro (Metro)—"Not liked by all of our patrons, especially the women. Average business. The plot of the picture has been done over many times. The title does not attract."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Miss George Washington, with Marguerite Clark (Famous Players-Paramount)—"A splendid picture which went over big. Business good."—Chris Taylor, Rialto Theater, Kewanee, Illinois.

The Years of the Locust, with Fannie Ward (Paramount)—"A poor title for a picture, so I did poor business. Picture fair."—Chris Taylor, Rialto Theater, Kewanee, Illinois.

Polly Red Head, with Ella Hall (Bluebird)—"One of the best Bluebirds that we have run. Business fair."—Chris Taylor, Rialto Theater, Kewanee, Illinois.

The World's Great Snare, with Pauline Frederick (Famous Players-Paramount)—"This seemed to be well liked. Box office receipts good, of course."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Kentucky.

Out of the Wreck, with Kathlyn Williams (Morosco-Paramount)—"Too slow and long drawn out. Not very well liked. Only fair business."—Robert Sparks, Mission Theater, Amarillo, Texas.

The Valiants of Virginia, with Kathlyn Williams (Selig-V. L. S. E.)—"A delightfully entertaining story. We had a great many favorable comments on it."—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theater, Eminence, Kentucky.

The Desert Man, with William Hart (Triangle)—"I like this Hart picture better than any other he has done. There is always something happening. It is full of action. Hart draws well for us and the women are getting to like his work as well as the men do."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

In Again, Out Again, with Douglas Fairbanks (Artcraft)—"One of Fairbanks' best. Very well liked."—Harry Tague, Ashland Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Book Agent, with George Walsh (Fox)—"This is a very good picture."—Harry Tague, Ashland Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Devil's Assistant, with Marguerita Fischer (Pollard-Mutual)—"A well produced picture except for the last reel, which is too gruesome. Otherwise, it is a beautiful offering and pleased our patrons, but the women especially do not like unpleasant scenes, such as the last reel contained."—Harry Tague, Ashland Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Rainbow (Art Dramas)—"I think this picture, without question pleased a larger per cent of my patrons than any other feature I have ever run."—Manager Cropper, Auditorium Theater, Marion, Kansas.

The Silent Partner, with Blanche Sweet (Paramount)—"A pretty fair picture, but the star does not draw."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

The Habit of Happiness, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle re-issue)—"One of Fairbank's best. Pleases everyone. It is a very good drawing card."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Max in a Taxi, with Max Linder (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"Better than his two previous comedies. Has a novelty ending. We heard no complaints about this, but Max is not the drawing card Chaplin is."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Waiting Soul, with Mme. Petrova (Metro)—"A very good picture. Business fair. Somehow, this star seems to be losing her popularity."—James Poro, Casino Theater, Astoria, L. I., New York.—In middle class neighborhood.

Forget-Me-Not, with Kittie Gordon (World)—"Excellent picture. The star is very good. Business fair."—James Poro, Casino Theater, Astoria, L. I., New York.—In middle class neighborhood.

Paddy O'Hara, with William Desmond (Triangle)—"A fine picture, so the patrons said, and they came freely."—J. E. Alford, Jacobs Theater, McComb, Mississippi.

Exhibitors Aiding Liberty Loan

BROOKLYN SUGGESTS BONDS IN LIEU OF DEPOSITS—ACTORS ACTIVE

THAT the motion picture industry is continuing to support the government loyally in its disposal of the Liberty Bonds is proved beyond a doubt by the fact that every branch of the business has taken up the matter in some manner and is doing efficient work in absorbing the bonds.

Exhibitors, producers and actors the country over are vitally interested in the important matter of financing the war. Many have taken steps on their own initiative to aid in distributing Liberty Bonds and in purchasing them for themselves.

Liberty Bonds in Place of Deposits

The associated motion picture exhibitors of Brooklyn at their last meeting passed a resolution recommending to the industry a plan, provided that exhibitors deposit with the exchanges, which goes toward the purchasing of Liberty Bonds. The exhibitors agreed to make a request to all exchanges and manufacturers that each respective exchange accept Liberty Bonds or bonds in the amount of the required deposit as security for the contract and that all cash now on deposit with the exchanges be immediately inverted into Liberty Bonds and such bonds to be held as security.

A portion of the letter of notice sent by the Brooklyn exhibitors to the exchanges reads as follows:

> This being a patriotic step, which in our mind would greatly benefit both the exchange as well as the exhibitor, we think there should be no hesitation in your taking this action. It is also our intention to give the result of this request considerable publicity in order than the exchanges might derive the benefit in consenting to do so.
> Kindly advise immediately as the time for subscription for these bonds expire June 15.

It is said that about five million dollars of exhibitors' money is tied up in deposits and drawing no interest, and the Brooklyn managers figure that the United States loan bonds would be as good security as the cash, and at the same time the theater owners would receive the 3½ per cent interest, as well as be of service to the government.

The Brooklyn scheme is to be explained to all other exhibitors' organizations, and exhibitors throughout the country are to be asked to co-operate in the same way.

The exhibitors of Brooklyn have also authorized their association to take Liberty Bonds to the extent of $500 and are also soliciting subscriptions among members of the association.

Other Exhibitors Aid

The Chicago Exhibitors' League, under the leadership of President Joseph E. Hopp and the committee, has been actively co-operating for some time with local bankers in providing for the absorption of the war bonds. The exhibitors have also provided for the accommodation of the "4 Minute Men" who are to appear at the various theaters and explain the Liberty Bonds, receiving applications of the audiences. Many Chicago exhibitors have also subscribed individually to the Liberty Bonds.

The Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation of New York, owners of the Strand Theater there, is one of the first theatrical corporations to subscribe substantially to the Liberty Bonds. That firm has purchased the security to the amount of $35,000.

Producers Also Aiding

As stated in last week's MOTOGRAPHY, a number of the film producing concerns are stimulating interest in the sale of Liberty Loan Bonds by various means. The National Association's committees are active. Famous Players have taken $100,000 worth of bonds. At the end of every picture released by Selig there is a patriotic trailer followed by the line "Do your bit. Buy Liberty Bonds."

William Fox is causing all his literature and photographs of plays and players to be stamped "Buy a Liberty Bond." Many producers have purchased bonds outright and are also arranging for their direct absorption in their own organizations.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has had a set of special slides made urging the patrons of motion picture theaters throughout the country to subscribe to the Liberty Loan. These slides have been shipped to the Universal exchanges and will be distributed to exhibitors in every locality.

The slides are presented to the exhibitors with the compliments of the Universal with the request that they be flashed on the screen at frequent intervals during every performance.

President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation is also engaged in actively promoting the sale of bonds and the Guamont is working with him. The ideas of some of the nation's well known cartoonists have been animated by the Gaumont cartoonists presenting the idea of Liberty Loans in a number of original ways. These cartoon arguments are attached as trailers to Gaumont films.

Actors Buying Bonds

A large number of the people of the screen have subscribed individually to the government bonds and are also encouraging their sale. Earle Williams of Vitagraph has been elected temporary chairman of a special committee of the national association of the motion picture industry, whose purpose is to push the Liberty Loan among men of the screen. He has already called several meetings of actors and a large number of bonds have been subscribed for. Mr. Williams himself has devoted $5,000 to the cause. Marc McDermott wired his subscription.

The women's division of the industry's Liberty Loan committee is presided over by Alice Brady, who promises real support from the women of the screen.

Marguerite Clark headed the list with a $5,000 subscription. Mabel Taliaferro has also purchased several thousand dollars worth of the bonds and is urging her friends to subscribe freely.

These are but miscellaneous examples of the movement in the film industry throughout the country to support the government in floating the new bond issue. There is no doubt but that every exhibitor and film man will do his best for Uncle Sam in this case of need.

In the marketing of the production "Should She Obey?" the Arizona Film Company offers the personal service of one of its men in helping the purchaser to market this production. This will take the form of sending a man on the ground who will conduct both the selling and advertising campaigns.

TO BUILD 32 THEATERS

One New York Architect, Alone, Holds Contracts for That Many New Film Houses—Investment Aggregates $11,000,000

That the moving picture business, in spite of the proposed war tax, is still one of the livest avenues in the realm for keeping coin in circulation is evidenced by the fact that one New York architect, alone, holds commissions to design and superintend the building of no less than thirty-two playhouses within the next six months.

The architect in question is Thomas W. Lamb. He has already been responsible for numerous theaters in Manhattan, among them the Eltinge, the American, Loew's Avenue B Theater, and Loew's Orpheum in Eighty-sixth street.

At the present time he has commissions to design and superintend the building of the new Capital Theater, at Broadway and Fifty-first street, with a capacity of 5,200 persons, and another in Broadway about a block distant, also unusually spacious. New ones planned by him for Washington, New Haven, St. Louis and numerous other cities bring the total of projected theaters under his individual supervision up to thirty-two. The investment represented by these contracts aggregates $11,000,000, and, therefore, the answer to the question, "Who's afraid?" obviously is not the motion picture magnates.

Clara Kimball Young Sues Selznick

Alleging her inexperience in matters of business have been taken advantage of, and asking for an injunction and accounting so that she may have what she claims to be her share in the profits of the enterprise, Clara Kimball Young last week brought suit against Mr. Selznick in the Supreme Court.

She claims that though she was treasurer of the corporation which bears her name, she received only her salary of $1,000 a week and was not permitted to handle any of the money taken in by the concern.

She declares she was to have received $449,000 worth of stock in the Clara Kimball Young Company which was capitalized at $1,000,000, besides her salary of $1,000 a week for appearing in pictures.

Miss Young claims all the credit for having made her company, a success financially and artistically, and in closing her complaint makes a demand upon the court that the enterprises of Selznick and the corporation named after her be placed in the hands of a receiver.

No concern over the action of the actress was manifested at the Selznick offices when news of her suit was brought to its head.

"Clara Kimball Young," said Mr. Selznick, "is under an iron-clad, five-year contract drawn up by the ablest lawyers in the motion picture business. If she can break any of its clauses she is welcome to do so."

Mr. Selznick also declared he had paid the star in full for her services up to the week ending September 1.

Educationals Escape War Tax

Receipts from educational entertainments have been excluded from the 10 per cent amusement tax which is included in the war revenue bill, as it passed the House of Representatives.

Representative Hampton Moore of Pennsylvania, the one man opposing, declared it was unfair for men like William Jennings Bryan to receive from $200 to $750 a night and the government receive nothing from them.

"It is possible," he said, "that organizations may be formed for educational purposes, having no intent to make profits for the members of the association; but it is inconceivable that a large educational institution can be formed that can afford to pay $750 a night for a lecturer or any less sum, without somebody getting some profit that in these war times ought to be taxed. It is not impossible that some 'educational' concern might be established to employ Charlie Chaplin, one of the best paid artists in the world, to give educational lectures or performances, without paying any tax to the government of the United States. This would not be fair to legitimate theaters, moving picture shows, or other amusements approaching the educational."

Exhibitors' Convention in Iowa

Exhibitors' League branches all over the United States have been holding conventions of late, partly for the purpose of electing delegates to the national convention and exposition to be held in Chicago, July 14 to 22, and partly to settle important matters in connection with their own local affairs.

Iowa is one of the latest to gather her forces and mobilize her theater men. The state is to hold a big convention at Des Moines, June 13 and 14. There is no doubt but that there will be a record attendance, as there are a number of very important questions to be discussed and settled to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Exhibitors of the state who have any inquiries to make should communicate with H. J. Lego, temporary secretary of the Iowa League. Mr. Lego is proprietor of the Majestic Theater of Fort Dodge.

Wisconsin Exhibitors Meet

Exhibitors from every nook and niche of the state of Wisconsin girded up their loins and took a trip to Milwaukee for the convention of the state branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which was held on Thursday and Friday, May 31 and June 1.

The Hotel Wisconsin was the scene of the discussions and legislation. A large number of matters close to the hearts and purses of the theater men were taken up and given decisive treatment, among them the question of deposits and the proposed war tax on films and amusements.

The efficient secretary of the Wisconsin League is Thomas A. Lee of the Boyle Theater of Fond du Lac. Fred J. Herrington, national organizer of the M. P. E. L. of America, was the evangelist who recently revived the spirits of the Wisconsin managers, and the result was the formation of the new state league and the affiliation with the national body.

Comedies in Demand

That there is a great demand for good short length comedies is clearly evidenced by the recent experience of the Chicago exchange of Vitagraph V. L. S. E. On May 6 Chicago's film repository contained 72 prints of Vitagraph one and two-reel comedies. Out of this number but 7 prints remained idle while 65 were put in use. This is believed to create a new record for the one-day booking of comedies.

Many Exhibitors at Chicago Exposition

BIG SHOW COMING JULY 14 TO 22 TO TAKE UP VITAL QUESTIONS

THERE will be a large number of exhibitors present at the national Motion picture exposition to be held in Chicago July 14 to 22. There is no doubt in the minds of those who are in touch with the situation but that there will be practically twice as many theater men present at this year's show as attended the 1916 convention.

New League Branches Represented

This is due to the fact that since the convention held last year exhibitors' organizations in ten new states have been admitted into the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Each of these organizations will be represented on the floor of the convention by its official delegates. These, of course, will be present in addition to the representatives sent by all of the older branches of the league.

Among the most active states in the picture industry is Wisconsin, which has recently come into the League and is to send to the convention a delegation of men who have risen to top rank because of their ability, reliability and progressiveness.

Even snowbound Alaska is to be represented at the exposition by one of its progressive exhibitors. In Juneau, Alaska, one of the largest and liveliest of the cities there, four picture houses are doing business. An invitation has been extended by Exposition Manager Schindler to this little league to attend the coming convention, and he has been assured that at least one of them will be present to represent Alaska.

Vital Questions to Be Discussed

Another reason why a record-breaking attendance of exhibitors is assured for the coming convention is that there is a great deal of legislation of vital importance to every theater man pending at Washington and in several of the states of the union. The most important of these, of course, is the proposed war tax, which it is probable will mean that each patron will be required to purchase a separate war tax ticket, equal to one-tenth of the cost of the admission ticket. Prominent theater men have stated that this will mean that a large percentage of the smaller houses will have to go out of business, particularly when it is remembered that the war tax also proposes a stringent tax on raw and exposed films. This, of course, will boost film rentals. It will be necessary for the exhibitor to charge higher admission prices, and in the end the burden will fall upon the public.

This means that the industry will go through a period of readjustment, and it will be a period of many problems for men in every phase of the industry. Some of these will be threshed out at the convention, where the most prominent and the keenest theater managers will be present, as well as figures prominent in every branch of the industry.

The Chicago convention will also wrestle again with the problems of censorship, Sunday pictures and films shown in schools and churches.

Annual Election of Officers

The convention will thus not only be intensely interesting because of the vital measures treated, but will gain a political interest through the annual election of officers to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. There is no need to emphasize the importance of electing the right men for the right places to guide the affairs of the national organization and to fight the battles of every exhibitor in the country. When the nominations are made, it will be found that there are a number of exhibitors who can talk as well as manage a house.

Manager Schindler in New York

Exposition Director Ludwig Schindler has made another trip to Manhattan for the purpose of closing contracts for space at the exposition and in order to secure some definite agreements as to the stars who will appear at the Coliseum the week of July 14.

"In spite of the more or less unsatisfactory conditions which exist in the trade just at the present time, the exposition is coming along in good shape," said Manager Schindler to MOTOGRAPHY last week. "It is impossible for me to tell you right now what the complete program will be, but upon my return from New York I can probably give you some definite information in regard to the stars who will actually appear at the show.

"You know there is a great deal of difference between a promise and making good. I could tell you some promises now, but I don't want to announce anything of which I am not sure. There will be a large number of big stars present, and I can announce some of the names of these as soon as I return from New York."

Rose Tapley at Exposition

Rose Tapley, the Vitagraph star who has been making a tour of the United States in the interest of the picture industry, called at League Headquarters in Chicago and renewed her acquaintance made at the last national exposition, at which she was one of the hardest and most persistent workers.

She states that the numerous exhibitors to whom she has talked feel that it is their duty to be present at the July convention. They realize the number of evils that are confronting the picture business, and also feel that in order to survive the storms that the future may have in store for them there must be a unity of action by the producers and exhibitors.

Rose was not even extended an invitation to attend the July show, as the boys look upon her as one of the family, and an invitation to her would be almost an insult. Although a fluent talker, she could never explain to the Chicago boys if her smiling face is not to be seen, not only for one day but each and every day, during the exposition. Needless to say, she will be there, heart and soul.

Send in Your Suggestions

Replies are still coming in to the Exposition Headquarters regarding the contest for the best advertising feature or novelty to make the coming show the most poular and successful. Send in your suggestions to 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago, and you may win one of the cash prizes. Fifty dollars, $35 and $25 have been offered. In case a number of exhibitors should offer the same suggestion and the committee deem it the best idea submitted, the preference will be given the first one received.

Several artists are working on the decorative and color schemes for the Coliseum. They are submitting sketches, and the best one will be selected for use during the exposition. It is the desire of the management to make this the most attractive and beautiful exposition ever held in the history of motion pictures.

A program is being laid out, the keynote of which is "something doing all the time." Special features will be introduced that will appeal to everybody.

Convention Committees

The various committees running the seventh big National Show are as follows:

CHICAGO HONORARY COMMITTEE

"RAISE ADMISSION PRICES"

President John R. Freuler of Mutual Declares Theaters Charge Too Little in View of Expenses and Coming War Tax

"The motion picture theaters of the United States ought to put in effect increased schedules of admission prices at once," observed President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation on his arrival in New York last week.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, both Artcraft stars at present working at the Lasky Studios in California, recently sent Charlie Chaplin a telegram in which they stated they were about to sue him for sore ribs after viewing one of his photoplays. That Charlie succeeded in changing their minds on the subject is evidenced by this picture, which incidentally discloses three of the screen's biggest guns.

"Picture amusement prices are too low in comparison with the general scale of prices and in view of the costs and coming taxation."

Mr. Freuler left New York for Washington, where he was to meet Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., and James P. Greer, general counsel for the American. There they expected to take up close range consideration of the problem of the motion picture and the war taxes proposed.

These officials went to Washington prepared to point out that the taxation proposed would fail of its purpose by strangulation of the business of making, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures.

"It is to be expected that the motion picture industry and those engaged in it must bear a just share of the burdens of the war," observed Mr. Freuler. "But we are inclined to the view that legislators at Washington have not accurately surveyed the possibilities and the limitations of the pictures as a source of war revenues.

"It is certainly obvious that the public is going to have to pay more for pictures, since there is no extravagant margin of profit in the industry, even among the most prosperous concerns today. The picture theaters must prepare at once to increase prices all along the line.

"The five cent theater must and can get ten, the ten-cent house can get fifteen, and twenty-five cents is bound to become a much more general admission fee for picture entertainment than it is now. The problem of how to achieve this without a loss of patronage is a slightly different one in each theater, but there is always a way.

"This must be done, because the motion picture must get more from the public. The pictures are offering more amusement value to the public per unit of admission charge than any competing form of entertainment. The success of the pictures makes this self-evident. The public can and will stand a raise in prices if it is gracefully applied.

"It is necessary for the exhibitor to give his show the appearance of added value, to make his patrons feel they are getting a quarter's worth for a dime instead of merely a nickel's worth for five cents, and they will pay up cheerfully.

"The public can not reasonably expect the price of motion picture entertainment to remain constant in the face of continually rising cost of picture production and operation. The motion picture is about the only big popular commodity that has not recently increased in price or reduced in quality. Yet the cost of picture production, the cost of distribution and the cost of theater operation are all continually increasing as a result of the very generally applied pressure of increased living and industrial costs. Labor costs more, materials cost more, selling costs are higher.

"It is unlikely that the cost of motion picture will ever be lower than it is today—and it is a certainty that prices are going to be higher soon. The exhibitor must prepare to collect from the public."

Sessue Hayakawa, the celebrated Japanese actor who has starred in a number of highly successful Lasky-Paramount pictures, adds another characterization to the already lengthy list which he has presented upon the screen when he plays the Mexican bandit in "The Jaguar's Claws." Hayakawa has been seen as a Japanese, a Chinese, a Hawaiian, an East Indian and an American Indian in various Lasky pictures, but this is the first time that he has ever donned sombrero and chaps.

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum Motography, Chicago.

A Model Manager's Office

HAROLD EDEL, the youthful managing director of the splendid Strand Theater of New York, declares that he now has his house in such a shape that he is almost satisfied. He has been working continuously, since his appointment as the Strand's executive head last August, to get the inside workings of the theater perfect, and, while he admits that he has not as yet reached the 100 per cent perfection mark, he feels that he is so close to it that he has reasons to be pleased, and he promises to reach the stage of perfection in a very short time.

The latest double innovation and time saving devices which Mr. Edel has introduced into the Strand enable him to sit at his desk and know exactly what is going on upon the stage, the screen, in the auditorium and the different executive departments. By consulting a speedometer which has been placed upon the wall next to his desk he learns whether the picture which the audience is watching is run at the proper speed, and if he has any instructions to convey to his operators in the booth, he does so from his office desk.

With the aid of a little mahogany box of mystery that sits on his desk Mr. Edel can hear the orchestra and the different soloists and also determine how any particular number pleased the audience by listening for the applause. He can also converse with the different members of his executive staff without the aid of a telephone, in other words he can sit in any part of his office and hear his orchestra play as plainly as if he were in the auditorium and likewise speak to the different departments of the theater.

The little box on the desk is connected by two wires to a small detectograph transmitter which is concealed in the footlights. This is the same Carl Anderson transmitter which has recently been used to gather the music from an orchestra and send it out to the wireless operators throughout the country at 8 p. m. each Friday night. It is also the same improved device that is used by Burns, the detective. Previous to Dr. Anderson's invention, sound transmitting devices would carry the voice or music but delivered it in much the same tinny quality as the first phonographs, but now the manager can sit at his desk and hear the voice of the singers and the various instruments of the orchestra in their natural pitch and quality. The Anderfone has greater powers than the average human ear. It will pick up sound at a greater distance, which was proved in the Aviation Department of the army adopting it for detecting the approach of hostile aircraft at night. This wonderfully sensitive transmitter is about the size of a watch and yet is sends along to the manager's desk all the great volume of the orchestra and the pipe-organ or the voice of a single speaker.

Harold Edel, the young managing director of New York's splendid Strand. He has a projection speedometer at his side and an "Auderfone" on his desk which enables him to hear everything that goes on in the auditorium.

Unusual Lobby Display

The lobby of the Palace Theater, 1214 Market street, Philadelphia, always one of the show-places along this busy thoroughfare, presents an even more handsome appearance now than ever before by reason of the new electric sign and artistic decorations which have been placed in position.

These consist of the American flag and the City flag and emblems of the Army and Navy—not one but many—which have been arranged in striking vividness and made more prominent by numbers of various colored electric lights with red, white and blue colors. These colors are also the scheme of the new mentioned sign which has been placed over the entire central lobby and the word "Palace" is spelled out in letters that are an artistic reminder of the praise for which the flags stand.

The unusual lobby display can be seen by all of the many thousands of people who hourly pass the theater and at night the colors stand out as a beacon light of patriotism as far as the eye can reach. It is a display that is worth while and many who have observed it are enthusiastic in their expressions of admiration at the riot the colors incite. This is another illustration of the progressiveness of the Stanley Company.

Wonderland Theater Reopened

The Wonderland Theater at Hastings, Nebraska, managed by Mrs. Ida M. Walden, has undergone a complete remodeling, decorating, draping, lighting and ventilating repairs. The Wonderland has a seating capacity of about 600 and is situated in the heart of a prosperous Nebraska city, having a population of about 10,000 people.

In this remodeling two large posts have been removed and a balcony and stage has been built in. In fact, it has taken several thousand dollars to make the changes and improvements, yet the owners of the building and Mrs. Walden believe that the future has a bright outlook, and also thought that the good people of Hastings were entitled to the best when it comes to comfort and entertainment.

Looks like a butcher shop, doesn't it? But its a lobby display at the Merrill Theater, Milwaukee.

A Meaty Lobby Display

One of the most unique lobby displays that has ever been used in connection with the exploitation of any company, was that which E. C. Bostick originated and used in the Merrill Theater at Milwaukee, upon the showing of the first run of "The Butcher Boy," the first Paramount comedy in which "Fatty" Arbuckle appeared.

The idea is not only original, but is one that attracted a great deal of attention, and which has been favorably commented upon by many exhibitors.

The life-sized picture of Mr. Arbuckle was a cut-out from one of the three-sheets which Paramount issued, pasted upon a heavy cardboard block, while the butcher block at the bottom was one borrowed from a packing concern in the town. The hams and bacons are stuffed displays, and the lard cans and sausage boxes are empty.

Exhibitor Gives Church Rose Show

One of the cleverest stunts that has been recorded among exhibitors recently was pulled by Harry Simon, of the Simon Theater, Demopolis, Alabama, when he allowed the churches of this community to hold their annual Rose Show in his theater.

The different churches of the community have been giving an annual Rose Show for the past twenty-five years, and have, prior to this time, held the event in the City Hall.

Mr. Simon, this year, induced the committees to hold it in his theater; each church in the town was invited to send six vases of roses and one single rose, that is a vase of red, one of pink, one shell pink, one white and one yellow, and one individual rose. As there are eight churches in the community, there were on exhibition over sixty vases, besides some of which were used for decorations. Prizes for the best roses were presented by the theater management.

The idea attracted a great deal of attention to the theater and the management was given a great deal of high-class publicity for the event, which proved to be one of the most successful that has ever been given in the house.

Prior to the regular performance of the theater the public was invited to inspect the roses, and a record attendance was attracted. Everyone was thoroughly pleased with the show, and many people who had never been lovers of motion pictures were converted by the picture which was shown on that occasion. In the early fall Mr. Simon will conduct a Fashion Show and next year will again promote a Rose Show. He uses Paramounts as the backbone of his program.

"The Daughter of Gas House Dan" is the latest of the Selig dramatic productions offered in General Film service. The story is of an unusual character having to do with a "gilded youth" who has inherited from his father a tendency to sow "wild oats." How finally realization of his misdeeds came to the young man through a father's sacrifice, will bring tears to the eyes of everyone.

The latest Selig comedy in General Film service, is entitled "Bill, and the Bearded Lady." It is a story of circus life and of a row among the "freaks" of the sideshow. The Selig Company is releasing a series of one reel farce comedies every week and the General Film Company reports these comedies are being largely booked.

Mr. Ralph Herz is the star in "The Mystery of Number 47," the Selig Red Seal Play released Monday, June 4, in K. E. S. E. This very unusual comedy-drama was written by J. Storer Clouston and is said to abound in plot interest, in comedy situations and intense climaxes.

Sharpshooting at Censorship

MR. EXHIBITOR:—If your theater is in a neighborhood where the censorship evil threatens, you can do much to offset the unjust agitation if you make a poster from the following terse remarks by Mary Gray Peck, of the Motion Picture Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Ask your local newspaper to reprint it. Show it on your screen.

"Moving pictures are going to save our civilization from the destruction which has successively overwhelmed every civilization of the past.

"They provide what every previous civilization has lacked—namely, a means of relief, happiness and mental inspiration for the people at the bottom.

"As long as a ticket stays around the price of a drink, the saloon has to reckon with the first rival that ever has been able to compete with it and beat it.

"Unless these unwise, ill-considered, and unjustified attacks of legislative bodies cease, motion pictures will be placed beyond the reach of the people of small means."—Mary Gray Peck.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

MANAGER HAROLD EDEL of the Strand Theater, New York, has been demonstrating lately the marvels of newly installed scientific electrical appliances with which he presents so called "color symphonies" to his audiences.

A new theater to cost $70,000 with a seating capacity of 2,000 persons is under construction at Richmond, California. It is being erected by the T. & D. circuit upon the same general plans of their theater at Berkeley.

Girl operators may be the common thing when effects of the draft begin to be felt, according to theater managers in Columbus, Ohio. The managers of several of the theaters in that city declare they are teaching their girl employees the business of operating a machine.

The State Assembly of California has passed a measure prohibiting cruelty to animals for the purpose of making moving pictures, and another making it a misdemeanor to sell theater tickets after the seats in a house are all occupied. These will now be considered by the Senate.

Alice Clement, a policewoman, one day last week used her "billy" freely on the head of a patron of the Orpheum Theater, Chicago, whom she charged with being an alleged masher. This is the third time policewomen have taken mashers into custody at the Orpheum.

The Palace theater of Topeka, Kansas, is being used by the City Beautiful Committee for showing films which boost gardening. Views of the vacant lots before flowers are planted are being followed by pictures showing the effect after the flowers have come up. The pictures also show the growth of the flowers.

Vaudeville acts playing Chicago's outlying houses are forbidden to play, or to have the orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner," except on special occasions. The fiat has gone forth because house managers believe audiences do not fully understand that all must stand up when the anthem is played.

Newton D. Baker, secretary of war, has named a commission to study the social needs of the soldiers in the training camps. The National Board of Review is assisting this commission in relation to motion pictures which naturally will be an important element in the entertainment and recreation of the soldier boys.

The artistic program of the Strand Theater, New York, is a mark of quality in itself that prepares the casual visitor of the superior entertainment that he may expect when once inside. One knows that any theater that puts out a program such as the Strand puts out with one page devoted to the floor plan of the theater showing all exits plainly marked, with another page on Informal Talks to Its Patrons, and still another devoted to special Strand service, is not going to disappoint its patrons by putting on a poor bill. For the week beginning May 13 Mary Pickford in "A Romance of the Redwoods" was run; for the week beginning May 20 Pauline Frederick in "Her Better Self" held the screen, and last week Benjamin Chapin in the "Lincoln Cycle" was the feature.

The Lyric Theater, of Baltimore, Maryland, has been showing pictures entitled ,"War as it Really Is." The films were made by Captain Donald M. Thompson under the direction of General Joffre. A special school children's matinee was given on Saturday afternoon.

W. K. Howard, manager of the Minneapolis Exchange of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. is making a tour of the theaters in South Dakota in order to become more familiar with his exhibitors in that territory. He is accompanied by Harry Rosenberg, a recent acquisition to his sales force and a film solicitor of wide experience.

An advertising scheme that made good was used at the Jean Gauntier Theater, Kansas City, Kansas, for the "Old Fiddlers' Contest." The day of the contest an automobile, from which dragged three large cowbells, was driven through the streets. The racket was almost deafening and was the means of attracting the attention of all to the signs on the car.

Benjamin A. Tibbits, manager of the Globe Theater, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, at 1216 Walnut street, was fined $10 in the district court for allowing minors to operate the machine. William H. Warnecke, manager of the Lyceum Theater, Fourteenth street and North avenue, pleaded not guilty to a similar charge. The case was set for trial.

Robert Warwick's second Selznick picture, "The Silent Master," is the attraction at the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, this week. At the La Salle Theater "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" is holding the screen, while "The Barrier," by Rex Beach, is in its second week at the Colonial adding still more to its great popularity.

The F I L M club, an organization composed of Pittsburgh motion picture men, has indorsed and pledged support to the candidacy of William S. Haddock for sheriff of Allegheny county. The announcement of the indorsement was made recently. F. C. Burhans is president of the club and Miles F. Gibbons secretary.

George Creel, in charge of war-time publicity for the United States Government, made arrangements for a panoramic moving picture of scenes attending the unfurling of the flag at the Labor Temple, Washington and Webster avenues, Pittsburgh, which recently attracted many notables. The films will be used in the publicity propaganda of the United States Government.

Motion picture exhibitors of South Bend, Indiana, showed a willing spirit of late to co-operate with the South Bend Humane Society by showing various slides in their theaters urging the promotion of better care for dumb brutes. Members of the society thanked the exhibitors for their aid and expressed the belief that much good was accomplished by the showing of the slides.

While Mary Miles Minter and her supporting cast were filming scenes along the Pacific coast near San Francisco recently the little star appeared in person one night on the stage of Turner and Dahnken's new motion picture theater in Oakland. Miss Minter received a rousing ovation from the 3,700 people in the audience.

The quality of motion pictures should show a marked change for the better in the near future if the people interested in their uplift have any influence at all. Ten organizations, among them a State Mothers' Congress and Parent Teachers' Association, have recently joined the Better Film Movement, according to the National Board of Review.

Herbert P. Luce, assistant to Samuel M. Field, general counsel of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been called by the Government to the officers' training camp at Plattsburg, N. Y. Arrangements have been made by Mr. Field to continue the war against the film pirates during Mr. Luce's absence at the front. Mr. Luce is connected with the Mutual's New York office.

Moving pictures of the work-study-play system of education employed in the schools of Gary, Indiana, were recently shown in the William Penn high school at Philadelphia under the auspices of the Industrial and Technical Education Conference. They are described as the "greatest story of child life ever filmed," showing the school system New York has already appropriated $6,000,000 to test out.

Moving picture representatives from ten Northwestern states recently met in the West Hotel in Minneapolis and pledged their support and co-operation in the sale of Liberty Loan Bonds. No action was taken on the proposed 1-cent stamp tax on theater tickets. It was decided to leave everything up to Lee A. Ochs, president of the National Exhibitors' League, who is in Washington looking after the interests of the film men.

At a recent meeting of the Society of Patriotic Women of Brooklyn to decide upon the manner in which the society could best serve the nation in the present crises it was decided to put the ban on sodas and movies. It was pointed out that the price of a soda or moving picture show would contribute a handkerchief to the society's "war chest;" two sodas, a pair of socks; a matinee, some under garment, and so on.

Picture men of Wichita, Kansas, pulled off the Moving Picture Exhibitors League convention held in their city June 4 and 5 in great style. They wound up their program with a "movie star" dance which several film celebrities attended and which turned out to be a very popular finale for the convention.

Denver exhibitors who were in the business prior to 1912 will obtain a refund amounting to about $1,800 as a result of the United States Supreme Court holding the "limited license" plan of the Motion Picture Patents company invalid. The refund is to cover the payment of a weekly royalty on machines which exhibitors owned, but which before 1912 they still had to pay royalty on.

D. A. Andrews, owner of the Rialto Theater and other moving picture houses in New Orleans, Louisiana, has demonstrated that sacrifice will not deter him from doing what he can in the service of his country. In order that he might again enter the navy and do his part in the present titanic struggle Mr. Andrews lately disposed of his motion picture property and went back to sea. He is an experienced seaman and he feels that his country needs him.

The popularity of features in Portland, Oregon, and the big theaters that run them is indicated by the schedule of releases that have and will be shown at the people's. "The Poor Little Rich Girl" ran ten days; "Broadway Jones," eight days; Clara Kimball Young, seven days; the first new Fairbanks picture is booked for ten days; "Mothers of France," ten days; "Romance of the Redwoods," ten days.

S. Vanderslins, better known as Harry Van, one of the first picture men in the northwest, erstwhile theatrical manager and vaudeville artist, lately manager of the Strand Theater, Huron, South Dakota, has taken the management of the Bijou Theater, Minneapolis, which has a seating capacity of over 2,000. Five days of Mutual features and two days of Triangle are offered. Mr. Van reports business is lively.

In order that electricians now engaged in operating motion picture machines in Muncie, Indiana, may feel at liberty to join the colors and in order that there may be somebody left who can step into their shoes, Richard Addison, a motion picture machine operator of that city, is preparing to open a school for girl operators. Addison expects to instruct the young women free of charge. Any girl may take the course who has a high school education and who is between the ages of 18 and 28.

Unique in the annals of the Strand of New York was the action taken May 28, when the regular program was set aside and Benjamin Chapin's remarkable picture, "Lincoln Cycle" substituted. This is said to be a creation remarkable in many ways—first of all, in its construction. The "cycle" is composed of four distinct features or separate film plays, which are combined in one master production, portraying in a most stirring manner the life-drama of the martyred president, Abraham Lincoln.

The Strand Theater of Freeport, Illinois, recently arranged for a private showing of "Twilight Sleep" at which ministers, doctors, city officials, lady welfare workers and newspaper men sat as a jury to decide whether the picture was proper for residents of Freeport. Objections to the film had been turned into the police department from some quarters and the Strand before showing the film decided to play safe and let some leading citizens view it and express an opinion. It was decided that there was nothing immoral or obscene about the picture but that an age limit should be established.

The Rowdy Problem

There is a fine big theater on Chicago's South Side that has been doing a splendid business and making money for its owner. It runs the best of programs, advertises well, has good projection, and its pipe organ is played by a music instructor who is a master. It is a most comfortable house, in a neighborhood that demands comfort and good service.

But business in this theater has been waning for a couple of months. A good many seats are vacant. Even the organist seems to feel the discouragement, for he doesn't put the old spirit into his work. The pictures are as good as ever, but the best people don't go any more.

There is nothing mysterious about the decline of patronage in this house. On the contrary, the reason makes itself known boisterously and immediately. It consists of a gang of tough boys who have discovered that their rowdyism can be exercised with perfect joy and freedom for the small price of a dime. The exquisite hoodlum pleasure of uttering loud obscenities in a public place, and of throwing missiles about a crowded hall, is certainly cheap at that figure.

Naturally the former loyal patrons of the house did not give up their favorite entertainment without a protest. They went to see the owner about it. But the owner was not there. Having established his trade he had put it into the hands of his doorkeeper (a youth of the mature and responsible age of nineteen or twenty) and gone about other business. We hope, for his sake, that his other business, whatever it may be, is successful. At the theater he will not have any business in another two months.

Motion picture exhibitors, as a rule, are neither sissies nor mollycoddles. The joyous rowdyism of a few hoodlums does not strike their souls with horror. Some of them very likely take the good old "boys will be boys" attitude, and let it go at that. So long as they don't smash the lights or break the seats the good-natured exhibitor fails to get excited.

But that tolerant view of the situation does not take into account the fact that the exhibitor is not really in possession of his own house. He has rented it to some thousands of men, women and children at ten cents an hour apiece or thereabouts. In order to continue so to rent it, he must see that all of his ten-cent tenants are satisfied, and that they do not interfere with each other's pleasure.

People of ordinary refinement are not tolerant of rowdyism in their midst. It is particularly distressing to ladies, and disgusting to gentlemen who accompany them. They do not have to stand it, and will not. The exhibitor who permits it in his house will inevitably fail.

There is only one course for theater rowdies, and that is a firm hand—or foot—skilfully applied. Moral suasion and loving kindness are not successful in solving the problem. The exhibitor whose personal weight and pugnacity are insufficient for the task will find an experienced bouncer, temporarily employed, a splendid investment. If a uniform and a club will help him any let him have them—especially the club. The regular doorkeeper can hold the door open and see that no innocent bystander blocks the way, while the hoodlums in rapid succession are thrown, kicked or knocked across the walk into the street. This cure is guaranteed, and there is seldom a second attack.

We have outlined in these pages, from time to time, a number of the details of management that make or mar the exhibitor's success. Some of these details have been technical, some have been purely commercial, and some have been psychological. But of all the business-destroying plagues that are visited upon the careless theater man, the plague of rowdies wins the prize for quick destruction.

And of all the mistakes that an exhibitor can make (there are hundreds of them) entertaining rowdies is the least excusable. Eliminating them demands no technical knowledge and no business experience. All it needs is a good fist or a heavy boot or the gumption to hire that kind of equipment.

It should be made clear to the national association of rowdies, in the only way they understand, that in the picture theater business the "No Admission" sign is permanently hung out against them.

Salaries, Taxes, and So Forth

ALWAYS the boss is popularly supposed to make more money than any of his employes. People in general and the politicians that represent them in government have little understanding of the complexities of business. It is taken for granted that if Charles Chaplin and Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks and a few others make a half million dollars or more apiece every year, the president and the treasurer and the secretary and the general manager of each of their companies must make much more than that.

Of course the old-fashioned line of patrons that wound across the sidewalk had a good deal to do with the reputation for prosperity enjoyed by our industry. (We say "old-fashioned" because they don't hold 'em out as much as they used to.) But without doubt the thing that has most impressed the public and the politicians is the star salaries paid. With those widely published figures staring them in the face, they impose taxes of great volume and weight without any twinges of conscience.

Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, et al., earn their salaries. This is an extraordinary assertion to make to a twenty-dollar-a-week man, and he may be pardoned for skepticism. But the law of industry says that a man's value is determined by the amount of business he influences—and that, of course, is the technically correct answer to the star salary question.

But that the ability of highly paid stars to earn their pay is due more to the advertising their employers have given them than to their own ability, we must admit. The major portion of big star earnings is therefore wrongly credited. It should go to the company and not to the player. The only thing that prevents this proper distribution of profits is the well known human element—the power of the player to nullify all the advertising expenditure (or, worse still, to give it to a competitor) by quitting. So the star demands, and the producer concedes, the big end of the profit.

As a business proposition we have never been quite able to see the high-salaried star system. While good and sufficient reasons now exist for it, from which it is difficult to break away, we hope the day is coming when screen players will be paid like other hard working human beings. When a good player salary is ten thousand per year instead of per week, people and politicians will not expect miracles and taxes will become reasonable.

The exhibitor has pretty nearly proved that his business is not a bonanza. There have been enough theater failures to show that. But the producer, so long as he pays amazing salaries and boasts of it in the newspapers, will be under popular suspicion of making oodles of money.

Again the charming Anita Stewart appears on the screen in Vitagraph's "Clover's Rebellion," this time. This attractive Blue Ribbon was set free for the screens of the country on May 21.

Vitagraph Studios Hum

PHOTOGS CRANK FAST AS STARS LABOR SEVEN DAYS A WEEK

PRODUCTION at Greater Vitagraph's studios at Booklyn and at Hollywood, on the western coast, is being speeded up faster than ever.

Every person connected with the production end of the big company has been informed that enough pictures must be completed to allow the sales end of the organization to announce a list of releases at least sixteen weeks in advance. In order to attain this schedule it is necessary to finish on an average of two five reel features a week for several weeks.

During the last two weeks four five reel features have been completed and have been criticized by the sales force. These pictures, now ready for release, are "The Soul Master," starring Earle Williams; "The Magnificent Meddler," co-starring Antonio Moreno and Mary Anderson; "The Question," with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey; and "The Maelstrom," featuring Earle Williams and Dorothy Kelly.

Other pictures well under way and which probably will be completed within the next two weeks are "Mary Jane's Pa," with Marc MacDermott and Mildred Manning; "A Son of the Hills" with Antonio Moreno and Belle Bruce; "Richard the Brazen," with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey; "Lincoln by the Nine" with Earle Williams and Corinne Griffith; "The Message of the Mouse," starring Anita Stewart, and "The Lady Sheriff," featuring Antonio Moreno.

Stars Asked to Shine at Night

In order that V. L. S. E. may keep its promises with the exhibitors of the country and rotate the stars in pictures it will be necessary for the production department to complete at least two five reel features a week for several weeks to come. Realizing that this is a big order to fill without sacrificing the quality of the Blue Ribbon features the production department has found it not only necessary to increase the directing force considerably but to work at the eastern studio seven days a week. All of the stars of the eastern studio and every member of the eastern stock company have had to report for work on Sundays and in several instances they have had to work at night.

No Release Till Critic-Proof

This seven day a week working time with night work as extra was found to be necessary owing to the refusal of the executive board of the sales force of V. L. S. E. to sanction the release of pictures until they were beyond criticism.

Several months ago when V. L. S. E. made the announcement that the stars would be rotated in the five reel features, reports from the studios indicated that production was advanced far enough to make this possible. Gradually, as it was realized that the pictures were not up to the Greater Vitagraph standard, which made it necessary to put back the release of several pictures, it was seen that the plan to rotate the stars would have to be held in abeyance for a short time at least.

In several instances after the executive board of the sales force had seen the pictures, members of the board demanded such radical changes that many eliminations and many retakes were necessary, forcing a rearrangement of the entire release schedule.

Four Blue Ribbon Features Get Discard

On four occasions during the last five weeks the executive board of the sales force has demanded that five reel blue ribbon features be thrown away entirely after thousands of dollars had been expended in making them. The executive board took the position that the pictures were not up to standard and for that reason could not be put out by V. L. S. E. as the distributing organization for Greater Vitagraph.

In two instances the stories were old and hackneyed, in the third instance the story was not clear and was so jumbled that all the refixing in the world would not make it clear, and, in the fourth picture, one of Greater Vitagraph's best known stars had been cast in a role absolutely unsuited for him.

With these upsets in the producing end of the business the plan of rotation of stars had to be given up for the moment. But with sixteen features made and passed by the selling end of the organization it will be possible to so arrange the releases that no one star will wear out the welcome.

"Playing Favorite" Bubble Pricked

The production and sales end of the business are now working in absolute harmony.

At first every criticism by the sales end of the organization was taken as a personal affront. The charge was made openly that the sales department was "playing favorites." It was not until after pictures made by every director in the employ of Greater Vitagraph had been criticized, torn apart and re-made that the production end of the blue ribbon feature organization realized that all criticisms were absolutely impersonal and that Julius Caesar would have mighty little chance of screening a battle of gladiators unless he made his scenes realistic.

There was trouble not only with the directors but with the stars. All of them have their favorite roles. Some of them like to be "heavies" while others think the juvenile roles just about suit them. Heretofore, many of these stars have been allowed to choose their roles no matter how inappropriate their selections turned out to be. They have the same privilege now but their choosing is not final. In the future Greater Vitagraph stars will be cast in the roles best suited for them.

Actress Allowed to Break Contract

As an example of what the new order of things has done with Greater Vitagraph, the manner in which the company recently lost a very charming star who was allowed to break her contract might be cited. She is one of those vivacious young women who can hold an audience by just acting natural. And she is naturally humorous. But she aspired to heavy roles. She wanted to be dramatic. She persisted that she could be dramatic. The concensus of opinion was that she wanted to make herself ridiculous in the eyes of thousands of motion picture patrons who had learned to love her lighter side. Rather than permit this Greater Vitagraph allowed her to break her contract, and in so doing lost a wonderful drawing card. They realized, however, that she no longer would have been a drawing card had she been allowed to have her own way.

Erroneous Rumors Out

Owing to the termination of the contracts of several more or less well known motion picture leads within the last few months there have been rumors that Greater Vitagraph purposes to discontinue contracts with all stars and engage well known players for the parts in each feature. The Greater Vitigraph management denies this story as absurd. The only comment made regarding this statement is that Greater Vitagraph is in the market at all times for both men and women who screen well and who will be satisfied to allow persons experienced in the making of motion pictures to cast them for the parts they are to take.

Big New York Presentation

Before an overflowing audience in which were many notables of the stage and screen, "The Bar Sinister," Edgar Lewis' powerful photodrama of soul equality was given its initial presentation in public last Sunday night at the Broadway Theater, New York, under the direction of Frank G. Hall. The event marked the debut of Mr. Lewis, creator of such memorable photoplays as "The Barrier" and "The Nigger," as an independent producer and the success of his first effort gives promise of even greater triumphs in the future.

The theme of "The Bar Sinister," the story of which was written by Anthony P. Kelly, deals with the barrier of the races and puts forward the undeniable claim that the color of a man makes no difference spiritually; that while social conditions and, perhaps, even the will of the Creator himself render it inadvisable to penetrate the barrier, after all, whether a man be red or white or black, his soul may be white. And the first night audience was moved to applause frequently by the tremendous climaxes of the story.

Added interest was given to the picture by reason of the fact that practically the same cast that made "The Barrier" such an artistic triumph, was seen in "The Bar Sinister," including Mitchell Lewis, whose Poleon in the Beach production will stand as a classic of photodramatic acting.

A beautiful stage setting, specially constructed by Lee Lash and depicting a turpentine forest in Georgia with darky cabins in the foreground, served to heighten the effect of the picture as all of the scenes of "The Bar Sinister" are laid "somewhere below the Mason and Dixon line." And another interesting feature was the prologue, which ran for about five minutes prior to the start of the picture, and during which a group of negroes sang southern melodies to the strumming of banjos and guitars.

NEWLY BUDDED MUTUALS

William Russell in "Shackles of Truth" Leads Mutual Schedule of June 4—Unusual Comedies and Serial Episodes

William Russell in "Shackles of Truth" holds first place on the Mutual schedule of June 4. "Shackles of Truth" is a virile story of love and politics, dealing with a young man's love for both his mother and his sweetheart, his loyalty to his father's memory and his faithfulness to duty.

Dealing as the story does with two young lawyers who are striving for appointment to the senate, it is a film which will have a special appeal to all the lawyers in town and also to politicians. A special letter or announcement to these men, telling them the character of the story will undoubtedly interest them.

This film will also have a strong appeal to girls, and mothers as it shows the struggle that goes on sometimes between a young man's loyalty to his mother, and his love for his sweetheart. Another letter written from the standpoint of directly appealing to these women will bring a crowded house.

Helen Holmes in Swimming Feats

"A Leap for Life" is the title of Chapter IX of "The Railroad Raiders." In this chapter Helen Holmes performs some courageous swimming feats. Trapped on a boat with Wilson, who is hurt, they are thrown into the bay when the boat is blown up by dynamite. With the unconscious form of Wilson strapped to a board, Helen pushes him along with one hand and with the other swims to shore.

Comedies of the Week

On June 4 comes La Salle comedy, "The Flight That Failed," telling of a proposed elopement that brought many unpleasant complications to the fleeing pair.

"There and Back," the Cub comedy of June 7, featuring George Ovey, shows the many narrow escapes of Jerry who fell asleep while driving his flivver.

Twelfth Chapter of Jimmie Dale

"Good for Evil," is the title of the twelfth chapter of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" series scheduled for June 8. In this story Jimmie Dale comes to the rescue of a young man who has robbed to provide for his sick wife and baby.

Three One-Reel Featurettes

The four sections of the "Mutual Tours Around the World" released June 3, represent Europe, Africa and the West Indies. Europe contributes pictures of "Winter in Galicia" and "The Monastery of Piedra, Saragossa, Spain." Africa offers pictures of Morocco's chief seaport, Tangier. St. Kitts, an island of the British West Indies completes the places visited on this tour.

"Mutual Weekly" will appear June 6, and besides the news of the week will contain an appeal for the Liberty Loan.

"Reel Life" will be released June 7. It has five sections. "Modern Footwear" explains the making of shoes by machinery. "Bass Fishing in Florida" shows a piscatorial paradise at Lake Poinsette, Florida. "Launching a Life Boat" shows a new device for rapidly getting the boat over the side of the vessel. "Electrical Gardening" illustrates how electrical current is used to hasten the growth of plants. The reel concludes with pictures of physical education. Both the Dalcroze and Demeny methods of dancing as an aid to health are illustrated.

Edna Goodrich, who is one of the late additions to Mutual's list of stars, has become so fascinated with her work before the camera that she has almost decided never to return to the legitimate stage.

"I never realized before," said Miss Goodrich, "how difficult the work for the screen was. I had rather an idea that anyone could act before the camera but find that it takes all the talent I possess and I am working a great deal harder to gain the right effect on the screen than I ever did to make the success I have on the legitimate stage."

Company Works Nineteen Hours

Studio records were recently broken at the Metro studio when eighty people who appear in support of Viola Dana in the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "Aladdin's Other Lamp," worked continuously for nineteen hours without leaving the studio or changing from their costumes to street clothes. Three meals, one of them served in the Metro dining room, the other two served on the studio floor, were brought in from a nearby restaurant.

The directors who held the crowd on the job for this length of time are now anticipating a visit from the walking delegates.

The new William Russell feature, "Shackles of Truth."

The sparkling and beautiful Geane Genung, who plays Lorna Chase in "Should She Obey?" is here in the circle. Below is a scene from the play, Arizona Film Company.

Arizona Film on State Rights

The Arizona Film Company in the marketing of its state rights production "Should She Obey?" have originated a contest on the question "What is the cause of divorce?" The one sending in the best answer will receive $500. During its first few weeks' run at the La Salle Theater in Chicago over 5,000 replies were received.

It is the intention of this company to make this contest country wide, allowing each state rights purchaser to announce it in his territory, while the Arizona company will take care of the details of it.

On Sunday, May 20, the text of the sermons in several of Chicago's churches was "Should She Obey," taken from the film. Prominent speakers will be furnished in connection with the showing of "Should She Obey" in all the prominent cities of the United States. Among them Lieutenant Governor O'Hara and other notable people will speak on the divorce question in connection with the production.

The Arizona people are putting out an extensive line of advertising matter in connection with their state right production "Should She Obey?". In addition to two styles of ones, threes, a six and a twenty-four sheet, they are issuing two styles of photos, eight to a set, also six colored enlargements, 36 by 48. They have prepared many stock questions to be used in an advertising way. They have a newspaper herald, four pages, seven columns, which can also be used as a press sheet. The illustrations are furnished in both mat and cut form. They will also have a four-page herald with a 7x9-inch page.

Novelties in World Library

General Film announces that great response has greeted the new weekly Selig release which is properly described by its title World Library. This interest compelling one reel educational feature has reached its third number, which rivals its forerunners in novelty. One section of the current number is devoted to splendid scenery that has the intimate artistic appeal associated with the world's great paintings. Amalfi, the picturesque Italian City so favored by the masters as a setting for paintings, is shown in all its moods. So is the Matterhorn, the most often painted of the Alpine crags. Darting to far-off Japan, there is then a study of the strange aborigines of that island empire, the Hairy Aimus. They are seen in their quaint domestic pursuits. American scenes in the table of contents include the famous Alamo at San Antonio, Texas, and the Mission of San Juan and the Espada Mission, relics of two centuries ago.

The Selig World Library is issued as graphic literature de luxe. It has no connection with any newspaper and is a departure from news weeklies or topical films of ordinary happenings.

New Feature Company

One of the most interesting announcements of recent weeks, so far as the motion picture world is concerned, comes from the office of Irwin Rosen in the Fulton Theater Building, 206 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

Quietly and without a single word of his plans reaching the picture trade, Mr. Rosen, who has been connected with several theatrical productions during the past three years, has organized a new company to be known as the Progress Feature Picture Company. Associated with him are several men of wealth in the city who have never before been connected with either motion pictures or the theater.

The Progress Feature Picture Company will not only be its own manufacturer, but its own exhibitor. Roy L. McCardell, who is one of the best known picture writers in the country and a pioneer in the business, is one of the active heads of the new company and will take entire charge of the preparation of all scenarios.

The first picture to be produced and exhibited by the new company will be an adaptation made by Mr. McCardell of George Elliott's masterpiece, "Daniel Deronda." Dramatically and scenically, the picture will rank with the greatest motion pictures that have thus far been seen. The picture will be shown simultaneously in several of the larger cities of the country, a Broadway theater having been secured for its showing in New York on the fifteenth of August.

New Moss Production

After four months of ceaseless energy in the preparation and exploitation of "One Hour," B. S. Moss has finally donned his coat and comes up for air with the announcement that his latest and supreme effort has reached the last stage of completion and is now being edited by John S. Lopez, preliminary to its initial release on June 11 at the Moss theaters around New York.

Zena Keefe and Alan Hale will co-star in "One Hour."

King-Bee titles are terse, brief and to the point. Louis Burstein, president and general manager of King-Bee Films Corporation, has been supervising the production of comedies for several years and knows the value of conciseness in this matter. He has titled hundreds of comedies and has proven over and over again that both exhibitors and the public appreciate short, snappy titles for pictures.

This is one of the many little things that count for success in the business, and is deserving of notice and imitation.

Goldwyn Making Record

When Mae Marsh, the charming heroine of "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance" and many other famous pictures, cast her lot with Goldwyn Pictures, little did she know what a big job she was undertaking. She knew, of course, that it gave her enlarged opportunities, that she would have greater plays than she had ever had before, but she did not dream of the amount of work in prospect.

But she knows all of this now.

She knows that she has made three tremendous pictures in three months; that she will soon be at work on her fourth production and that she worked not only all day six days last week, but virtually all night for three nights.

Incidentally the various companies working at the big Fort Lee studio are fast making good the Goldwyn promise to exhibitors that twelve completed pictures would be ready for their inspection in September. Miss Marsh is now on her third picture, and by the date mentioned will easily have completed two more, making a total of five.

By the same date Madge Kennedy will have completed two pictures and perhaps three. Miss Elliott, of course, has completed two and sailed for Europe. Jane Cowl will have completed two pictures, and Mary Garden, beginning work in July, will have at least her first picture ready September 1. In addition to all of these, Goldwyn expects to have other stars at work before mid-summer has arrived.

Therefore, Goldwyn is assured of its twelve pictures and might have five in excess of its promise—or a total of seventeen productions. This rapid progress of a new company reveals the great value to be gained by manning and operating a producing corporation with an organization of specialists.

Had Chills Facing Camera

John Cumberland, who is playing opposite Madge Kennedy in her first Goldwyn picture, is like the star he is supporting, making his first appearance in films. Mr. Cumberland is a comedian of the theater who has been playing opposite Miss Kennedy in the roles which she has made famous in the last two seasons, so that playgoers who saw this capital pair in "Fair and Warmer" or in "Twin Beds" will be delighted to find that they are still partners in fun-making before the camera.

His first day in the studio, Mr. Cumberland now admits, seemed a horrible nightmare. He paced up and down the corridor leading to his dressing room, becoming more nervous as the time went by for his call to the studio stage. Any one would have thought by his demeanor that Cumberland was going to face a machine gun instead of a motion picture camera. When at last he took his place in the scene which was being filmed he could scarcely concentrate on the business in hand because of the deadly fascination the machine exerted on him. When the scene was over the comedian walked to one side and mopped his brow, beaded with perspiration from the excitement under which he had been laboring. But the plunge once taken, Mr. Cumberland's nervousness passed, and he settled down to work like a veteran. He's camera-wise now, and is hard at work every day helping Miss Kennedy make a record in her first Goldwyn picture.

Goldwyn Executives Aid Fund

Acting on the committee of theatrical managers who are arranging the Hippodrome benefit for the Liberty Fund which is being raised by the New York Herald and the American Hebrew are Arthur Hopkins and Samuel Goldfish, the latter being the president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and the former being the successful theatrical producer who is chief of the Goldwyn producing directors.

The Liberty Fund is being raised for the purpose of presenting to the Russian people, as the gift of citizens of the United States, a duplicate of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor, in recognition of the Russian struggle for political freedom and for democracy.

Marguerite Marsh Recovering

Marguerite Marsh, who appears in two of the earlier Goldwyn Pictures, and sister of Mae Marsh, Goldwyn's widely exploited star, was suddenly stricken with appendicitis a few days ago and was operated on at a private hospital.

Her recovery from the effects of the operation has been very rapid and she will return in a few days. After a week of rest at Lakewood she will immediately resume work in another Goldwyn picture.

NO NEW FILM FIRE RULES

Protest of National Association of Motion Picture Industry Causes National Fire Protection Association to Suspend Action on Fire Rules

No new rules are to be adopted this year governing the handling of motion picture film by the National Fire Protection Association, which had the subject under consideration at its recent convention held in Washington, although a report was presented by the association's committee on explosives and combustibles recommending important changes in the film regulations.

Owing to the protest filed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry it was decided to withhold definite action at this time and to co-operate with the motion picture interests as represented by the National association.

Every branch of the trade would have been seriously affected by the new regulations had they been adopted, as it has been the practice of the National Board of Fire Underwriters to act favorably upon the recommendations of the National Fire Prevention Association.

Albert de Roode, of the Committee on Fire Prevention Regulations and Insurance, addressed the convention as a delegate from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

"In the first place," he said, "we think that some concession should be made in the case of establishments which have complied with existing regulations. We think the requirement for studios unreasonable. The general custom is to have the studios in sparsely settled districts or communities where there is no exposure hazard. The protection of studios, we believe, should be dealt with separately from the question of motion picture films. In properly conducted studios the only film around is that used for taking the pictures. Naturally the utmost precaution is taken to prevent any exposure of this film. Where film is present in studios in any other fashion it is not incident to the conducting of a studio. There should be, of course, the requirement that where film other than that used in taking the pictures is stored, handled or developed in conjunction with the studio that work should be carefully separated from the studio proper. But the protection of motion picture studios is not at all a problem of motion picture film, except in so far as that may be properly on the premises.

"In regard to the regulation of the storage of negative and extremely valuable films, I think it should be based solely on the actual fire hazard. Negatives or valuable films are no more dangerous in case of fire than ordinary film. Any different treatment based upon values should be a matter of regulation by insuring companies and associations rather than by the National Fire Prevention Association. It is quite doubtful as to whether any law or ordinance which made a distinction in the degree of fire protection given to ordinary film and valuable films and negatives could be upheld.

"Our association would be very glad to have the opportunity of presenting to your Committee on Explosives and Combustibles during the coming year its views regarding the various details of any proposed new regulations before they are finally adopted by your association, as we feel quite sure that a greater extent of fire protection can be accomplished where the industry is regulated and consulted and its point of view given consideration."

Missing Author Found

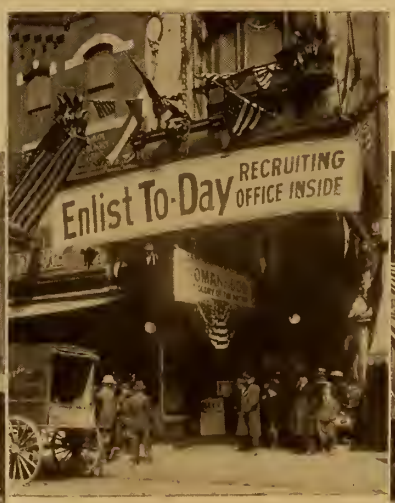
The author of Douglas Fairbanks' second Artcraft production, whose unknown identity troubled Director John Emerson, fearing that the writer would make unusual financial demands after his story had been produced, awakened from his Rip Van Winkle slumber last week and proved to be Horace Carpenter, a film actor.

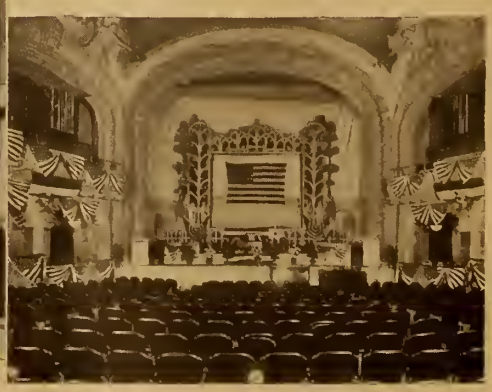
For months Fairbanks and his company have been trying to locate the unknown author of "A Regular Guy," which title has since been changed to "Wild and Woolly," but no one seemed to claim the authorship or the money for same.

Anita Loos prepared the scenario from Carpenter's story, which contained a somewhat new angle for a screen satire of the West.

One of the gentlemen who saw the first private showing of Montagu Love in "The Brand of Satan" immediately offered the World Film Corporation $65,000 in cash for it, with the idea of issuing the play as a special. The proposition was rejected and the picture is now being cut down from its original eight reels to five for the regular World program. The scene is laid in Paris and the story contains a strong psychological motive.

Here is the way in which the New Theater of Baltimore dressed itself up in honor of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the big Vitagraph patriotic film which has been used a great deal to stimulate recruiting. The center picture shows the recruiting signs that were used to make things handy for the young men who were inspired by this film.





The winsome Ethel Clayton in "The Stolen Paradise," a new World-Picture, Brady-Made. This actress grabs your heartstrings right at the outset and never lets go of them.

New Ethel Clayton Play

The World-Pictures Brady-Made release for June 18 has Ethel Clayton as its star player and is called "The Stolen Paradise." It contains the altogether uncommon complication supplied by a blind man who is married to a counterfeit bride and does not discover the deception until several years have elapsed and a child has been born of the union.

The man, impersonated by Edward Langford, lost his eyesight in rescuing from a fire a young woman to whom he thought himself rather strongly attracted. But she was "out for the money" and became the wife of a capitalist, while her girl friend, really in love with the blind man, readily assented to the plan that she should substitute herself at the altar.

Instead of quitting at this point and permitting everybody to live happily ever after, the author uses this situation merely as a preliminary episode. After a few years have passed he has the specialists perform a successful operation upon the eyes of the blind man during the absence of his wife, so that when she returns in complete ignorance of what has happened, and he sees that he has been lavishing his affections all this time upon a girl who had been nothing in his life—well, what could she expect?

Naturally, as men go, the husband begins to play around, the more so as the other woman—the one who married for money—comes along with an inviting air, and the capitalist spouse finds it out, and things begin to happen in almost tragic profusion. And the play ends, not with the usual kiss-and-make-up, all-hands-around festivities, decorated with labial festoons, but with quite a lot of possibilities left to the imagination.

"The Stolen Paradise" has a big scenic punch in the fire incident, where a laboratory, situated underneath a hall where a masquerade ball is in progress, blows up and starts a conflagration most realistically produced. The sentimental punch occurs where the young wife, perfectly secure in her happiness, sees her whole heart-structure pulled down around her ears in ruin as her husband realizes the trick that has been played upon him.

Miss Clayton, who has arisen to remarkably high favor in World-Pictures, finds in this role a singularly striking opportunity for the expression of a wide range of emotions, and it is said by those who have witnessed the private exhibitions of the performance that it is considerably the most moving of her many brilliant contributions to the screen.

Forum Films Suspended

It has been announced that Forum Films, Inc., the concern that was organized to release Edison Conquest Pictures, will suspend operations during the summer months and cancel all contracts that have been entered into with exhibitors pending the resumption of activities upon a much larger scale in the early fall. The temporary suspension of business is simply a part of a contemplated plan by which Forum Films will be elaborated and strengthened and made even more attractive to exhibitors and to the public.

The organization was formed for the purpose of marketing a program of motion pictures so clean and strong and inspiring that they would have a definite appeal to the entire family. Started in a small and quiet way, the movement has met with such an unexpected response that the need of immediate further development is considered imperative to the welfare of the organization.

The great majority of exhibitors who have seen Forum Films have expressed the desire to secure pictures of this type on a program that will provide them with not five reels only, but an entire show. They felt that they could use seven or eight reels of Forum Films to far better advantage than the five reels, and as a result, Forum Films, Inc., is preparing to make the expansion desired. A splendid business was being built up on the five-reel program basis, but the fact that extraneous units would be required to be shown on the same program in order to complete a performance proved unsatisfactory to both the exhibitors and Forum Films, Inc. It is believed that a five-reel feature will be the basis of the program which Forum Films, Inc., will release when it resumes business.

Stuart Paton, who is responsible for the great Universal success, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," as well as "The Voice on the Wire" and the new serial, "The Gray Ghost," has just signed a two-year contract with the Universal.

MUTUAL STARS BUSY

Heavy Program Laid Out for Companies Which Produce for Distribution Through Mutual—Ten Stars All Busy on Big Features

Nearly a score of big pictures have been completed or are in the course of production at the studios which produce for distribution through Mutual to meet the demand under President John R. Freuler's policy of "big stars only" and "quality first." Ten stars and their respective companies are producing Mutual features.

Four companies are at work at the studio of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara and a definite and strenuous program has been laid out for them for some time to come.

Gail Kane, American's newly acquired star who appeared in "Whose Wife?" released April 30, and whose second production, "The Serpent's Tooth," is scheduled for release May 28, is at work on "The Upper Crust," which will be completed in time for release June 25.

William Russell, under the direction of Edward S. Sloman, has finished "Shackles of Truth," which is scheduled for release June 4, following "The Frame-up," and is at work on "The Weakness of the Strong."

Mary Miles Minter, youngest of screen stars, is one of the most untiring workers of her profession. She is now busy producing "Periwinkle," which follows "Annie for Spite," her May release. "Periwinkle" has been scheduled for release June 11. As soon as the final scenes are shot along the coast—it is a sea picture—she will start working on "Melissa of the Hills" by Mabelle Heikes Justice.

Juliette Day, American's newest acquisition, has just reported at the Santa Barbara studios, leaving Broadway where she played in "Upstairs and Down" with marked success. "Betty and the Buccaneers," by J. Edward Hungerford, has been selected as Miss Day's first production, her initial contribution to the screen.

"Little Miss Missionary" has been chosen for Margarita Fischer's next production and she is at work on it at the studio of the Pollard Picture Plays company in San Diego.

At the Horkheimer studios in Long Beach, Jackie Saunders, a tireless worker, is busy on "Betty Be Good," her next production. She has just completed "A Bit of Kindling," which has been scheduled for release June 18.

The busiest of the Eastern studios is that of the Powell Producing corporation at College Point, L. I. "The Mirror," starring Marjorie Rambeau, was released May 21, and "The Dazzling Miss Davison" has been completed for release June 18. She is now at work on "Mary Moreland" and the vehicle for her forthcoming picture has not been selected. Miss Rambeau's productions have been of a high order in spite of the fact that she has appeared before the footlights every night of the season in "Cheating Cheaters," and has spent the daylight hours before the camera turning out productions in rapid order.

"Reputation," Edna Goodrich's first production for Mutual, has been set for release June 4 and she is now at work on "Queen X."

"Outcast," Ann Murdock's first production, has been completed and she is engaged in making "The Imposter."

Charlie Chaplin is working on his forthcoming release, the title of which has not yet been announced. It will probably be released late in June.

In addition to the rush of work on big productions, the studios producing "featurettes," little pictures with big stars, are working at top speed. Mutual releases are running close to an average of 20 reels a week and some weeks go as high as 30 reels.

Stage Star in New Westerns

Essanay will release the first of its series of Western photodramas June 18. "Land of Long Shadows" is the title. Trade showings of this feature, which is a comedy-drama, will be presented at all branches of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service within a few days.

Convincing scene from "Land of Long Shadows," first of Essanay's series of westerns released June 8 by K. E. S. E. Jack Gardner is featured.

In "Land of Long Shadows" Jack Gardner, musical comedy favorite, makes his debut on the screen. Mr. Gardner is widely known for his stage appearances in "Madame Sherry," "The Chocolate Soldier," "The Belle of Mayfair," and Broadway's latest musical comedy success, "Oh Boy." Reports from Essanay's Western field of action are that Mr. Gardner has done excellent work in his screen premier. His supporting company includes Ruth King, C. J. Lionel, Carl Stockdale and others.

"Land of Long Shadows" was filmed for exteriors in the Canadian Northwest, and presents much of the beautiful scenic of that country. One of the novelties of the picture is a pack of trained timber wolves. Essanay promises in this production an entirely new, yet typical, picturization of red-blooded Western life.

The Strand Theater of New York is offering a double feature program this week consisting of the official British Government pictures of the Battle of the Ancre, which were exhibited at the special benefit performance attended by Mr. Balfour and the British commission at Carnegie Hall recently, and "Her Better Self," a new photo drama by Margaret Turnbull in which Pauline Frederick is the star.

"Seeing Things," is the title of a one-act Universal comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

FINDS SELF ACE OF HARTS

Big Ovation Given Triangle Star Along Route from Los Angeles to New York—As Popular as Roosevelt

William S. Hart, Triangle-Ince-Kay Bee star, left Los Angeles on May 8 to make a flying visit to New York. The trip eastward developed into a veritable triumphal tour, the ovations tendered Mr. Hart along the route exceeding even those accorded our distinguished citizen, Mr. Roosevelt.

Dodge City, once located on the edge of civilization, is a typical western town. There are great stories about the days when the fellow who was quickest on the trigger being the one who lived to tell the tale. The reception committee of Dodge City determined that their idol, Hart, should see their town, and when the train pulled in the mayor, president of the Commercial Club, chairman of the reception committee, and leading citizens gathered at the station, and Mr. Hart was carried in triumph to a gaily decorated automobile and taken on a tour of inspection.

As a remembrance of his visit to Dodge City, and as a token of his appreciation of Mr. Hart's true characterizations of the western gunman, as he really was, the chairman of the reception committee presented "Bad Bill" with a half filled cartridge belt, scabbard and a six-shooter.

At Kansas City, Mr. Hart received a big ovation, and his appearances at the various Triangle theaters were made with some difficulty, owing to the cheering crowds lining the streets.

Honored by National Guards

When St. Louis was reached, Mr. Hart went direct to the Jefferson Hotel for breakfast. This was followed by a reception tendered by business men. When Mr. Hart left the hotel to make a brief sight-seeing tour, he was amazed to find five hundred National Guardsmen, in command of Colonel Donnelly, headed by the Fifth Regiment Band, waiting to act as escort. A horse was provided for Mr. Hart, who rode at the head of the procession. A banquet was tendered Mr. Hart the same evening, with covers for one hundred and fifty prominent citizens.

At Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Trenton, Mr. Hart was received with the same tremendous enthusiasm. When he reached New York, despite his husky physique, he was exhausted, his right hand strained and swollen to twice its normal size from excessive hand-shaking; and he confessed to utter bewilderment as to why such a tribute should have been bestowed on him.

During the few days he was in New York he visited numerous theaters. His entire stay was marked by a succession of shirt-cracking ovations. Crowds packed around his automobile whenever it stopped and he often found himself wedged in so that he couldn't move. "Bill" reached Chicago, May 28, and the Windy City lionized him with a vim. Manager Seery of the local Triangle office arranged a strenuous schedule for the big star, who remained in the city several days. He visited a large number of theaters in his "native costume," and the fans turned out in hordes to see him and hear him talk. A luncheon in the star's honor was given by Triangle at the Sherman Hotel on May 30. A large number of exhibitors and press people were present and no one was disappointed in big, bad, good, genial "Bill."

William S. Hart, the good bad man now being lionized by the cities he is visiting.

Mr. Hart is now continuing his trip back to the coast.

Louise Glaum in New One

All resources of the great glass-enclosed stages at the Culver City studios were strained, recently, to meet the exigencies of the latest Ince-Triangle drama, "Love or Justice?" by Lambert Hillyar, in which Louise Glaum is presented as star.

The characters in this swiftly moving play are carried rapidly from scene to scene, with practically every episode enacted in an interior "setting."

In order to give the proper vista to several scenes it was found necessary by Director Walter Edwards to use "sets" comprising suites of three and four rooms, such as would be found in New York's tenement district.

An important episode in the drama is laid in a well-known tenderloin basement cabaret. This necessitated the erection of a similar setting.

On another stage was built a mammoth courtroom, capable of seating over three hundred people, where the final scenes of "Love or Justice?" were filmed.

The weeds in which Alice Brady appears during a portion of "A Self-Made Widow" are extremely becoming, especially when she tosses her head in a most engaging way and accompanies the gesture with a sly, mischievous wink. Miss Brady has now played for World-Pictures Brady-Made this widow lady, two ballet girls, a telephone operator, a Balkan queen, a mannequin, a Russian violinist, two victims of tuberculosis, and six or seven regular girls.

EXHIBITORS TO BENEFIT

New Sales Policy of Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, Inc., to Mean Better Service and Closer Co-operation

A policy, which first results already prove is to create a new bond between exhibitors and distributing concerns has recently been adopted by Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, Inc. Every branch manager and salesman is now in a position to profit in proportion to his actual worth to the company in the same relative manner as if he were a stockholder. With a definite quota to obtain, a specified territory to work in, and a monetary interest in the welfare of his own individual territory, each representative will be able to supply assistance and service to his exhibitors in a manner never before attained.

When questioned in regard to this move, President George Kleine said, "Every one who has made a study of the distribution end of the motion picture industry has long since realized that lack of permanency in the personnel of the organization has been one of the greatest causes for dissatisfaction on the part of exhibitor and producer. In order to secure a sales organization of as near 100% efficiency as possible and then keep it intact, we have made it possible for each salesman and branch manager to benefit in proportion to his actual sales ability.

"With every member of our sales organization taking the same active interest in his territory that he would if he owned the rights to our output for that particular district, it is very apparent that exhibitors will receive more co-operation and their individual needs will be better taken care of than ever before. This, together with the fact that our rental prices are absolutely standardized, according to the box-office value in each locality, enables us to offer an entirely new order of service."

In carrying out the policy of intensive efficiency of distribution the Essanay sales force which did such remarkable work in connection with the Essanay-Linder campaign will be absorbed by K-E-S-E Inc. Members of both organizations have been selected because of their ability not only to secure contracts, but to assist theater managers in solving the problems constantly confronting them, as well as introducing novel and unique advertising suggestions. Realizing full well that only by increasing the business in every theater can he ultimately secure the greatest volume of business out of his given territory, each representative will naturally act in the capacity of friend and adviser to every exhibitor with whom he comes in contact.

Because of his record as an exchange manager and as sales manager of the Linder campaign, E. R. Pearson has been appointed manager of sales. In discussing the change Mr. Pearson said: "It means that in the future, even more than in the past, exhibitors may look forward to just treatment, equitable rentals, service beyond the mere contract specifications, and a personal relation which will make business dealings more harmonious than ever before.

"Territories are rapidly being assigned, and by the first of June each district of not more than 250 theaters will be in charge of an experienced salesman working under the direction of a branch manager, both of whom will be thoroughly fitted to cope with the conditions existing in the individual territories."

Billie Rhodes in Comedy

The biggest discovery that little Billie Rhodes ever made was that people loved to laugh at her better than to cry with her, though as a matter of fact Miss Rhodes made a remarkable success in such dramas as "Perils of the Sea," "The Man Who Vanished," and "A Daughter of the Underworld."

"Miss Billie," as they call her in the studios, is a joyous little bit of humanity, pretty and petite, always on the move, a clever actress and a natural born comedienne.

It was after she had appeared successfully in many pretentious photodramas that Miss Billie decided to specialize on comedy and the remarkable vogue she has achieved shows that she made no mistake.

The Rhodes comedies put out by Mutual-Strand are now popular all over the English-speaking world, and Miss Billie gets hundreds of letters every week from admirers in Europe, Australia, Africa, and everywhere else that white folk live.

Miss Rhodes has recently been signed up for a new series of comedies by H. P. Caulfield of the Caulfield Photoplay Company, these plays being destined for Mutual release.

Children Co-Star

A late announcement from the Triangle-Ince studios at Culver City details the beginning of a new production in which little Georgie Stone and Thelma Salter, the child actress, will be co-starred. This bids fair, it is said, to be one of the most unusual offerings ever shown on the Triangle program.

Georgie Stone, who is but six years old, is already well known to the program, having frequently appeared in support of Bessie Love and also with William S. Hart in "The Patriot." Thelma Salter co-starred with Frank Keenan in "The Crab," has lately been seen as Vice-President of the Soapsuds Trust with Enid Bennett in "Happiness."

The new play is being staged by Irvin Willett, the new director, who will make his debut in that capacity with the production. Most of the locations are at Inceville, the vast tract in Santa Monica mountains. Although the story is primarily for children, it is said that there is plenty in it that is calculated to interest and amuse grown-ups.

Kerrigan's First Paralta Play

J. Warren Kerrigan's first production as an independent star at the head of his own organization will be a photo-dramatic version of Peter B. Kyne's book-length novel, "A Man's Man."

The scenes in this story are laid in the West and in a Central American republic which holds a fabulously rich gold mine and an incipient revolution. Mr. Kerrigan will play the role of John Stuart Webster, a mining engineer, who goes to this republic to finance and help exploit a mine discovered by a young protege of his who had been his assistant in a western mine.

James Young, who will direct the production of Bessie Barriscale's first independent production to be released by Paralta Plays, Inc., on the Paralta Plan—a screen version of Grace Miller White's novel, "Rose o' Paradise"—will have William Horowitz for his principal assistant.

The Exhibitor and The Story

GOOD SCENARIOS MEAN GOOD HOUSES—AN EXHIBITOR'S OPINION

By Mildred Considine.

(Editors Note: The following article is one of a series by Miss Considine which will appear in Motography. These articles will deal with the vital story question from the angles of most interest and value to the exhibitor and producer. Miss Considine is an experienced scenario writer and is thoroughly familiar with every phase of the field.)

Mildred Considine, in charge of Motography's story department.

I AM going to dwell upon the importance of the story—the scenario—for the success of any picture depends upon it.

The time has ceased to be when a star's name is of sufficient magnitude to fill a theater. Not that the star's name isn't of vast importance to the exhibitor for advertising purposes, but two or three appearances in a weak vehicle will make the public skeptical, and the ability of the star will then be questioned. Consequently, it will lessen the interest of an audience and their faith in that particular actor or actress as the case may be. And after witnessing a few of these failures, attendance at the theater where the pictures are shown is bound to drop off and cause a serious loss of business; and it is a dangerous thing for the exhibitor if the producer allows the selection of his scenarios to become a slipshod process.

Also there is an idea prevalent in producing companies that results in an endeavor to slight all but the stellar role of a production. The surrounding cast is seemingly of little importance and chosen evidently in order to make the star appear more efficient.

You can see what results in the finished picture and the catastrophe facing an exhibitor who allows himself to become imbued with the idea that the star's name will sell a picture to his audiences.

Watch the Stories

Mr. Exhibitor, you must protect yourself, and in doing so, you are pleading the cause of the writer who can turn out the best stories, no matter what his position may be in the field of literature. The best standard to judge by is good stories and the writers who can supply them should be given an opportunity to do so.

From the standpoint of your patrons, an author's name is absolutely without value. All that they care about, as you know, is the attractiveness of the story. If it happens to be a good one, they may be impressed with the author's name, but the majority of times finds them disinterested. Not even well known names have any bearing upon their opinions, if the picture is without merit.

I have seen some of the cleverest people on the screen wallow about in trash that gave them no opportunity to be at their best, and although they struggled manfully, their efforts were nothing but pitiful. Again, I have seen people of little or no ability make a distinct success in a picture that was well constructed technically and had an interesting story as its theme, which goes to prove my theory that a good scenario will cover a multitude of sins.

I have in mind a clever young chap who struggled through five years of weak plots and puny efforts of uncertain writers whose one aim seemed to be grinding out a story a day. Through his personality, which is compelling and magnetic, he gained a following, but his success was meager and his name almost unheard of in the film world. Then, almost overnight, he became a sensation through his appearance in a homely little story of real life, filled with charming comedy, with a closely woven plot and a good moral. His name blazed forth in electric lights and the credit is due the story. His ability had previously availed him nothing for besides being one of the handsomest men on the screen in a virile, manly way, he is undoubtedly one of the cleverest actors in the business. But without a proper vehicle, his hands were tied.

W. C. Lamoreaux, exhibitor who urges scenario co-operation.

Popular Actor's Statement

"The story is the most important part of any production," this actor said the other day, "and no actor can hope to attain anything without a good one. I realize keenly my limitations. There are three factors upon which the success of a picture depends: the scenario, the director and last of all, the actor!"

Audiences are becoming more educated every day and they demand more for their money than in previous years. They are quick to note any effort to delude them. They are no longer satisfied to watch some exploited star pose through several reels of film with no apparent object other than the desire to feature his profile. This was an adjunct of the stone age in picturedom and a healthy, intelligent audience resents being imposed upon. They want stories of real life, wherein people act like human beings and they don't care who writes them.

This is up to the producer and exhibitor, and it is absolutely necessary that they get together and find a way to satisfy their meal tickets.

"Good Scripts Are Priceless"

Harry McRae Webster, a director with whom I worked for five months in New York last fall, assured me that no amount of money was too high to pay for a good script.

"A director is lost without a good scenario," he said. "Too much responsibility falls upon his shoulders if the material he has to work with is weak, for he is expected to turn out an A-1 picture under any circumstances."

I asked him why most directors insisted upon remodeling almost every script that fell into their hands.

"Because most all of them need it," he said. "This is a condition due to the overworked state of the few writers who control the business. Speed results in slighting the work that they turn out."

The fact that a few writers do control the business is a menace to its wellfare. There is room in the field for a multitude of newcomers and their efforts should be encouraged instead of ignored.

Progressive Exhibitor's Opinion

I sought the opinion of Wm. Lamoreaux, manager of the high class Lakeside Theater, Chicago. Mr. Lamoreaux knows his audiences thoroughly, and he agreed with me that any star could be killed as an attraction by repeated appearances in bad stories.

Mr. Lamoreaux believes that exhibitors should be given an opportunity to judge scripts before they are produced, and I am inclined to favor this idea. Why not? The exhibitor is in a far better position to know what his audiences like than the producer is.

"Can you suggest any plan for this?" I asked him.

"Let them prepare a brief synopsis, and present it to an active representative exhibitor of each locality, for what might prove suitable for one neighborhood might not do at all for another." Mr. Lamoreaux said: "Sometimes the best of pictures lose their value to an exhibitor because of inane titles, so why not allow an exhibitor the opportunity to give his opinions regarding them at the same time that he passes upon the synopsis?"

I asked Mr. Lamoreaux what kind of pictures his audiences seemed to enjoy the most.

"Subjects in a light and entertaining vein," he answered promptly. "Comedy—not necessarily slapstick—but the kind that that estimable artist, Douglas Fairbanks specializes in. They are the most universally popular with all ages and classes, and never fail to please.

"I make it a point to stand at the door at the end of a show and ask as many people as I can how they liked the picture, and experience in this line has taught me that the pictures that appeal to their funny bone are the ones that receive the most favorable comments. After a day of just the ordinary trials and tribulations that any man or woman are subject to, their object in visiting a theater is to be amused, not to indulge in any deep thinking that might add to their weariness."

Stage Prologue for Lewis Feature

One of the innovations connected with Frank Hall's Broadway run of "The Bar Sinister" is an elaborately staged prologue which plunges the audience deep into the atmosphere of the story and makes them susceptible to the picturesque charm of the interesting characters.

As the program so aptly puts it, the story of "The Bar Sinister" is laid somewhere below the Mason-Dixon line. Its locale differs materially from other stories of the sunny south, however, as cotton fields and corn are conspicuous by their absence, while mules and Mississippi steamboats have no place in the drama. Not only is the story modern, but the author, Anthony P. Kelly, has centered the action about a turpentine still and introduced characters as unusual to southern drama as are his locations.

In arranging a prologue for the Broadway Theater presentation of Edgar Lewis' production, Frank Hall took advantage of the many novel features of the story to give his audiences something different and at the same time lure them into the beautiful atmosphere of the south as quickly and as effectively as possible. Aided by the artists of the Lee Lash Studios, Mr. Hall has introduced New York audiences, probably for the first time, to a beautiful scenic reproduction of a turpentine forest. In the background is seen the home of the owner of the turpentine "still" while in the foreground, around the door of a typical southern negro cabin, the odd characters of the drama gather to join in the singing of southern melodies. The scene opens in the warm, red glow of the setting sun and changes to silvery moonlight as the prologue ends and Edgar Lewis' beautiful picture begins to unfold its intensely interesting story.

"The Paws of the Bear"

William Desmond, who has recently appeared in several screen successes, will soon be seen in the latest Ince-Triangle drama, "The Paws of the Bear," by J. C. Hawks, in which he is presented as star by Thomas H. Ince. This is a story of plot and counterplot, in which the intrigue of Russia's diplomatic corps is pitted against the shrewdness of our own government's secret service. It offers a series of surprising climaxes which are only equalled by the consistency of the story, and the locale carries one from Belgium to Russia, from Russia to Paris, and through France to the United States, where the final scenes complete the telling of this powerful drama.

Desmond, as Ray Bourke, veritably saunters through each exciting and tense situation. He—the young American traveler whose thoughts are far from diplomatic operandi—suddenly finds himself the focus point for many invisible governments. His love for the Countess Olga Rominoff, one of the cleverest of Russia's secret service agents, leads him to many strange adventures, in which Desmond's keen wit and broad sense of humor are advantageously displayed.

Clara Williams, as the countess, is seen to advantage. The part demands extremely delicate handling to completely surround the character in a veil of mystery, which is not lifted until the final scenes.

Others in the supporting cast are Robert McKim, as Boris Drakoff, a powerful force in the Russian secret service; Wallace Wolsey, as Curt Schreiber, the diplomatic agent of the United States, and Charles French. The production was directed by Reginald Barker and photographed by Robert Newhard.

Patriotism in Endings

William N. Selig has instructed that every film released under the "Diamond S" trade mark carry an ending presenting a direct appeal to patriotism. This ending is a pictorial in plastic art, in which the soldiers in the trenches are shown, and an American flag is seen floating. Fading in, comes the patriotic admonition: "Do your bit. Buy a liberty bond!" Ultimately, this appeal will reach millions of people through the medium of moving picture theaters. A photograph of the pictorial work, and an outline of the idea has been furnished Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in Washington.

Madge Kennedy's First Screen Work

Madge Kennedy has completed her first week before the camera in the big Goldwyn studio over at Fort Lee, and now she has some ideas about the films which are not mere theories.

This classic bit of modern picture making appears in Madge Kennedy's first Goldwyn production. Ralph Morgan is the lucky man.

"I had been told," said the famous little comedienne, "that the worst thing I would have to overcome would be my self-consciousness that I was acting before a camera. But I find that I never think of the camera at all; in fact, I hardly realize that it is there—and as for bothering me, it is the least of my troubles."

When pressed to tell what these troubles consisted of, Miss Kennedy admitted that they scarcely existed.

"Nothing really worth giving that name to, at least. Perhaps what bothers me most is this, to me, new work of a studio, is the cramped size of the camera stage. After the large spaces of the stage of the theater the room available for movement in a small interior 'set' seems so inadequate.

"I miss, too, the illusion of the theater. I mean that magic atmosphere which pervades both stage and auditorium from the moment that the curtain rises on a play until its fall at the end of the last act; it is that joining together in the spirit of make-believe which unites audiences and actor, and which spells the illusion of the theater.

"I miss my audience! I am quite willing to admit it. I have always loved my audiences, and they have ever been of the greatest help to me. I cannot remember ever having to struggle with that phenomenon known as an unresponsive audience. To me it is a myth.

"And queerest of all, perhaps, is the feeling which I have in my studio work that I am always rehearsing. I cannot get away from that feeling. Just when I expect Mr. Hugo Ballin or Mr. Robertson to say, 'That's all right, now; we'll take that,' the carpenters begin to strike the set, and I awake to the realization that the scene already has been finally photographed."

"ONE LAW FOR BOTH"

Latest Feature of Ivan Film Corporation Draws Praise of New York Critics—Playing Indefinite Engagement at Lyric Theater

"One Law for Both," the latest attraction produced by Ivan Abramson for Ivan Film Productions, Incorporated, was very well received by the critics of the New York press, and the business that the production is doing at the Lyric Theater, where it is playing an indefinite engagement, would indicate that the general public fully endorses the opinions of the reviewers. Most of the leading players in the production, including Rita Jolivet, James Morrison, Leah Baird, Vincent Serrano, Paul Capellani, Pedro De Cordoba, Margaret Greene, Helen Arnold and Anders Randolf, were present at the opening performance, as well as many other celebrities of the film world.

Almost all of the reviews from the New York dailies concurred in the opinion that because of the intense interest in Russian affairs in this country the production would be a tremendous financial success. The remarkable fidelity to detail which is so discernible throughout the picture, was also commented on, as well as the great basic strength of the theme, which embodies a threefold plea for equality in economic, political and sex life. C. F. Zittel, of the New York Evening Journal, says in part:

"I take this means to thank Mr. Abramson for according me the pleasure of witnessing what I would term a dramatic triumph.

"One Law for Both" has been unanimously passed by the Board of Censors. It's a serious subject—a subject right up to the very day, for part of the story is laid right here in America. It shows the great sacrifice a woman will make—where the rich suffer, as well as the poor—where the monarch is treated the same as the peasant.

"When Mr. Abramson directs a picture one would really imagine he has lived every character the artist depicts—so realistic are they.

"'One Law for Both' is a sensational, gripping, thrilling, true story of American and Russian life. It is interesting throughout the two solid hours, and the only sorrow you feel is when the masterpiece is brought to an end."

The New York Evening World, in reviewing the production, said: "In few other pictures of the season has a more dramatic and heart-gripping plot been utilized than in this latest work of Ivan Abrahamson, who not only wrote story, but directed its production with masterly knowledge of Russian life.

"The story deals with the injustice worked in modern life through the application of a double moral standard. Two phases of a realistic life problem are depicted, one unfolding beneath the despotism of the late Russia, with its wealth of material for tragic incidents, and the other here in the States, where womanhood is presumably assailed by the story's theme."

"Two Men There Were," a two-act western drama, is being filmed by Universal with Janet Eastman as the ingenue.

NEW ESSANAY SERIES

Release of First "Do Children Count" Productions June 6—Series an Appeal for More Tolerant Consideration of Children

Essanay Begins its "Do Children Count?" series June 6. These productions, twelve in number, will be released each week through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service.

Good entertainment will be the primary aim of these pictures, which have been cut to occupy the screen for approximately twenty-five minutes each. Though they hinge on child life, and feature little Mary McAllister, every effort has been made to inject enough real humor and realism into them to provide pictures which will be intensely interesting.

"The Guiding Hand will be the first unit of this series. It will be a story of a little orphaned girl whom designing relatives seek to despoil of a fortune she inherits.

In "Steps to Somewhere," the second, to be released June 13, the parents quarrel over who shall control their child. A separation results, and the little girl is left to face the world alone.

"The Wonderful Event" is a story of a little girl who wants a baby brother so much that she steals one from its nurse in the park. The result is a near-tragedy, but things come right in the end, for the stork brings a baby boy to the little girl's home.

Lawhead with "Submarine Eye"

Rex O. Lawhead has left New York to act as general representative for the Williamson Brothers. He will handle "The Submarine Eye" throughout the middle west states with headquarters in Chicago.

En route he stopped in Detroit and gave a private showing of the picture to a selected list of exhibitors. The Detroit showmen were enthusiastic over the production and written expressions of their opinions have been received at the New York office of the Williamson Brothers.

Mr. Lawhead is well known for the excellent way in which he handled "The Williamson Brothers' Submarine Expedition Pictures," the first under-water films shown in America. He played it at the Fine Arts Theater in Chicago for twelve weeks, and the Kellerman picture, under his management, played the same theater for twenty-six weeks. Thirty-eight weeks out of the forty weeks in the theatrical season is a mighty fine record.

Mr. Lawhead needs no introduction to Chicagoans. Throughout his home territory he is as well known in the theatrical world as he is to exhibitors.

Walthall and Essanay Part

News of the departure of Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson from Essanay has now been definitely confirmed.

Mr. Walthall stated to MOTOGRAPHY that he has made no definite plans as yet for his succeeding activities. "I believe the same is true of Miss Charleson, who is now in New York," said Mr. Walthall. "We are, of course, negotiating with various producers and I hope to work opposite Miss Charleson again."

"The Saints Adventure," a five-reel feature released through K. E. S. E., May 7, was the last picture in which Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson appeared for Essanay.

"Womanhood" Smashes Precedents

All V. L. S. E. precedents have been upset by the demands for prints of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," the preparedness picture suggested by Colonel Roosevelt and directed by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton.

Heretofore pictures released by V. L. S. E. have reached their maximum demand within forty days of release date, except in a very few instances. After that period the demand for the pictures has decreased.

With "Womanhood," however, ordinary conditions have been reversed. Instead of a decrease in demand for prints, the increase has been so great that within the last ten days assistant general manager A. W. Goff found it necessary to order fifty-two extra prints of "Womanhood" from Greater Vitagraph in order to supply the demand from the various branch exchanges. When these prints are delivered to the branch exchanges there will be one hundred and forty-six prints of the preparedness spectacle working throughout the United States.

According to the branch managers their demand for extra prints is caused largely by the requests for repeat dates from exhibitors who have run the picture. They also report that the tremendous cross-country billboard campaign conducted by V. L. S. E. has given a tremendous stimulus to the bookings, owing to the fact that it has caused a large patron demand that exhibitors book the picture.

Booked Before Camera Starts

Julia Sanderson, just signed by John R. Freuler, president of Mutual to appear in a series of Mutual star productions, has broken all records for premature bookings.

Even before the subject has been chosen for her first picture, before her director has been selected and before studio arrangements have been completed, she has been booked by the Goldstein Brothers' England circuit.

Samuel Goldstein, manager of the Goldstein Amusement Company, sent this letter to the Mutual Film Corporation:

I have been reading your Reel Life and notice you have a new star named Julia Sanderson. I want to be the first one in New England to run these pictures through my circuit of theaters, as I know this star's ability and know she will be a big drawing card for the exhibitor. I hope you will give me first option on these pictures.

Scouts with Ann Pennington

By arrangement with the Central Organization of the Boy Scouts of America, Famous Players has obtained the services of a troop from the upper West Side of New York City to appear in support of Ann Pennington in the Paramount picture "The Little Boy Scout."

One of the features in the story itself is the sending of messages by the Boy Scouts to the home of Justina's aunt, where the little American girl is held prisoner. Her gallant young assistants are encamped in a woods within signalling distance of the house, and when her Mexican uncle comes in pursuit of her it is the warnings which are wig-wagged by the Boy Scouts that enable her to escape in time to avoid capture.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Resistance and Arc Voltage

Will you please answer the following question in MOTOGRAPHY, of which I am a constant reader? I have secured some very valuable information through your columns.

I have two 38-amp., 110-volt rheostats connected in multiple. Will you please figure the resistance of the connection, also will you figure the arc voltage? The resistance of the two rheostats is approximately 2.9 ohms each and I am getting 74 amps. at the arc. The maximum of the rheostats is 38 amps. and they are working at that all the time. I am using National 7/8 cored upper and 3/8 solid lower carbons. Hoping to see an answer to this question in MOTOGRAPHY at an early date, I remain, W. M., Mass.

If the rheostats let 38 amps. through, using them on 110 volts D. C., with each rheostat at 2.9 ohms resistance you get 1.45 ohms resistance with two rheostats in multiple. This figures goes into 110 volts about 75 times, so your 74 amps. is approximately correct. It is generally figured that the arc voltage on a lamp using D. C. current at 110 volts is between 45 and 55 volts. To strike an average we will call it 50 volts. 110 volts at the main minus the 50 volts at the arc leaves 62 volts. Divide that by the 38 amperes and the result is the same. The two rheostats connected in multiple, both working at 38 amps. on 110 volts with 2.9 ohms resistance each gives you 1.45 ohms resistance on the line.

New Noiseless Carbons

Will you kindly send us a sample of the National Carbon Co.'s carbons or tell us their address so that we may try them?—Scenic Theater, Lexington, Ill.

I have had several inquiries from both exhibitors and operators as to the new noiseless carbon that the National Carbon Company is making and I have written to the company for some information on the subject but so far have received no reply from them.

I do not know whether the carbon is ready for the market or not nor do I know at what price they will sell, but I do know that they are very satisfactory for A. C. current and the tests that I made personally and had made by other operators, goes to show that they are a big improvement over the carbons now in use. The address of the National Carbon Company is Cleveland, O., and a card addressed to them will give you the information that you desire.

Exhibitor Pants Union Card

I run a picture theater here in my town and operate my own machine. Where could I take an examination to become a union operator? I believe that there will be a demand for operators during war time and I would like to try to become a union operator. Waiting your reply at an early date, I am yours truly, R. B. Wright, Lindel Theater, Mulvane, Ill.

To join the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. you will have to make application to the local that is nearest to the town in which you live. Write to Mr. F. G. Lemaster, general organizer, 107 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, and he can tell you what local to make application to. As to the demands that will be made for operators during war-time, I do not believe that there will be many operators that will be able to pass the examination for duty in the service.

I know that out of the local that I belong to there have been quite a few of the members who have tried to enlist and up to date there have been but two accepted. The average operator who has worked any length of time has defective eyesight and their general health is impaired through the lack of plenty of fresh air and exercise. I believe that every man should offer his services to his country and I would not advise any man to join any union on the supposition that the government is going to draft enough of that particular craft as to cause a shortage of men to handle that craft.

I think that every man that has a trade of any kind should be affiliated with some union but I do not think that at this time anyone should join a union because he thinks that there is going to be a shortage of men and that he will gain personal benefit through joining. If the time comes that the government wants men and will except men who at the present time cannot pass the rigid requirements, then I will venture to say that there will not be enough operators left in the union ranks to operate one-tenth of the shows. Our men are loyal to the cause of unionism but there is one cause that has first call on every man regardless of color or creed and that is the call of the U. S. A.

But when that time does come then the few that are left will not be running picture machines but will be in the fields and factories doing their little bit. There is a movement on foot now to teach the women to operate moving picture machines, and some of the operators and a great many exhibitors have fallen for this line of talk. There is a movement of that kind on foot, but are the people back of it sincere in their talk when they say that their reason for this is that there is going to be a shortage of operators caused (?) by the war, or have they other reasons and are merely using the war talk as a cloak to hide behind?

It is very strange to me why it is that this teaching of women has never been thought of before now. War has been the chief subject of the country for the last three years and nobody thought of how the picture business would suffer until now.

One very patriotic operator at Muncie, Indiana, has opened a school for young women from 18 to 28 years. He instructs them as to the duties of an operator. Wouldn't it be better for these same young women to spend their time in the cause of the Red Cross, where their services are needed—where they can do something to relieve the sufferings of the men on the front that are giving their lives for a just cause—and leave the picture business to the men who have spent their time and (most of them) their health, trying to improve the business? When you simmer it down it's like the breakfast food—"There's a reason."

More About Punching Film

I have been reading in Motography about the trouble caused film exchanges by operators punching holes in the title and tail pieces of the film and I agree with you in every word that you have said on the subject, but I am enclosing a piece of film that was cut from the title of a two-reel subject and I want you to pass judgment on it.

Which do you think looks worse—the holes that the operators punch or the holes that are punched by the film exchanges?

This reel of film that this piece was taken from has three more sets of holes in it just like the one I am sending you and the second reel has five sets of holes in it. You can imagine how these look going through the machine. For the good of the game in general, I would suggest that the film exchanges do as the old saying goes, "Clean their own homes first."—G. G. A., Indiana.

Your letter and piece of film at hand and I agree with you in your kick. There is no reason why a film should be marked the way this one is and I have the word of the association manager of the company that is doing this, that the size of the stencil will be changed at once.

It is true that film exchanges have to use some kind of a mark on the films so that they can be kept account of but there is no reason for using a stencil of that size to do it. Nor is there any reason for punching holes in four or five places in the film. I thing that "some day" the manufacturers will get together and put a warning mark on the tail pieces of the film and that will stop the punching of film by the operators.

One firm in Chicago is doing that now and I understand that they are not having any trouble with their films at all. They put one mark fifty feet from the end, one five feet from the end and one two feet from the end. Then they send a cue sheet out with each reel telling the operator just where to look for the warning signs. This gives the operator all the time that he needs to light the second lamp and be ready to change from one machine to the other, and at the same time stops the practice of operators punching the films. Let's live in hopes.

CHANGES RELEASE DATES

Fairbanks Offering for June Set Back a Week—Pickford Subject for July to Be Released Earlier

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, has announced a change in the release dates of the new Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks productions now being staged at the Lasky studios in California.

Originally scheduled for release on June 17, the Fairbanks picture, "Wild and Woolly," has been set back a week in order to give more time to the final preparation of the film and its exploitation. This photoplay will, therefore, be released on June 24. In producing "Wild and Woolly," the Fairbanks organization has been spending considerable time travelling, in accordance with its policy of staging productions in their actual locales. The new picture, for instance, opens in New York and is continued in California and Arizona locations. In screening the story the exact backgrounds are being secured.

The forthcoming Mary Pickford picture, a stirring subject of great patriotic theme entitled "The Little American," is also now rapidly nearing completion at the Hollywood studio. Under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille, the new Pickford vehicle promises to be the most effective cinema of timely American appeal yet screened. Although originally planned for release at a later date, this production will make its first public appearance throughout the country on July 2. Upon his return to New York from California, recently, Al Lichtman, general manager of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, expressed great enthusiasm over the spectacular qualities of this picture, several scenes of which he had viewed in the course of production. It is generally felt at the Artcraft headquarters that never before has "America's Sweetheart" appeared in a picture of such magnitude in the way of theme, support and settings.

Ready for a chase scene in the coming Fairbanks picture "Wild and Woolly." "Doug" is mounted on the horse. The other scene is "Little Mary" in her latest play, "A Romance of the Redwoods," in which she has a "different" role.

RAPS FILM ADVERTISING

Frank J. Seng Declares Most Companies Squander Money on Ineffectual Advertising—Says Heralds Merely Make Work for Janitor

"I think money spent on heralds is wasted," said Frank J. Seng recently. "I ceased using them long ago in my theaters, and I cannot see where I have lost anything by it. People don't come to the theater to read heralds. They come to see the picture. If the heralds are given to the patron as he enters the theater they find their way to the floor without even being glanced at. If they are handed to him when he is leaving, he usually crumples them up and throws them into the street. For that reason there will be no heralds issued when we present the super-feature, 'Parentage,' to the trade.

"Every advertisement, in my mind, should bear a message to the reader—something that will impel action. We have had enough of the advertising which attracts attention and arouses interest. What we want now, in addition, is advertising that will impel action. In our advertising for 'Parentage' we have tried to word it so that it will sell the picture for the state right buyer.

"In glancing over one of the trade papers last week I was amazed at the great waste of money in full-page advertisements by producers. With but one or two exceptions, not one of them informed the exhibitor or the state right buyer about the picture which was being advertised or gave him any idea of the plot and the real merits of the production.

"As I glanced over the pages I saw one big advertisement which notified the trade that a picture which was being released by one company was full of 'beauty and charm' and that it was much better than their last big feature. Now, that means nothing to the prospective buyer. It tells him nothing, and yet that firm paid probably two hundred dollars to say it. The mere fact that this picture was better than the last one does more towards destroying the confidence of the exhibitor in that firm than anything else, for probably this same firm said the very same thing about the other feature.

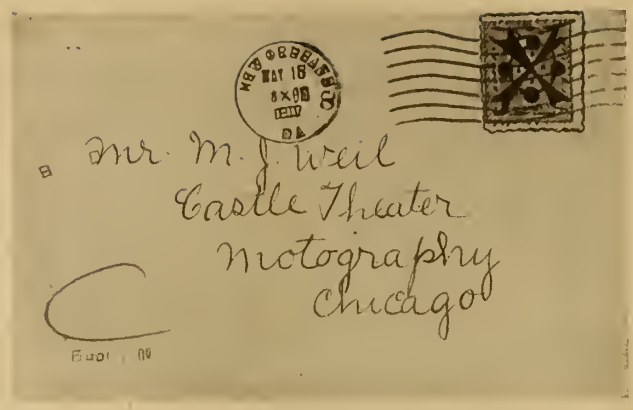
"Another mistake the producer makes is in spending great sums to tell us what Sam Jones thought of the picture way out in some unearthly place the majority of us never heard of. The average exhibitor is interested only in whether that picture is the kind of a production that he wants to book for his house, and if it is the sort of production that will please his patrons. Audiences differ, and the production that goes big in his theater may fail miserably in another territory.

"What the exhibitor wants to know is the story of the play, the cast, and whether the photography is good. He is also interested in the possibilities the picture has for sound advertising and good, dignified publicity in addition to a good title. If a picture has these qualifications it is bound to be a success with his audiences.

"But, at the present time, we have no way of telling whether a production is good or bad, until we have shown it at our theaters. Most of the advertising is irrational and misleading, and we find sometimes that the poorest production is grossly misrepresented by great glaring full pages, which seek to urge on the exhibitor into booking it.

"I want to say right now that this sort of advertising does not fool the vast majority of exhibitors today, for they have been too often misled in the past.

"The exhibitor today wants good pictures, and it doesn't matter a great deal who is in the cast if the picture itself is what he thinks his patrons want to see. This, more than anything else, is responsible for the open market."



Exhibitors have told us many times that Motography seems closer to them and their interests than other trade journals. The above reproduction of a letter received in Chicago a few days ago shows that Motography and Motion Picture Theater are one. It is just another example of the fact that Motography stands back of every exhibitor in the country. Let us know what we can do for YOU.

FAIRBANKS IS THIRTY-FOUR

Mrs. Fairbanks Plans "Surprise" but the Wily Douglas Turns the Tables, Metaphorically Speaking, at Gay Party

A lengthy telegram that depicted the sender's utter disregard for regular United States currency was received yesterday by Pete Schmid, publicity purveyor of Artcraft, from the w. k. Bennie Zeidman. The telegraphic communication disclosed the fact that Douglas Fairbanks, than whom there are none more popular, has just passed his thirty-fourth birthday and that the event which marked this occasion will long be remembered by the members of the Fairbanks company now in California.

It seems that Mrs. Fairbanks had laid elaborate plans for a great surprise for the athletic Douglas and in league with the various members of the Fairbanks company, had arranged for a long-to-be-remembered party at his new Los Angeles home. The wily Douglas was not to be taken unawares, however, and through some mysterious channel—Bennie Zeidman has sworn loyalty to the cause—kept in direct touch with the plans of the conspirators. Hence when he walked into the "trap" he reversed the surprise by distributing handsome gifts to every person present and thanking each individual for their particular activities in the execution of the work entrusted to them effecting the party. The plotters took their defeat gracefully, at least so the telegram says, and soon forgot the miscarried plans in the festivities which demanded their entire attention.

A beautiful pair of heavy silver spurs engraved with the smiling face of the Artcraft star was presented to Douglas by the members of his organization.

King Bee's fourth comedy, "The Artist," will be ready for release in July. Billy West, Ethel Burton, Babe Hardy, Leo White, Bud Ross and Ethlyn Gibson are prominent in the offering which tells how a janitor masquerades as an artist, and is finally routed in confusion and disgrace. Of course, Billy West is the janitor—artist and his work is so strikingly clever and original that he fears no comparison with any other performer now on the screen.

Helen Gibson, the newly acquired Universal star, and Jimmy Davis are already at work making two-reel railroad dramas.

"DE LUXE," GOLDWYN'S SLOGAN

No Pains Spared to Make Pictures Monuments of All-Round Excellence—Unparalleled Experiment in Industry Working Out Successfully

An almost unparalleled experiment in the motion pitcure industry is working out successfully for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, organized last December to be ready to present its productions to the American public in September. The time is fast approaching when it can set forth the treat it has taken such infinite study and pains to prepare. Nothing essential to great picture making has been overlooked.

As all readers know, Goldwyn engaged under exclusive contracts Mae Marsh, Mary Garden, Maxine Elliott, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy. Still other acquisitions will be announced in the immediate future.

Great emphasis was laid upon the authors who were to write the Goldwyn photoplays. At the outset Goldwyn drew around it such successful authors as Margaret Mayo, Roi Cooper Megrue, Irvin S. Cobb, Edgar Selwyn, Porter Emerson Browne, and many others.

Goldwyn also saw the need for a change in the physical appearance of motion pictures—saw the absence of refinement and good form in hundreds of pictures rated as successes, and decided to find new artistic evolutions for cinema spectacles.

In consequence, Hugo Ballin, Everitt Shinn and several other distinguished artists were approached. None of these men had ever made a picture. Both Ballin and Shinn ranked at the very top in the art world. They realized the need for a hitherto unattained refinement in pictures and set to work immediately to supply it. Now, three months later, both Shinn and Ballin, after designing settings for Goldwyn Pictures, have become actual directors of pictures and are making their first productions at the Fort Lee studios. They have applied their talents and knowledge to a new profession, absorbed its technical essentials in a brief time and served their novitiate. Much can be promised in advance for men of this type as directors of pictures.

In other words, while subject to much speculation by hidebound men who have become accustomed to picture routine, Goldwyn has decided to utilize the talent and genius of men never before associated with the picture industry.

Even in its advertising and publicity Goldwyn has sought to achieve the unusual—the unusual being something that everyone else was not doing. None of the Goldwyn stars are asked to do stunts that lessen their dignity or standing. They are not asked to seek or assist in getting cheap publicity for themselves or their company. In films they are treated as the fine artists that they are. With their introduction into films they are being exploited with a fine regard for permanency as screen factors—not as stars expected to make a lot of money in a few pictures, but a great deal of money in a great many pictures.

Goldwyn intends to show in its exploitation of its stars and productions that an appeal can be made to the public on an extensive scale, and to the world at large, without "circusing" names and personalities that are already known to intelligent persons throughout the world.

In the matter of salesman ship Goldwyn is adhering rigidly to its initial promise of making and having completed by September 1 twelve pictures, so that all exhibitors may know long in advance just what productions they may expect—in story value, direction value and quality.

"The Magnificent Meddler"

"The Magnificent Meddler," Greater Vitagraph's release for June 4, will serve to introduce to filmdom a new co-starring combination, Antonio Moreno and Mary Anderson. As individual stars these players are recognized to be among the strongest box office attractions before the camera, and it is safe to assume their co-starring careers will met with unprecedented success.

"The Magnificent Meddler" is a virile story of the Great West and depicts the attempt of a breezy easterner of indomitable spirit to uplift a corrupt western town where he is the proprietor of a newspaper. The story concerns itself with Monty Emerson (Antonio Moreno), who buys the Sentinel in Horizon with inherited money, sending the purchase price by wire. With Bob Gill (Otto Lederer), a cartoonist who had been his pal on an eastern paper, he goes to Horizon, a relic of the wild and woolly days.

Monty starts in at once to uplift the town, and his first bit of "meddling" is to brand Ike Cherry, Horizon's "bad man," as an undesirable citizen, thereby gaining the bad one's enmity.

Monty learns that Lewiston, a neighboring town, had been trying to annex the corrupt but contented Horizon. After a conference with the mayor of Lewiston, Monty begins to shriek for consolidation. This brings him afoul of Big Joe Roth, political boss.

Monty meantime meets Jess Roth (Mary Anderson), daughter of the boss, and they fall in love. After taking a flashlight picture showing Marillo (Leon D. Kent), a Mexican, paying Roth his share of the profits from vice in the town, Roth organizes a gang and starts after Monty, while Marillo organizes a band of Mexicans to rob Roth's house.

The young editor evades his pursuers. Shortly afterward Marillo and his outlaws come along the road with Jess Roth a kidnapped captive. Monty drops onto the horse bearing Jess and gallops away, the Mexicans in pursuit. They reach the Sentinel office. Soon Roth's men appear and open fire on the place. A battle follows. Roth then breaks into the newspaper office and his men set fire to the place.

The girl escapes but is again captured by Marillo, who returns to the attack at the Sentinel office. A force of cowboys come to the rescue, and Marillo flees with Jess a prisoner. Monty overtakes them, knocks Marillo out and rides away with the girl. Roth and a force of cowpunchers arrive at this juncture and escort the pair to the Palace dance hall. Roth, still incensed at Monty, tries to drag the girl away from him, but she denounces her father and forces him to consent to her wedding with the meddler.

Roth's capitulation is complete. He not only surrenders his daughter to Monty, but gives up his opposition to the consolidation proposition and orders his followers to vote for it.

Mary and Doug to Sue Chaplin

Shortly after viewing one of Charlie Chaplin's new pictures, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, the popular Artcraft stars, sent a telegram to the well-known laugh-maker as follows: "We, the undersigned, sue you for sore ribs. We saw your new picture last night. 'Nuff said."

AUSTRALIA BIG FILM FIELD

Burton Holmes, Champion Globe Girdler, Finds Film Conditions in Foreign Countries Greatly Improved —Following American Methods Closely

Burton Holmes, the great traveler, who is spending six months of each year gathering new material for motion picture lovers, has found film conditions in Australia greatly improved since his last visit there. Mr. Holmes, at the close of his lecture tour in this country some weeks ago, immediately set sail for foreign shores for the sole purpose of obtaining new material for his motion picture travels, which are released exclusively by Paramount Pictures Corporation as the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures.

"Conditions in the film industry in this country have improved wonderfully since last I was here," wrote Mr. Holmes to one of the officials of Paramount, from Sydney, Australia. "There is a great demand for American pictures, and there are more than four times as many theaters in each community now than were here some years ago. The American manufacturer of motion pictures is so far in advance of any of his foreign brothers that the salesman has no opposition when he talks of quality and service. There is a corresponding increase of advancement in the type of theater and their mode of management also. The Australians have acquired the American idea in its every detail, and when you walk into any of the theaters here to see a Paramount Picture you receive the same amount of courteous attention you would receive in a first class house on Broadway.

"It has been the American influence in the motion picture industry that has brought this all about in the foreign countries. They have followed the modern methods of exhibiting to the last letter, and in many of the cities they rank with the best. You will universally find the manager at the theater, greeting his patrons when they come and sending them away with a smile. There wasn't a single manager who was not pleased with the business he had been doing during the past year, and despite many depressing conditions, they looked for increased business this year."

Mr. Holmes stated also that he had secured some very remarkable pictures of his travels, and that the results of this six months' trip had far exceeded his expectations. In all of his trips he has been going away from the "beaten path" and taking pictures of the interesting sights that the average traveler does not have the opportunity to see.

Director Gets Too Much Action

"It can't be done," Lawrence Semon, director of Greater Vitagraph's "Big V" comedies, announced recently after his twelfth trip to the Brooklyn police station to explain just why he had been obstructing traffic on Fulton street, the leading business thoroughfare of the suburb of Manhattan.

What Director Semon meant was that it is impossible to make comedies in Brooklyn without fighting the entire police department or being willing to pay a fine or accept a jail sentence in order to finish the pciture.

Director Semon, with his company, was brought from the western studios of Greater Vitagraph several weeks ago for the purpose of making ten of the "Big V" comedies which have proved to be so popular with the patrons of motion picture houses. He had expected to finish the comedies at the rate of one a week. Instead it has taken him eight weeks to complete three of them.

"And it isn't my fault," Semon declares. Every time we shot off a firecracker we have been yanked to the police station to explain just why we did it.

"Jimmy Aubrey, my leading man, has been arrested three times because he happened to put foot on a private lawn. They just appear to be looking for us all the time."

"The trouble is," said Director Semon, "that the people of the East, while enjoying looking at motion pictures, know very little about the making.

"In the west, especially at Los Angeles, the people know all about the making of pictures. There is no hubbub when a company starts to work in the streets. A crowd may gather and the police may appear, but instead of hindering the direction, they help the director by taking care of the crowds."

Dates of Chaplin Releases

Release dates of Charlie Chaplin's eleventh and twelfth Mutual comedies will be announced by the Mutual Film Corporation as soon as the pictures are ready. The eleventh is now in the course of production at the Lone Star studio. Most of the scenes have been completed. No title has yet been chosen.

Chaplin's insistence that every detail of his productions shall be as nearly perfect as his ability and motography can make them, has made it impossible to follow regular schedule in releasing his Mutual comedies No. 11 and No. 12. The date of release of "The Cure," his latest picture, was postponed twice in order that Chaplin might have more time to perfect certain parts of the picture.

The title of the new comedy will be decided upon within the next two weeks and it is likely that within that same time it will be possible to announce a release date. The date will be made known as soon as possible that anxious exhibitors may give definite information to impatient Chaplin fans.

"Mr. Chaplin personally assures me by wire that No. 11 and No. 12 will be the best comedies he has ever attempted, which makes certain big box office receipts for exhibitors when they are released," said President John R. Freuler of Mutual.

New Universal Serial

Marie Wolcamp, Universal star, noted for her work in "Liberty" and other big productions filmed at Universal City, is to be starred in a new serial to be produced by Director Jacques Jaccard.

This serial, which will be made in sixteen episodes of two reels each, will deal with underworld life in the great outdoors. Much of the atmosphere will be laid about the Canadian mounted police, and Jaccard, who is writing the story himself, declares it is a patriotic theme, without, however, battle scenes or anything else pertaining to actual warfare. He refuses at the present time to discuss the exact nature of the story, but declares it is timely, full of absorbing interest and perfectly suited to the daredevil work which has made Miss Walcamp famous upon the screen.

In a private view of the special 2-reel Selig release "Movie Stunts," featuring Tom Mix, a committee of General Film executives voted this one of the most interesting short length subjects ever received by this company for distribution.

Marie Cahill and her lantern-jawed pard in "Patsey's Pardner," a new Mutual Comedy. While Marie cuts up "Judge Barker" plays the part of a "heavy" and tries to lend dignity to the proceedings.

Bull Dog Opposite Marie Cahill

A lantern jawed, flat nosed, wicked eyed, white bull dog with a ferocious temper plays opposite Marie Cahill in "Patsy's Partner," the comedy released by Mutual, May 28.

Mike—the not-to-be-fooled-with bull—has an important and dignified role as "Judge Barker," the silent and not to be reached partner of Patsy, a lawyer with more bills than clients. Attired in a mortar board and gown Mike walks through his part with a solemnity and dignity which is a marked contrast to the comedy role of the star, Marie Cahill.

BRADY CAMP BUSTLES

Carlyle Blackwell and Arthur Ashley Direct Pictures in Which They Play Leads—Other Big Guns at Fort Lee Busy, Too

Activities are at their height in the Fort Lee studio of World-Pictures Brady-Made, where at least one unusually interesting experiment is being made, engaging the services of two of the foremost male players of this organization.

Both Carlyle Blackwell and Arthur Ashley, who have confined their attention heretofore to acting for the screen, are at present directing new plays in which each will also appear prominently.

Mr. Blackwell's play is called "Jack, the Good-For-Nothing," in which he has the role of Jack Burkshaw. Associated with him in the cast are Evelyn Greeley, Muriel Ostriche, William Sherwood and others.

The piece being produced under Mr. Ashley's direction is titled "The Guardian," and will be the second of the series in which Mantagu Love is to invest the star role. The young woman of whom Mr. Love is the guardian in this photoplay is personated by the engaging June Elvidge, while the schemer of the story, who does not meet his just deserts until about two minutes before the end of reel five, is acted by Mr. Ashley.

Miss Kitty Gordon is also at work in this studio upon the "Divine Sacrifice," the third of her present list of World-Pictures.

A feature of this production that will be of quite general interest is the appearance in the cast of Vera Beresford, the very attractive daughter of Kitty Gordon, whose husband is the Honorable Henry Beresford, a captain in the English army.

After a long search a play has finally been found through which to transform little Madge Evans into a star. This picture play carries the title "Jerry-for-Short," and the full name of its juvenile heroine is Geraldine Carmichael.

Mr. Brady and his associates have desired for many months to promote their popular child actress, but the looked-for vehicle proved extremely elusive until a very few days ago, when a story by Jane Burnham was received. This turned out to be just what had been wished for, and the diminutive Miss Evans was re-engaged at a materially fattened income upon a basis of big type in the advertisements.

Other plays upon which the final touches are being made are "Dandy Dick," directed by Mr. Brady in person; "A Self-Made Widow," starring Alice Brady, and "The Waster."

Another item of news from the World-Pictures studio is that Edward Langford, one of the most popular of the "featured" players under this management, has enlisted in the United States army, and will not return to the screen drama until the war is over.

New Strand Comedy

It is well to have nerve if you want to succeed in the world.

A clever man can accomplish a great deal through bluffing.

But sometimes the combination of nerve and bluff carry a man too far—especially if someone calls his bluff at exactly the wrong moment.

This was the combination of circumstances which spelled the ruin of Jay Belasco in the Strand comedy, "Bluffing Father," released through Mutual on May 30.

Jay had sufficient nerve to change the number of his house and so induce the movers to deliver Mr. Smith's furniture at his house.

He bluffed Billie Rhodes, his wife, into believing it was their goods, and also bluffed his father-in-law into thinking he had provided a luxurious home for Billie to the extent of father presenting him with a check for five thousand dollars—almost.

For just then, and right in front of father-in-law, the Smiths came, claimed their furniture, and had it removed, leaving Jay standing in a deserted house. But father-in-law admired his combination of nerve and bluff enough to present him with the check which assured some real furniture of his own.

"REDEMPTION" FOR STATES

Method of Handling Evelyn Nesbitt Picture Now Drawing Big Crowds at Cohen Theater in New York Definitely Announced

It is definitely announced that the big picture, "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbitt and her son, Russell Thaw, now playing at the Geo. M. Cohan Theater in New York will be sold by state rights and will probably be handled from the sixth floor of the Putnam Building, 1493 Broadway, New York.

There is a big demand for seats at the Cohan, and hundreds have been turned away. At some performances the line from the box office stretched around the block to Forty-second street.

It is practically the only show in New York at present that is selling out. This fact is, of course, attracting a great deal of attention in the film and dramatic circles of Manhattan. It is another proof of the drawing power of photoplays of a high and powerful type.

Intended for a two weeks' engagement at the Cohan, the run has been extended indefinitely, and at the present there is no sign of its decreasing in popularity. It looks like one of the best state right buys this season.

Evelyn Nesbitt and her five-year-old son, Russell Thaw, in "Redemption," are proving the hit of the season. The picture, which is acclaimed by critics and film experts as one of the finest of the season, shows the marvelous and unexpected ability of Miss Nesbitt as a picture player.

Without previous experience she wins all the honors in the production. What she has suffered, and the fact that she is asked to live again actual scenes in her life, aid her in her work and enable her to show a depth of feeling and a strength of emotion which no artificial means could arouse.

"Redemption" will shortly be distributed throughout the country as a big special feature.

ILIODOR PICTURE CORPORATION

Company Formed Just to Present "Downfall of the Romanoffs"—A Drama of Russian Revolution Directed by Herbert Brenon.

The Iliodor Picture Corporation, recently chartered at Albany, has, by special arrangement with the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation and Lewis J. Selznick, obtained the services of Herbert Brenon to make a vast and significant drama of the Russian revolution which will be presented in a few weeks as a states rights attraction.

This vast drama of the overturn of a nation's rulers and the establishment of human liberty is being made under the title "The Downfall of the Romanoffs," and Iliodor, the fugitive monk who was the spiritual advisor of the Czar Nicholas, is the featured player.

Iliodor's own story of the intrigues and scandals of the Russian court is now appearing in more than three hundred daily newspapers throughout the United States and this gives Herbert Brenon's picture advance national publicity of greater scope than any other state rights picture ever obtained.

No director of motion pictures is so well fitted for the task of making this picture as Herbert Brenon, who, though English born, spent his boyhood days in Petrograd where, through his parents' journalistic connections, he learned something of the court life and of the personalities that figured in it.

"The Downfall of the Romanoffs" has been under way at Mr. Brenon's New Jersey studios for the past two weeks and so well was all of the preliminary work on the production done that it will be rushed to early completion.

A cast of remarkable brilliancy, as yet to be announced, surrounds Iliodor, and a woman who has been the sensation of Paris and other continental capitals will have the most important feminine role.

Just as Herbert Brenon was completing "The Love Wolf," his latest production, the Iliodor Picture Corporation submitted its proposal to him to make this production and present it to the American public.

Needless to say, great attention has been paid to the scenario of this picture. Several noted authorities have assisted in the writing and arrangement of the story under Mr. Brenon's personal direction. Mr. Brenon is throwing all his skill into the picture.

New Universals

Little Zoe Rae, the talented child actress, is featured in the Butterfly Picture, "The Circus of Life," a five-act human interest drama which heads the Universal program for the week of June 4. The story was written by E. J. Clawson and the production filmed under the direction of Rupert Julian. It is an appealing story which affords the little star ample opportunities to display her versatility. The principal roles are played by such noted screen stars as Mignon Anderson, Emory Johnson and Harry Carter. The entire cast is made up of players of note and it is doubtful whether a better balanced cast has ever been selected for a program feature.

Little Zoe Rae, featured in Universal's "The Circus of Life."

"The Circus of Life" has an especial appeal to women and children and should prove the most popular of any of the Butterfly Pictures released to date. It will be presented Monday, June 4, the same day on which will appear the Nestor Comedy, "A Burglar by Request," featuring that inimitable trio of funmakers, Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts.

"The Almost Good Man," a Gold Seal, three-part Western drama, with Harry Carey in the leading role, is the feature offering of Tuesday, June 5th. This is an unusual Western story written by Shelley Sutton, put in scenario form by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and directed by Fred A. Kelsey. It tells of a bad man who falls out with his partner and whose regeneration is worked out through bizarre circumstances. There is a big surprise at the end of the picture. Prominent in the cast supporting Harry Carey are Claire DuBrey, Bester Pegg and Al MacQuarrie.

The Victor comedy," A Box of Tricks," with Billy Mason and Marcia Moore, is the other Tuesday release.

All the scenes in the L-KO two-part comedy "Dry Goods and Damp Deeds," which appears Wednesday, June 6, are laid in a department store, and the fun is uproarious from the start. The principals are Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton, Charles Inslee and Merta Sterling.

Issue No. 74 of the Universal Animated Weekly, and the Laemmle drama, "The Missing Wallet," featuring Edwin August, will also appear Wednesday.

Ruth Stonehouse is the star in the Rex two-part comedy-drama, "Tacky Sue's Romance," which will be released Thursday, June 7. The other release of this date is the Imp drama, "Doomed," with Charles Mailes and Claire McDowell in the principal roles.

On Friday, June 8, the feature is the two-act Nestor comedy, "Who's Looney Now?", featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Billy Rhodes. It concerns the mix-up occasioned when a newly married couple believe one another crazy. Issue No. 22 of the Universal Screen Magazine is also released on this date.

The Bison two-reel cowboy drama, "The Scrapper," featuring Jack Ford, is the chief offering of Saturday, June 9. It is an exceptional drama in which cowboys are the principal characters, as most of the action takes place in the East. The Joker comedy, "Simple Sapho," with Gale Henry and Jack Dill, and the fourth issue of the new special single-reel feature Universal Current Events, will also appear on this date.

The Imp drama, "The Hunted Man," with Mignon Anderson and Lee Hill in the leading roles, and the Powers split-reel, "Them Are the Happy Days," a comedy cartoon, and "Superstitious China," a Dorsey Educational, are the offering for Sunday, June 10.

During the week the thirteenth episode of the great mystery serial, "The Voice on the Wire," entitled "'Twixt Death and Dawn," will be released. The stars, Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, are carried through more thrilling situations in this episode, and the mystery surrounding the identity of the voice on the wire is still as deep as ever.

More Wharton Features

Following the production of their first superfeature for state rights, the Whartons now are making their preparations for early production of two more features, and, in fact, now are building their sets and properties for the production of one of these. The actual filming of the picture will begin shortly.

"The Great White Trail," which was written and directed by Leopold D. Wharton, marked the beginning of the departure of the Whartons in independent producing.

"We intend to follow the states rights course and believe in it thoroughly," is their standpoint, "and to this end we hope to produce pictures that will merit the patronage of the states rights buyers."

Along this line, The Whartons have in mind the production of stories by Fred Jackson, Courtney Ryley Cooper, Archibald Clavering Gunter and others.

New Desmond Play

Director Walter Edwards has just completed production at the Culver City studios of the next Triangle-Ince play, in which William Desmond will be presented as star. This is a gripping detective story by John Lynch and J. G. Hawks.

The supporting cast includes Robert McKim, Margaret Thompson and Roland Lee.

That the tremendous popularity enjoyed by Greater Vitagraph's serial, "The Secret Kingdom," has not been dimmed, although the serial was released in December, has been shown by the manner in which many contracts for the play are still being closed daily.

As an example, Yonkers, a suburb of New York, having a population of 90,000, has seven motion picture houses, five of which recently completed arrangements to run "The Secret Kingdom."

Toronto, Canada, furnishes another convincing example of the demand for the serial. In Toronto there are 81 motion picture theaters, of which 32 are using "The Secret Kingdom" as part of their programs.

FIRST MAYFAIR PRODUCTION

"Persuasive Peggy," Story Which Scored Big Success in Magazine and Book Form Ideally Suited to Peggy Hyland.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, announces that the first production starring dainty Peggy Hyland is "Persuasive Peggy," the charming story by Maravene Thompson which scored such a hit in magazine and book form.

In the title role of Persuasive Peggy, Miss Hyland is ideally cast as the young wife who ties her blustering boy husband to her chariot wheels in so diplomatic a way that he still believes himself the master. Never before has she had such wonderful opportunities in which to demonstrate her natural charm and the production promises to be delightfully wholesome and refreshing.

In order that no part of the attractiveness of the original story be lost in the adaptation, the scenario was written by the director, Charles Brabin, in collaboration with the authoress, Miss Thompson.

The settings teem with beauty and the little star wears frocks galore in which to captivate her many admirers. No detail will be overlooked and a number of unique touches in photography and lighting effects are rumored from reliable sources.

William Russell in Big Fight

William Russell, who has just completed a new play under Mutual-American auspices, "Shackles of Truth," released by Mutual June 4, is seen to advantage. In

A Doctor Jeckyll and Mister Hyde view of William Russell, the vigorous American-Mutual star.—Bill likes to nudge himself in the ribs.

"Shackles of Truth" Mr. Russell is given greater opportunity for the display of his versatility than usual.

The plot of "Shackles of Truth" must be accepted as one of the most convincing ever devised for the screen. Its complications are thrilling to a degree because of their unusual character, yet free from such intricacies as sometimes bewilder the spectator and nullify the effect of the spectacle through over complication.

The direction of the play has been admirably handled by Mr. Sloman. There are no unnecessary ramifications in it. Every bit of action is essential to the development of the plot and there is action enough to satisfy even the most ardent advocate of something doing.

One of the most striking features of the play is Russell's brilliant acting in a part that calls for quick changes from the reposeful intellectual type to the angry young college athlete, intent on punishing treachery and resenting insult.

It would have been easy under less skillful handling to have overemphasized the fight scene which is in one sense the piece de resistance of the drama, but with a true sense of art Mr. Sloman has made the fight precisely of the proper proportion to the remainder of the play. It comes as a surprise and is tremendously effective for that reason.

Miss Francelia Billington, who supports Mr. Russell, is one of the best known young leading women in the country. She is best known on the screen for her appearances in "Heart Strings," "My Fighting Gentleman," "A Son of Battle" and "High Play."

Miss Billington's characterizations are of the young gentlewoman type. She is beautiful, appealing, sympathetic and highly popular with motion picture patrons.

Adda Gleason who plays Mary Shores became known for her good work in "Via Wireless" and later for her work in "The Rosary," "Garrison's Finish," "Voice in the Fog," and "Power of Selim Bey."

Novel Advertising Stunt

C. D. Buss, manager of the Third Street Theater, Easton, Pennsylvania, is well known as one of the foremost of real "live wire" exhibitors in the country. His latest advertising stunt helped to score one of the biggest hits in the history of his house with the presentation of the George M. Cohan-Artcraft picture, "Broadway Jones." The story of this production has to do with a chewing gum plant, and upon learning this Manager Buss got in touch with the American Chicle Company, who supplied him gratis with as many packages of gum as he could give away in his lobby. This naturally attracted continuous crowds to his theater, and in return for the courtesy he ran a slide on his screen advertising the gum. In commenting upon the Cohan film to Walter E. Greene, President of Artcraft, Manager Buss said: "The picture is 'thar.' No shootings, no horrible deaths and no drunks. A good picture that will leave a 'come again' taste in the mouths of the patrons."

"Womanhood" Draws in South

The tremendous drawing power of J. Stuart Blackton's timely spectacle, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," was again evinced when the Alcazar Theater at Birmingham, Alabama, found it necessary to extend its week's run for four additional days. At every performance it was necessary to put out the S. R. O. sign long before the time scheduled for showing, causing hundreds to be turned away, and on the eleventh day the Alcazar broke all house attendance records.

The management was desirous of protracting the run indefinitely, but owning to the fact that all the prints allotted to the Vitagraph Atlanta branch were booked solid, they could not be accommodated.

"Holmes" Spells "Danger"

Helen Holmes, the reckless, fearless "darling of the rails," whose entire career has been made up of dare devil feats, has never courted death as nonchalantly nor so heedlessly risked injuring herself for life as in "The Railroad Raiders," the serial which is now being released through mutual.

Helen Holmes in Chapter Eight of "The Railroad Raiders."

J. P. McGowan, who is directing the thriller at the Signal studios, apparently thinks Helen is immune from all danger for he sets her one task after another at which most heroic men would shudder.

There is a continuous string of sensational, spectacular scenes throughout the fifteen chapters, and the following list contains just a few of these furnished by Helen herself.

1. Knocked down and run over by an automobile.
2. Jumps from tender of engine to tonneau of auto.
3. Dives from moving auto truck over rail of a wagon bridge into the stream beneath.
4. Lies between rails while passenger coach dashes over her.
5. Leaps a twenty foot gap between a pier and the moving boat in an automobile.
6. Fights a band of Chinamen.
7. Blown up on a barge.
8. Swims for half an hour pushing the body of a man on an improvised raft before her.
9. Bound in burning freight car and rescued just before it explodes.
10. Thrown into bay with anchor tied to her feet.
11. Drives inspection car at top speed with one hand while crouching on the running board to evade bullets.
12. Imprisoned in a box car which is dumped into the water and then wrecked by a boat.
13. Rides the break beams of a train and has a hand to hand fight with a man to keep her position.
14. Head placed in coupler while cars are being coupled.
15. Dressed as man, alone invades hut of desperate gang.
16. Jumps from bridge to top of speeding car.
17. Jumps from top of one car to another running in the opposite direction.
18. Drops from bridge onto the deck of fast moving boat.

These are the stunts Helen Holmes has been performing to keep life from becoming monotonous, and the serial is not yet completed. There will probably be just as many more equally as daring executed in the remaining chapters.

"The Auction Block" Coming

With the taking of a big gambling house raid, the final studio scenes of "The Auction Block," the second production of the Rex Beach Pictures Co., were completed and there remains only a steel mill scene which will be taken in Pittsburgh within the next few days. When this has been done, Director Trimble will start at once on his task of cutting and titling the picture which will be ready for exhibitors September 1.

"The Auction Block" has a number of big sensational scenes, including an exact reproduction of the famous Ziegfield Midnight Frolic with the showing going on and the audience present. Another sensational scene is the chorus girl dinner given by a Pittsburgh millionaire which reveals New York's fastest set at their merriest.

A phase of "The Auction Block" which will cause unusual interest is that a number of characters are founded on famous Broadway figures; for instance, the theatrical manager in the picture is a thinly disguised impersonation of Flo Ziegfield while another character is modeled after the late "Diamond Jim" Brady. Another prominent character is founded on a Pittsburgh millionaire who is notorious for his Broadway escapades.

The Girl on the Cover

Here are some interesting facts about Kathleen Clifford, the Balboa star. She—

Is the newest of screen stars.

Weighs only eighty-five pounds.

Was a star headliner in vaudeville before President Horkheimer of Balboa caught her for the screen.

Is one of the cleverest male impersonators the stage ever saw.

Can sing, dance, paint, write songs, ride horseback, play golf, billiards and polo, swim, skate, do everything else and giggle.

Is the only honorary military officer in filmdom. Her work as a Red Cross nurse won her the honorary colonelcy of a Canadian Royal regiment of infantry, and she has a uniform to prove it.

Is proud of a wound received in service as a Red Cross nurse with the English army in France.

Can ride as a jockey and loves the thrill of steeplechasing.

New Lasky Scenario Head

Robert E. McAlarney, former city editor of the New York Tribune and well-known short story writer and playwright, has succeeded Hector Turnbull as head of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department. Mr. Turnbull has resigned his position as head of the giant producing organization's scenario department in order to devote himself exclusively to the writing of original photoplays and to the completion of several plays for which he has contracted.

Harry Rapf announces that Robert Warwick's next Selznick production will be "The Road to Love," from the original story by Leonce Perret, work on which was started last week. Elaine Hammerstein will again play opposite Mr. Warwick in this picture.

Unusual Wharton Feature

The Whartons—Theodore and Leopold—producers of "Patria," "The Exploits of Elaine," and a long line of serials, stepped into a new field on June 1. On that date,

"The Great White Trail," the new super feature for state rights produced by the Whartons, is both powerful and refreshing. It features Doris Kenyon.

at the Broadway Theater in New York, they gave a showing to exhibitors of their first super-feature for states rights release, "The Great White Trail."

The feature, which is in eight reels, is the work of Leopold D. Wharton, both in the writing and the direction. It tells the story of the gold rush days of the Klondike, with a foreground of New York, and a comparative dramatization of the two. It is in the cold, trackless country of the deep snows that the problems begun in the rushing life of New York are worked out.

The picture features Doris Kenyon, while supporting her are Thomas Holding, Paul Gordon, Hans Roberts, Edgar Davenport and others.

Reopening Triangle-Fine Arts

Keen interest among southern California motion picture folk has been aroused by the announcement that the Triangle-Fine Arts studio in Hollywood, soon is to be reopened on a large scale. The studio formerly employed hundreds of performers, to say nothing of a large force of mechanics, clerks and laborers, and the news that it will become active again is welcome in many quarters.

Recent additions to the Fine Arts studios at Hollywood have put that plant in excellent shape to take on a new lease of life under a new regime. A new central scene dock, 180 feet in length and 70 feet in width, has been built to house the elaborate interior settings that are to be utilized for forthcoming releases. On either side of the scene dock is a runway leading to each of the new stages, while a fleet of large baggage trucks with low wheels is employed to carry sets and properties to their destinations.

The new light studio just completed at the northern end of the property is said to be up to the minute in every particular. It is said to have the highest roof and the best facilities for overhead lighting of any building of its kind on the Pacific Coast. Some idea of its unusual construction may be gathered from the statement that there is a distance of forty-eight feet from the floor to the first roof girder. A new electric generator has also been installed, and under the guidance of efficiency engineers the entire plant has been overhauled.

Standard's Head in New York

R. C. Cropper, president of the largest independent film exchange in America, the Standard Film Corporation, accompanied by the treasurer of the concern, J. F. Warren, visited New York City last week. The object of their visit is to look over the present situation in the East.

The Standard Film Corporation is the distributor for the Art Dramas Program through Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and has just taken over, in addition to this already large field of operations, Upper Wisconsin, North Dakota, Minnesota and South Dakota. Mr. Cropper is gaining the confidence and co-operation of the best exhibitors everywhere in this gigantic territory.

It is a part of the policy of Mr. Cropper's organization to make a firm friend of every exhibitor, and it may be conservatively said, in passing, that Mr. Cropper has very probably done more than any other one man to do away with that old bug-a-boo of good-natured enmity between the distributor and the exhibitor.

The latest effort of Mr. Cropper in the interests of the exhibitor is the elimination from the contract of the Standard Film Corporation of the deposit system. There are no strings attached to Mr. Cropper's radical departure. It means, he says, that the Standard Film Corporation is trusting absolutely in the honesty and integrity of the exhibitor.

U. S. Films to Teach Gardening

Gardening instruction by moving pictures is a plan being considered by officials of the War Farms Gardening Commission.

The Federal Government favors such a plan for impressing upon every citizen the need of intensive land cultivation. By the film the subject could be covered from many angles. It has been suggested that first methods of cultivating the small backyard garden could be shown and ways of making it produce enough garden truck to provide generously for the family.

Then pictures could be shown, according to plans of the commission officials, of a pretentious farm with modern methods of farming.

"Jimmie Dale" Best Seller

The list of "best sellers" for the month, published in the May issue of The Bookman, shows "The Adventures of Jimmie Dale," by Frank L. Packard, standing first in New York; third in Houston, Texas; fourth in Louisville, Kentucky, Worcester, Massachusetts, and Boston; fifth in Rochester, New York, and Los Angeles, California; and sixth in Detroit, Michigan.

"The Adventures of Jimmie Dale" is the novelized version of the sixteen-chapter series, "The Adventures of Jimmie Dale alias the Grey Seal," which is released weekly by the Mutual Film Corporation. These two-reel featurettes are proving as popular as the novel. The combination of the film and the "best seller" affords a splendid opportunity for the exhibitor.

Mr. William Fox is soon to release his first Kiddie Feature, a picturization of one of the most widely read children's stories, and filled with that interesting appeal that will make the story actually live for the little ones.

Booking Records Broken

All existing booking records of V. L. S. E. were broken on the week ended May 19, when the branch office returns showed an excess booking of six thousand dollars more than any previous week. This is in face of the fact that V. L. S. E. now is distributing only the productions of Greater Vitagraph and has not the advantage of the combined footage of four manufacturers as was the case when the company was first organized.

The booking business now being done by V. L. S. E. is accounted for by the officials of the company by the fact that all departments of the organization are working in harmony and are pulling together. The production department is working with the advertising and publicity departments which in turn are co-operating in every way with the sales department and the branch exchanges. The most recent rule put into effect that every request received at headquarters from a branch exchange manager must take precedence over everything else has had the effect of bringing the branch exchanges very close to the fountain head.

Officials of V. L. S. E. attribute the increase in business which has been very steady for several months also to the intensive sales methods as well as to the fact that exhibitors have been assured that they will get nothing but Greater Vitagraph products at V. L. S. E. exchanges.

Two Cameras for Fairbanks

Two cameras will hereafter photograph the Douglas Fairbanks screen thrills, Harry Thorpe having been engaged to work in conjunction with Victor Fleming, who photographed the initial Fairbanks-Artcraft release, "In Again—Out Again."

Mr. Thorpe has had considerable experience as a cinematographer with some of the better known studios. He has already started cranking his camera alongside Victor Fleming's Bell and Howell photographing apparatus.

James Warrington, until recently with the Triangle-Fine Arts Studio, has been selected to look after the Fairbanks "still" pictures and, equipped with his new graflex, started work very enthusiastically. The Douglas Fairbanks photographing staff now includes Victor Fleming, his assistant Glenn McWilliams, Harry Thorpe and James Warrington.

Surprise in Chaplin's Next

Charlie Chaplin's new picture, soon to be announced, tilts the lid on cachinnation.

When Charlie meets up with the Merry Maiden in the cabaret and makes Chaplin eyes at her, there ensue simpers, smiles, smirks and grins, because it is easy to figure out, even at this early stage, that the comedian is up to his old tricks, but nobody can be prepared for what actually follows, and since it contains the elements of complete surprise as well as the grotesque of vivid contrast, Mr. Chaplin's forthcoming contribution to the gaiety of nations may be said to be a screech.

Those who are prepared to laugh moderately at the eccentricities of the Mutual's $670,000 a year funny man, proceed, instead, to hug themselves, roll about in their seats, slap each other, roar, guffaw, shout, titter, snicker, crow, chirp and cackle, according to their various dispositions, at this newest ebullition of merriment, jocosity, buffoonery, tomfoolery, mummery, pleasantry and wit of the world's funniest farceur.

Oh, well! What use are mere words? Chaplin never uses any. What really matters is that Charlie has landed an idea of essential comicality. Given that kind of an idea, the rest is jam tart for Charlot.

Big Eric Campbell, as the waiter, is a blue-bottle in the butter so far as Chaplin's plans for unrestrained joy are concerned. He is always butting in and making himself unhappy over other folks' love affairs, and as usual in his encounters with the high-priced star, he suffers severely.

Miss Edna Purviance, who sits opposite Chaplin in the restaurant when the "ragtime stuff" steals seductively through the portieres, enters into the spirit of the latest jest with amazing vigor and infectious enthusiasm.

Charlie Chaplin's new play will be worth going a hundred miles to see.

Stars on Song Covers

A means whereby the Greater Vitagraph Company will receive nation wide "fan" publicity has been effected by the news service department of the home office. They have recently reached a tentative agreement with the music publishing house of Witmark & Sons, one of the largest disseminators of popular songs in the country, whereby they are to supply Witmark's with illustrations for cover designs, with due credit given Vitagraph and the players who pose.

The illustrations require special posing and the pictures already used for covers are models in photographic art, their effectiveness being greatly enhanced by the artistic coloring which they receive before they are used as covers.

A striking example of their unusual attractiveness is the photograph which was used to illustrate a popular military air entitled "Goodby, Little Girl, Goodby," for which Corinne Griffith, the beautiful southern society belle, and Walter McGrail are the models.

The Witmark company now possesses additional illustrations from Vitagraph which are in the process of being colored and will be ready for release in about two weeks. One is a beautiful scene with Irish setting depicting Adele DeGarde as a captivating daughter of Erin going to a well. This picture will be used for a spirited Gaelic melody called "Somewhere in Ireland." The Witmark company emphatically predict that this number will score one of the greatest hits of any popular song ever placed on the market.

The other cover design was posed for by Eulalie Jensen, Harry Morey and Mary Maurice, and is a picture of intense appeal, which will be used for a rousing patriotic melody named "For Your Country Needs You Now."

Fatty Comedy Goes Fast

With the second Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "A Reckless Romeo," still but a week old, there has been reported to Paramount Pictures Corporation, by its exchanges, an increase of over 35 per cent in contracts over the first two-reeler made for Paramount by the comedian who is "worth his weight in laughs," "The Butcher Boy," which was issued one month ago. These two-reel comedies are being released by Paramount to all exhibitors on the open booking plan.

W. W. Beaudine has under production at Universal City a one-act comedy entitled "We Have the Papers."

Military Man in New Metro Play

Although young in years, Thomas J. Carrigan, who appears in support of Mabel Taliaferro in the forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Will o' the Wisp," is old in military experience.

Ten years ago, in the little town of Lapeer, Mich., he organized a company of home guards. Carrigan's father was a dealer in horses, and the young man mounted the guard and secured the services of a Civil War veteran to train them. Shortly after the guard was organized, Carrigan was made captain.

Thomas J. Carrigan, military man in new Metro play.

When the call came for men to go to Plattsburg, Mr. Carrigan offered his services. He was not accepted but hopes to be sent with the second. In the meantime he is drilling every Sunday at Governors Island.

All his life this popular actor has taken an interest in military affairs. A few years ago, when the American Legion was formed, he quickly joined it, and has been a member ever since.

Mr. Carrigan has the role of Lieutenant Neil Dacey, a dashing young Irish officer, in "The Will o' the Wisp."

"I find that the military training I have had helps me play the part of the young Irish officer with better understanding," said Mr. Carrigan.

Use Shocking Amount of Juice

Forty-two hundred dollars were spent in Greater New York during the week ending May 26 for electric signs advertising Greater Vitagraph's screen version of Bayard Veiller's drama, "Within the Law." This figure probably breaks all records for electric signs in front of theaters advertising the same attraction.

Seventy theaters in Greater New York ran "Within the Law" during the week, the run in each theater being from three days to the entire week.

For the week of May 28 the big electrical display on "Within the Law" has been transferred to the Philadelphia district, where branch manager Hebrew, with the active assistance of general manager Walter W. Irwin, has closed with more than thirty houses.

These theaters have agreed to use electric signs on which the words "Within the Law" will not be less than eighteen inches in height.

Not only is the Philadelphia territory booked practically solid on "Within the Law," but the western coast also is booked solid. The picture ran last week in Los Angeles and is continuing this week with additional runs at San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Oakland, Sacramento, Walla Walla and Spokane.

Early indications appear to verify the prediction that many more people will see the screen version of "Within the Law" than saw the legitimate stage version, when more than four million persons paid nearly three million dollars for the privilege of seeing the play.

One Hundredth Fox Feature

In sending forth "The Broadway Sport" to its thousands of motion picture exhibitors and the general public, Fox Film Corporation celebrates the release of its one hundredth photoplay feature since its adoption of the weekly release policy on September 6, 1915.

Bessie Love's Second Ince Play

Bessie Love, under the direction of Charles Miller, has begun production of her second Triangle-Ince play.

This is a story by J. G. Hawks, in which Miss Love will be seen as a poor orphan in Ireland who, after many romantic misadventures, comes into her own.

The many quaint characters in the production will be played by a large supporting company including Frank Borzage, Charles K. French, Walter Perkins, William Jeffers, Walt Whitman, Aggie Herring and Alfred Hollingsworth. The action calls for many beautiful exterior "settings" with true Irish atmosphere.

The first Ince production starring Bessie Love, lately made at the Culver City studios and soon to be released on the Triangle program, is a story of the circus. In taking the scenes for this play, Miss Love and her supporting company traveled for some time with the Cole Brothers' Circus, securing some very genuine Big Top color. The title of the first play is "The Sawdust Ring."

It's a Lovely little scene, nicht wahr? And we don't need to tell you her name.

"Freckles"

Lasky-Paramount Feature, Five Reels. Released May 26. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz.

LOUISE HUFF and Jack Pickford are co-starred in this picturization of "Freckles," the famous novel written by Gene Stratton Porter. "Freckles" received much popularity as a novel and also when it was dramatized and played on the stage.

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in "Freckles."

As a screen version it will prove as great a success. It is a wonderful production and one of the best the Paramount program has carried. This feature will be a great favorite among amusement seekers.

The scenes were filmed in the lumber camp district of California, where many picturesque out-door settings were obtained. Jack Pickford is well fitted for the role of Freckles, which he plays in a capable manner. Louise Huff is excellent in the characterization of Angel. The other prominent players are Robert Bosworth, Lillian Leighton, Billy Elmer and Guy Oliver. The novel was put into scenario form by Marian Fairfax. Marshall Neilan deserves much credit for his splendid direction of the picture.

Freckles, a little one-armed waif, is the butt of all jokes at an orphanage. Finally his splendid spirit rebels and he runs away. Faint with hunger, he reaches the lumber camp of John McLean. Liking the manner of the boy, McLean appoints him watchman of the Limberlost, a valuable timber swamp. There he meets the "Angel" and her guardian, the "Bird Woman."

Black Jack, foreman for McLean, while attempting to steal some of the timber, is discovered by Freckles. Fearing that he will warn his employer, they bind the boy and throw him into the swamp. The Bird Woman finds and rescues him. In the meantime Angel rides to the camp to warn McLean, who returns with a party of men and captures the timber pirates.

Later, returning to the camp, Freckles protects Angel from a falling tree. This act of heroism almost proves fatal to him. The news that he has been left heir to a large fortune in England by his grandfather, and now knowing that he is not a nameless waif, helps fight his wavering spirit back to life. The love of Angel brings added happiness to him.

"A Brass Monkey"

Hoyt-Selig Comedy Released Through K. E. S. E. June 11. Reviewed by Lapearl Waggoner

YOU can laugh out loud during the screening of parts of "The Brass Monkey" and you can sit and figure up your income from a Liberty Loan bond during the screening of others.

Several amusing situations bring smiles, but why there must be yards and yards of chasing and tumbling in every comedy film, must be one of the secrets of the trade. The story has a droll start when the last will and testament of Patch Work is read and the brass monkey, from India, with its attendant bad luck, is left to Jonah Judd. After that it is much like other comedies we have seen, and those who like the average will like this one.

The Story: Uncle's most precious possession is a brass monkey and this he wills to Jonah Judd. Genevieve is Jonah's daughter and Birdie is his divorced wife. Birdie believes in collecting the alimony when it is due and her "little brother" assists her. This action is just one of many occasioned by the brass monkey, the possession of which means misfortune. Jonah falls down a stairway, is hit by a telephone pole and has a series of exciting episodes with Genevieve before Big Bill comes to collect his sister's alimony. Bill encounters a fierce canine. I. Dodge Work, who did not benefit by the will, garbs himself in a bear skin at the auction sale and they believe the bear to be alive one. Jonah gives chase with a revolver and the end of a perfect day comes when Jonah and the bear emerge from the plaster and debris of an explosion.

"Shackles of Truth"

William Russell in American-Mutual Feature of June 4. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE is usually something very convincing and logical about pictures directed by Edward Sloman. This element gives force and dignity to the situations and greatly increases the interest in the plot. This story is no exception and it will hold the close attention of any audience to the last scene, and this in spite of the fact that the outcome is apparent, which is a tribute to the acting and directing.

Mr. Sloman is aided in having a very capable cast of players. The acting is convincing and of a high order throughout. William Russell in the leading role does very good work, but every member of the cast is given plenty of opportunity, with favorable results. This includes the baby, who plays an important part. All of the characters are sympathetic, with the exception of the conventional villain, played in a fitting manner by Alfred Vosburgh.

One of the biggest acting parts falls to Adda Gleason, who will be remembered for her work in "Ramona." Miss Gleason plays Mary Shores, a girl wronged by the hero's father. George Ahern as Tom Shores is excellent and Lucille Ward as the hero's mother adds another to her list of creditable character portrayals. Francelia Billington, as usual, plays opposite Russell. Frederick Vroom plays the role of the governor.

The photography is good, the settings, mostly interiors, fitting. The story was written by Julius Grinnell Furthmann. The plot is unusual and interesting.

The Story: Gerard Hale (Russell) and Luther Snaith (Vosburgh) are members of the same law firm and both candidates for appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the senate. Influenced by his daughter, Marion (Francelia Billington), who loves Hale, the governor decides to appoint Hale for the position.

Gerard agrees to provide for the girl and her baby.

Just at this time, Tom Shores, released from the penitentiary, returns home to find that his sister has been deserted by the father of her baby. He is led to believe that Gerard Hale is the man in the case and goes to the young lawyer to demand that he make good the wrong done by marrying the girl. Then the truth is revealed, that Gerard's father, dead for more than a year, had been leading a double life. Gerard agrees to provide for the girl and her child but wishes to keep their existence a secret from his invalid mother.

Snaith, the jealous partner, learns of the affair and manages to get a number of letters incriminating the elder Hale. He uses these to discredit Gerard in the eyes of the governor and his daughter. Gerard refuses to tell the true story and agrees to give up his career and the girl he loves and to marry Mary Shores, all in order that his mother may never learn that her husband had been unfaithful. But Mrs. Hale dies before the sacrifice is made and Gerard is free to prove his innocence.

"The Serpent's Tooth"

Gail Kane in American-Mutual Release of May 28. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS story begins with a marriage in haste for which the contracting parties repent through five reels of pictures. The plot is of a melodramatic character with opportunity for heavy emotional acting. It is an intense, tragic story and will appeal to audiences with a taste for highly sensational society plays. Gail Kane's name is of value in advertising, and her role in this play is sympathetic and gives her opportunity for a diversity of expression and mood. William Conklin as James Winthrop, her husband, has a very heavy role, while Edward Peil as the hero, Jack Stilling, will be well liked. The story holds the interest, though it is not always convincing.

Rollin Sturgeon directed the play from a story by Forrest Halsey, put into scenario form by Doris Schroeder. It has been handled in a capable fashion throughout. The action is swift but always clear and the emphasis well placed. The photography is excellent, the lighting effects always good, and the portrayal of the storm scenes especially fine. The acting of the supporting cast is good. Included are Jane Pascal, Frederick Vroom, Mary Lee Wise, Al Vosburgh and Charles P. Kellogg. The titling of the picture is pleasing.

The Story: Faith Channing, a girl who has grown up in the sedate atmosphere of a New England village, marries James Winthrop, an artist who owns a large part of the village. Jack Stilling, a young physician, loves Faith but his poverty prevents him from declaring his affection. Winthrop interests a number of his artistic friends in the village and sells them homes there. As a result, the Winthrops became rich and the village is the home of a "smart set." Winthrop is drawn into their life of dissipation and since this sort of thing does not appeal to Faith, she and her husband drift apart. Winthrop becomes infatuated with a widow who plans to disrupt his home and marry him herself.

Faith, after the birth of her baby, which dies, is very ill and Dr. Stilling gives her a tonic containing a drug. Winthrop learns of this and after quarreling with the doctor, tricks Faith into continuing the use of the drug, knowing that if his wife becomes addicted to the drug, he may win a divorce and marry the other woman. Faith's nature is changed and she becomes a member of the Bohemian crowd. But Winthrop's destruction is swifter and his dissipations, combined with the "serpent's tooth" of conscience at his crime against his wife, drive him insane. After several wild scenes in which Faith herself is nearly driven mad, Winthrop dies. Faith then turns to Dr. Stilling, determined to conquer the habit she innocently acquired and to rebuild her life.

"Redemption"

Evelyn Nesbit and Russell Thaw Feature in Society Drama. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS film is bound to fill theaters on the strength of the names of its featured players, Evelyn Nesbit, former wife of Harry Thaw, and her son, Russell Thaw. From coast to coast they are known and the mere mention of the names will undoubtedly be enough to bring a curious crowd. As far as giving the spectator a chance to become thoroughly acquainted with these characters is concerned, the picture fulfils its mission and it will get the money. The story shows some interesting developments. The star, Evelyn Nesbit, is not remarkable, but does well with several individual scenes, and it must be admitted that she makes an appealing figure on the screen. The effect of her personality grows upon one as the picture advances. Little Russell Thaw is interesting.

The story tells about a happy family whose serenity is disturbed by a man who has formerly had dealings with the wife and is now trying to get her again into his power. The wife confides all to her husband; he teaches the would-be breaker of his home a lesson and loses his job because his boss depends upon the culprit for business. Next comes the dreary search for work, the husband's illness and at last his death. The heroine becomes prosperous through the succeeding years and sends her boy to college. He meets the daughter of the would-be home breaker and falls in love with her. However, when the boy's identity is finally learned the father compels his daughter to sever all relations with her lover. The man who has caused the heroine so much suffering actually dares to regard her as an immoral woman not fit for his family's society when he was the very instrument of her first straying from the straight and narrow way. But, through a brave rescue, the heroine's son proves he is worthy of his sweetheart, and the self-righteous father of the latter is finally brought low.

Up to the time of the young husband's losing his job, the film, that is, its story, is rather interesting, but from this time on, to the final climax, it is our opinion that most any audience will find itself losing its first interest, and also find the picture a hard one to watch because of the weak story and poor construction.

For evident reasons this is a money-getter.

In line with their policy of dealing with experienced showmen, the Williamson Brothers, producers of "The Submarine Eye," announce that they have sold the New Jersey rights of their under-water drama to the J. Frank Hatch Film Company of 284 Market street, Newark.

"Money Madness"

A Butterfly Play with Thrill and Suspense. Released May 28. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MARY MacLAREN is featured in this picture, which is a screen version of a detective story by Frank H. Spearman. It has all the swift action and excitement typical of the Spearman stories. Its plot deals with a bank scandal in which one of the directors robs his own bank to meet his gambling debts.

A thrilling race is a feature of the picture.

The picture is a good one. The acting is fine, and Miss MacLaren is charming as the heroine. The photography is beautiful. The characteristic element in the play is its thrill and the closing automobile race and wreck is excellently handled. The offering is a good one for any theater and will be enjoyed by all. It can be advertised as a play of action and danger, and lives up well to the promise.

The cast of players includes Don Bailey, Alfred Vosburg, M. Everett, Eddie Polo and Charles H. Mailes, and Rex de Roselli. The picture is directed by H. McRae from a scenario by William Parker.

The Story: Mary MacLaren is the daughter of a bank president. The bank threatens to fail and the president uses his private fortune to save it. Simmons, the vice-president, is the villian in the case. Tom Williams, who is in love with the president's daughter, urges his uncle, "Whispering" Smith, a detective, to investigate the case. He does and the detection of Simmons' thievery and the capturing of the rogues forms the later part of the story.

"The Soul Master"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in Five Parts. Released May 28. Reviewed by George W. Graves

HOWEVER entertaining James Oliver Curwood's story may have been as a novel it hardly makes clean cut, zestful entertainment on the screen, which version has the effect of being a rambling story not registering any big scenes or having sufficient action. It is a case of material for shorter reelage being stretched.

The story introduces at first Travers, a man whose faith in women is blasted because his wife runs away with another man, and proceeds to tell in an indirect way how his faith in womankind is gradually restored through the wholesome virtues of a girl who works in his office. The latter's whole-souled devotion to her sweetheart makes a big impression on the callous-souled merchant. In the last reel the girl comes dangerously near being betrayed by a good-for-nothing fop, but is rescued in time by both her sweetheart and Travers. At last the discovery is made that the girl is Travers' daughter.

The picture gives the impression of having too many characters who are not vitally concerned, as well as too much superfluous action on the side which hinders the advancement of the story proper, although this action is mildly entertaining. The acting throughout, however, is entirely up to standard, as is the direction. Earle Williams will find favor as the "man without a soul." The rendition is dignified, polished and likeable. Katherine Lewis, portraying the role of the office worker, brings to that role the daintiness and wholesomeness requisite. Don Cameron, as her lover, and Julia Swayne Gordon account for the rest of the good acting.

"Bringing Home Father"

Bluebird Comedy Drama, with Franklyn Farnum, Released June 4. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is an ordinarily pleasing comedy drama of the polite kind. There is a touch of real satire mixed in with the more obvious humor, and the result should appeal to audiences of varying quality. Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon play the leads pleasingly and Florence Mayon and Arthur Hoyt as Mrs.

Peter agrees to fix things up.

Swazey and her downtrodden husband, contribute good character playing.

The plot seems rather thin for five reels and consequently the action is not as brisk as it should be in a comedy of this sort. It drags occasionally, and the humor is not very spontaneous. However, it is a good program number, and while it will not win unusual enthusiasm, it will entertain most picture patrons seeking amusement. Technical details measure up to the Bluebird standard.

The Story: Mrs. Swazey is a candidate for alderman on the prohibition ticket. Peter Drake falls in love with Jackie Swazey, and to gain the good wishes of her mother, who is boss of the household, he aids "the cause," even marching in a prohibition parade. Secretly he is in sympathy with "Pa" Swazey and he plots to discredit her with her party without gaining her enmity. How he does this forms the basis of much of the story and includes many thrilling events. In the end, Mrs. Swazey gives up her political ambitions and Peter marries the daughter.

Trade Papers Bring Results

Nat I. Brown, general manager of Paralta Plays, Inc., states that the advertising in trade papers done by this company has brought phenomenal results. It has been so actually swamped with requests for literature in reference to the Paralta plan of distribution and letters from exhibitors that it has been found impossible to respond to them in detail up to this time. It was not anticipated when this company began its advertising campaign the second week in April that in less than six weeks it would receive responses to its advertisements from over one-third of the entire number of moving picture theaters in America. The Paralta corporation was not prepared for such manifestation of interest, and for this reason many exhibitors have not yet received answers to their inquiries. Answers and literature will be sent to all correspondents as soon as it is physically possible to forward them.

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta Plays, Inc., who is supervising the organization of J. Warren Kerrigan's staff, has engaged D. J. Jennings as cameraman for this popular star. Mr. Jennings is reputed to rank among the experts.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

TWO nights a week are being devoted by the feminine members of the Lasky organization at Hollywood to the study of Red Cross work. The Lasky company is paying the costs of tuition for the students and the details of the work are being handled by Mrs. Cecil B. and Mrs. William C. De Mille. There are one hundred taking the home nursing course and fifty who are studying first aid.

Lou-Tellegen, Geraldine Farrar's husband, who lately gave up acting to direct photoplays, has begun work on his second Lasky production, with Kathlyn Williams and Wallace Reid as co-stars. Tully Marshall, the distinguished character actor, is another member of the cast.

Donald Crisp, who directs George Beban, has resigned himself to the task of learning Italian, firmly convinced that he is doomed to direct most of the Italian colony of California during the course of his administration of this star's Morosco productions. Mr. Beban has specialized in Italian characterizations and they so frequently necessitate the employment of real sons of sunny Italy that it behooves the director to learn to talk with his hands and feet after the manner of the spaghetti garglers.

William Russell has turned author. He wrote the story of his next feature play, which followed "Shackles of Truth." While it answers the "society stuff" request from the Mutual film headquarters, yet it has in it a tremendous prize-fight scene. The greater part of the story is founded on incidents in the life of Mr. Russell during the several years he held the eastern championship as gentleman boxer.

Kathlyn Williams is another photoplayer who is also a writer. She has just completed a story for George Beban, who enthusiastically declares that it will be his best screen picture.

Vola Vale is winning fame in two arts, and one of them is cooking. Vola's tea-biscuits are bringing a considerable portion of the world to her door Sunday afternoons at tea time. Vola is just learning to cook and is succeeding far beyond her hopes in biscuit-making. Within the hospitable portals of Miss Vale's ocean bungalow at Long Beach, hot biscuits, tea, strawberry jam and Vola form a five-o'clock combination difficult to be resisted. Thus the Sunday tea-hour finds many notable screen folks gathered there.

Do you remember the lovable "Billy" in the World Film Company's "Trilby," which featured Clara Kimball Young? Chester Barnett, who played "Billy," has the leading male role in "The Submarine Eye," the Williamson Brothers' new sub-sea picture.

Bessie Love, while working in San Francisco with a circus for scenes in her next picture, was required by the script which Director Paul Powell consulted, to ride a "snow-white" horse, in her circus scenes. There was no such variety of animal to be had, the circus management declared. Bessie decided to find one for herself. Venturing into the circus corral she pointed out a strange looking animal that once, maybe, was "snow white." "But that, my dear Miss Love," expostulated the circus manager, "has been bought by us for lion meat." Bessie decided that a bath and some food would put the horse into condition, so her wishes were followed. As the result, the Thomas H. Ince Company has purchased the horse for Bessie and it made the return trip to the Culver City studios with Miss Love and company. At present it is in pasture at Inceville, and Bessie has faith that some day it will be a real horse.

William Russell's divided interests are causing him much consternation these days. If it rains, picture-making is suspended—therfore Mr. Russell is worried. If it does not rain, a large bean crop on Mr. Russell's ranch near Fresno is in danger of being lost—and surely this is cause for Mr. Russell to worry again. And when it is dark and cloudy, with neither rain or sun in prospect, the plot thickens and Mr. Russell is worried both ways.

Marie Cahill, the noted stage comedienne now playing in Mutual comedies, has proved her patriotism by offering to the government her dearest treasure, a motor boat that can travel forty miles an hour. She has offered it as a submarine chaser.

Sidney Drew's son, S. Rankin Drew, recently sailed to Europe as a member of an ambulance corps which will see service on the western front. Rankin Drew recently directed and played the leading part in Metro's "The Belle of the Season."

Marjorie Rambeau is honored by having one of her golf scores tacked up on the wall of a country club of Lang Island.

To acquire the Juliette Day walk and the Juliette Day mannerisms is the ambition of the younger set of New York.

Helen Holmes (Mutual-Signal) is daily receiving parcel post packages of fresh vegetables from her ranch.

Charlie Chaplin is a vegetarian and his favorable vegetable is pie plant.

Billie Rhodes (Mutual) has her golf sticks made to order because the ready-made ones are all too long.

Eric Campbell is trying to economize on his eating and now only takes half a dozen fried eggs, three chops and two cups of coffee for breakfast.

Arthur Shirley, leading man for Jackie Saunders in Mutual features, started in pictures with the Australian Film Company, appearing in five-reel features. He came to America and appeared in Kalem pictures before joining the Horkheimer organization.

Viola Dana has purchased a large quantity of New Hampshire maple sugar to send to soldiers in the trenches. "I understand sugar is very difficult for them to get," says Miss Dana, "so I am sure they will appreciate the maple sugar, which is the nicest kind of sugar there is." A number of motion picture actresses and society women are following Miss Dana's example.

Though appearing in great New York successes on the speaking stage, Metro stars do not lose their interest in motion pictures. Emily Stevens, who is starring in John Galsworthy's play, "The Fugitive," and Lionel Barrymore, one of the celebrated featured players in Du Maurier's "Peter Ibbetson," were recent visitors at the Metro-Rolfe studios, watching the work before the camera of Ethel Barrymore, Viola Dana, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, and other Metro stars.

Lois Zellner, who counts "The Innocent Lie" and "The Little Brother" among her successful photoplays, is now a member of the Triangle scenario staff.

Myrtle Stedman, having fully recovered, is at work once more at the Morosco studio. She is being co-starred with House Peters.

I gotta love for Mary Pick,
I love dat Chaplin, too—
I no can go see both o' dem,
So w'at I gonna do?

Oh, Mary, ees so pretta girl,
She's gotta hair so black an' curl,
An' teeth so white lak anytheeng—
I bat she gotta voice to seeng!
An' w'en she starta sob an' cry,
I feel jus' lak I gona die!

But Chaplin he's no gotta weep;
He's maka laugh—an' den he's keep
You laughin' till you no can speak,
An' tears, dey rolla down your cheek.
You oughta see him fall down stair,
I tal you w'at, you're glad you're dere!

I gotta love for Charlie Chap'
An' Mary Pickford, too—
I only gotta wanna dime,
So, w'at I gonna do?

WHERE IS THE ELEPHANT HOUSE?

Nadia Gary, with her blonde curls, cherubic smile and three and a half years, will make her screen debut in support of Marjorie Rambeau in "The Debt," the third of the series of Marjorie Rambeau feature pictures for Mutual, being produced by Frank Powell.

The first scene to which Nadia was introduced represented a street in a village across the water. There were houses with funny gabled roofs and odd looking doorways, and there were some sheep, and a goat and a donkey walking around.

Nadia, whose knowledge of motion pictures in the making is nil, and whose familiarity with the Bronx zoo is great, looked the scene over carefully and then approached Mr. Powell, "Please sir," she said, "where's the elephant house?"

And Mr. Powell decided it was time for luncheon.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Mutual Pictures

The Serpent's Tooth—(FIVE REELS)—AMERICAN—MAY 28.—Gail Kane is featured in an emotional drama, directed by Rollin Sturgeon. Reviewed in this issue.

Shackles of Truth—(FIVE REELS)—AMERICAN—JUNE 4.—William Russell is featured in a very interesting picture, made under Edward Sloman's direction. Reviewed in this issue.

A Rogue's Defeat — No. 11 of Jimmie Dale Series — (TWO REELS) — MONMOUTH-MUTUAL—JUNE 1.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. The Tocsin warns Jimmie Dale that a scoundrel, Markel, is forcing Henry Wilbur to meet a demand note for $50,000 or forfeit his rights to some very valuable mining property. Markel has given his wife a very expensive diamond necklace, which is really paste. The Grey Seal visits Markel, takes the necklace and also the demand note, which he returns to Wilbur just in time to save him from suicide. He makes Wilbur promise to pay Markel the money as soon as possible. When it is paid the Grey Seal will return the necklace to Markel. Markel promises to keep quiet to save himself the humiliation of having it advertised that the jewels are paste.

The Flight that Failed—(TWO REELS)—LA SALLE-MUTUAL—JUNE 4.—Madge, an heiress, is sent to Mrs. Gibson-Brown's Retreat for Young Ladies to escape the lures of a certain Dark Man. They will not be parted, however, and decide to elope. As Madge appears on the balcony in boy's clothes, she is seen by Chief of Police Otto, who takes her for a burglar and arrests her. The youth attracts him and he takes her to his home instead of the jail. At the bachelor abode of Chief Otto complications arise and after a strenuous half-hour the heiress faints and the Chief discovers that she is a girl. The Dark Man is later arrested and brought to the Chief's house, where the maid recognizes him as her husband. Madge, her romance spoiled, discovers in Chief Otto her childhood sweetheart and all ends happily.

A Leap for Life—(TWO REELS)—SIGNAL-MUTUAL—JUNE 4.—Featuring Helen Holmes. No. 9 of Railroad Raiders Series. Helen Holmes discovers a plot by the raiders to rob a certain express freight car which contains an especially valuable consignment of goods. The car is on the ferry slip ready to cross the bay, when the raiders, with a steam barge, unload the coveted freight and make off with it. Helen is driving an automobile at top speed, but arrives too late to catch it. She leaps the gap in the machine and lands safely on the deck. The raiders have placed a timed bomb on the boat, and seeing Helen and Roy Wilson on the barge, they shoot Roy, wounding him just before the explosion. Helen ties his unconscious form on a raft and pushing it before her, swimming with one hand, manages to reach the shore. The raiders, seeing the explosion, believe Helen Holmes to be finally disposed of.

A Two-Cylinder Courtship—(ONE REEL)—JUNE 6.—Featuring Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco. Jay and Billie cannot overcome father's objections, so they elope in Jay's two-cylinder car. Before they start Jay empties almost all the gasoline from dad's car, and as the chase becomes lively father is stalled. Father telephones Lawyer Jones, who disguises himself as a minister. They are invited upstairs for the ceremony and are locked in a room. They make a rope of blankets and are about to escape when father rushes in. They hide, and while he is trying to discover whether they escaped by means of the rope, they run out the open door. A real minister meets them on the street, and father, in the window upstairs, is a witness to the ceremony.

There and Back—(ONE REEL)—HORSLEY-MUTUAL—JUNE 7.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry goes to sleep while driving his flivver, is arrested and fined, but having no money, the Judge holds his car for the amount. Jerry appropriates the constable's motorcycle and makes his get-away and is chased by the representatives of the law. The chase ends disastrously for Jerry, but lands him in the midst of a complicated scheme of a villain to elope with the daughter of the Judge. The villain has robbed the Judge's safe, but Jerry succeeds in foiling the villain and stopping the elopement.

Good for Evil—(TWO REELS)—No. 12 OF JIMMIE DALE SERIES — JUNE 8. — Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Marie La Salle has been in the tenement district in behalf of charity, and is trailed home by the Woman in Black. Jimmie receives word from the Tocsin to return the necklace which he stole from Goldfeather and Frost (the one black mark against him). When he enters the office he finds that someone has robbed the safe, and a letter, dropped by the thief, discloses his identity. Jimmie investigates at the address given, and finds that the young man stole to provide for his sick wife and baby. Jimmie tells him to return the money and gives him his own pocket money. He passes the home of Marie on his way home and discovers the Pretender, the Woman in Black and a crook plotting to kidnap Marie. Jimmie calls the police and there is a struggle. Jimmie is forced to let the Pretender go in order to save his own neck. The crook states that the Grey Seal was there, but this is denied by Marie. Carruthers, newspaper editor, calls Jimmie on the phone to exclaim, "The Gray Seal is at it again!"

Universal Program

The Scrapper—(TWO REELS)—BISON—JUNE 9.—With Jack Ford and Louis Granville. Helen Dawson, a schoolteacher, rejects Buck Logan's offer of marriage and returns to the city. In the city Helen finds it difficult to make both ends meet. Jerry Martin, a parasite, is attracted by the appearance of Helen. He and Martha Mayes, proprietress of a questionable establishment, plan to use Helen as a tool to attract a certain wealthy man. The plan works and Helen goes to the house unsuspecting anything wrong. In the meantime Buck and the boys are sent to the city with a shipment of cattle. Buck had never forgotten Helen, and hoped against hope to meet her in the city. Buck assists a girl, who has sprained her ankle, to her home. They enter the house where Helen is and Buck is just in time to rescue the girl from the advances of Colonel Stanton. A fight ensues, but the other boys come to his assistance. They then escort Buck and Helen to a train leaving for the West.

Who's Looney Now?—(TWO REELS)—NESTOR—JUNE 8.—With Eddie Lyons, Billie Rhodes and Lee Moran. Eddie and Billie have just returned from their honeymoon. An old trunk of Billie's arrives from home. In it she finds the picture of the man to whom she was engaged before she met Eddie. She hides the picture under the bureau cover, but it falls to the floor behind the bureau. When she goes to get it, it is gone and she suspects that Eddie has found it. She reads in a paper that a man went insane by finding a picture of his bride in the arms of her former sweetheart. At the office Eddie reads of a bride who went crazy on discovering letters written to her husband by another woman. He determines to hide the letters he received from an old sweetheart. He receives word that his wife has gone insane. Eddie thinks that she has found the letters. He rushes home, where each thinks the other crazed with grief. There is a great confusion, during which Eddie finds the picture and Billie finds the letters. Finally everything is explained and a scene of reconciliation follows.

Doomed—IMP—JUNE 7.—With Claire McDowell, Jack Nelson and Charles Perley. Anne is betrothed to Will, but George Allen, a cad, covets her. One night George accosts her. She screams and Will comes to her aid. There is a fierce fight between George and Will. A crowd of villagers, including Roger Murray, a curious character, watch the fight. They hear Will threaten to kill George if he ever touches Anne again. The next morning George is found dead and Will is arrested and convicted of murder. Believing that Murray is the real murderer, Anne goes to him and by pretending to love him, extracts a confession of murder for the sake of robbery from him. While Murray is getting the money she signals to two detectives. Will is freed and Murray takes his place behind the bars.

Simple Sapho — JOKER—JUNE 9. — With Gale Henry, Jack Dill and Milton Sims. Gale is a potential vampire who is lured to the city by an artist. She leaves the artist, for whom she is posing, for a poet. Later she deserts the poet for a man of wealth, who gives a masked ball for her. Jack, a country youth, is there as a shepherd. He falls for Gale. She faints and he carries her to his room. When her mask falls off he runs into the country, grabs his sweetheart and marries her at once to save himself from Gale.

A Box of Tricks — VICTOR — JUNE 5. — With Billy Mason and Marcia Moore. Billy, a waiter, poses as a foreign nobleman. Bess' mother determines to capture him for her daughter. Charles is in love with Bess and bribes one of the boys to steal Billy's hat. The boys from the city arrive and tell the guests that Billy is a waiter. Billy has quite an exciting time, but the boys manage to pull him through the window and throw him into the lake. Then Charles takes Bess in his arms.

A Burglar by Request—NESTOR—JUNE 4.—With Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts.—Ed and Edith live just across the hall from Harry and his wife. Harry gets a friend to play burglar and scare his wife, who leaves her jewelry lying around. Ed, returning home late, meets Hank, a tramp, and takes him home with him. They enter Harry's flat by mistake. Harry takes Hank for his friend in a make-up. He gives him his wife's jewelry. When the deception is discovered, Harry calls an officer. There is a chase, for the two wives have been awakened, and Hank beats it with the cop after him.

The Hunted Man—IMP—JUNE 10.—With Lee Hill and Mignon Anderson. Gilder, a clerk, is charged with embezzlement and put into jail. He escapes and returns to his home. He finds a note from his wife saying that she has gone off with another man. A detective stops him and tells him he can go free if he will reveal the hiding-place of the money. His wife returns and tells him that it was all a trick. Word reaches them that the money has been found and with it the president of the bank, who had used Gilder as his tool. Gilder tells the State all he knows and is freed.

Superstitious China—(SPLIT REEL)—POWERS—JUNE 10.—With Dr. Dorsey. Nearly all merchandise in China is carried by water, as there are few other highways. The interior commercial capital of the province of Sechuan, called Chuugking, is set upon high ground, overlooking two rivers. We see the gates of the city, and then the public laundries, where the Chinese use the primitive method of beating the clothes against the rocks. We see a public lamentation over death. The Chinese not only mourn their dead, but worship their spirits. They believe that everything in nature, whether animate or inanimate, possesses a soul. Therefore they burn quantities of paper money on the day called "Feast of All Souls," so that the souls of the dead may be supplied with the soul of the money. On the same reel is:

Them Were the Happy Days—The old man goes to sleep and dreams that he is a boy again. He finds a vacuum cleaner and plays with it. Everyone who comes near him is sucked into it, including his darky nurse. After many other adventures, he awakes to regret his lost youth. On the same reel with "Superstitious China."

Universal Screen Magazine—ISSUE NO. 22.—JUNE 8.—The reel starts with a demonstration of the new farm tractors which perform more work in an hour than the old types in a day. A new invention is a telephone recorder, for taking down accurately all calls received during the absence of the subscriber. Preparedness is touched upon by views of the making of enormous pieces of ordnance in the gunshops of Uncle Sam. The reel closes with a miracle in mud, by Willie Hopkins, the Screen Magazine's animated sculpture artist, called "Don't Be a Food Hog."

The Missing Wallet—LAEMMLE—JUNE 6.—Edwin August and Jeannie McPherson. Jerry Marvin is in love with Lucy, whose father is the owner of all the fishing smacks. The captain, however, favors the suit of Arthur Granby, his foreman, and warns Jerry to keep away from his daughter. On pay-day the captain sends Jerry after his coat with his wallet in it. Jerry delays to talk with the village fool, and when he returns with the coat the wallet cannot be found. Jerry is suspected and Lucy is the only one that believes in him. He determines to leave the village, but the fool returns the wallet and the captain apologizes.

The Almost Good Man—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—JUNE 5.—Harry Carey, Al. McQuarrie and Claire Du Brey. Dick and Willis hold up the stage, but find that the large sum of money has not been shipped. The only passenger is Kitty, who is much impressed by Dick, and says that he seems to be an almost good man instead of a bad man. Many exciting events occur, in which Dick is accused of the murder of Kitty's father. Norton, a gambler, effects his escape. Believing that Kitty loves Dick, Norton is about to leave when she suddenly throws her arms about him. Dick realizes that he has lost and rides away into the night.

Tacky Sue's Romance—(TWO REELS)—REX—JUNE 7.—With Ruth Stonehouse and Chester Bennett. "Tacky Sue," as she was called by the other girls, was the sole support of her two sisters. Out on a picnic with the tots one day, she meets Dick Calhown, the son of her employer. They proceed to fall in love with each other, but she feels that his feelings for her are caused from pity. Dick tells his father his love for Sue and her obstinacy in the matter. Sue, however, finally surrenders and she and Dick are very happy, as are also the two children.

Dry Goods and Damp Deeds—(Two Reels)—June 6.—With Lucille Hutton and Phil Dunham. Phil arrives in the town and goes in search of an adventure. He goes into a department store, where he tries to make love to a pretty girl. He gives away the goods and a policeman is called. After several exciting events he finds Lucille in the sewing-room and plays her a serenade on the sleeve-board. The proprietor enters and knocks Phil down and then carries the girl into the cellar. Finally Phil makes his way into the flooded cellar and finds himself with Lucille at last.

General Program

Selig World Library No. 3—May 30.—People Little Known—the Ainos, first inhabitants of Japan after the cave dwellers. Live in Peace—The Ainos live in peace with their neighbors and exist by hunting and fishing. American Ruins—The Alamo, famous in history of Texas; San Juan Mission—mission built in 1716, in bad state of preservation. Locations Seen in Famous Paintings—Amalfi, Italy, terraced city, set crescent-wise on the Gulf of Salerno; the Matterhorn, the most photographed mountain in the world from two points of view.

The Return of Soapweed Scotty—(Two Reels)—Selig—Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley starring. "Soapweed Scotty" is a cowboy employed by Pete Bronson, the ranch foreman. Scotty loves Alice West, the sheriff's sister, and so does Pete. Scotty is made to appear an outlaw through the plotting of Bronson and Sheriff West leads the posse to capture him. Alice rides forth to warn him of his danger because he once saved her younger brother. Pete is detailed by the sheriff to cut off Scotty's retreat. In the exchange of shots Bronson is accidentally struck by a bullet from the posse's guns. Alice finds the dying man, who confesses to her that he had planned Scotty's downfall. Thus it is that the girl, who loves Scotty, is instrumental in proving his innocence.

Triangle

Wolf Lowry—(Five Reels)—Triangle-Ince—May ..—Featuring Wm. S. Hart. In this story the theme of a hardened, bad-man character being softened by the sweet nature of a girl who comes into his life is given an individual and interesting treatment. The former young lover of the heroine, whom she believes has been killed, shows up, and as a result "Wolf Lowry" is deserted and left without consolation. However, this is of his own choosing, as he willingly makes this supreme sacrifice after a big struggle with himself. Reviewed in this issue.

Artcraft

Wild and Woolly—Artcraft.—Starring Douglas Fairbanks. Jeff Hillington, the son of a rich man, of metropolitan birth and education, has read dime novels all his life. His imagination pictures the great West as peopled with cowboys, Indians and road agents. He pictures the West of today as it was in the '80s.

A committee from Bitter Creek, Arizona, call upon his dad to induce him to build a railroad to connect the town with the borax mines. Dad sends Jeff out to investigate the proposition. Before they leave the committee learn the ideas of Jeff and arrange a program of scenes of the West as it once was.

Steve Shelby, the Indian agent, learns of this and decides to take advantage of the occasion to turn one more crooked trick and then cross the border into Mexico. Jeff arrives and falls in love with Nell Larrabee, with whom Shelby is also in love. When Shelby uses the pseudo stage robbery for a real holdup and tries to kidnap Nell, Jeff rescues her, spoils the plans of Shelby and becomes the hero of the hour.

Should She Obey?—State Rights Production—A problem picture with an argument against the divorce evil. Reviewed in next issue.

Butterfly

Money Madness—(Five Reels)—Universal—May 28.—Mary McLaren is featured in a swiftly moving story with a number of thrills. Reviewed in this issue.

The Circus of Life—(Five Reels)—Butterfly—June 4.—With Pomeroy Cannon, Elsie Jane Wilson, Harry Carter, Mignon Anderson, Emery Johnson and Zoe Ray. Dannie and Mamie were married. In the same boarding house lived Gaston Bouvais, a painter and an amateur philosopher. He jarred Mamie's happiness somewhat, telling her there was nothing awaiting her but tragedy. When he betrayed her she hated and distrusted him, especially when he said that she had fulfilled her destiny. She refused to tell Danny who the man was even after the baby girl was born. During the next five years the inmates of the boarding house drifted downstream. Mamie had finally promised to divorce Danny and marry Bouvais, believing him to be sincere. Daisy May, the daughter of Mamie, is seriously hurt. Brought to her right senses by the accident to her child, Mamie refuses to go with Bouvais. Mamie and Danny are reunited. Gaston Bouvais fulfills a tragic destiny by marrying a woman who would not stand his philosophizing.

Blue Bird

Bringing Home Father—(Five Reels)—Universal—June 4.—A comedy drama featuring Franklyn Farnum, with Brownie Vernon opposite. Reviewed in this issue.

Christie Comedies

Father Was Right—(One Reel)—May 28.—Featuring Neal Burns. Neal starts out with a letter to Hazel's parents and is escorted to the station by his father. At the station he is "braced" by a tramp, Upall Knight. Neal refuses his plea, but his father points out that circumstances over which he has no control may have placed the tramp where he is. Neal is unconvinced. Neal oversleeps in the Pullman and leaves his wallet and watch. Upall rides the trucks on the same train. The taxi driver keeps his bag and the hotels refuse him shelter. Finally he goes to the Hope St. Shelter, where Hazel sees him and feels sorry for him. She takes him home and gives him a job in the kitchen. Father has followed him, meanwhile, and when the chef chases Neal into the drawing room it is into his father's arms that he lands. Neal now thinks his father was right, and to prove it gives Upall some bills, after the tramp has been brought in by the chef.

K. E. S. E.

The Tell-Tale Step—(Five Reels)—Edison—May 28.—Featuring Shirley Mason. Reviewed in this issue.

The Mystery of No. 47—Selig—(Five Reels)—June 4. Starring Ralph Herz. Mr. Irwin Molyneux is a collector of china, and under the nom de plume of Felix Chapel writes for the penny weeklies. His wife comes to him with the news that the Bishop of Bedford will dine with them on the day that Eva, the maid, has her day out. Eva refuses to change her afternoon off because she has an appointment with Lord Francis Phillamore, who does not know of her station. The cook also quits and Mrs. Molyneux cooks the dinner, Mr. Molyneux explaining to the bishop that his wife has been called to the country. Between the confusion of Lord Francis in regard to Eva, and the bishop in regard to Mrs. Molyneux, complication after complication makes good reading in the London papers. Mr. Molyneux is charged with wife murder but cannot be found. Lord Francis finally solves the mystery, and when Mr. Molyneux has been proved innocent, Mr. and Mrs. Molyneux, with Lord Francis and Eva, enjoy a little luncheon.

A Brass Monkey—(Two Reels)—Selig—June 11.—A Jonah in the form of a brass monkey from India brings bad luck to all within its sight. Reviewed in this issue.

Paramount

Bungalowing—Klever Komedy—(One Reel)—June 4.—Starring Victor Moore. Vic is discovered moving into the new bungalow, and when he has things straightened out somewhat they all go to bed for the first night in the new house. The agent said there were no mosquitos, but they are nearly eaten alive during the night. The next morning Vic rises early in order to "do his bit" by planting all the available space, but the mosquitos allow him to plant only a small space. After this he takes the children fishing in an alleged lake, but a storm comes up. He manages to get the children into the house, but the "ocean breezes" send the house around like a merry-go-round, and he cannot get on it. When he does he is all in, but the baby is delighted with his ride and he says "make it go around again, Daddy." This is too much for Vic and he nearly passes away.

Susie of the Follies—Black Diamond Comedy—May 28.—Lamb's wife is visiting her parents and he decides to renew his acquaintance with Susie of the Follies. He writes two letters, one to his wife telling of his loneliness and an endearing one making an appointment with Susie. Upon meeting her that night he discovers that he has mixed the envelopes and realizes that his wife will get the letter intended for Susie. He telegraphs her that he is dead and for her to return home at once. He now rushes to the parents' home hoping to intercept the fatal letter—only to find that it has been forwarded home. The wife, accompanied by her father and mother return home and are unable to locate Lamb's body. Father, who is somewhat of a sport himself, does not seem to worry much about Lamb. In the meantime Susie, anxious to see how things are coming out, calls at Lamb's house. She proceeds to have a merry time with father, much to the old man's consternation. Lamb comes on the scene and feigns death when wife and mother appear. Father in desperation hides Susie, and at this inopportune time the fatal letter is delivered to the wife. Lamb, in order to prevent her reading it, suddenly comes to life and to cause distraction accuses father of harboring a woman and drags Susie from her hiding place. Father is getting his when Susie with ready wit gives a plausible explanation of her presence and skillfully exchanges the troublesome letter and everybody is satisfied.

Chicago News

MAIBELLE HEIKES JUSTICE, author of many successful photoplays, is living at the Hotel Sherman for the time being. She is in the city to confer with Selig concerning the coming capital punishment picture which Selig Polyscope has produced.

Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton and Lafayette McKee have arrived in Chicago from the Selig studios, Los Angeles, to appear in scenes for "The City of Purple Dreams." Colin Campbell is directing the production.

British Manager Russell of the David Horsley Enterprises, and General Manager Norman Manning paid Motography a visit while in Chicago last week. Mr. Russell just returned from London, defying the U-boats, and tells interesting stories of the prosperity of exhibitors there.

Friends of Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, are expressing their sympathy at the death of his wife. The funeral was held from the home of Mr. Schaefer's brother, Frank G. Schaefer, and interment was made in Rosehill cemetery. Many theatrical folk attended the services.

Ralph E. Duncan, member of Company E, First Illinois Infantry, who was pulled out of Motography's editorial staff when the first troops were ordered out, spent a day's leave in Chicago last week. His company is guarding municipal property outside of the city.

W. Van Gelder, the genial and polyglotinous Dutchman whom practically every exhibitor in Chicago knows, is now a Pathe salesman, having been extracted from the Superpictures organization. "Van" was with Pathe once before, and has also been with General and other concerns said to have something to do with pictures.

E. H. Goldstein, the Irish general manager of Universal Exchange, was in Chicago for a couple of days last week conferring with local Universal officials. Manager Bowles of the Kansas City Blue Bird Exchange was also here for a day or so, as was Barny Rosenthal, manager of the Universal Exchange at St. Louis.

"Sunshine Night" at the Reel Fellows meeting on the evening of May 25 proved to be a jolly gathering. There was a lot of sunshine present and the idea of dedicating each meeting to some film company has proved to be a good one. The attractive club rooms at 207 S. Wabash avenue were well filled and the buffet luncheon and entertainment was well enjoyed as usual.

Keystone Studios Third Successful Term Will Expire in August

Several stars were circulating around Chicago last week, including Bill Hart, who appared at a number of theaters, Anita King, who had a place on the Wilson Theater bill, and Dorothy Dalton, who is visiting her parents, not to mention Dick Travers and Albert Hale.

Ben W. Beadell, well known to Essanay patrons, now handles the theaters of the loop district and the West Side as far as Ashland avenue for all K. E. S. E. productions. Ben's faculty for making friends ought to make a noticeable increase in the popularity of the pictures he represents.

Edgar Moss, who was recently added to the local Vitagraph sales forces, in his initial trip has made an auspicious beginning after covering eight towns. He has turned in many contracts for "The Scarlet Runner," "The Secret Kingdom," the Vitagraph comedies and the Paula Blackton Country Life Series.

New Amusement Firms

Eleven new amusement enterprises having an aggregate capital stock of $6,284,000 were incorporated in New York in one week, recently.

Among the new concerns is the Sonora Phonograph Sales Company, located at Oyster Bay, N. Y., with a capitalization of $6,000,000, which is formed to manage theaters, operate studios and conduct a publishing and advertising business.

The Elderfields Reservation of Flower Hill, Nassau county, N. Y., has been granted a charter by the state to engage in the theatrical and motion picture business. Its capital is $200,000.

The Metro Picture Corporation has announced that it has increased its capital stock from $400,000 to $2,600,000.

The list of new firms follows:

Pennant Motion Picture Corporation, New York City, to conduct motion picture and other theaters. Capital, $5,000. Directors, John McKeon, Edmund H. Cole and Anthony Y. Kelly, Friars Club, New York City.

Acme Producing Corporation, New York City. To provide for the production of motion picture films and operate theaters. Capital, $5,000. Directors, George A. Penney, Edward Soper and Harry S. Hechheimer, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

National Marine Motion Picture Corporation, New York City. To manufacture projectual machines and engage in a general motion picture business. Capital, $3,000. Directors, Patrick H. W. Ross, Thomas H. Simpson and G. W. Harper, Jr., 299 Madison avenue, New York City.

Super-Art Film Corporation, New York City. To produce motion picture feature films. Capital, $1,000. Directors, Jack Gorman, Morris Jashnoff and Mary Jashnoff, 218 West Forty-second street, New York City.

Anna Little, the Bewitching Little Selznick Gleamer.

Myron B. Rice, Inc., New York City. To own and manage theaters, produce and exploit plays, and stage attractions of various kinds. Capital, $15,000. Directors, Myron B. Rice, Percival Knight and Thomas F. McMahon, 138 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

John Nichols, Inc., Brooklyn, New York. To conduct theaters, shows and amusement devices. Capital, $5,000. Directors, John Nichols, Robert Gilbright and Harry Rosen, 1220 Surf avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Sonora Phonograph Sales Company, Oyster Bay, N. Y. To manage theaters, operate studios, deal in phonographs and do a publishing and advertising business. Capital, $6,000,000. Directors, Anselm M. Naascher, Moritz Moos and Bernard Moos, 103 West Eighty-eighth street, New York City.

Wallace MacDonald is one of the busiest juveniles in New York at the present time. He moved out to Flatbush in order to be near the Vitagraph studio, where he played the lead in "Vanity and Some Sables," an O. Henry release, and was then called by Edison to play the star role in "The Princess' Necklace," a Forum-Conquest picture. This has meant answering the alarm clock at 5 a. m. for the Edison studio is only as close to Flatbush as the subway, the elevated and a street car line can make it. Three weeks of this should have soured him on life, but it hasn't.

Mr. MacDonald sees the wisdom of appearing on the various programs and is willing to overlook little things like two four(?)-hour daily car rides in order to keep in touch with the exhibitors. Previous to his connection with Vitagraph, he appeared on the Paramount, Mutual and other programs.

A STAR DAY

Jackie Saunders, the Mutual-Horkheimer star, gives the following schedule of a typical working day—just to show that a motion picture actress has something to do besides smile into the camera:

"The Night Workers"

Featuring

Marguerite Clayton and Jack Gardner

The false glamour of night revealed. An exposition of the life artificial, the greater truths of its theme softened by the love of a pure girl for one of the worst disciples of the city's darkness. His gradual elevation, their triumphs together, the final burst of understanding and his return with her to the clean existence of her little town, form a story of distinctiveness from which the interest never strays.

Goldwyn Pictures

Goldwyn's Exhibitor Policy

THE POLICY of Goldwyn is one of sanity and cleanliness; of honor and dignity. It is a policy under which the Goldwyn organization and all exhibitors will meet as business men.

With this policy we feel sure all exhibitors will come to regard Goldwyn, from the start, as "the company that keeps its promises."

Goldwyn proposes to eliminate much of the red tape of the picture industry; to remove many of the sources of irritation that exhibitors have heretofore encountered.

This should make all exhibitors feel that here at last, is an organization that wishes to feel it is in actual partnership with the men who show Goldwyn Pictures to the public.

May we ask you to wait until our branch managers and other representatives in all sections of the country call on you before you decide upon any plans or contracts involving the future and the prosperity of your theatre?

9000 Exhibitors Merge

Nine thousand of the leading theater owners of the United States have merged into one concrete, constructive body.

These exhibitors have established and are still setting standards and precedents in the exhibition end of the motion picture business.

This amalgamation was a very natural issue.

Some of the biggest names in the industry are listed among its membership, such as Messrs. Sam'l Rothapfel, Harold Edel and Marcus Loew of New York; Ascher Bros., Jones, Linick & Schaefer and Alfred Hamburger of Chicago; John H. Kunsky of Detroit; Stanley Mastbaum of Philadelphia; Tom Furniss of Duluth; Frank J. Rembush of Indianapolis; Finkelstein & Ruben of Minneapolis; Clemmer of Seattle; Saxe Bros. of Milwaukee; Clune Enterprises of Los Angeles and thousands of others.

These merged exhibitors are the backbone of the industry. They represent from eighty to ninety per cent of the buying power of the exhibition end of the business.

Everyone of these 9,000 exhibitors have merged themselves into one big family of MOTOGRAPHY READERS each week.

They have each paid their annual dues of $3.00.

MOTOGRAPHY is a part of their every-day business.

OVER 9,000 EXHIBITOR CIRCULATION GUARANTEED.

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE RAISES LIMIT FOR "POOR MAN'S AMUSEMENT"

ON the theory that the moving picture house is the poor man's amusement place, the Senate Finance Committee, at its last meeting, by the slender majority of one, drew the blue pencil through the proposed war tax on picture theaters charging an admission of 25 cents or less. This action, while only tentative and liable to revision at the next meeting, at least indicates that a very much warmer and friendlier wind is blowing in senate circles than ever existed in the house committee.

Recreation for Poor Necessary

The sentiment in the committee which developed and grew stronger as the discussion continued was that the most popular diversion in the country—the picture theater—should not be burdened with a war tax. And it is thought that, though this sentiment may be changed before the final draft of the bill and the recommendation of the committee, in all probability it will stand about as it stands today.

Two lines of thought developed in the committee. Some senators insisted that all motion picture exhibitions should be taxed like every other amusement. But the majority felt that the poor man should not be robbed of the privilege to enjoy cheap amusement at a time when a tax was being levied that hit him nearly every other way he turned.

Only Three Votes to Tax Five-Centers

Only three senators voted for a motion to tax theaters charging 5 cents. Then a motion to exempt only the houses charging 10 cents and less was beaten, with only four senators voting for that project. However, when Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia made a motion to exempt from tax motion picture exhibitions charging 25 cents or less the proposal was carried by only one vote. The roll call showed the sides lined up 7 to 6.

The sentiment was strong in the committee against putting a tax on tickets sold to the lower-priced picture shows. But as the price of the proposed exemptions was raised, the feeling became more divided. Some senators insisted that all motion picture exhibitions should be taxed like every other amusement.

10 Per Cent Tax on Amusements

The rest of the proposed admission taxes on theaters or circuses, ball games and other places for which admission is charged, was left unchanged, and stands at one cent tax for each ten cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid. Under the action taken by the committee today only the motion picture theaters received favor as "poor man's" amusement. Theaters not showing films and for which charges of 25 cents and less are made are not exempt under the Smith amendment.

The House bill is expected to raise $60,000,000 from the admission tax. This will be greatly reduced if the action exempting the 25-cent film show stands, but the committee did not finally close up that section of the bill. As soon as the committee adjourned treasury experts set to work to re-draft the measure in line with the tentative decisions thus far reached.

Final Tax Not Yet Decided

Whether this action will stand is entirely problematical and it is even more difficult to contemplate what the House committee will do regarding films when the Senate measure is reported back. But the Senate will more than likely have the last word to say regarding motion pictures.

The Finance Committee is making every effort possible to expedite its work, but there is little likelihood that the bill will be ready for the upper house before another two weeks, and some members think it may even be a month.

Full reports will appear in MOTOGRAPHY as soon as they are available.

Pictures for Soldiers

The government, through the Commission on Training Camp Activities, has determined that every effort be made to surround the military training camps with wholesome, normal activities which shall make it possible for the United States to avoid some of the disastrous social results which have accompanied the congregation of large number of soldiers in the military camps of England, France, Germany and the Mexican border.

They recognize that these men are full of life and are freed from many of the restraints of the home. They have organized many activities which will occupy the leisure time of the men in training, but they recognize the great influence of the motion picture.

The motion picture entertainments within the camps have been entrusted to the Y. M. C. A., which will see that pictures are projected in the buildings constructed for the social and educational use of the soldiers. It is expected, however, that in the off-duty period the men will find their way in large numbers to the theaters in the surrounding towns.

All members of the motion picture industry are looking for definite opportunities to assist the government. Here is a distinct service some of the exhibitors of the United States may render to the boys in the training camps.

Fine, thrilling and entertaining pictures should be shown regularly in the cities and towns around the training camps and there should be a minimum of the sensational, sex, campire, triangle stuff.

Exhibitors Expelled From League

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Chicago has expelled four of its former members: Louis H. Frank, Maurice Choynski, Adolph Powell and Henry Schoenstadt.

This action proves the fact that exhibitors' organizations are fully capable of administering their affairs to the best interests of the industry and are willing to perform a little operation when it is deemed by the majority to be necessary.

Frank and Choynski in particular have been causing a good deal of agitation within the league of late. They were both in important positions in last year's convention and exposition, Frank being exposition manager. He was recently asked by the National body to resign.

Exhibitors Scrap License Raise

Chicago exhibitors, under the leadership of General Jos. E. Hopp, president of the league, have mobilized against the proposed increase in theater licenses which the city council is considering.

Seventy-five exhibitors were present at the last hearing and presented some strong arguments to the council's sub-committee. They recommend a graduated scale of licenses, to be fixed according to the seating capacity of the theater. The special committee representing the league, which is working on the matter, consists of Jos. E. Hopp, Wm. E. Heaney and Robt. Levy.

A special meeting of the Chicago exhibitors was held on Tuesday, June 5, for the sole purpose of considering the local license problem. There was a large attendance and the meeting got down to brass tacks and decided upon a definite course of recommendation to the council. This was laid before the city lawmakers at the hearing held in the City Hall the following day.

At the time of going to press, the results of the exhibitors' efforts and the final form of the new license ordinance was undetermined. Full details will be published later.

Helps Recruit Marines

A psychological moment and a psychological picture could hardly be better imagined than the release date and "The Star Spangled Banner," a three-reel Edison production dealing with a story of life in the United States Marine Corps, which will be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay, June 10.

"The Star Spangled Banner," as its title implies, has a strong patriotic touch to it, and coincident with its release date the Government is planning a tremendous recruiting drive for the Marine Corps Service.

Naval officials have seen and approved "The Star Spangled Banner."

Screenshine

By Mel

A WEEK or so ago we printed something about an argument by Chicago exhibitors over who had the handsomest ticket seller. That started a contest and yours truly has been invited to look over two rather attractive exhibits in Chicago's loop. We withhold judgment until we have seen 'em all.

The latest exhib. to be incensed over the contest is a lean and mean man who says he wouldn't have a good looking girl behind his window if she'd work for nothing. He declares "The chickens never tend to business."

What kind of an exhibit have you got in your Jewish show case? Trot 'er out into the screenshine.

WHAT DO YOU DO?

A baby in the fourth row squalled,
Then squawked and bawled a bit.
The manager was a bach-e-lor,
And simply wouldn't stand it.

In another house a kiddie cried
On the breast of a mother fan.
But the manager he only sighed—
He was a married man.

SERMON

He ran a film and lost some dough
And then he changed his program.
He lost once more and changed again,

And every time he changed he lost a little more and of course he blamed it all onto the producers. It may have been up to the pictures, but the moral is to be sure that you give them a chance to perform under the right condition.

Even Caruso and Charlotte would have some trouble drawing 'em in if they had to perform in a barn.

Sometimes it would seem a shame that pictures have nothing to say about where they are to be shown.

A minister visited a certain studio in New York a short time ago. He said he was "dumb-founded and astonished at the high moral tone and the personnel at the studio."

Ain't it hell to be pure?

Here's a new use for the blank that runs every week on the second page of Motog.'s "What the Picture Did For Me" section of freedom of speech for exhibitors. A manager near New Orleans used it last week to notify the Vitagraph exchange that he had shipped a certain film back. He then took the occasion to make a few remarks about the picture and what it did for, or to, him. The exchange man kindly forwarded the curiosity to Motog. Go to it, boys.

A casualty which sounds more like the last gasp of a frenzied press agent than like a fact, was sustained in all truth by the Yonkers Triangle studio when a new props man fainted cold the other day upon discovering a man-size dummy among the debris in the studio.

It isn't very often that funerals are fun. But we admit it would give us a fiendish pleasure to erect a stone bearing these words:

SACRED TO THE MEMORY OF

"Eugenic" films.
The theater that still looks like a store.
The promoter with nothing to promote.
The film-punching operator.
The exhibitor who hates the public.
Film padding.
Over generous press agents.
Over-enthusiastic advertising.
Published production costs.

Tell your operator to punch a hole in his ear every time he takes a punch at a film.

If you have any time next week for cogitation and good resolutions we might, as your spiritual advisor, suggest two decisions: ein, figger on taking a trip to Chicago for the biggest show on earth July 14 to 22; zwei, buy a liberty bond from that banker who bears the burden of taking care of the bales of bills and bags of silver you turn over to him every Monday morning.

Bawbs of Blue Ridge, with Bessie Barriscale (Triangle)—"This was not very satisfactory and did not draw."—M. J. Weil, Lake Shore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

Hands Up, with Wilfred Lucas (Triangle)—"A well acted picture. Many a patron passed us by on account of the title. The Chicago print has eighteen scenes cut out by the censors, making the film short. Not a box office attraction."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

God's Law and Man's, with Viola Dana (Metro)—"A good title. A good box office attraction. The star is well liked, and the story is liked by the majority of our patrons."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Babette, with Peggy Hyland (Vitagraph)—"Average business. The picture is an ordinary program picture about a French crook. Some thought it draggy and said they did not like it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Pinch Hitter, with Charles Ray (Triangle)—"Full of punch. The fifth reel makes them think they are at a ball game. A clean picture that will be enjoyed by both children and adults. Business, good. Boost it when you advertise."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

A Royal Romance, with Virginia Pearson (Fox)—"A poor title for a business getter. Picture is slow, without much action. It takes too long to get started. Could be put in two reels. Settings, photography and cast very good. Partly military in plot."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Filling His Own Shoes, with Bryant Washburn (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"This is the first number in the Castle's experiment in open booking. It is a very pleasing picture. Business on the first Sunday showing fell off on account of the warm weather, but it picked up again and is holding up well. We have Bryant Washburn appear in person each night and this proves very popular. We are not sorry for our choice of picture. It seems to please as well as any we have shown."—M. J. Weil, Castle Theater.—Downtown house.

Miss Jackie of the Navy, with Margarita Fischer (Mutual)—"This was well received by my patrons. In fact, it went so well that I have been thinking of securing it for a return showing. I myself think that it is the kind of comedy that the larger per cent of the show going public are wanting."—R. M. Morton, G. O. E. Amusement Company, Fort Madison, Iowa.

Serials

Patria, Chapter nine, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe serial)—"This serial is still drawing well and seems to please the great majority."—L. A. Schwager, Royal Theater, Ashland, Wisconsin.

Patria, Chapter one, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe serial)—"A magnificent drawing card. Delighted the most particular patrons."—Rosa A. Marquis, Lyric Theater, Clarendon, Texas.

The Railroad Raiders, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This picture is great—the best that Helen Holmes has ever taken part in. It is a big drawing card at our theater."—I. Frankel, Hippodrome Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Railroad Raiders, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This is just another good Helen Holmes serial. We have used them all and one excels the other. All have been extra good box office attractions. We heartily recommend this serial to all exhibitors."—J. Carlin, Avenue Theater, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Voice on the Wire, with Ben Wilson (Universal serial)—"Big business."—R. S. Sheldon, Nickel Theater, Fall River, Mass.—Middle class patronage.

The Great Secret, with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne (Metro serial)—"This serial does not seem to draw in spite of the popularity of the stars."—L. A. Schwager, Royal Theater, Ashland, Wisconsin.

Auto Trembled But Helen Didn't

Helen Holmes, daring motion picture actress, drove an automobile at top speed off the dock at San Pedro, California, four times in an attempt to make a thirty-foot leap onto a barge, and the fourth time she did it.

The script of the ninth episode of the Mutual-Signal serial, "The Railroad Raiders," presented the most difficult and most dangerous incident of the fifteen installments, and John P. McGowan, director, and Helen Holmes spent much time figuring out the best way and the best place to tackle this hair-raising stunt.

To stage "The Leap for Life" from San Pedro dock a high-powered car was secured, a barge anchored thirty feet from the dock and experiments began. Miss Holmes took a hundred yard start and drove off the dock. The car fell five feet short of the barge. She jumped, swam back to the dock, the car was raised and the next day she tried again. This time she fell but two feet short of the barge. The car was raised again and Helen made her third trial. She took a longer start and it was estimated that she was traveling forty-five miles an hour when she jumped from the edge of the pier. The car jumped clear over the barge, the rear wheels just missing the front of the craft.

"Certainly I can do it now," proclaimed the fearless young actress. By this time she and her director had been able to figure out to somewhat of a mathematical certainty the speed required to strike the barge. There was no way, however, of figuring out how to drive an automobile from a dock and land at a given spot until the thing had been tried.

Showing Helen Holmes in a leap that made the insurance companies tremble. Helen's pet pastime is flirting with the undertaker. This time she drove an auto off a dock onto a barge conveniently near—thirty feet away.

$2,500,000 in Liberty Bonds

THEATERS, PRODUCERS, AND PLAYERS SUPPORT GOVERNMENT IN WAR LOAN

THE picture industry is supporting with growing energy the sale of Uncle Sam's Liberty Bonds, $2,500,000 having already been subscribed through the various channels of the business. If every industry aided on the financial side of the war with equal thoroughness, there would be no doubt that the United States would lack in no respect for adequate financial support.

Films to Boom Bond Buying

From now until the close of the great Liberty Loan campaign, the picture theaters of America will make a daily appeal upon the screen to twenty million people to invest in the new issue of Government war bonds. Both motion picture trailers and slides will be used.

The big campaign has been inaugurated by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. One committee is shipping 70-foot trailers to all theaters. These will be attached to a reel to be screened at every showing, thus making certain that every one who visits a picture theater will have the direct appeal put up to him.

The trailer, which will take over a minute to project, makes much of President Wilson's patriotic words at the close of his speech asking Congress to decree that a state of war existed. The first thing seen, however, is an American flag fluttering in the breeze. Above it stands out the words, "The Liberty Bond." Next appears beneath the flag the latest popular slogan which is being used in the campaign, "The Bond That Binds US All." This is followed by a picture of President Wilson as he dictates his historic speech. Then spectators have presented the final paragraph:

> To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured.

The trailer concludes with a ringing demand "Do your duty! Buy a U. S. Government Liberty Loan Bond today!"

Accompanying the trailer, sent each exhibitor, was a letter from William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which in part is as follows:

> The sending to you of this trailer was made possible only by the enthusiastic support given the Government by the subcommittee on trailers of the National Association's Liberty Loan Committee, which is composed of Messrs. Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, B. N. Busch, Lee A. Ochs, and Lewis J. Selznick, and the generosity of George Eastman, of the Eastman Kodak Company, who donated 500,000 feet of raw stock to the Government for this purpose.
> The Government requests that publicity regarding the Liberty Loan shall cease on the fifteenth day of June, as subscriptions to the loan close at this time; accordingly, this trailer need not be shown after that date.

Slides will also be used to supplement the trailers during the next two weeks. These slides are distributed through the courtesy of the War Loan Committees of the American Bankers' Association in co-operation with the Liberty Loan Committee and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Even the studio managers—at least some of them—are eager to help. At a meeting on Friday night, Paul Scardon, of Vitagraph, pledged $5,000 and others are expected to follow.

Exhibitors Respond Nobly

Exhibitors throughout the country have responded nobly to the plea from President William A. Brady, of the National Association, to assist in floating the loan by the use of trailers and slides. The response from the exhibitors was far greater than expected. Nearly every one of the 16,000 or more showmen throughout the country expect to do something more than they have already done.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto Theater, of New York, has pledged his company to take $100,000 of the bonds, while during the past week the Strand Theater Corporation accepted $35,000 which may be followed with an additional subscription.

Earle Williams and Montague Love, as chairman and secretary of the Actors' Committee of the National Association Liberty Loan Committee, have worked incessantly to boost the loan, with no small measure of success.

Actresses of the motion picture screen have been so successful in their campaign for Liberty Loan subscriptions that, though only partially organized, they sold nearly $50,000 of the bonds during the last week. At a meeting at the Claridge Hotel, Friday night, Kitty Gordon, the World film star, was elected permanent chairman of the committee which has been working in conjunction with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Jean Stuart was made permanent secretary of the committee.

Screen Women Aid

The women of the screen have met again at the headquarters of the Women's General Committee on the Liberty Loan in the Columbia Trust Company Building, and decided to carry their campaign directly to the public. Beginning very soon it is probable that some of the leading society women of New York will make short speeches in all the motion picture houses of the city on behalf of the war loan.

Metro stars established a new record for the sale of Liberty Loan bonds when they sold more than $500,000 worth in six hours. The returns for Metro day were 100 per cent greater, both in regards to the cash collected and the bonds subscribed for, than any previous day. Emmy Wehlen not only sold many bonds, but subscribed for $5,000 worth. William Christy Cabanne paid Millicent Fisher, a member of his company, $1,000 in cash for a bond. The record of the day for individual sales went to Ilean Hume, who has sold 219 bonds. The most novel sale was made by Irene Howley, who persuaded the treasurer of an old ladies' home that the best place to invest the surplus of the home was in Liberty bonds. Aurora Piatt sold $1,000 worth of bonds in less than one hour.

Strand Co-operates

The Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the Strand Theater, has issued a statement to the Strand employes to the effect that the management of the theater will buy Liberty Bonds for any employe who wishes any, and allow them to pay for same in small monthly payments. The majority of the 126 employes will take advantage of the offer.

Vitagraph Pays Employes in Bonds

With the consent of the employes, Greater Vitagraph and V. L. S. E., the distributing organization, has decided, insofar as possible, to use Liberty Bonds of the fifty-dollar denomination, in meeting its weekly payroll just as soon as the Liberty Bonds are issued.

It has been explained to all of the Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. employes that the small denomination Liberty Bonds are just exactly as negotiable as fifty-dollar bills and will be accepted as legal tender in exactly the same manner.

The decision of Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. officials to meet the respective payrolls through the distribution of Liberty Bonds means that from this one source alone something more than one million dollars' worth of the bonds will be put into circulation.

In coming to the decision Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. wants it understood that any employes objecting to receiving salary in Liberty Bonds will receive cash as heretofore.

Not only will Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. meet their respective payrolls with Liberty Bonds but V. L. S. E. has empowered all branch managers to accept Liberty Bonds in payment from exhibitors for film rental.

$75,000 More From Lasky

Following the announcement that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had subscribed $100,000 to the Liberty Loan through the Broadway Trust Company, word has been received from the Lasky studio in Hollywood, through Cecil B. DeMille, that the employes of the studio have themselves taken $75,000 in Liberty Bonds.

This action on the part of the players and studio employes is entirely independent of the company's subscription, thus bringing the total amount of the organization's subscription to $175,000.

Officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have also afforded their employes an opportunity to participate in the Liberty Loan, by lending them the necessary funds to cover the purchase price of the war bonds, thus making it possible for many who, though desirous of doing their little financial bit for the Government were prevented because of lack of funds.

Legitimate Theaters Also Help

All of the legitimate theaters of New York City are working on the sale of the bonds. A large committee of prominent managers has been appointed and these men have held several meetings discussing ways and means.

"This is a matter of urgent importance to the country and to our profession," said Daniel Frohman, "and we, as a profession, must not fall behind others in our patriotic service. Anything short of large success in this loan may bring about necessary taxation in excess of the Government's present plans."

Among the theatrical organizations aiding the Liberty Loan campaign in New York are the following: The Lambs, the Friars, the Players, Green Room Club, Gamut Club, Twelfth Night Club, Professional Woman's League, National Vaudeville Association, Actors' Equity Association and Stage Women's War Relief.

"The Boots of Beatrice" is nearing its completion in five reels at Universal City.

TO STANDARDIZE FILMS

Society of Motion Picture Engineers Working to Eliminate Mechanical Faults—Meets in Chicago, July 14-16

A. F. Victor, president of the Davenport Animatograph Company, and a member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, said in a recent interview:

Up to the present time, the producers of such apparatus as printers, cameras, projectors, and the makers of the perforated film, used to carry the picture impressions, have each been content to progress solely along their own line of work. Could they but see the advantage of collaboration, better and more easily accomplished work would result, and much of the confusion, now so prevalent in the industry, would be entirely avoided.

While the measurements have been practically the same in all types of machines, there has never been a scientific formula worked out, to which each individual manufacturer, in the establishment of his own particular form of product, could refer, and as a result the projected picture has not yet attained the perfection that could be obtained by true co-operation on the part of the makers during all the stages of production.

Angles of Projection

Another very important subject, at present being considered by the society, is the establishment of a rule to govern the extreme angle of projection permissible in theaters. This rule would be invaluable to architects who do not possess the necessary knowledge of practical optical projection to guide them in their work.

The lack of such information has resulted in many badly arranged theaters, in which the operating booth and machine are placed so obliquely above the screen that a decided so-called "keystone" effect is produced. For these reasons, the makers of projectors and screens are placed under great difficulties. To produce even satisfactory work under such conditions means an expenditure of labor and ingenuity that is not justified by the result.

Will Lick the Flicker

The ultimate result of the labors of the society of motion picture engineers will be an entire elimination of the unsteadiness of the picture, "flicker," over-illumination, and eye strain. In order to reach this very desirable end, absolute co-operation between the makers of each element necessary to complete the modern motion-picture exhibition is required. This included the film itself, the camera making, the exposures, the perforators, the printing machines, the projectors, the construction of the theaters, the electrical illumination, in fact, all the mechanical elements entering into the art. As to the story or subject of the picture, the society does not attempt to deal with that, but only confines itself towards the mechanical perfection of the industry.

So much good work has already been accomplished that it is safe to predict the "movies" will soon attain a state of perfection.

To recommend standards, the society has appointed a committee composed of the following members, some of which are quite prominent in the industry: C. Francis Jenkins, Washington, D. C.; F. B. Cannock (inventor of the Simplex motion picture projector); F. H. Richardson (of the Motion Picture World); Donald J. Bell, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. Hermann Kellner (of the Bauch & Lomb Optical Co.), Rochester, N. Y.; H. T. Edwards, N. Y., and A. F. Victor, Davenport, Ia.

The next meeting will be held at the Blackstone hotel in Chicago, July 14-16, at which meeting a definite standard of film perforations will be settled.

McClure pictures is rapidly completing its plans for producing the series of five-reel features that will follow "Seven Deadly Sins." The scenarios for the first three five-reelers, in which Shirley Mason will be starred, are being whipped into shape and production will begin soon.

Keep Up With the Industry

PROGRESSIVE EXHIBITORS AND FILM MEN WILL ATTEND CHICAGO CONVENTION

FIFTEEN new states will be represented on the floor of the National Motion Picture Convention, to be held in Chicago July 14 to 22. William J. Sweeney, national secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is authority for this statement. He is continually receiving new applications for memberships in the national organization and this means that there will be a new mark of exhibitor attendance at the big show coming next month.

Keep Up With the Industry

If you are an exhibitor who desires to be an influence in the motion picture world and aid in adjusting conditions to be more favorable to the exhibiting end of the business and if you desire to keep in touch with the newest developments of the industry, you will, of course, take a trip to Chicago and be among the hundreds of others present at the history-making sessions of the convention.

You will also be able to take in the mammoth exposition and learn a great deal of value and interest in regard to the newest things in every branch of the business.

"Pull Together" Is the Slogan

When times were good and with no legislative clouds on the horizon, the average exhibitor felt secure. A sort of a "Oh what's the use" feeling toward the Exhibitors' League, never giving a thought to the future. But now, when it takes a $100,000 investment to bring in a few dimes, and with taxation and censorship running neck to neck, they are waking up to the fact that organization is the one hope for salvation.

The fight will only be won by a thorough co-operation of producers, exhibitors and exchangemen. These three will make a mighty strong trinity and, with the support of the trade journals, the victory is assured. All the state organizations should have their local secretaries report the number of delegates and alternates to which they are entitled, either to Wm. J. Sweeney, national secretary, or to Ludwig Schindler, exposition manager, Masonic Temple, Chicago.

Vitagraph is planning to make Vitagraph day one long to be remembered by the picture loving fans. Anita Stewart, Alice Joyce, Rose Tapley and other stars will be present.

Big Men Attend

Many of the greatest theatrical producers in the world—men who have entranced many millions of people by the histrionic events they have staged, have now turned to the moving picture as the best medium of expression. Wm. A. Brady, Al. H. Woods and Harry Frazee constitute a tremendously powerful triumvirate in the theatrical profession who have turned to films and will be present at this coming convention and exposition. The biggest motion picture men will also be there. Many film clubs will take part.

Producers, exhibitors and stars by the hundreds will foregather at the coming exposition for an exchange of views, to determine the best ways and means for still further improving the moving picture industry and of "keeping up with the public."

What pictures have done for the public, in both amusement and instruction, will be amply displayed at the exposition.

Stars Will Shine

Visitors to the coming exposition will see several big stage stars in the flesh, together with two score or more of other film stars who have achieved steller prominence through the sole medium of the silent drama. These stars are coming to the exposition because they feel that it is their duty to the public, the producers and the exhibitors, in return for the fame, the financial gain and the public endearment that has come to them, or been enhanced through the screen.

Essentially human—every one of them—they appreciate the fact that the people who see them on the screen, like them, even love them. As Douglas Fairbanks has remarked: "I know that I have won many friends through the screen. I like the people who like me, and I want to see them."

"Our Mary" Pickford feels the same way. Clara Kimball Young says the loyalty and affection of her thousands of "film friends" is the happiest element of her life, and the same expressions are voiced by all the others.

Style Show at Exposition

Manufacturers of wearing apparel of all kinds have been quick to recognize the fact that the exposition will afford them a most unusual opportunity for displaying their wares. As a result the floor exhibits and the style show at the exposition will form one of the most comprehensive displays ever given in Chicago.

Pictures are today setting the pace for the civilized world's fashions. Thousands upon thousands of people see, on the screen, the daintiest creations of the modiste. They learn the type of gowns, the hats, the footwear, for morning, afternoon and evening, that appear to the best advantage on various types of women and girls.

Here is a girl who is preparing for her summer vacation. She sees on the screen perhaps a dozen different attractive outing costumes and determines what she wants, because these screen stars wear the daintiest and most fashionable garb obtainable.

The same thing applies to men, and manufacturers freely admit that the screen has been the means of improving the garb and general appearance of men, by the thousands. Picture stars and moving picture public today forms a vast and constantly increasing element that must be served. Recognizing that fact, the producers of fashionable, well-fitting, neat and trim garments are on their mettle and are going after the business.

President William L. Sherrill announces that he has agreed for the Frohman Amusement Corporation with the Dreadnaught Pictures, Inc., in the agreement of the last named corporation, whereby that concern has arranged with the Mammoth Film Corporation for the handling of the Frohman super-production, "God's Man."

Music for Pictures

By S. M. Berg,
Music Editor for Greater Vitagraph.

Every time a synchronized score is prepared for a motion picture a certain routine, or method, must be observed. The picture is run off in the projection room, where the musical expert gets the plot of the story, and times the changes of scene and action. The titles are jotted down and serve as a guide, or diagram, of the mental picture of the story from which the musician works later on at the piano in his own studio.

But, in addition to absorbing the story at this first viewing, and of equal importance, the progressive musician now senses the personality of the principal characters, and it is to them that he fits his themes rather than to the action of the play. A clever novelist could weave two distinct romances around the identical plot by varying the characters. And so, in music, a motif which might be wholly interpretative of a love scene, for instance, between certain people might be utterly incongruous as related to others.

In earlier and more experimental days, the fitting of music to motion pictures was an elementary process, A couple embracing?—any piece of music dedicated to osculation. A shipwreck?—"Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," or any other tune associated with salt water. Fortunately, in common with the all round artistic development of the motion pictures, such selections, which just escaped quarreling with the action screened, have been replaced by music more specifically appropriate.

The expert on the subject, however, is not satisfied with this degree of attainment. He realizes that music for motion pictures should and can create such an absolutely correct atmosphere as to put one, even with closed eyes, completely in sympathy with the mood of the story. Now, the mood of the story is in reality the mood of the players—the reflex upon them personally of the action in which they participate. And to this recognition of the personal element is due the deepening and broadening of musical interpretations for the film.

These musical settings are generally classed as "descriptive music." Strictly speaking, however, there is no such thing as "descriptive music." Take a battle scene, for instance. It would be impossible, with any combination of musical instruments, to imitate or describe the din of battle. But there are compositions which so vividly express the mood of those who have witnessed or engaged in battle that they convey a definite impression of a battle to the listener.

It's a subtle essence—this, for lack of a better name, "descriptive music." Appropriate from every classified point of view, it may, after all, fail to interpret the scene depicted on the screen. It may lack the universal appeal which tells the story to all. It may lack personality—soul.

For this reason in the preparation of the musical setting for "Within the Law," the following experiment was tried: a committee composed of the heads of the various Vitagraph-V. L. S. E. departments viewed the picture in collaboration with the musical expert. Each one present suggested some selection which to him expressed the spirit of a certain scene. The result was successful beyond expectation when these selections, each a recognized standard musical gem, were, by skillful modulations, brought into harmony.

It has been claimed for this score, so uniquely assembled, that hardly a person with any knowledge of music could fail to find at least one air familiar to him. Thus the music has a universal appeal.

"Christus" in New York

It is very evident from the size and quality of the audiences at "Christus" that the great biblical photo-drama has found a real place among motion picture patrons in New York. From the fact that the audiences are made up largely of church dignitaries and the city's foremost citizens, that the hall mark of the aristocrat of the camera's art has become recognized. Clergy of every denomination have rendered a verdict in effect, that every person interested in the finer things, the clean, much cried for picture, which entertains, educates and lends moral tone, should see this wonderful creation of the Cines Company.

The demand from out of town exhibitors shows that the fame the picture of the life of Christ has, through its own impetus, reached those who have decried the footless, vulgar, meaningless screen plays, and who have been waiting for the highest in art, photography, education, entertainment and morals, will welcome "Christus" with acclaim. The plans for the distribution of this picture will be announced through the trade papers very shortly.

Kathleen Kirkham with Mutual

Kathleen Kirkham, but recently added to the American players, will first appear in support of William Russell in "The Weakness of the Strong," which will be released through Mutual some time in July. Miss Kirkham has an important role in this production. She appears as an adventurous married woman who loves to play with fire, and is not content unless she is carrying on a flirtation with some young admirer.

This will not be Miss Kirkham's first appearance with Mutual. She will be remembered as Marion Dane in "The Devil's Assistant," in which Margarita Fischer was starred.

Miss Kirkham made her screen debut with the Reliance Company and since that time has been seen in Balboa, Morosco, Clune, Pollard, Fine Arts and Universal productions.

Hite Parts with Triangle

C. C. Hite, who has been the guiding hand of the Triangle Distributing Exchange of Cincinnati for the past two years, announces that he is severing his connections with that company and will open an office in Cincinnati for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Hite has been in this territory for the past four years, the first two years of that time being devoted to the Mutual Film Corporation, and he has built up a wonderful clientele among the exhibitors. He is one of the most popular film men in the city and we are sure the future destines of the Goldwyn in the Middle West are assured.

The Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, distributors of Art Dramas for Canada, has announced that W. H. Dunbar will be general sales manager for that district.

Mr. Dunbar is a man of wide experience in the exchange business. Until recently he was with Boston Photoplay Company, another Art Dramas exchange. Previous to this he was general manager of the Universal Company's Winnipeg office.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Splendid New England House

The newest theatrical project in New England is the Theater St. George, Framingham, Massachusets, which is being built for Trimount Theaters, Inc., who control a circuit of theaters throughout the New England States.

George A. Giles, treasurer of the company, although a well known real estate man, has been an exhibitor and has enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most successful ones in that section for a number of years. The plans of the new Theater St. George embody the result of his careful study and long experience. Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore of Boston are the architects.

The new New England house, the Theater St. George, at Framingham, Massachusetts, being built for Trimount Theaters, Inc., and George A. Giles, energetic treasurer of the company.

In planning the theater it was the intention to get away from the hackneyed and usual type of design, and without indulging in elaboration or mere frills, to create a theater that would be simple and dignified in its arrangement, practical and businesslike in its appointments, and at the same time thoroughly artistic in all its features. The combination is by no means impossible, but it is rare for a suburban theater.

The exterior is merged in the design of the block of stores and offices, which front on the main thoroughfare and present a distinct departure from the conventional suburban store block. The entrance to the theater is through the center of the block. There is first a high vestibule extending through two stories, lined with marble on the side walls and crowned by a spherical vault of mosaic work. The first set of doors lead from the vestibule into a lobby simply decorated in quiet subdued taste, beyond which through a second set of doors is a rotunda, from each side of which lead up a broad flight of stairs to the balcony.

The house itself will be a so-called combination playhouse, suitable for putting on road shows as well as being equipped with the latest ideas for photoplay presentation. Mr. Giles is one of those who believes that pictures are still in their infancy and looks to see wonderful advances made during the next three or four years and he has anticipated the presentation of wonderful productions under proper conditions.

In addition to a provision for the usual orchestra, there will be a massive pipe organ of the most modern type. Every seat in the house will be a good seat. There will be no posts to obstruct the vision, no drafty ventilators, no fiery radiators to try out the patience of the patrons and no narrow armed chairs, so common in many of the so-called modern theaters. The lighting of the house will be indirect so as to give the desired amount of illumination without fatigue or glare. The screen is of special design, the result of much study.

Mr. Giles is enthusiasm personified over this, his latest, venture and declares that the Theater St. George will be one that its patrons will not only enjoy, but one which they will point out with pride as second to none in all New England.

New Theater at Kensington, Kansas

The Royal Theater, owned and managed by E. J. Hollister, Kensington, Kansas, opened its doors to the public recently with Paramount Pictures. Kensington has a population of eight hundred people, yet Mr. Hollister had faith in the town and the industry, and invested about $10,000 in a new building and equipment.

The theater is modern throughout, and although $10,000 is not a large amount of money when compared to some of the palatial theaters in the metropolitan centers, yet it is a big investment for a town of this population, and the Royal is regarded as one of the coziest houses in Kansas. It has a seating capacity of 374. The admission price is ten and fifteen cents. Mr. Hollister was formerly a druggist and not only is well known for his progressive methods, but enjoys the good will of everyone.

Community Theater at Kinsley, Kansas

Another community in Kansas has just reason to be proud of its brand new theater. A young man by the name of R. E. Crabtree set about the construction and equipment of a theater so that the people of Kinsley would not only get a first class program but the presentation would be equal to the best.

In order to make his plans more complete, Mr. Crabtree surrounded himself with prominent citizens of Kinsley and they have now a very live institution, and have named their theater the Community, which has a seating capacity of 300. The house opened with Paramount Pictures.

Dr. C. C. Sterret, the secretary-treasurer of the new organization, was a visitor in Kansas City a few days ago, to complete all the arrangements which Mr. Crabtree had outlined and planned for.

Ben Wilson, Universal star and director, who may visit YOUR town soon.

Actor Visits U. S. Theaters

Ben Wilson, actor and director, who has achieved new honors by his remarkable work in the Universal mystery serial entitled "The Voice on the Wire," will make a trans-continental trip, appearing in person at the leading photoplay houses in connection with the showing of this picture.

Mr. Wilson will begin his country-wide tour in New York, appearing at the entire Marcus Loew circuit in the Metropolitan district, where "The Voice on the Wire" has proved to be the most successful motion picture continued story ever booked by that astute theatrical man.

From New York Mr. Wilson will go to Philadelphia and then south to Washington, and then west. He will appear in the leading theaters in forty-seven cities in all parts of the country. This is the most comprehensive personal appearance tour ever made by a motion-picture star, and plans are being made in each city he visits to furnish him a fitting welcome.

Fine Artist Makes Fine Lobby

The artistic and unique lobby display at the Strand Theater, New York, has attracted widespread attention and people can be seen daily admiring the artistic paintings as if they were visiting some art gallery.

The creator of these works of art is Jay Weaver, 24 years of age, a native of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Weaver received his art education at the Albright Art School in Buffalo, and, after finishing his course, entered the employ of the Buffalo Theatrical Display Company.

Harold Edel, who at the time was managing the Strand Theater in Buffalo, noticed a wonderful improvement in the lobby display he received from the Theatrical Display Company each week and upon inquiring discovered that young Weaver was the artist responsible for this improvement. Edel watched the young man whose work grew better as the weeks passed by. Finally the manager offered Weaver a position, with a salary better than the Theater Display Company was paying him, to paint the display for the Strand Theater exclusively. The offer was accepted and Weaver established himself in a studio located in the theater building. Here he had an opportunity to carry out his own ideas and made rapid strides toward the distinction of becoming one of America's foremost poster artists. It must not be supposed, however, that Mr. Weaver's art is confined solely to poster painting—far from it. He is an accomplished painter of landscapes and oriental scenes and has also painted a remarkable marine picture which adorns one of the walls in Mr. Edel's home, and a striking oil painting of Marguerite Clark with a dog is one of the decorations in the office of the managing director of the Strand Theater, New York.

It is four years ago since Mr. Weaver commenced his work at the Strand in Buffalo. When Mr. Edel was given charge of the spacious Strand Theater in New York he persuaded his artist to abandon his Buffalo home and come to the biggest and handsomest theater on New York's "Gay White Way." The Strand lobby was soon transformed into a veritable art gallery. The paintings are arranged in beautiful and massive gold frames encased in red plush lined mahogany shadow boxes. This with a wall background of mirrors impanelled in gold, the beautifully decorated ceiling from which rare artistic electric light fixtures are suspended, and the unique Mosaic inlaid floor makes the Strand Theater lobby perhaps the most exquisite in America.

When one stops to consider the quality of Mr. Weaver's paintings, the rapidity with which he finishes them is remarkable. Each Saturday night he must have ready for display in the lobby—three large oil paintings and eight water colors. Besides this he also designs black and white display ads for the newspapers every week, and all border and other designs for the Strand Magazine program. Mr. Weaver's studio is located in the theater. He employs one assistant who does the lettering on the lobby posters in which specialty he is an expert.

New Enid Bennett Play

"'The Girl Glory,' is a 'romp' picture," says Enid Bennett, who is presented by Thomas H. Ince as star in this Triangle comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan. "Children, kittens, rabbits, dogs, ducks and chickens; just one piece of fun after another.

"It starts off with fairy stories, and ends in romance. It is playtime from start to finish. Sometimes I am serious for one tiny minute, and then a laugh breaks in. This is the sort of picture in which I like to appear."

The part played by Miss Bennett in this production is that of a young, unsophisticated village girl, who is surrounded with happy things and whose only care is to look after her old grandfather.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

ON THE front cover of its weekly program the Garfield Theater of Chicago prints the following:

You need the Garfield and the Garfield needs you. After you've looked over the shows for this week just think a minute what the Garfield means to you. Have you ever thought how different it would be without us to turn to when the whole world looks blue—when you feel everything is wrong. An evening at the Garfield and life looks different. You've given your brain a rest. You've been with the bunch, rubbed elbows with your neighbor, your heart has been touched by some pathetic appeal in the pictures. You've laughed a bit and you've seen nature's beauty spots. You're different and you're glad.

The Selwyn Realty Corporation has filed plans for a two and four story theater, to be erected at 240 West Forty-third street, New York. The facade is to be of brick, limestone and terra cotta, and the cost is estimated at $175,000.

Michael A. Carmen has been appointed manager of Carr and Schad's new Colonial Theater in Reading, Pennsylvania. This house, up-to-date in every way, has a seating capacity of 2,000. Music is furnished by a large Kimball Organ and an orchestra of fifteen pieces.

A decree published in the Italian Official Gazette prohibits the importation into Italy of everything except foodstuffs and raw materials for essential industries. The ban includes films, but it is understood that import licenses will be granted so that business will not be entirely suspended.

Mayor Puchta of Cincinnati closed down a dramatic production last week founded on a film that had passed the Ohio board of censors and had proved popular in that state. The stage play, though practically identical with the original picture drama, was branded by officials the mayor sent to review it as nasty in theme and indecent in title.

Mrs. Clarence Waterman, founder and secretary of the Better Motion Picture Alliance of Brooklyn, was recently applauded at a meeting when she said: "The National Board of Censorship is controlled by the motion picture manufacturers and objections to that body are overruled by their agents. The pressing need is for women to work for the suppression of such pictures. The picture theaters, as now managed, are schools of crime."

Scenes from the battlefields of France when they were shown at the Star Theater, Buffalo, brought tears to the eyes of 900 men and women who attended the benefit performance for the raising of a Buffalo unit of the American field ambulance service. At the close of the meeting it was announced that nearly $8,000 had been pledged by those who saw the pictures.

The latest issue of Stillman Weekly Topics, published by the Stillman Theater of Cleveland, Ohio, contains the following paragraph addressed to its patrons:

We have always welcomed letters from our friends and patrons in which they tell us frankly what they like and what they do not like about this theater. During the past few weeks we have received a number of most interesting communications which are in the main really gratifying. Because it is practically impossible to answer each letter, we take this means of assuring our friends that their epistles are always welcome and are always given most careful consideration. If you have any suggestions which, in your opinion, will improve your theater just sit down and write us a line.

The part the motion picture industry is to play in helping Uncle Sam float the Liberty Bond issue is to be almost as important as the role of the press of the country itself. According to a statement issued recently by Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank of New York and chairman of the Liberty Loan Publicity Committee, there will be scores of one-reel dramas built around the "buy-a-bond" idea.

A free moving picture show for women only was given recently in the American Theater at Butte City, Montana. The pictures shown were to bring home to the women the part they were playing in Red Cross work. Miss Margaret Moore, who lectured while the pictures were being displayed, declared that only by actually seeing the course of the bandages from the making to the time the soldiers were wearing them, that the significance of the work could be realized.

According to George C. Edwards, president of the New York local of the Operators' Union, about 80 per cent of all operators will be barred from military service on account of weak hearts. The cause, he says, is due to the unnatural heat of the operator's booth. Most of the time the operator stands at his machine with his heart only a few inches from the heated arc crater. This persistent heat eventually saps the strength of his heart.

The Stillman Theater, of Cleveland Ohio, is publishing an attractive fifteen page weekly magazine, devoted to the news of the picture industry, plays and players, and containing the weekly programs of the house. This magazine is printed in a very attractive manner and contains a good deal of advertising matter. The booklet is edited by J. N. Lanfield. M. T. Cohn is business manager and P. M. Heimson is publicity director.

Following a tour of Tennessee, Fred J. Herrington, organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, left Memphis last week with plans booming for the initial State Convention for Tennessee. Application for a charter was made to the National League, and the time for the State Convention set for June 19 and 20. The city in which it is to be held, however, is being left to the choice of a majority of the exhibitors answering the call.

In an editorial of May 25 dealing with the censorship problem the Chicago Examiner says:

The decision of Judge Kavanagh prohibiting the production of the moving picture entitled "The Spirit of '76" produces convincing evidence that the moving picture censor is not only useless but a public menace. Major Funkhouser, the particular censor involved in this case, appears to have based his most weighty objections to the production of this picture on the ground that it reproduced historical episodes that would be objectionable to British subjects now our allies in war.

After declaring that the censor is an unnecessary adjunct to the police force, who can really do nothing that cannot be done by the police department of the city, the editorial finishes with the statement that, furthermore, whenever the censor goes beyond the ordinary powers of the police he violates individual rights and public liberties.

In a vigorous letter addressed to the senators and representatives from his district, S. A. Moran, proprietor of the Arcade Theater at Ann Arbor, Michigan, registered an emphatic protest against the 10 per cent tax on the gross receipts of moving picture theaters. Mr. Moran thinks the tax would in a large measure defeat itself as he declares it would result in the immediate closing of at least 75 per cent of the houses throughout the country.

The Trinity Auditorium of Los Angeles for the first time in a year was given over to motion pictures for the weeks of May 21 and 28 when the Williamson Brothers' newest feature, "The Submarine Eye," was booked by Manager L. E. Behymer. William G. Colvin, recently one of the fun makers on the Keystone lot, is handling the bookings for the Williamson Brothers Sumbarine Corporation.

Florence Carpenter, who has been engaged to appear with Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman in their next Morosco-Paramount picture, holds the unique distinction of being the first daughter of a picture theater manager to appear on the screen. Miss Carpenter is the daughter of George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount Empress Theater at Salt Lake City.

A plan to operate the picture theaters in Reading, Pennsylvania, on Sundays and split fifty-fifty with the Red Cross was sat upon recently by Ira W. Stratton, former mayor of that city, before the leading citizens' patriotic committee. Mr. Stratton declared the suggestion did not emanate from Red Cross sources. As chairman of the Berks County Chapter he said he could not accept any offers which contemplated a division of profits between the promoters and the Red Cross.

Alexander M. Chalmers, secretary of the Bartlett Lumber Company at Shelldrake, Michigan, on Whitefish Bay, is making arrangements for films for two picture shows a week for the benefit of his men and their families. Employed in and about the mill are about 150 men and their families. Shelldrake is inaccessible by rail and almost so by automobile. Mr. Chalmers may adopt the plan of some of the western mining camps of letting each of the men pay one dollar a month for which he and his family will be allowed to see all the shows.

The Old Mill Theater in Dallas has reopened after the recent fire that gutted it. This is one of the Hulsey string of theaters, and is managed by Laurence Stuart. The theater has been completely remodeled and the latest equipments have been installed. During the fire, two canaries which had been the pride of the management since its opening, were rescued from the burning theater at the risk of the life of Manager Stuart, and the two little yellow birds, although soaked with water during the fire, when placed in their new home blithely warbled the tunes that had so delighted their audiences.

Stanley V. Mastbaum, on behalf of some of the largest exhibitors of Philadelphia, recently sent to Governor Brumbaugh a formal protest against the action of the State Board of Censors in arbitrarily censoring films without sufficient reason. He charged that in a majority of cases in which the exhibitors had carried their complaints to the courts, the latter had reversed the decision of the censors, but declared that continuous appeals were costly. He suggested to the Governor that he shake up the Board and force it to establish more cordial relations with the exhibitors.

That Sunday pictures are making further gains over the state of Louisiana is the expressed conviction of Rev. W. H. Jackson of New Orleans, a clergyman who has made an extensive study of the relations prevailing between church and motion picture house. "Ministers, themselves," he said, "are now very widely using pictures on Sunday, and where they cannot use them they are interesting themselves in the pictures which exhibitors are showing. The state federations of labor, too, are everywhere, without one single exception, lined up in favor of Sunday pictures."

Cheyenne, Wyoming, is waging a vigorous war at present upon the unsafe and unsanitary condition of its picture houses. There is not a theater in the city, according to a philippic in the Cheyenne State Leader, to which fire escapes are not as foreign as are the provisions for ventilation. And, with the exception of one theater, it continues, the provisions for ventilation are about as adequate as Uncle Sam's preparation for hostilities at the outbreak of the present war. The spirit of Nero, fiddling while Rome was in flames, is cited as typical of the attitude of the Cheyenne theater owners.

In introducing the first of a series of feature pictures taken in Japan the Rialto Theater, New York, recently was given a Japanese touch throughout. Under Mr. Rothapfels' guiding genius, Japanese banners and other draperies were hung in the foyer. Cherry blossom arbors and lanterns graced the aisles of the mezzanine floor, and special scenery and lighting effects conspired to make the presentation of "The Land of the Rising Sun" seem like a genuine occurrence in the oriental kingdom. While the picture was being shown the orchestra played selections from "Madame Butterfly."

The film men of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, are up in arms against the proposed Federal tax which threatens to take 10 per cent of their gross receipts. They recently wired their representatives in congress urging them to use their influence to modify this feature of the Federal tax bill. They declare that after having their licenses increased to $100 last year and with the additional Federal tax of 10 cents a seat forced upon them that this new tax would simply put them out of business.

In Clarks, Indiana, a town of 200 population where Paramount Pictures have been shown continuously since the opening of the theater, the management has been giving the profits towards the fostering of a Library Fund for the members of the lumber camps in that district. The patrons of this theater are almost entirely made up of the employes of the lumber camps, and when they recently attempted to establish a library, and needed funds to create same, the management of the theater decided that all profits from the theater should be given to this fund until the amount was raised.

What It Means to Make a Profit

THE Senate Finance Committee has undoubtedly saved a great many picture theaters from imminent and threatening darkness. In the reasonable event that the war bill finally passes in approximately its present form, the burden of the war tax, which is intended to be levied upon profits, will rest where it belongs. The proposal is to tax only those theater admissions which are in excess of twenty-five cents. This relieves from immediate anxiety the thousands of proprietors of ten-cent shows, whose profits in so many cases have become almost microscopic. Lucky indeed is the owner of a ten-cent show whose net returns exceed ten dollars for every thousand seats he fills—and that is the amount of the tax that the House recommended.

There were thousands of objectors to the ten per cent tax—exhibitors who know, without figuring, that their business would not stand it. But we venture to say that, out of those thousands of protestants, there are hundreds who do not really know what their net profit is.

The exhibitor who keeps a proper set of books will charge a reasonable salary for everybody employed about the theater, even if they are in the family and are just "helping him out." He will charge off a reasonable compensation for his own services, entirely apart from "profits." He will charge off interest on the total investment of his theater at the prevailing rate—usually six per cent. He will charge off a reasonable depreciation on his building and equipment. Whatever is left after all these items have been added to the "overhead" is profit.

It is surprising in how few cases there is anything left. Lots of exhibitors delude themselves into the idea that they are making a profit because they draw no salary, figure no interest, allow for no depreciation.

If you are one of those exhibitors, sit down right now and do a little figuring with a pencil and a scrap of paper. You don't have to be a bookkeeper to get this straight.

You already know your overhead expense, or what you call your overhead expense. Check it over carefully, not to cut anything out but to add to it every legitimate and reasonable item you can think of.

Does your son help you a few minutes or hours a day or a week? Put down the value of his time. Are you allowing yourself the salary you could reasonably expect to get doing similar work for somebody else? Put it down if it is not already there. Have you figured the current interest on every stick of property in the theater—building, seats, lights, machines? Put it down. Do you know the annual cost of repairs and redecorating? Put it down. How about depreciation?

How many years will it be before you need new seats all the way through the house? Ten? Charge off ten per cent of the cost of seating for depreciation. How long will your machines last? If you want new ones every four years, charge off twenty-five per cent. And so on, all through the list of tangible property that makes your show.

When you have set all these things down and added them to your general expenses, and subtracted the total from your gross income, there should be something left. If there isn't or if there is a deficit, your theater is not making money—it is losing.

There is a good deal more to making a profit than merely taking in from day to day more than you pay out. The process of losing money is visible only to the exhibitor who is going down the toboggan at a pretty high velocity. Hundreds of exhibitors are losing money right along and don't know it. They are cheating themselves out of wages for their time, and interest for their investment, in order to show themselves a false profit that isn't really there at all.

Every exhibitor should keep an accurate account of the items of labor, interest and depreciation, for his own information. Then he will really know whether he is making money or losing it, and the knowledge will guide him in building up a bigger and better business.

When Business Drops Off

WHEN business drops off—as business will, now and then—the exhibitor thinks seriously of retrenchment. "Got to cut down expenses," he mutters as he casts an anxious eye over the expense column.

The big expense is always the shining mark, and the biggest expense is always the film service. Also the film service is the easiest to cut. The rent cannot possibly be reduced. The electric light bill might be diminished; but not without a visible effect, and then the saving would be inconsiderable. It is not likely that any help can be laid off, since no theater has superfluous employes.

But the film service can readily be reduced, because there are all sorts and conditions and prices of film service. Moreover, a clever exchange man, bidding against competition, can generally persuade the troubled exhibitor that the new service at a much lower price will be far superior to the old service.

So, with a run of poor business the film service is first to feel the touch of economy.

It would be difficult to find a poorer example of business judgment than this common practice. Just look at the logic of it: Because the people do not come to his house, the exhibitor gives them still less reason to come! Because business is temporarily bad, he clinches the situation by making sure that it will always be bad!

Most emphatically, the time of poor business is no time to reduce the attraction for what business there is. The only possible way to increase business, whether the times be good or bad, is to attract more patrons. No one has ever discovered a method of attracting more patronage by cutting down expenses, and especially by reducing the quality of the goods sold to the patrons.

This kind of reasoning is so simple and fundamental and primitive that it should not be necessary to repeat it to any business man. Yet men persist in ignoring it, not only in the picture theater business, but in every industry. They lose customers, and then they cut down the quality of their stock in trade. They lose more customers, and cut more quality. By that time failure is in sight, and coming on rapidly. There is no better way of building a toboggan for a quick slide out of business.

The sensible thing to do when business drops off is not to figure on cutting the film rental, but to see if the service does not need improving. It is not impossible that the business slump happened because there was a slump in film quality. Strange to say, exhibitors do not always see that their program is getting poorer; but the patrons see it every time.

There are two ways of improving the quality of film service. One is by paying more for it, and the other is by giving more personal attention to it. Best of all, of course, is a combination of both.

The exhibitor whose business is not up to normal should begin at once to tone up (not down) his film service; he should increase (not diminish) his advertising; he should turn on (not off) all the lights out front; in brief, he should go vigorously after the business he has lost, and more too, and not try to figure means for losing the patrons that still come.

For every dollar saved in film rental, especially when business is poor, there is very likely to be a five dollar loss in patronage. The only way to get more business is to spend more money, or effort, or both, going after it.

POOR PICTURES TO GO

V. L. S. E. to Withdraw Greater Vitagraph Pictures From Market Unless Endorsed by Sixty Per Cent of Exhibitors

V. L. S. E. will withdraw from the market every Greater Vitagraph picture that does not meet with the approval of the exhibitors and make money for them.

This decision was reached at a recent conference attended by General Manager Walter W. Irwin, and members of the excutive council of the selling organization of the Greater Vitagraph Company.

In order to get the opinion of the exhibitors on pictures all branch shipping clerks of V. L. S. E., all over the country have been instructed to deliver with each booking a printed slip upon which there are spaces in which the exhibitor may designate just exactly what he thought of the picture and what his patrons thought of it.

If forty per cent of the exhibitors who have presented a picture condemn it as being either "only fair," "mediocre" or "poor," the picture will be withdrawn from the market.

In coming to the decision V. L. S. E. realizes that it is giving to the smaller exhibitors of the country an advantage over the big first run houses which book V. L. S. E. pictures chiefly upon the decision of the executive board of V. L. S. E., which passes on every picture before it is released.

The officials of V. L. S. E., in arriving at the decision realized that in the final analysis there is but one unbiased critic of a picture and that unbiased critic is the audience. No matter how highly trained are the critics of the distributing companies and other critics who devote their entire time to the criticism of pictures, V. L. S. E. officials believe that these critics are liable to err. They may call a "good" picture "bad" and at the same time label a "poor" picture as "good."

They are perfectly honest from their viewpoint and their criticisms should be given the greatest weight but it is the opinion of the V. L. S. E. officials that the audiences themselves are the highest court of appeal.

What Exhibitors Say

Just as soon as the decision to withdraw pictures without the drawing power was reached, thousands of blanks were distributed to exhibitors who have been presenting Greater Vitagraph pictures. Some of the replies on these blanks follow:

"The More Excellent Way"—"Very fine. Credit to any house." E. O'Keefe, Regent Theater, Billings, Mont.

"The More Excellent Way"—"A great picture."—M. A. Todd, Lyric Theater, Cheyenne, Wyo.

"A Million Bid"—"This feature had been played in our city. I advertised it as a repeat and gave a free show for women and children. I adverised it as 'by request' and it gave perfect satisfaction."—W. S. Nelson, Elite Theater, Great Bend, Kansas.

"Arsene Lupin"—"A very clean, interesting, well directed picture."—H. Bluechel, Lyric Theater, Norfolk, Neb.

"Arsene Lupin"—"Earle Williams is great."—W. H. Todd, Lyric Theater, Cheyenne, Wyo.

"Salvation Joan"—"One of the finest pictures I ever had in my house, everybody pleased."—C. H. Mitchell, Cozy Theater, Cresco, Ia.

"The Great Divide"—"I have gotten the opinion of several of my patrons on this picture, and they all pronounce it good."—C. T. Fenton, Palace Theater, Thomas, Okla.

"Britton of the Seventh"—"This picture was run for a Boy Scouts' Benefit, and everybody was satisfied and pleased. Advertising matter all O. K."—C. S. Custes, Jr., Milford Theater, Milford, Pike Co., Pa.

"Secret Kingdom No. 1"—"Audience seemed delighted with opening of story."—E. H. Buss, Palace Theater, Emans, Pa.

"Secret Kingdom"—" 'The Secret Kingdom' is a very fine picture and getting me some real money."—H. C. Park, Winter Theater, Akron, O.

"Prince in Pawnshop"—"Heard some very favorable comments on this picture by our patrons."—R. B. Bates, Auditorium, Collingswood, N. J.

"The Girl Philippa"—"The drawing qualities of this picture are good, as we opened to very fair business in the rain and would have done excellent business had we been favored with good weather. The second day was larger than the first, and the picture pleased very well, indeed. Anita Stewart increased her popularity, and although the engagement, account of bad weather, was not a money maker, it was very satisfactory."—J. J. Marshall, Marshall Theater, Manhattan, Kansas.

"The Cave Man"—"Many patrons remarked that this was the best picture that has been shown here."—Mary R. Bills, Comet Theater, Shelton, Neb.

"Man of Mystery"—"Photography fine, action fine, plot unusually good. More comments than on any other Vitagraph feature."—E. T. Dunlop, Dunlop Theater, Wakefield, Neb.

"Glory of Yolanda"—"Anita Stewart is very popular and drew a large crowd."—A. A. Jaecke, Dreamland Theater, Herington, Kans.

"The Chattel"—"Great. Everybody well pleased. Turned people away. Anyone who couldn't appreciate this picture could never hope to appreciate anything."—G. W. Young, Aline Photoplay Co., Aline, Okla.

"The Fall of a Nation"—"Did a very satisfactory business with the feature and I think it pleased them all."—G. C. Moore, Olympia Theater, Harlowton, Mont.

"The Fall of a Nation"—"Very good in every way."—Lee Sheppard, Wakefield, Kans.

"Aladdin from Broadway"—"Audience well pleased. That seems to be the main object and covers the whole field."—Jas. Boyle, Empire Theater, Chillicothe, Mo.

"The Island of Regeneration"—"Patrons were well pleased with your picture 'The Island of Regeneration.' "—George Augas, Family Theater, Utica, N. Y.

"The Nation's Peril"—"I consider this the best picture of its kind we have ever run."—G. O. Vail, Electric Theater, Morriston, Ark.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation"—"Very good production."—A. H. Blank, Garden Theater, Des Moines, Ia.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation"—"Had an exceptionally big business and made them all like it. Had recruiting office in my lobby and got twenty enlistments in three days."—Tom H. Boland, the Empress Theater, Oklahoma City, Okla.

"College Widow"—" 'The College Widow' is such a clean play, not a suggestive point in it, everyone participating has a smile on his face, which makes an audience feel the same way."—F. E. Wilk, Opera House, Syracuse, Neb.

"Nation's Peril"—"The picture can be shown without the least objection in any Catholic theater. It is patriotic and stimulating, especially adapted to the present time."—Rev. Fr. Placid, Parish Hall, Conception, Mo.

"Nation's Peril"—"This picture took very well with all the people that saw it, and the photography in the last two reels was considered the best that had been shown here along that line."—J. S. Theobold, Eclipse Theater, Breckenridge, Colo.

"Dollars and the Woman"—"Best combination of good story and fine acting we have had."—F. C. Williams, Lyric Theater, Cumberland, Ia.

"Light at Dusk"—"Nothing like it ever shown here, better than a sermon."—Hughey & Mitchell, Comet Theater, Atkins, Ark.

"The Last Man"—"You have too few of this class of production."—W. C. Mays, Elks Theater, Prescott, Ariz.

"The Eagles Nest"—"We broke all house records for our regular feature night with this picture. Don't know how you could improve it. Send us more just as good."—F. C. Williams, Lyric Theater, Cumberland, Ia.

"The Ninety and Nine"—"This picture pleased a great deal better than I expected. It was well liked."—E. T. Dunlap, Dunlap Theater, Wakefield, Neb.

"Light at Dusk"—"We had many fine compliments on this picture and it was generally said to be the best ever shown in town."—Smith M. Jolman, Opera House, Middlefield, O.

"The Suspect"—"The subject dealt with in 'The Suspect' is handled with great care and much credit should be handed the director for perfect detail in all of the scenes, exterior and interior."—W. S. Frischknecht, Orpheum Theater, Albany, New York.

"The Law Decides"—"Beyond any doubt the best feature I ever run. Pleased my audience immensely."—W. W. Morhort, Electric Theater, Holden, Mo.

"Badge of Courage"—"Fine picture, give us more of the kind."—Geo. H. Thomas, Iris Theater, Rigby, Idaho.

"Tarantula"—"Pleased myself as well as patrons in every way. Many comments on it. Business fair."—E. McClintock, Our Opera House, El Dorado Springs, Mo.

"Badge of Courage"—"As this was the first Vitagraph picture to be shown here it of course pleased the people as it was a change from most of the pictures that we have run. Several of our patrons stopped and told us how pleased they were."—Grant E. Hughes, Gorby Theater, Glenns Ferry, Idaho.

"Battle Cry of Peace"—"Broke all house records."—H. N. Bridkin, Orpheum Theater, Weleetka, Okla.

"Arsene Lupin"—"Some of the sub-titles were too short, picture one reel too long."—S. S. Wilkinson & Son, Crystal Theater, Hoisington, Kan.

"Arsene Lupin"—"While 'Arsene Lupin' did not show to the business we naturally expected Earle Williams to draw, it pleased all who saw it and caused favorable comments. Earle Williams has not been shown here for something over a year, which may explain the poor drawing quality of this release. Expect to do much better the next time we have him as he formerly was very popular here."—J. J. Marshall, Marshall Theater, Manhattan, Kan.

"The Money Mill"—"Our patrons say Dorothy Kelly is not good enough to star. Better cut her out quick."—E. B. Linck, Hippodrome Theater, Williamsport, Pa.

"Babette"—"This is an excellent picture."—J. L. King, Empress Theater, Laramie, Wyo.

"Fathers of Men"—"Few complaints only on ending. Very well acted throughout and no doubt ending was not as expected, which caused criticism."—C. R. Winn, Castalia Theater, Castalia, Ia.

"Whom the Gods Destroy"—"Attendance poor. Rotten weather and competition."—Hopkins & Larson, Majestic Theater, Oakland, Neb.

If any of your fans would like to know how a popular star looks eating spaghetti show him this picture, or write to Motography for the cut and run it in your program. We will loan you any cut you like, you know, if you let us know quick enough after you see it. His name? Oh, it's Bryant Washburn, the Essanay star who knocked 'em over in "Skinner's Dress Suit."

"Perwinkle" the newest American-Mutual picture featuring Mary Miles Minter. George Fisher is her romantic masculine background.

MARY MILES IN "PERIWINKLE"

Little Mutual Star Twinkles Through Latest Production, Though Dressed in Oilskins—Other Mutual Releases for Week

"Periwinkle," featuring Mary Miles Minter, is the Mutual star production for the week of June 11. This will mean extra heavy business if the exhibitor plays up the name of Mary Miles Minter, who is always a strong drawing card.

As "Periwinkle" deals with the life at a coast guard station, and Mary Miles Minter appears throughout the greater part of the story dressed in oilskins, an unusual and attractive lobby display could be arranged with a boat, life preservers, compasses, etc., with a little girl dressed in a complete suit of oilskins and big rubber boots walking up and down in front of the theater.

"A Watery Grave," the tenth chapter of "The Railroad Raiders," is scheduled for release June 11. The spectacular scenes are a fight between Helen Holmes and one of the raiders while riding the brake beams of a fast freight. Later she is placed in a freight car while unconscious. The car is pushed off the ferry into the bay and a tug runs into the car, cutting it in two.

"His Cannibal Wife," the La Salle comedy for June 11, is a story of a motion picture "extra" man who is the husband of the star of the company.

The Cub comedy for the week features George Ovey in "Jerry's Getaway," ready June 14.

In the thirteenth story of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series, scheduled for June 15, Jimmie Dale at last meets The Tocsin face to face but at the time he is partly unconscious from a blow and has only a dim remembrance of her face.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," for June 12, picture the islands, Capri, the celebrated island south of Naples, Italy, containing the famous Blue Grotto and the Rocks of the Sirens, and Antiqua, a British possession in the West Indies. The third section of the reel is devoted to Versailles, and a royal residence of France just outside of Paris.

"Mutual Weekly," reaching the screen June 13, will contain the usual assortment of patriotic news pictures as well as other events of importance.

"Reel Life," released June 14, devotes its longest section to showing how a large publishing house is equipped to turn out 12,000,000 copies each month. "How Big Guns Are Moved" is a section that makes a most timely picture. A third section is devoted to the hemp industry of rural Roumania.

WAR CREATES DEMAND

Scandinavia Switches from German and Italian to American Pictures—Secure Rights to "Intolerance" and "Birth of a Nation"

One of the important shifts in conditions that the war has brought about is shown in the presence here of John Olsen, the foremost film dealer of the Scandinavian countries, who has just opened offices in the Times Building, New York, and who will transfer his London representative to this country for the next few years.

Olsen & Co. of Copenhagen and London represent the largest renting concerns in Sweden, Norway and Denmark,

The first move made after the arrival of Mr. Olsen and his representative in this country last week was to purchase the Scandinavian rights for D. W. Griffith's productions "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation." These will be sent through the Norse countries on touring arrangements very similar to the manner in which the Griffith productions have been handled in this country.

Messrs. Olsen & Co. are exclusive buyers for the big Scandinavian firms of Fotoroma, Swedish Biograph and the Scandinavian Film Central, and will be in the American market from now on for the rights to current film productions. John Olsen, the head of the firm, was accompanied by O. Hemberg, of the Swedish Biograph, and Ernest Mattason, who has been their London representative. The latter will remain in this country and will have charge of the American offices in the Times Building.

"It was only about a year ago," said Mr. Olsen, "that we discovered an increasing demand for American pictures. Prior to that time our patrons wanted only the Italian and German pictures. They said the American pictures were too jerky and speedy. Last season we made arrangements for the Triangle pictures and these, I think, paved the way for others. Now American subjects are in the greatest demand and have practically eliminated the older pictures. Our people like clean, wholesome films, with a preference for comedy dramas that are snappy in action but which have a sentimental appeal also.

"I find that your American manufacturers have an exaggerated idea of the possibilities in our countries. At present we have about eleven million people to draw from and can use from three to five copies of any given film subject. You see, we do not have the number of large cities or towns in proportion to our population that you have in America and therefore have fewer theaters to supply. However, now that the American subjects have taken a firm foothold in the esteem of our patrons, the demand will grow, and this is why we are opening a New York branch. It will bring us in closer touch with the available supply of material in this country."

Selling Films Abroad

Chester Beecroft has sailed from New York in the interests of his film export business. He expects to visit England, France, Scandinavia and Russia, placing productions he is now handling and cementing relations to further strengthen his outlet on the European film market for the future.

Though acting independently for only seven months Mr. Beecroft has established himself in an enviable position to deal with the question of foreign sales. He has put over some of the biggest deals ever recorded in film history for foreign rights and has marketed an unusual amount of film to the advantage of both seller and buyer.

Mr. Beecroft's business will continue to be handled from his offices at 501 Fifth Avenue, New York. New brands and productions are being constantly added to his list so that many of the choice American films are in his hands for sale abroad.

Mr. Beecroft expects that his European trip will cover ten weeks' time.

Big Circuits Book Feature

Following the run of "One Law for Both," the Ivan Film Productions' latest release, which is now being shown at the Lyric Theater, Broadway and Forty-second street, New York City, the picture will be shown in all of the theaters controlled by the United Booking Offices, and the newly organized Exhibitors' Board of Trade, according to an announcement made this week by the Merit Film Corporation, of 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, the distributor of the production in New York and New Jersey.

The booking of "One Law for Both" in the entire chain of theaters controlled by the United Booking Offices is said to be one of the most important bookings obtainable in the East. The circuit comprises over twenty houses in and about the Metropolitan district.

New Lewis Picture Coming

Edgar Lewis, whose "Bar Sinister," now showing at the Broadway Theater, New York City, has been acclaimed a distinct triumph in photo-drama, is busily engaged on a new picture dealing with a vitally important theme. The scenic demands of this picture are so unique and of such magnitude as to tax the constructive ability of Mr. Lewis' technical staff to a greater degree than any previous Lewis picture. This phase of the work is under the supervision of J. R. Chamberlin. The cast includes such well-known actors as Mitchell Lewis, Victor Sutherland, Hedda Nova, William A. Williams, Mabel Juline Scott and Edward J. Roseman.

CHANGE IN TRIANGLE

Jack Devereaux, Bessie Barriscale, Enid Bennett, Louis Glaum, Wilfred Lucas, and William Desmond Starred in Strong Plays.

There has been a rearrangement of the Triangle release schedule for June. "Wolf Lowry," the William S. Hart production which was originally announced for release June 10 was put forward on the program two weeks and shown in first-run houses May 27, together with "The Millionaire Vagrant," in which Charles Ray is being starred.

The releases for June 3 remained unchanged, Jack Devereaux appearing in "American—That's All!" under the supervision of Allan Dwan, and Bessie Barriscale appearing in "Bawbs o' the Blue Ridge," under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Enid Bennett and Louis Glaum are the stars of the Ince-Kay Bee productions for June 10. Miss Bennett will appear in a play by C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Girl, Glory," while Louise Glaum will be headlined in a silent drama of life among society's misfits, called "Love or Justice?"

A comedy with a strong and interesting dramatic structure, "The Girl, Glory" deals with the troubles that were encountered by Glory Wharton, the pet of the village, in trying to reform her grandfather whose capacity for strong drink seemed at times greater than his prestige as a Civil War hero. How the girl accomplished this laudable purpose by closing up the local fire-water bazaar is shown with many realistic and amusing touches.

"Love or Justice?" is the title of Louise Glaum's starring vehicle, which is said to give her opportunity for the most forceful and vivid characterization that she has yet contributed to the Triangle program.

Wilfred Lucas, Elda Millar and William Desmond will be starred in the Triangle Eastern and Kay Bee productions released June 17. "Her Excellency, the Governor" is the name of the play in which Wilfred Lucas and Elda Millar are to be jointly featured under the supervision of Allan Dwan. Thomas H. Ince will present William Desmond on the same date in a Kay Bee drama from the pen of J. G. Hawkins, entitled "Paws of the Bear."

"Her Excellency, the Governor" tells the story of an intelligent American girl who is elected lieutenant-governor of her state. An unusual crisis develops when an appropriation bill designed to furnish war funds to the national government is about to be vetoed by Barclay, the governor, who has fallen under the influence of the hyphenated interests.

"Paws of the Bear," William Desmond's starring vehicle, is a story of plot and counterplot, in which the black art of Russia's diplomatic service is pitted against the shrewd Yankee wiles of our own secret service. The scenes of the story rapidly shift from Belgium to Russia, from Russia to Paris and through France to the United States, where the final chapters in this exciting drama are worked out to a satisfying conclusion.

Samuel Goldfish, Edgar Selwyn, Archibald Selwyn, Arthur Hopkins, Crosby Gaige.

AUTHORS

Irvin S. Cobb, Margaret Mayo, Porter Emerson Browne, Robert McLaughlin, Roi Cooper Megrue, Edgar Selwyn, Arthur Train, and many others.

STARS

Mae Marsh, Maxine Elliott, Madge Kennedy, Mary Garden, Jane Cowl, and others to be announced shortly.

SPECIALISTS

Hugo Ballin, Adrian Gil-Spear, Diana Huneker, Everitt Shinn, Edith Ellis, Emmett Campbell Hall, Jane Guthrie.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, with the beginning of June, concludes its first six months of active operation with a record that has rarely been paralleled by a film producing organization. The first two months of the company's existence was devoted to internal organization and the selection of the men and women who were to do the work the founders of Goldwyn had in mind. Consequently, but four of the first six months have been devoted to production.

In six months Goldwyn's comprehensive organization has—

1. Organized and operated two studios in New Jersey.
2. Completed five productions with others ready to be started.
3. Organized the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation to operate branches and distribute Goldwyn Pictures from a score or more American cities.
4. Organized Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., of Canada with offices in six cities of the Dominion to handle Goldwyn Pictures there.
5. Lined up a chain of the biggest motion picture theaters in America for "first runs" headed by the famous Strand Theater, New York.
6. Leased and equipped branch offices throughout America and will begin opening them as early as June 15.
7. Prepared for virtually a simultaneous release of its productions throughout English-speaking countries with similar organization almost effected for many foreign lands.
8. Created its own directors and technical experts from the ranks of the greatest American artists and disregarded practically all of the production traditions of the industry.

One of the great advantages of the Goldwyn organization is that it is owned in its entirety by the men and women who are its officers and operating executives. Its policies and methods are shaped entirely from within its own walls and are subject to no dictation from without. The financing of the corporation from within has been an enormous feat, especially when it is noted that twelve completed productions in advance of the first release in September involves an outlay of considerably more than $1,000,000 and the opening of a chain of exchanges in June involves an overhead till September 1 of at least half of that amount, aside from realty leases that extend over other years.

Most important of all policies from the exhibitors' standpoint is the Goldwyn adoption of the mercantile system of marketing pictures along lines followed by great merchants and manufacturers. It was felt that exhibitors should know far in advance just what pictures they were to have the chance to rent from Goldwyn and that the quality of the productions was a provable thing, rather than something based on mere promises.

The important business and distribution policies adopted may be summarized briefly as follows:

1. To have the Goldwyn name as the only imprint ever to be used in the marketing of Goldwyn Pictures throughout the world.
2. To own and operate all of its own branches and maintain direct company contracts with all exhibitors.
3. To offer all Goldwyn productions to exhibitors on the "open booking" plan.
4. To establish rentals that approximate the regional conditions where the Goldwyn Pictures are presented.
5. To place Goldwyn Pictures within the reach of the small exhibitors everywhere.

Announcement is to be made in a few days of Goldwyn's branch managers throughout the country and of the address of the new chain of Goldwyn exchanges both in the United States and Canada.

Ethel Clayton in "The Stolen Paradise" plays her last engagement for some time with Edward Langford as her leading support, Mr. Langford having gone off to the war. For some time to come Miss Clayton will have the assistance of Milton Sills as leading man, Mr. Sills making his first appearance in this capacity when "Chasms" is thrown upon the screen for World-Pictures Brady-Made.

Mae Marsh—Rule Breaker

By Janet Priest
Of Pictures Magazine.

She doesn't marcel her hair nor depend upon clothes for her appeal. She doesn't do things as anyone else in the world would do them, and that is exactly why she is such a tremendous favorite.

Mae Marsh is the whim girl of the films. She seems to do everything just because it comes into her head to do it. Probably there is a reason for it. Who knows when the wind will blow—or why? Yet it does, and doubtless there is a good reason for that too, if the weather man would only tell us the truth about it. The funny part of it is that she expresses nothing according to the old accepted rules. She has invented her own technique, or else hasn't any at all, according to the way you look at it. Anyone else does set things to express set emotions. Mae Marsh holds up one finger, and it may mean welcome or scorn. She giggles, and it may mean not joy, but despair. And people understand her, because she is just herself. With other people it would be artificial; with her it is just as natural as the air she breathes.

In an effort to discover why she does things differently I went to call on this fascinatingly different actress. I found her sitting in her library reading the encyclopedia.

"Mother says Mark Twain used to read the dictionary," said Miss Marsh. "He though it was interesting reading, but a trifle disconnected. That's just what I like about the encyclopedia."

Undoubtedly this remarkable girl does profit greatly from her miscellaneous reading, for she has a breadth of vision and grasp of affairs unusual in so young a woman. Somewhat the same method is followed in her dramatic work. She studies stage technique carefully and if obliged to do so could act a dramatic part according to all the rules. Then, when she steps in front of the camera she straightway forgets all about it. She acts parts, not as actors act them, but as people live them. She acts your own emotion, not in the way you would express it, but in the way you feel it. This sensitive child is like an Aeolian harp, across whose strings sweep the winds of the world's emotions. The actions of civilized people are as a rule quite conservative. Their emotions, perhaps, are not. It is the emotions of others that Mae Marsh expresses by those weird, odd, little movements and expressions of hers.

"How do you do it?" Miss Marsh was asked.

"Why, I just act whatever comes into my head when I'm told the story of the play," said this whim girl. "I give myself up to the part, and I do whatever fancy seems to dictate. I believe that if more people would do that, and not try to hold themselves down by stupid rules, they would be more natural. Not that I wish to give a lecture on the subject. Goodness, no! But that's my way!" And her way is good enough for thousands of motion picture "fans" the world over.

Hats Off to Mary Murillo

A fair-haired little person in William Fox's scenario department, still in her twenties, has produced the 'scripts for twenty-five of his big feature photoplays during the past year.

The phenomenal success of little Mary Murillo is probably without parallel among staff writers of any film company. She is a little woman with big ideas.

She has herself written twenty-two scenarios to suit the needs of thirteen different screen and stage stars, in a year, for Fox Flm Corporation. In addition, she turned out the 'scripts for "Love and Hate" and "Hypocrisy" on the basis of two stories submitted by others, and wrote "Princess Romanoff" before she joined the Fox forces.

Nineteen of Miss Murillo's scenarios have already been produced; three will be released in the near future, and three more are now in work.

Miss Murillo has always been an acomplished musician.

While still in her 'teens, she came to America from a spot called Tipperary, just across the sea, and sought a stage position. For a short time, she was in the chorus of "Havana," but left to play the part of Mimi, the lead in "The Only Way," with Reginald Parker's company.

Her next engagement was the bride in "Dear Old Billy," with William Hawtrey in Chicago. Then she had the ingenue parts in the Annie Russell revivals about three years ago at the Thirty-Ninth Street Theater, in New York City.

Miss Murillo sold her first story—a comedy—to the Smalleys. They told her to write another. Instead, she wrote two, and the Smalleys bought them both.

Some of the best known films for which Miss Murillo provided the scenarios are:

"A Soldier's Oath," "The Little Gypsy," "Sins of Men," "A Fool's Revenge," "The Green-Eyed Monster," "Gold and the Woman," "The Eternal Sapho," "East Lynne," "Her Double Life," "The Vixen," "Blazing Love," "The War Bride's Secret," and "Ambition."

Look Out for This Fellow

Exhibitors in all parts of the country are warned by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to be on the lookout for a man who calls himself C. F. Rogers and who pretends to be employed by the Universal as a salesman. He is an impostor and should he appear at any motion picture theater or film exchange, the police should be notified at once.

The Rogers person represents himself as hailing from the Chicago office of the Universal. He first made himself known in Springfield, Ohio, where he called upon Mr. Gus Sun, an exhibitor using Universal films. After talking a short time he left but returned again after Mr. Sun had left his office and by pretext managed to get hold of a check for $35.00 which he forged and had cashed. He also took a blank check for $12 which he forged and had cashed.

Pickford Picture Powerful Puller

That the new Mary Pickford as disclosed in Cecil B. De Mille's current creation for Artcraft, "A Romance of the Redwoods," has taken a firm hold on the heart of the country, has become an established fact, it is announced by Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

"In confirmation of the splendid notices given this picture in the trade and daily press," said Mr. Greene, "'A Romance of the Redwoods' discloses another great triumph for Mary Pickford which is borne out by the fact that this production bids fair to establish a new record in the way of rebookings and extended engagements."

Some remarkable fight scenes have been filmed for the five-reel Universal production, "Safe," featuring Jack Mulhall, with Ann Kroman playing opposite.

RUSSIAN ART FILMS IN U. S.

Nathan S. Kaplan Leaves Petrograd Second Day of Revolution with Twenty Trunks of Pictures —Has Exciting Time Getting to America

The Russian art films have arrived in this country under the guidance of Nathan S. Kaplan, an American citizen long resident in France and Russia, and the standard works of Tolstoy, Turgenieff, Dostoevsky, Pushkin, Gogel, Ostrovsky, Andreef and other prominent Slav authors will be seen here in their picturized form for the first time outside of Russia, where the filmed versions of their novels and dramas have shared the popularity of the books and stage plays. At the same time the screen acting of the leading Russian artists of the national theaters in Moscow and Petrograd will be exhibited in these same productions. These comprise many of the names that have placed the Russian theater in the forefront during the last quarter century. The services of the players for screen work were obtained by special permission of the Czar, and the pictures were shown at Tsarskoye Selo before being exhibited to the public.

At the very beginning of the 17,000-mile journey from Petrograd to New York, via Siberia, Japan and the Pacific, the twenty trunks of pictures escaped as by a miracle destruction at the hands of the Russian revolutionaries at that time actively hostile to whatever bore the seal of the Czar. Mr. Kaplan, accompanied by his wife and with the precious negatives in his personal charge, got out of Petrograd on the second Tuesday of the revolution. Machine guns worked by the police were still firing from the tops of buildings, and soldiers, workingmen and students occupied the streets in wild disorder. He succeeded in obtaining an escort of twenty revolutionary soldiers who were personally friendly to him. Three times was the Kaplan party fired upon by the police on their way from the residential district to the railroad station, part of which was discovered to be in flames.

Six weeks of the journey came to an end early in May. The negatives of the films were passed by the Custom House a few days ago, and as soon as prints of some are developed New York will see them in a Broadway presentation.

Steger and Golden Picture

Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden, co-directors of "Redemption," the big Evelyn Nesbit picture playing at the George M. Cohan Theater, New York, have reason to congratulate themselves on the success of their efforts. The feature has been doing big business since its opening, giving proof of the wide-spread favor the offering has found in the public eye. "Redemption" lifts the curtain on Evelyn Nesbit as a dramatic actress of rare talent. The unanimous verdict of the press is that the picture is a big money-getter.

Gail Kane, the clever young Broadway star whose success in screen productions was a foregone conclusion by reason of her beauty and talent, has been admirably suited in "The Upper Crust," a remarkable story adapted from Charles Sherman's successful novel, "The Indiscretions of Molly."

METRO EXPANDS

Increases Capitalization From $400,000 to $2,600,000 —Prepares Now to Enter Field as Contender for First Honors

Preparing for larger enterprises and greater activity in the motion picture field, the Metro Pictures Corporation announces that it has re-incorporated at Albany, increasing its capitalization from $400,000 to $2,600,000. The new issue was subscribed entirely by the Metro group, and none of the stock will be offered to the public. The officers under the new regime remain as before.

In the re-incorporation the business of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation and Popular Plays & Players, Inc., three of Metro's manufacturing companies, were taken over by the parent company.

It was announced at the Metro offices that this reorganization was the first step toward Metro's entrance into the field as a contender for first honors, and that this step was merely the means of putting the Metro house in order to meet the new conditions and enlarge its field of activities.

Mr. Rolfe has completed the organization of a new scenario department, and a double director system will be inaugurated so that directors will work one month actively in the taking of the picture and then spend one month in the cutting of the product finished and in preparation for a new script. In this way such stars as Ethel Barrymore, Emmy Wehlen, Viola Dana and Mabel Taliaferro will be directed alternately by two directors.

Under the new system the exhibitor will be permitted to book the program or contract for the stars, thus placing Metro in the position of being neither for nor against the open booking policy and neither for nor against the program policy, but striking a new plan which is likely to solve the problems which both systems present.

Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, in speaking on this subject, said:

Metro is not prepared to say at this time whether open booking or the program is to be the rule. While open booking permits of larger profits, it also opens up avenues for waste and expense, and this expense naturally must be charged to the exhibitor. We are not in favor of a picture where the star's salary and the waste cost ninety per cent and the production costs ten per cent of the given sum.

Metro is willing to book all stars or all productions according to the wish of the exhibitor. We do not believe that the exhibitor can satisfy his patrons with over-advertised, inferior productions, but we do believe, now that we are on the subject of advertising, that an exhibitor is justified in advertising in his neighborhood a star who is to appear frequently upon his screen. We ask no exhibitor to advertise our program, but we suggest to him that after he has booked our pictures by stars that he, for his own benefit, advertise the stars locally.

In the Metro productions the sex picture will be conspicuous by its absence. Metro productions will be offered at a price that is fair to both sides, and by this I mean that the exhibitor must make money or his contract is worthless to this company.

"Show Me's" Convene

St. Louis, one of the last cities to receive a state charter from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has already seen its first state exhibitors convention.

The tax bills pending in congress and the realization among the theater owners that their strength, if they ever should want to exert it, would be greatly increased by co-operation and mutual understanding caused numbers to pour in for the days of May 31 and June 1 greater even than had been anticipated by the most sanguine.

Officers for the state organization were elected at this convention and delegates to the National Chicago Convention next month were chosen. Much business of importance was discussed, and plans were started forward to facilitate the formation of local exhibitors' organizations throughout the state. Under the constitution any five members in any city in Missouri can organize a local and procure a charter from the St. Louis State organization.

Reverse English on Stage to Screen

For a single night last week the legitimate stage came back to its own when all the loveliest screen women in New York forsook the camera for the footlights. The occasion that reversed the usual flow from stage to screen was a benefit given by the Motion Picture Players' Division of the Stage Women's War Relief. And the gentler apostles of the silent drama gave convincing proof that it was a sad day for the stage when the moving picture camera was invented. The players trod the boards in song, dance and tableaux and raised a large sum for the Comfort Kit Fund.

The roster of stars did not end with the list of persons appearing in the entertainment, for a large number who avoided the uncertain beams of the spotlight, yet worked for the success of the affair. On the various committees were Winifred Allen, Vivian Cabanne, Beatrice Ditson, Hazel Isham, Nancy Palmer, Marie Doro, Mollie King, Anita Stewart, Anna Q. Nilsson, Mabel Normand, Constance Talmadge, Naomi Childers, Dorothy Gish and Bess Meredyth. Among the guests could be found Dorothy Donnelly, Peggy O'Neil, W. Christy Cabanne, Antonio Moreno, Jeanne Eagels, Dorothy Bernard, Jack Devereaux, Mrs. Terry Ramsaye, Beulah Livingstone, Agnes Smith, Herb Roth, Corinne Uzzell, J. Stuart Blackton and Roi Cooper Megrue.

An Original Ending

An entirely new, original and clever ending for a motion picture closes "The Dazzling Miss Davison," Mutual star production. The audience will not be bored with the conventional done-to-death ending of a fade out on the two lovers kissing. Miss Marjorie Rambeau is the star. The production is scheduled for release June 18.

The author, director, members of the cast, or whoever is responsible for this happy innovation is to be congratulated. What is the ending? It would spoil the whole thing to tell. Wait until you see the picture.

Japanese Like Pictures

"We in Japan find the cinema art most fascinat-" ing," said Kazue Norisugi at the Universal City a few days ago. "I can safely say," he continued, "that the films in my country are growing in popularity and that good pictures draw equally as well in Japan as elsewhere."

Mr. Norisugi is the inspector general for the minister of public instruction in the land of the cherry blossom and has come to the United States for the purpose of making a study of educational conditions. "American films are in great demand in Japan," said Mr. Norisugi, "and while the censors are extremely strict in their elimination of scenes that are compatible with neither the life nor the views of Japanese, still we are shown sufficient of the photoplays to interest us. The people of Japan like the films chiefly for what they learn from them of the customs of the Americans."

Getting mail in the trenches—From the war pictures released by Mutual under the title "Heroic France."

"HEROIC FRANCE" READY

Impressive Pictures to Be Released Through Mutual—Photographer Carrying Green Pass Shoots Death Itself on Battle Front

"Heroic France"—the thrilling war pictures taken by Merl La Voy during twenty-two months on the battle fronts in France—were made available June 4 under the Mutual Film Corporation contracts with Mr. La Voy.

Most of the war pictures so far shown have been rather remote from the firing line. These pictures were made under the muzzles of the guns. Here are the French artillery batteries swinging into line for one of the big "punches" on the Verdun front—there the ambulance corps men tending wounded under fire—a few steps further on the grim-visaged poilu escorting a company of German captives to the rear.

There is nothing uncertain about these war pictures. Mr. La Voy made them under the authority of the American Relief Clearing House and he took the same chances in filming them that a combatant takes. Verdun was still under bombardment when the pictures of that ruined citadel were taken. Shells were bursting within less than a quarter of a mile of the photographer when he made the pictures.

La Voy's life wasn't worth a plugged nickel to the First Aid corps, because La Voy was a mere adventurer, making pictures. He had a "green pass," which means "let him alone." The young American was let alone and he got the pictures.

Margaret Widdemer's story, "The Rose Garden Husband," is being filmed in five reels by Universal.

Mayfair Busy

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the Mayfair Film Corporation, and his company of Mayfair artists are at present in the country where a majority of the exterior scenes for Mayfair's first production are being taken. The beautiful country, with its true loveliness, is most commensurate with the charming and exquisite "Persuasive Peggy."

Charles J. Brabin is in charge of the direction of the inimitable Peggy Hyland, while "Bill" Davidson is playing opposite her.

The story, by the well-known authoress, Maravene Thompson, has appeared serially in McClure's Magazine, and is now running in the foremost newspapers throughout the United States and Canada. It is a winsome, charming tale of married life and there are six wonderful adventures that will be screened in the most fascinating and original way.

Jane Cowl's First Goldwyn

Jane Cowl's first Goldwyn Picture is being directed by Arthur Hopkins, chief of the Goldwyn producing organization. Among those in the cast supporting this ablest of American emotional stars are some of the best known players of the screen and stage.

Miss Cowl has chosen for her first story in Goldwyn Pictures one of the works of Basil King, whose novels, "The Inner Shrine," "The Spreading Dawn," and "Wild Olive," have been tremendously successful both in this country and in England. Unusual situations and a number of rather novel problems are encountered in the course of the photoplay version of this story. Perhaps photoplay audiences can suggest how best to meet some of the situations with which the heroine is confronted.

Exhibitors Discuss War Tax

A meeting of the Executive Committee of New York Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held Tuesday, May 29, at their headquarters at 218 West Forty-second street, with President Samuel H. Trigger presiding. A full membership was present.

The meeting was called for the purpose of getting the different views of the exhibitors on the proposed war tax of the motion picture theaters. After a thorough discussion of the matter in all its various phases, a motion was made by Sidney Cohen, to endorse the brief submitted to the Senate Finance Committee by our representative in Washington. Sidney Ascher moved as an amendment that this local go on record endorsing the report of the Senate Finance Committee, eliminating the tax on film footage, and exempting from the admission ticket tax, the five and ten-cent theaters. The original motion was thereupon withdrawn and Mr. Ascher's amendment was unanimously carried.

A notice to this effect was mailed to every senator and congressman in Washington with a request to support that portion of the bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee, relating to the tax on the picture industry.

The last regular monthly meeting of the local was held Wednesday, June 6.

JULY 4 LIBERTY LOAN DAY

All Picture Houses on That Day to Aid Loan Plan of V. L. S. E.—Cut Rate Performances Are Suggested

The entire V. L. S. E. sales organization has received instructions to carry on an intensive campaign for the purpose of making July 4 Liberty Loan day in every motion picture theater in the United States.

The instructions stipulate that it makes absolutely no difference whether a theater owner shows the Greater Vitagraph product or that of some other manufacturer. He is to receive the same wholesome cooperation of the regular Greater Vitagraph patron.

The plan suggested by V. L. S. E. is in line with intensified merchandising methods used by large department stores when they sell a "leader" for less than its face value and in keeping with the methods of the stores that give trading stamps with purchases. While apparently the customers are getting something for nothing, in reality they are paying full price, either through the purchase in the department stores of goods other than the marked down leaders or paying a higher price in the store that gives away trading stamps to cover the original cost of the stamp premiums.

V. L. S. E. salesmen first suggest that every motion picture theater in the country at each performance on July 4 run the seventy-five feet of film prepared by the National Association to advertise the bonds. Following the presentation of the advertising film it is suggested that the theater manager make a short address explaining that he is conducting a cut-price advance sale of orders on the box office for future performances at the theater, the money obtained from this advance sale to be used in the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

There are two incentives to the theater patrons to purchase the advance orders, the first because they are enabled to purchase these orders at a reduction in price and the second for purely patriotic motives, knowing that the receipts from the sale of the advance orders will go toward the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

It should be expressly stipulated on the advance orders sold that the tickets obtained on the orders will not be good for entrance to the theater on Saturdays or Sundays or on any day on which special attractions calling for an increase in the regular admission price are shown.

As outlined by the V. L. S. E. salesmen a theater at which the regular admission price is ten cents will sell these advance orders on the box office for five cents each, but stipulating that each order must call for at least two and not more than four tickets.

On the face of the plan it looks very much like a cut rate theater sale but the persons connected with V. L. S. E. responsible for the suggestion declare that it is not a cut rate sale in any way because less than fifty per cent of the orders for the tickets will be presented at the box office for redemption, thus making those that are presented worth the regular admission price at the theater.

Another argument advanced is that through the sale of these advance orders persons will extend their motion picture theater patronage to the extent of probably using the order for which they have paid their money for an extra evening at the theater.

It also is argued that many of the advance orders sold will be used by children at matinees and in this manner the seats so often vacant during the afternoon performances will be filled with a like increase in revenue.

Howard Makes Trip East

W. K. Howard, manager of the Minneapolis branch of V. L. S. E., on May 28 made a flying trip to the home office in New York for the purpose of discussing forthcoming Blue Ribbon releases and to make a report on the general conditions in his territory, which he declares are better than they have been for some time.

Quite a number of theaters are closing, according to Mr. Howard, but in nearly every case this is due rather on account of lack of necessity for motion picture houses in particular localities, than any lack of interest on the part of the public.

"In the Northwest," said Mr. Howard, "the business appears to be finding itself. The period of disorganization has run its course and the reconstruction period is well started. Successful exhibitors are adding to their theater holdings while the unsuccessful houses are closing.

"As a sample of what this reconstruction is doing the big downtown theaters in Minneapolis now are controlled by one firm. Recently this firm took over the Lyric Theater, formerly controlled by the Elliott-Sherman Company. Contrary to the expectation of many persons this single control of several houses is not having the deterrent effect on the business as predicted by many of the producers.

"The chain house owners appear to realize that their success depends largely upon the pictures they book and they also appear to realize that their monopoly cannot continue unless they give attractions justified by their admission prices."

Mr. Howard, whose district is the largest in the country from the standpoint of territory occupied, says that conditions in North and South Dakota are splendid and that everything in upper Michigan is booming.

Julian Eltinge with Famous Players

Julian Eltinge, the celebrated impersonator of feminine roles, has been added to the list of Famous Players-Lasky stars. This popular actor will make his picture debut under the new selective booking arrangement which is to go into effect on August 5.

Julian Eltinge has just completed his second season in the tremendously successful comedy, "Cousin Lucy," in which he has toured the country. The name of Julian Eltinge is known in every part of the world, for he has traveled from one end of this country to the other and all over Europe in his various successful plays after completing wonderfully lucrative seasons in New York. His fame is further perpetuated by the erection of the Eltinge Theater in New York.

W. Somerset Maugham, the celebrated author and dramatist, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to write especially for its photoplay productions. The motion picture rights to Mr. Maugham's successful play, "The Land of Promise," have been obtained by the producers and will be adapted for Billie Burke by Mr. Maugham himself. This will constitute Billie Burke's second Famous Players-Paramount picture, as it is planned to have "The Land of Promise" follow the adaptation of Gelett Burgess' "The Mysterious Miss Terry," which is now being produced.

U. S. A. LEADS WORLD

Control of Film Production Centralized Here—Films to Extent to $4,968,000 Exported to Britain Alone in 1916

The report of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce shows that the United States leads the world in the manufacture of motion picture films of all sorts and in the production of film plays. Even the control of the distribution of films has become centralized in this country. The report says:

The United Kingdom at present and for some time past has been America's greatest customer, the best available statistics for the calendar year of 1916 giving the value of motion picture films imported into Great Britain at $4,968,000. Canada and France are other great customers—indeed, there is not a country on the face of the globe where motion pictures are shown that do not exhibit American-made films. And the industry is rapidly growing.

Some figures for the calendar year of 1916 may be of interest: In 1916 there were 224,518,880 linear feet of motion picture films exported, worth $9,261,075, as compared with 189,888,837 feet in 1915, worth $6,713,174, and 117,580,304 in 1914, valued at $4,742,620. In other words, the export business of the motion picture industry has almost doubled in the past two years.

In 1916 the United Kingdom took $4,968,727 of the $9,261,075 total, while Canada took $995,421, France $574,322, Brazil $74,774 and all other countries the balance of $2,647,831. This compared with 1915, when the United Kingdom took $4,254,235 of the $6,713,174 total, and Canada $857,678, will give some idea of the relative proportion of the trade with Great Britain, as compared with that of the balance of the world. But these figures should not be construed as indicating that attractive markets are not to be found elsewhere. Indeed, some of the most attractive fields for development imaginable are elsewhere, South America, for instance, South Africa, Australia and the isles of the sea. But for the present, the United Kingdom holds forth the center of the export trade situation, and very deservedly so.

Ince Technical Director

M. Doner, who for the past two years has been head of the department of sculpture at the Triangle-Ince studios in Culver City, has been appointed technical director of the plant by Thomas H. Ince.

Doner is a sculptor and artist with an international reputation, and his works have been awarded many grand prizes in European exhibitions. His ability, combined with his long association with Producer Ince, eminently qualifies him to assume his new responsibilities.

The office of technical director is one of the most important in modern studio organization. The person filling the post must be familiar not merely with all architectural periods for the sake of accuracy in the various scenes used, but must be conversant with all minor details of life in bygone and modern times, including such ordinarily inconsidered trifles as jewelled ornaments, lamps, slippers, and so forth.

Of course it is impossible for any one man to bear all of this historical information in mind, but he must know just where it may be found at a moment's notice, and know it when he sees it.

Run of Nesbit Film Extended

With the beginning of the third week of Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, in "Redemption," at the George M. Cohan Theater, New York, during which time capacity audiences have attended every performance and hundreds have been turned away, this unusual picture looms up as one of the best stateright propositions of the year and will be marketed as such.

The wonderful drawing power of Evelyn Nesbit's name, combined with the excellence of the picture, has proved even greater than expected, and is sure to be the same all over the country.

The picture was originally intended to remain for only two weeks, but the time has been extended further. The line has extended from the box office out on Broadway and often around the corner of Forty-second street, that it required extra police to handle it.

Evelyn Nesbit in "Redemption." This picture has proved to be one of the strongest pullers New York has known. It is soon to be marketed via the state rights route.

These pictures give but a hint of the impressive beauty of "Christus," the remarkable film story taken from the scriptures. The picture, because of its depth of idea and beauty of presentation, is now creating a unique impression in New York.

FILMING SCRIPTURES

Educational Film Corporation at Work on "Christus" —Famous Masterpiece of Art and Scripture Woven into Story

In these times, flooded with immoral films, which spread scandal and cause the ruin of many souls, the creation of a corporation drawing its inspiration from the earnest principles of the Christian faith and ethics, with educational achievements as its aim, deserves the highest praise.

Since pictures have become the most successful means of attracting people, who like, enjoy, and desire them more than any other form of amusement, it is natural for some persons, keeping the appearance of diversion, to refrain from setting low standards. This is what the recently formed educational film corporation intends to do. In fact, it has now begun its activity with the film "Christus" based on a poem by Fausto Salvatori. which is an elegant paraphrase of the Sacred Scriptures.

The film is splendid on account of its wealth, variety and perfection of scenes. It has the depth of mystic sentiments, the intense power of expression with which it underlines almost every word of the hold books, and the mysterious atmosphere of art.

Particularly deserving of praise is the idea of getting inspiration from the famous masterpieces of sculpture and painting in order to produce beautiful scenes illustrating the religious mysteries.

If the scenes which depict the divine figure of Christ appear marvelous for grace, tenderness, and highly expressive power, those which show immense masses of people are wonderfully imposing, whether they be the caravans of the desert, the shepherds adoring the God-child, people who bless and sing hosannas to the Redeemer, or the crowd mad with hate and clamoring for blood desiring his death.

Scrupulously accurate is the historical fidelity of the rich costumes. The landscapes present the enchantments of the Oriental lands, the sun-baked sands of Egypt, the flowery banks of the Jordan, the palm groves of the Nile, and the waves of Lake Tiberias.

Wholesome Company at Work

M. J. Weisfeldt, general manager of Wholesome Films Corporation, announces that production already has started on "Everybody's Lonesome," one of the most delightful of the many good stories from the pen of Miss Clara E. Laughlin. Release date for the new picture, the first on the Wholesome program, will be decided upon and announced shortly.

"Everybody's Lonesome" will be presented as a five-reel drama with a thoroughly competent cast of Wholesome Players. Miss Laughlin herself is supervising the work of picturizing her famous story.

Mr. Weisfeldt announces that in addition to "Everybody's Lonesome," production will shortly begin on another of Miss Laughlin's works, "The Penny Philanthropist."

"It is my belief that Miss Laughlin will become one of the most popular screen writers of the day," Mr. Weisfeldt asserted. "Her writings have the human touch that the public loves. Her stories are natural—true to life—and everything she ever has written measures up to the new standard of wholesomeness which this company is to present on the screen.

"She has a following of tens of thousands who have read the many novels she has written and are eagerly awaiting the presentation of her stories in motion pictures. A new novel by Miss Laughlin, "The Heart of Her Highness,' is to be published in August by G. P. Putnam & Sons. This story, dealing with the exquisite love of Mary of Burgundy, is expected to be happily adaptable to screen presentation."

Has a Quiet Job

Just because Century Comedies are not turned out in multiple reels for each subject is no reason for General Director John G. Blystone having on his hands any great amount of idle time. What with personally directing Alice Howell, star of Century Comedies, in all of her production, Mr. Blystone writes the scenarios, arranges all the details of production, passes on the locations, edits the completed product, and sees that it is shipped in good order to President Julius Stern, at Century headquarters in New York.

"Balloonatics," "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughters" are now in readiness to distribute, particular attention being paid to the first named release, which was the first Century Comedy to be circulated.

"The Boots of Beatrice" is the title of a five-reel comedy drama being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Louis W. Chaudet. It features dainty Ruth Stonehouse, with Roy Stewart playing opposite, and with Kingsley Benedict and Donna Moon in support.

CHAPLIN CHRISTENS LATEST

"The Immigrant" Selected as Title of New Side-Cracker—Date for Release Not Yet Made Public

Charlie Chaplin's next picture will be called "The Immigrant."

After weeks of work the film has been completed at the Lone Star studio near Los Angeles. Neither Chaplain nor John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, knows yet when "The Immigrant" will be released. The extra work and extreme care which Mr. Chaplin is putting into his picture have made it impossible to follow any set schedule in releasing the Chaplin-Mutuals. Release date of "The Cure," the comedy preceding "The Immigrant," was postponed twice because Mr. Chaplin was not satisfied with the finishing touches and until it is absolutely certain that there will be no postponement, the date upon which "The Immigrant" will be first shown will not be made public.

Chaplin not only performs in his comedies but he originates the plots, prepares and revises the scenarios, directs production, edits the film, and selects the titles. Until the picture is finished nobody but Chaplin knows the name under which it is to be known, and frequently he does not choose the title until he sees the completed picture.

Many of the scenes in "The Immigrant" are taken in the steerage of an ocean liner. Charlie plays the role of an immigrant, bound for the land of liberty. Arriving in America without funds, he discovers that money is not picked up on the street as he supposed, and he begins the game of bluff to beat the high cost of living.

"Fatty's" Third Comedy

"A Rough House" is the third of the series of Paramount Arbuckle comedies that Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle will appear in. The latest comedy was christened that name by the robust comedian who has proven that he is "worth his weight in laughs" for the public and more than his weight in gold for the exhibitor. This picture will be released to all exhibitors.

In this third picture Fatty has left nothing undone or untouched to make it the most screamingly hilarious production he has ever appeared in. He actually hired the largest cabaret in New York City to act in a number of the scenes of the picture, and the settings of the entire production are without precedent in the history of the industry. Then, too, he has succeeded in getting a story that is wonderfully fitted for his inimitable characteristics, and one in which he has been able to pull more of his wonderful trick stunts than he ever did before in a two-reeler.

Maine Exhibitors Organize

Not to be left behind by their brethren who are organizing in other parts of the country, the exhibitors of Maine recently met at Portland and formed a temporary organization. The decision to ask for a national charter was also reached. The meeting adjourned for final action, and the election of permanent officers until June 7, when Ernest H. Horstmann, president of the Massachusetts branch, will address exhibitors at the Penobscot Exchange, Bangor, Maine.

King-Bee's Booking Service

With a desire to assist exhibitors in obtaining information as to where King-Bee comedies may be booked in any part of the United States, the King-Bee Films Corporation, Longacre Building, New York, is circulating a coupon for exhibitors to fill up and return to the company. In return for the names and addresses of exhibitors, the King-Bee corporation undertakes to state where these comedies may be booked, the nearest state right buyers being indicated.

Virginia Picture Men Meet

At a rousing, well attended meeting in Richmond on May 25 exhibitors of Virginia came together to perfect an organization having for its object the protection and development of the motion picture industry in that commonwealth.

A committee was named to draft by-laws and constitution and another was appointed to recommend officers to be elected by the state convention to be held at Ocean View in August. Delegates to the National Convention in Chicago were elected and plans made to get every picture owner in the state to turn out for the meeting in August.

Farm Life in Saunders' Picture

In "Bab, the Fixer," the feature production on which Jackie Saunders is now working for distribution through Mutual, the star will be seen once more in the midst of farm life.

Half of the scenes picture life on a ranch and the other half show the stock exchange with its frenzy of financial strife.

Looks like the incarnation of everything vampish, doesn't it?—Valeska Suratt in "The Slave," a brand New Fox production.

The Story

REMARKABLE PROGRESS MADE BY BUILDINGS IN FOUR YEARS—HO IN BEAUTY IN STUDIO S MARKETED THROUGH

The quartette of views on these pages give a vague hint of the complete Balboa plant.

H. M. HORKHEIMER, president and general manager of Balboa, began business just four years ago at Long Beach, California. He took possession of a small building, and thus laid the foundation of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company.

As the studio now stands, it is one of the best equipped producing plants in the film business. At the present time eight companies are producing for Balboa, and more are to be added this summer.

The Balboa studio presents a happy atmosphere, as H. M. Horkheimer's first thought is for his people and their welfare. After that, his chief interest is in the plant, for his ambition is to build up a big industry.

From One Building to Twenty

Starting in one small structure in May, 1913, Balboa has been growing steadily until today twenty different buildings are used to house its various departments. And the way its business is expanding, further additions will be needed in the very near future. There seems to be no limit to the improvements undertaken, because those in charge are determined to keep abreast of the demand.

A year ago experts in photoplay making who visited the Balboa studio pronounced it a model plant, complete and compact. But notwithstanding, Horkheimer Brothers have been going right ahead with their enlargements. As fast as they made money, they have put it right back into the studio to increase its efficiency. This has been possible because there are no stockholders crying for dividends.

A new stage has recently been completed at a cost of $30,000 which doubles Balboa's producing area. This has a hardwood floor and a system of overhead rigging which is not equaled by any other studio. It is flanked by a battery of director's offices and model dressing rooms. Next door stands a pretty bungalow which is headquarters for the scenario department of nine writers; and adjoining that is another cottage where the cameramen hold forth.

Interesting Departments

Not long ago the Balboa papier mache department was enlarged and installed in a separate building. The work turned out by it is highly artistic. This is evidenced by the sculptural "props" to be seen in Balboa releases. The statuesque electroliers which adorn the grounds surrounding the plant attest this further. A whole building is devoted to the papier mache department.

Just behind it is the blacksmith shop. Why blacksmith shop to make pictures? The best answer is if there is anything in the world that does not enter into picture making, it hasn't been uncovered. But as a great deal of metal work is used in "sets," the forge and anvil come in very handy.

Two large warehouses, of fireproof sheet iron construction, have been added to the Long Beach studio this year to provide shelter for the ever-growing "prop" department. There are larger studios in Southern California than Balboa when it comes to the ground space utilized by several; but none of them begin to own the amount of equipment that the Horkheimer Brothers have assembled.

Studio Owns Props

Nearly all the studios rent their furniture and other accessories used in dressing sets. Herein Balboa has made a radical departure. Ever since the beginning, all sorts of odds and ends have been acquired until today this studio has without doubt an accumulation of the most varied lot of "props" in the industry. Furniture from the cheapest to the most costly period stuff is found in its warehouses, ready for instant use when a director calls for it.

Most studios prefer to rent their "props" because it takes too big an investment to own them. Notwithstanding, in a year's time their outlay for rentals and breakage will practically amount to what the stuff could have been bought for in the beginning. The Horkheimers have always regarded renting as on a par with the "penny wise and pound foolish" policy. Only recently they bought

A new $30,000 stage and a blacksmith shop are two of the little studio details.

$20,000 worth more of the handsomest furniture from the leading store in Los Angeles.

Important additions have been made to the wardrobe department during the past year. Balboa always gowns its extras, particularly when society gatherings or ballroom scenes are "shot." The smartest clothes made of the finest fabrics are brought from New York, the supply being refreshed twice a year. In between times, these are made over and kept in A-1 condition by competent wardrobe women. A visit to the women's section of the wardrobe rooms is always a treat to fair visitors at Balboa. They marvel at the quality of the gowns, all of which are kept in glass cases when not in use.

While the improving has been going on, no part of the physical plant has been overlooked. For the protection of the cameras and other costly paraphernalia, a concrete vault was constructed. In this, each cameraman has a compartment, with an individual lock and key. The carpenter and paint shops have both been amplified. To the former has been added wood-turning equipment, while the latter was enlarged by the addition of a stock room for wall papers and mouldings. These enter into the building of the "interiors."

No Set Used Twice

Balboa has entirely dispensed with the old-style painted set. Now everything is "practical," as that term is used in the realm of amusements. And no set is used twice. This is in deference to the public's growing demand for more variation in productions. When once "shot," a set is done over before being used again. For this reason it takes more time to make motion pictures now than it did a few years ago. More and more attention is being given to detail.

The improvements already enumerated all contribute directly to the making of better motion pictures. Yet they are not the only ones to be undertaken by the Horkheimer Brothers. All the while they have been enhancing the sightliness of their plant. The grounds surrounding it have been parked and two landscape gardeners are in constant attendance. Beauty spots with pergolas have been provided wherever opportunity has made it possible. As you enter Balboaville, as the part of Long Beach is called where the studio is located, you cannot but be impressed by the sightliness of the whole layout.

President Horkheimer Talks

"I know that some people believe you can produce in almost any sort of a shack," said President H. M. Horkheimer, "but that has never appealed to me. To get results of the best type, I am convinced that you need the very best conditions and surroundings possible. Here you see the desirability of harmonizing the outside of your studio with that within. Beautification contributes indirectly to the finished product. It inspires, and that is why we have given so much attention to cultivating outward appearances at Balboa."

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the company, is heartily in accord with this policy. The brothers communicate their ideas to the business manager and he executes them. Team work has built up Balboa. The heads of all departments are continually trying to devise ways to improve their respective bailiwicks. The best evidence of their efficiency is the fact that Balboa has gone ahead steadily since the day of its beginning, whereas many other companies have for various reasons fallen by the roadside.

Four Releasing Channels

Horkheimer Brothers now have four outlets for their productions, a unique advantage enjoyed by no other studio in the industry, since most producers are tied up to an exclusive releasing contract. At the present time Horkheimer photoplays are distributed by Pathe, the General Film Company, the Mutual Film Corporation and B. S. Moss Film Corporation. As a result of this condition, the Balboa Company has never known what "slack time" means. It is always busy filling contracts.

MULLEN SPEAKS OUT

Stuff of Popular Authors Bald, Senile and Hard to Cure, Says Scenario Editor of Greater Vitagraph

That the scenario editor is one of the most important of the component parts of motion picture production has been demonstrated by the Greater Vitagraph Company through its connection with Eugene Mullen who was appointed several months ago as editor of the Blue Ribbon Feature scenario department.

Since the work of Mr. Mullen has had a chance to tell, exhibitors from all over the country have volunteered the information that the Greater Vitagraph product has improved immeasurably.

Mr. Mullen originally was engaged to write the scenario for "Within the Law," which has made such a tremendous hit with exhibitors and motion picture patrons throughout the country. His work in this one production placed him in the forefront of scenario writers.

Mr. Mullen is the author of the first three-reel feature photoplay ever produced by Vitagraph in the days when a three-reel play was history-making achievement. This play was "The Money King." It was an original picture, which he followed up with "The Christian," "Mr. Barnes of New York," a series of comedies from "Pickwick Papers," which were played by the late John Bunny; "Vanity Fair," "The Lady of the Lake," "Hearts of the First Empire," "A Florida Enchantment," and about one hundred original photoplays have made his name familiar to the devotees of the screen.

Mr. Mullen has devoted himself to the elevation of the picture play, besides writing innumerable features and short plays. In discussing the photoplay, Mr. Mullen recently made the following interesting remarks concerning the efforts of some of the so-called "famous authors" who try scenario writing:

"My experience compels me to admit that I am utterly incapable of waxing enthusiastic over the emanations that are to be traced to some of our present day 'famous authors,' who essay to write motion picture stories. These men, on the strength of their fiction successes, submit stuff to our leading manufacturers that is often so inexpressibly bald in treatment, childish in theme and senile in conception that the men into whose hands their attempts pass frequently express open disgust.

"The critic I am answering passes lightly over the adapter's part in arranging stories for the screen. His experience in this direction must be limited or he would know that it is immeasurably more difficult to take another man's work and adapt it to the peculiar requirements of the screen than it is to build upon a theme conceived in one's own brain; that it entails an amount of energy and resourcefulness at times nerve-racking in the extreme. All too little credit has been given men and women who have picturized famous plays and books for the screen.

"I have heard persons remark, leaving a theater after seeing an especially affecting film production, that they enjoyed the picture more than they did the play. Why? Ten chances to one because little scenes and touches that exemplified the motives of the characters in a different way than that described by the original author were presented."

Exit Original Lasky Stage

The original stage at the Lasky studio is shortly to be a thing of the past. This stage, upon which some of the best known stars of the stage and screen have trod, is soon to be torn up and to be replaced by a newer and more modern stage. In its original form this stage was the washing platform in the rear of a garage and it was here that the first Lasky production, with Dustin Farnum in "The Squaw Man," was produced. One or two other pictures were also completed upon this stage and then it was enlarged by ten feet to accommodate the necessary larger settings for "The Rose of the Rancho." It proved inadequate for the settings for "The Girl of the Golden West" and another ten feet had to be added before this picture could be completed.

There followed shortly a small glass stage which was erected for use during the rainy season. Now the original stage is known as stage No. 1. Stage No. 2 is twice the size of Stage No. 1 and is entirely housed in glass. Stage No. 3 is twice the size of the second stage and is used for the large settings which have come to be recognized as being typical of the present Lasky productions.

The original stage, which has been used almost constantly since January, 1914, is in such bad condition that it has been decided to build an entirely new platform in its place and equip it with the most up-to-date lighting system. Upon this, the first Lasky motion picture stage, there have appeared such distinguished artists as Geraldine Farrar, Wallace Reid, Sessue Hayakawa, Vivian Martin, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Lou-Tellegen, Edward Abeles, Edmund Breese, Thomas W. Ross, Blanche Sweet, Dustin Farnum, Max Figman, Robert Edeson, H. B. Warner, Theodore Roberts, Edith Taliaferro, Wallace Edinger, Edith Wynne Mathison, Victor Moore, Mabel Van Buren, Charlotte Walker, Ina Claire, Fannie Ward, Donald Brian and Laura Hope Crews.

Joe Welsh, the most famous Jewish comedian the stage has ever known, has been signed by Herbert Blache, president of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, to appear in his most successful play, "The Peddler." The U. S. Amusement Corporation is one of the four producing organizations constituting Art Dramas, Inc.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Can You Answer These?

This is my first letter to you, but I read your department and gain much from it. I am an operator at the Empire Theater here.

I have two Simplex machines in a nice operating room. In fact Mr. Frude and Tex Webb, operators with the Chicago company of "The Birth of a Nation" which played here complimented me upon the nice outfit and the general arrangement of things. Also Mr. Stroffegen and Mr. Mills (if I have the names right) operators with the New York Company of "Intolerance" liked my machines so well that they used them during their engagement here. So you see that it pays to keep your outfit in good condition and always try to put on better projection.

I wonder how many operators are putting on better projection today than they were putting on six months ago? Not one in every fifty, I will venture to say.

Mr. Scobey, do you know of a loop-setter (lower) for use on the Simplex machine, or of a guard made to put on the upper sprocket to keep the film from wrapping around it whenever there is a break? The Power's people have these devices and I believe that the Simplex people should wake up.

Also I believe the lower bracket on the Simplex should be designed to have three idlers instead of one as at the present. Then bad pieces of film would not have the tendency to cause the loss of the lower loop or to cause the film to run off the sprockets. Remember I am speaking of new machines with all parts in perfect adjustment.

It is possible to use the combined amperage of a rheostat and compensarc at one lamp? On one machine I use a 50 amp. rheostat. On the other machine I use a 60 amp. compensarc. I would like to join the two so that I could use 110 amps. on either machine. I joined the two in multiple—result—the blowing of a 50 amp. fuse on the compensarc primary. The Compensarc Manufacturing Co. says not to join any resistance on either the primary or secondary sides.

Two compensarcs can be wired in multiple, also two rheostats, but how about one of each?

I should like very well to have you print some photographs of Chicago operating rooms in your department. Would it be possible?—John W. Creamer, Empire Theater, Chillicothe, Missouri.

From the description you have given me of the booth you work in and the equipment you have in it, you must be pretty well fixed to put up first class projection. When men who are on the road all the time and come in contact with all kinds of operators and machines, give you a good word then you can feel justly proud, for as a rule, there are exceptions to all cases. The road man comes into a house and about the first thing he tells you is that, this is wrong or that is not right, and that they do not do this or that in ———— and he leaves, or rather tries to leave, the impression with you that you ought to live in a large city and learn the finer points of the game.

My experience has been this: Taking everything into consideration, that the operators in the smaller cities put up better projection than the operators in the larger ones, and as a rule they do not have near the equipment to work with. As to how much the average operator has improved his projection in the last six months, I can not say. But the time is coming, and is not very far away, when the man who is asleep on the job now, will simply be kicked out. Picture fans have been educated to the point where they demand perfect projection and the managers realize that to get perfect projection, they need up-to-date machines and operating rooms and a real operator on the job. The operator of today has to keep posted on his work and has to keep trying to improve his projection or the manager is soon wise and is looking for a man who is up to date.

There is no loop-setter on the Simplex machines and I could not tell you whether there ever will be or not. I think that the loop-setter is a big help to the operator, and suppose that if the Simplex had a loop-setter that was satisfactory they would put it on their machines. The same thing applies to the guard on the top sprocket. As to the three idlers on the lower bracket, I do not agree with you. I think that the one roller is enough. At one time the Power's Company had a lower bracket with two idlers on it, but it was not satisfactory and most of the operators got rid of the extra idler in a hurry. If you have your lower idler adjusted properly, there is no reason why you should have any trouble with your film. Do not try to use a rheostat and compensarc either in series or in multiple, "for it can't be did."

If you want more than 60 amps. on a compensarc then you will have to get one that is wound for higher amperage. You can get one that will give from 125 to 150 amps. on 110 volts A. C., but you can not hook a 50 amp. rheostat on to a 60 amp. compensarc and get 110 amps. from it. You do not say what distance you have to project your picture or the size of it, but it strikes me that you will never need 110 amps. for the average picture house.

If I were you I would try to get the manager of the theater to get a generator set of some kind so that you could have D. C. current on the lamps and at the same time save money on the electric light bill. You would get far better results on the screen as well. At the present time I have no photographs of Chicago booths. I have several of booths of other cities, however, and I am holding them until I get a few more before using one or two of them in the department each week. I should be very glad to use photos of the different booths from operators who care to forward them to me.

About Carbons

I have received several inquiries from exhibitors and operators in regard to the White Flame carbon. Under date of May 21 I received a letter from the National Carbon Company of Cleveland, Ohio, who makes the White Flame carbon, stating that it made the carbon in 5/8x12, 3/4x12 and 7/8x12, and that they may be ordered through the supply houses to be delivered as follows: 5/8 and 3/4 in about ten days from date of order, and 7/8 in about three to four weeks from date of order. These carbons are a noiseless A. C. carbon and from tests made by myself and other operators I am satisfied that they will be a great improvement over the carbons now in use on A. C. current.

What Will Cure a Sparking Commutator?

I have been a reader of your department ever since it was started and this is the first time that I have had to come to you for assistance. I am having trouble with my motor generator set. A small spark seems to run around the commutator when the machine is running and I clean the commutator and it disappears for a while and then I notice it again. I have put new brushes on the machine but that does not seem to help any. Can you suggest anything? —Howard Marlow, Dexter, Minnesota.

The first thing that I would suggest is to clean the commutator thoroughly by using a piece of very fine sandpaper on it as it revolves. After cleaning the surface of the commutator then take a few drops of light oil on a cloth and hold it on the commutator. Next look and see if the brush yoke is set at the proper place. The manufacturer marks the brush yoke and the frame of the machine with a shop mark. Possibly you have moved the brush yoke from this mark and that is causing you the trouble.

Be sure that the brushes that you are using are the same that came with the machine. If the brush is too hard or too soft then you will not get the proper results. Be sure that the brushes fit snug to the commutator. Fit them by slipping a piece of fine sandpaper between the commutator and the brush with the rough side to the brush. Pull the paper back and forth over the commutator until when you remove the sandpaper the brush fits snug to the commutator. Be sure that the brushes have enough tension to make a good contact with the commutator but do not have them set too tight, so as to cause them to wear unnecessarily. Keep the brushes and the brush holders clean at all times. If the above suggestions do not help you then test the armature for an open circuit. Come again.

Powerful Story for Fannie Ward

Despite the fact that Fannie Ward gained her greatest reputation on the stage as a comedienne, she has been tremendously successful since becoming a Lasky-Paramount star in the enacting of powerful dramatic roles. Her success in "The Cheat" is still being talked about in the film world—there are several others. It was for this reason that Jesse L. Lasky purchased from George Middleton, the well-known playwright and author, "Her Strange Wedding," which has been adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne and assigned to Miss Ward as a stellar vehicle.

The story of "Her Strange Wedding" is, without exception, one of the most remarkable dramatic conceptions that has been given the screen. It concerns Coralie Grayson, a rather frivolous young girl, who is loved by two brothers. One of them, Max, is a successful young physician who is extremely studious and quiet in his general demeanor, while his younger brother, Lee, a sufferer from heart trouble, is a charming and thoroughly captivating chap who makes an excellent impression on first sight. But why spoil the story? You'll see it on your own back wall.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin of Pictures"

"The Bar Sinister" has caused Edgar Lewis to realize the ambition of theatrical producers for a generation: the making of a dramatic production to equal

If you give this little print of the likeness of Frank Hall the careful double o you will understand something about why he is considered one of the keenest katchers of kan't-fail pictures in the field. He now controls the world's rights to "The Bar Sinister." His habitat is N' York, where competition "works while you sleep."

Uncle Tom's Cabin. The wonderful thing about Uncle Tom's Cabin is the fact that it tells a simple heart interest story in a straightforward, true-to-life manner and contains nothing of a spectacular or sensational nature to make it attract unusual attention.

The success of "The Bar Sinister" was instantaneous, showmen and critics especially, recognizing the fact that Mr. Lewis had succeeded in striking that rare note so seldom found and so strenuously worked for. But it was one of the well known critics of a New York daily newspaper who used the phrase for which Mr. Lewis was so anxiously watching and which gave him the hint that his ambition was realized.

"The Uncle Tom's Cabin of motion pictures" summed up this writer's opinion of the production and the unusual interest shown by the public in the picture's present run at the Broadway Theater, New York, where it is being presented by Frank Hall, who controls the world's rights, seems to give strong support to the belief that "The Bar Sinister" will be added to the list of dramas in the theatrical "Hall of Fame."

Johnny and Emma Ray in Films

After having rocked musical comedy and vaudeville audiences out of their chairs for years with their pranks on the speaking stage, Johnny and Emma Ray are making their debut as motion picture laugh makers under the auspices of General Film Co. After a year spent in production, a series of successful 1-reel screen comedies featuring "King Casey" interpreting the exclusive personality of this famed comedy team has been prepared and regular leases will be made beginning June 11 on General Film's steadily increasing list of selected short subjects.

Johnny and Emma Ray starred so long in their inimitable Casey and other sketches, such as "A Hot Old Time," "Down the Pike" and "In Society," that they are known from coast to coast.

Artcraft Announces Plans

MORE GREAT NAMES ENLISTED UNDER FAMOUS TRADE MARK

THE new plans and pretentious schedule for the forthcoming year were officially announced last week at the headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation where among other things it was stated that August 5 would mark the inauguration of the new Paramount-Artcraft co-ordinate. Thirty-six master-productions are already scheduled for booking policy release under this trademark during the next twelve months, and plans are now under way for the presentation of additional attractions to be announced in the near future.

The star series selective booking policy, inaugurated by Artcraft at its inception, will be continued as in the past. In the exploitation of its productions Artcraft will co-operate with the exhibitor in every way possible. The only change affecting the distribution of Artcraft pictures that will be experienced by exhibitors will be evidenced in the fact that they will be able to present these productions without excluding another film already contracted for under the Paramount program system as heretofore. Artcraft and Paramount releases will dove-tail so that neither will interfere with the other. This of course, is of distinct advantage to the exhibitor.

Eight Pickford Pictures on Schedule

Since its inception, Artcraft has faithfully carried out its promise for "the biggest and best" in motion pictures. The affiliation with the screen's greatest talents and brains was the only way in which Artcraft could make good its promise, and this is exactly what it has done. D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson, Garaldine Farrar, Cecil B. De Mille and George M. Cohan are the acknowledged representatives of their particular arts and that this is the greatest coalition ever assembled in the cause of the screen art is as apparent to the child at school as it is to those in the motion picture trade. These are the celebrities, among others to be announced in the near future, who will present their best efforts in behalf of the cinema under the Artcraft trademark during the coming year.

Mary Pickford, the first star to appear under the Artcraft trademark, will present eight productions on the new schedule. The value of her name as a box-office attraction as a result of her wonderful talents and charm is appreciated by every exhibitor who has shown her pictures and needs no further comment.

Seven photoplays will be released through Artcraft by Douglas Fairbanks, conceded to be the greatest male attraction in the film world. At the head of his own complete organization he promises to exhibitors, pictures that will duplicate the record-breaking business of "In Again—Out Again," his initial Artcraft subject. Although widely imitated, Mr. Fairbanks has proved conclusively that he is in a class by himself and his original characterizations have taken a firm hold upon the favor of the entire country.

The acquisition of the screen services of popular Elsie Ferguson, who has hitherto been unsuccessfully approached for motion picture work with great persistency, disclosed another supreme accomplishment on the part of Artcraft. Conceded to be one of the most beautiful as well as talented actresses on the high-class speaking stage, Miss Ferguson has always upheld the dignity of the true dramatic art. Thus Artcraft has added another personage to the silent drama who will delight all those who have the real interest of the motion picture at heart. Miss Ferguson will appear in seven Artcraft pictures.

The announcement of D. W. Griffith's affiliation with Artcraft works an epoch in the annals of motion pictures. Recognized the world over as the greatest genius of the cinema, his agreement with Artcraft speaks volumes. The name of D. W. Griffith means more to the film craft than any other. Mr. Griffith will return to this country from England shortly and will immediately work upon the first of his six productions to be distributed through Artcraft.

Geraldine Farrar, whose "Joan the Woman," staged under Cecil B. De Mille, marked another distinct advance in the photoplay art, will appear in two subjects for Artcraft release. Universally known as America's most popular star of the opera, Miss Farrar has duplicated her success of the stage on the screen. Mr. De Mille has already commenced plans for the initial Farrar-Artcraft picture which he will stage, and upon which Miss Farrar will commence work shortly. In addition to this, Mr. De Mille will contribute four productions disclosing his every talent in cinema technique, to Artcraft's schedule.

George M. Cohan, whose photoplay debut for Artcraft in "Broadway Jones" immediately established him among the favorites of the screen, will begin work on his second picture in the near future. Mr. Cohan has introduced to the picture public a type that is as unique as it was on the speaking stage. That he has been a most welcome asset to the screen was immediately evinced. The famous "Yankee Doodle Boy" will appear in two Artcraft pictures during the coming year.

The actual inauguration of the Paramount-Artcraft co-ordinate booking policy, as a result of the taking over of Artcraft by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on August first, will also mark the first anniversary of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

NO TAPS AT CAMP BRADY

Peerless Studio to Hum This Summer as Six Features Are Filmed—New Comets to Pass Before Camera

William A. Brady, director-general of World-Pictures Brady-Made, has planned a particularly lively summer for the Peerless studio, where no less than six picture dramas are simultaneously in the making at the present time. The new campaign, which is already under way, calls for the participation of several stars who are as yet strangers to the screen and a considerable number of leading actors and actresses who have not appeared heretofore in World Pictures.

"First of all," said Mr. Brady to a reporter, "Mary Nash will begin shortly upon the three pictures for which she was engaged some time ago. These will keep her going at high speed for the entire summer, as, in addition to studio work in the daytime she will continue in the leading feminine role of 'The Man Who Came Back,' at the Playhouse.

"I expect that Florence Nash, the other member of the gifted pair of Nash girls, will attach her signature to one of our contracts before long. She is considering such a step.

"Alexandra Carlisle, who scored a great success in George C. Tyler's recent stage production, 'The Country Cousin,' will make at least one photoplay for us during the summer.

"Miss Carlisle certainly should be well liked upon the screen for, in the first place, she is a beautiful woman, and, in the second, she is a remarkably intelligent and effective player. I recall that when she acted the title role in Mr. Savage's London production of 'Everywoman' she was acclaimed the best actress in England, and she has improved considerably since then.

"We have a very strong play for this artiste, based upon a tremendously popular novel.

"We have engaged Milton Sills as leading man for Ethel Clayton and he will make his first appearance in this capacity in 'Chasms,' which is about completed. Miss Clayton has an exceptionally vivid role in this picture drama, with a fine chance to register a distinct sensation.

"The principal male character in Kitty Gordon's 'The Divine Sacrifice,' upon which we are now at work, is being interpreted by Jean Angelo, whose engagement as leading man with Sarah Bernhardt was interrupted by the illness of the star. M. Angelo is in America on furlough while recovering from the most recent of his wounds sustained in action.

"By an odd coincidence, Angelo's father was Mme. Bernhardt's leading support when she made her first tour of the United States. In acting with Miss Gordon in 'The Divine Sacrifice' the French leading man experiences none of the usual difficulties of a stranger in a strange land, since Miss Gordon speaks his language fluently, and George Archainbaud, the director, is his fellow countryman.

"In addition to all this, we are starting upon a new play of Revolutionary times called 'Betsy Ross,' in which Alice Brady plays the title role. This will be a very realistic production, and many of the scenes will be photographed in and around the original Betsy Ross home. George Washington and other outstanding personages of the period appear in the course of this story, and it will be interesting to see how their pictured counterparts live up to the ideals handed down by history."

Sherman Elliott Changes

Important changes have been made in the Minneapolis film concern established nearly three years ago by John Elliott and Harry A. Sherman. There were two firms under their direction. The first was the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation, organized to buy "The Birth of a Nation" for seventeen western states. The second was the Sherman-Elliott Company, which took over the United States and Canada right for "The Crisis."

Within the last few days, Harry A. Sherman has retired from both firms. Mr. Elliott bought Mr. Sherman's interests in the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation, and will continue, under this firm name, to operate "The Birth of a Nation" and carry on a general film business in the present offices, 507-8 Produce Exchange Building, Minneapolis. Mr. Elliott and Mr. Sherman both resigned from the Sherman-Elliott Company, which was reorganized with Edward Nelson, the former treasurer, as president in the place of Mr. Sherman, and F. H. Peterson as secretary-treasurer, in the place of Mr. Elliott. This firm has moved to 854 McKnight Building, Minneapolis, from which "The Crisis" will be handled.

Follies Girl in Jolly Play

Olive Thomas, the beautiful Harrison Fisher girl, will make her screen debut in the latest Ince-Triangle comedy, "Madcap Madge," by R. Cecil Smith, in which she is presented as star by Thomas H. Ince. Miss Thomas, gaily and joyously, flits through every scene of this story, which contains not a single tear. As the play unrolls one sees the "Madcap" in a finishing school, where she is being polished to the satisfaction of her socially ambitious family. Then she is expelled. because of girlish pranks, and decides to join her family in Florida, where the older sister, is endeavoring to capture an elusive title. From the time of her arrival until the closing scene one situation follows another. The action is fast and the pure fun derived from the escapades of Madge is unlimited.

Miss Thomas, as "Madcap Madge," has made this character delightfully real. She has invested the spirit of the "Madcap" with her joyous and happy-go-lucky nature. And she will certainly appeal to the tired business man from the screen as strongly as she did from the stage of Ziegfeld's Follies.

In what might be called the prologue to the latest Ince-Triangle drama, "The Paws of the Bear," by J. G. Hawks, in which William Desmond is presented as star, a glimpse is given of the Belgian frontier, where the advancing Uhlans are brought sharply into conflict with the Allies.

Know "The Clodhopper Glide?"

Charles Ray, Ince star, reveals a new phase of his versatility in each successive Triangle play in which he stars. In "The Coward" he proved himself a splendid character actor and intrepid horseman; in "The Pinch Hitter" he was hailed by critics as a comedian and by baseball men as a real base ball player, and now in "The Clodhopper" he demonstrates his ability as a dancer.

The dance which he does is an eccentric creation of his own which he calls "The Clodhopper Glide." It is performed in the big roof-garden scene of this new comedy by Monte M. Kitterjohn.

An interesting spot in "Steps to Somewhere," one of the units in the new Essanay series. "Do Children Count?" Little Mary McAlister is the featured lady.

Latest Essanay Releases

"Land of Long Shadows" will be the next feature on Essanay's program of K-E-S-E releases. This production, which is the first of Essanay's series of Westerns, presents Jack Gardner, the musical comedy star, in his screen debut. It will be released June 18.

"Filling His Own Shoes" features Bryant Washburn in the highly amusing adventures of an American shoe clerk in a Turkish harem. It was released June 11.

With the completion of "Filling His Own Shoes," Mr. Washburn was immediately launched into the production of another feature to be released July 2, the title of which will be "The Man Who Was Afraid." The story of this picture hinges on the timely topic of President Wilson's call for fighting men.

Taylor Holmes, the noted stage star recently signed up by Essanay, has arrived at the Chicago studios, and is now being filmed in the preliminary scenes of his first screen production. This will be "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," an adaptation from Clarance Buddington Kelland's story of that title in the Saturday Evening Post.

Aside from these features, Essanay is releasing through the K-E-S-E its series of child problem plays under the general title, "Do Children Count?" This series, which features little Mary McAlister, was inaugurated June 6, and is being released at the rate of one unit a week. While all of these pictures hinge on vital problems concerning the rearing of children, each one presents a separate story, complete in itself and bears an individual title.

"Mr. Pringle and Success," the latest of the Black Cat features, was released June 9.

Sparkling Heroine in "White Trail"

The outstanding feature of "The Great White Trail," Wharton's eight-reel production given its first showing in New York, was the work of Miss Doris Kenyon. She has ample opportunity to show her powers, and her excellent work, particularly in the Alaskan scenes, made a decided impression on everyone who saw the picture.

Miss Kenyon drove a team of eight Alaskan "huskies" in some of the scenes, and the dash, verve, sparkle and life she put into her work made every situation go over with a bang. She handled a revolver like an old time plainsman and fought courageously when called upon. Her evident youth and sparkling beauty, combined with her dramatic ability and rare courage combined to put her over as the big hit of the picture.

Brenon Rushing Russian Play

Herbert Brenon, president and director of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, who has just commenced operations on "The Fall of the Romanoffs," is now feverishly endeavoring to get this story of the terrors during the reign of the late czar and his family ready for the screen within the next ten weeks.

"'The Fall of Russia,'" he says, "will probably be the biggest picture I have ever made. It depicts the struggle of the people over the tyranny of a corrupt court and the consequent triumph over autocracy. The theme is all the more gripping because it is absolutely true. Not a word of it is fiction. Iliodor himself has either lived through all the incidents or heard them repeated from eye-witnesses. He was at the court, he had access to the czar and czarina.

"Iliodor plays in this picture exactly the same part that he played in the drama in Russia. He forgets his surroundings, he is oblivious to the camera and he actually takes part again in the scenes of a stirring drama which has made Russia the most dramatic figure in the world today. He is again in the little cell in the monastery, or denouncing Rasputin to the synod, or pining behind prison bars, or having an audience with the czar, however the case may be, and he is living through it all again."

L-Ko's for July

President Julius Stern announces L-Ko's for late June and early July of a nature that promise to keep audiences and exhibitors in the best humor. For June 27 Vin Moore has created "Her Daring, Caring Ways," with Myrtle Sterling and Lucille Hutton featured. The July 4 release will have Sammy Burns featured in "A Mexican Mix-Up," and July 11 will bring "Vamping Reuben's Millions." In this subject Katherine Young will be the comedy vampire. Noel Smith directed "Physical Torture and Mental Culture" set for distribution July 18, with Dan Russell and Gladys Varden featured.

General Director J. G. Blystone has given his personal attention to these productions, not alone selecting the 'scripts but supervising the general direction and editing the completed produst. All of the foregoing L-Ko's have been distributed to Universal exchanges, from L-Ko's studios in Hollywood.

Virginia Pearson has just completed her characterization in a new photoplay on the subject of jealousy, "Wrath of Love." Miss Pearson has been receiving many requests from exhibitors and fans recently for just such a characterization as she presents in this new Fox picture, which she feels offers the greatest portrayal she has yet displayed on the screen.

The subject is of modern theme and allows the star particular scope to evidence her natural charm and talents to best advantage. James Vincent directed Miss Pearson in this production which is scheduled for release in the near future. Miss Pearson is at present enjoying a short vacation before commencing work on her next subject for Fox.

Stevenson Story in Films

"Kidnapped," a four-reel adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal story of adventure, is the latest Edison feature for the Forum program.

The producers have reached one of their aims in the production of this picture. They have sought to eliminate all objectionable handling of the sex question, and in "Kidnapped" they had not the slightest difficulty, for this production has the distinction of not having a woman in it at all.

Robert Louis Stevenson would undoubtedly enjoy his "Kidnapped" on the perpendicular stage.

Some of the most interesting shipboard scenes were filmed off Sandy Hook on an old-fashioned brig chartered for the purpose.

David McKee appears in the role of David Balfour, a lad who is shanghaied at the instigation of an uncle who is desirous of obtaining property that rightfully belongs to the boy. A tyrant of a captain and the two bucko mates transform the brig into a hell-ship for David, who has been pressed into service as a cabin boy, and when he meets up with Alan Breck, a Scottish outlaw, he plans his escape. The two hold the ship's crew at bay while they make their way over the side into a small boat. They are finally picked up and landed on the Scottish coast, where they become involved in many adventures.

Robert Cain appears to advantage as Alan. Joseph Burke does much with the characterization of Ebenezer Balfour, David's miserly and treacherous uncle. William Wadsworth is also a member of the cast of this production, which was directed by Alan Crosland. The photography is unusually effective. The shorter units of the program are "The Portrait in the Attic," a romantic drama featuring Shirley Mason, and "He Couldn't Get Up in the Morning," a short comedy.

Alfred Weiss Joins Goldwyn

Alfred Weiss, one of the best known and ablest distribution executives in the motion picture industry, has joined the Goldwyn organization and will become one of the vice-presidents of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation at an election to be held in a few days.

Mr. Weiss, formerly of Triangle, has made a tour of the United States for Goldwyn and has closed all of the realty contracts and leases for the opening of the Goldwyn exchanges in nineteen cities, covering every part of America.

On this trip, too, he has closed the arrangements for the Goldwyn representatives in the various territories and all of these branch managers begin active work for Goldwyn on June 11.

Mr. Weiss will have full supervision over the New York City and Buffalo branches in addition to his other executive duties.

PARAMOUNTS TO ALL

First One Hundred and Four Pictures Now Offered to All Exhibitors—Many Big Drawing Cards Among List

The extraordinary success that was the immediate result in every section of the country in placing the first fifty-two Paramount Pictures upon the open market has caused Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, to direct all Paramount exchanges throughout the country to place the first 104 pictures on the market for release to all exhibitors, irrespective of the restrictive feature clause in the Paramount contract which formerly made this impossible.

In all Paramount exchanges these 104 pictures are being classed as Paramount Preferred Pictures, and there has been an extraordinary demand for the subjects. New prints have been supplied all exchanges.

In hundreds of communities it had been impossible for more than one exhibitor to use the pictures in which Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick and other Paramount stars appeared, because of the restrictive and protective franchise that had been issued in connection with the Paramount Pictures at the inception of this distributing organization. This is now entirely eliminated in regard to these pictures.

In this list of pictures there are eight Mary Pickford pictures, seven in which Marguerite Clark is starred, four of Blanche Sweet, three featuring John Barrymore, two in which H. B. Warner made great successes, four of the greatest successes in which Hobart Bosworth was featured, three of the best Lois Weber productions, and others in which such stars as Pauline Frederick, Marie Doro, Dustin Farnum and dozens of others appear.

New Beban Play

"A Roadside Impressario" once more introduces George Beban upon the screen in a dual role of author and star. It is a Pallas-Paramount picture directed by Donald Crisp, who has presided over all of Mr. Beban's recent productions.

Mr. Beban is Guiseppe Franchini, an Italian fisherman, who becomes separated from his wife and little daughter by accident. They depart for America and Guiseppe, learning of this fact, starts out to find them, in company with Bruno, his trained bear and bosom companion.

Rupert Julian is directing and playing the featured role in E. J. Clawson's five-reel story, "My Mother," at Universal City, with Ruth Clifford opposite.

JUNE PARAMOUNT RELEASES

Vivian Martin, Myrtle Stedman, Wallace Reid, George Beban and House Peters, Stars in Forthcoming Paramount Pictures

The Pallas-Morosco announcement of releases for June includes four productions starring such well-known players as Vivian Martin, Myrtle Stedman, Wallace Reid, George Beban and House Peters.

Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman co-star in "The World Apart," which was written especially for them by George Middleton, the well-known playwright. "The World Apart" is the story of a western mining camp. It is unusually full of action, the incidents crowding upon the screen in rapid succession and building up to a powerful climax. This production is scheduled for release by Paramount on June 4.

Another Morosco production which is to be released on June 7, stars Vivian Martin in "Giving Becky a Chance." It is a delightful romance showing Miss Martin in the role of an impecunious young lady whose attractive personality interests wealthy friends in her behalf who proceed to give her every possible chance in the world. Jack Holt plays opposite Miss Martin.

On June 18 Mr. Beban stars in "A Roadside Impresario," which is a Pallas picture directed by Donald Crisp. In this production the celebrated Italian character actor again dons corduroys and a Latin accent.

There is a very pretty romance in which the big heart and unswerving faithfulness of the Italian are developed in the most interesting and charming manner. Among those in support of Mr. Beban are Adele Farrington, Julia Faye, Jose Melville, Harrison Forde, Fred De Vere and Fred Huntley.

"The Heir of the Ages" is a remarkable dramatic production starring House Peters, which will be released on June 21. In this Pallas picture Mr. Peters is supported by such well-known players as Nina Byron, Eugene Palette, John Burton, Henry A. Barrows and Adele Farrington. It is an extremely powerful drama, the prologue of which takes place in the Stone Age, the main part of the action transpiring in a western mining town of the present day.

New Rambeau Feature

Frank Powell has finished the filming of "Mary Moreland," a picturization of Marie Van Vorst's novel of that name and the sixth of the series of feature pictures starring Marjorie Rambeau, which will be distributed through Mutual.

Mr. Powell has surrounded Miss Rambeau with an unusual cast. This includes Robert Elliott, who has appeared opposite her in several other Powell productions, Augusta Burmester, Agnes Eyre, Aubrey Beattie, Gene LeMotte, Frank Ford and Fraser Tarbutt.

Sherman Invades New York

Harry A. Sherman, of the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation, which organization controls the western territory of "The Birth of a Nation," "Ramona," and other film spectacles, and also chief executive of the Sherman-Elliott Film Company controlling "The Crisis," has disposed of all of his interests in the two above named corporations and is preparing to invade New York.

The consummation of the deal whereby Mr. Sherman disposed of his interests in the Minneapolis concerns, was announced in the last issue of Motography, and although he expressed the intention of leaving Minneapolis for the New York field of motion picture endeavors, Mr. Sherman has not as yet definitely decided upon his course upon reaching Gotham.

Harry A. Sherman formed the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation shortly before taking over the rights for "The Birth of a Nation" for seventeen states from Chicago to the Pacific Coast, and since that time the concern has flourished. Convinced that New York offers better opportunities and that his ability will be better appreciated in the east, Mr. Sherman recently offered for sale his entire holdings in both Minneapolis corporations.

Although several enticing propositions have been presented to Sherman for consideration during the past few months, he will not definitely make his decision until after his arrival on Broadway. Jack Elliott, Mr. Sherman's erstwhile partner in the Minneapolis concern, has taken over the business and will continue to hold forth in the Mill City.

Helen Rides Brake Beams

For the first time in her life Helen Holmes rode on the brake beams of a freight during the production of the tenth chapter of the Mutual-Signal serial, "The Railroad Raiders."

Bessie Love, of Triangle-Ince, and Jack Richardson, who is playing opposite her now. It takes a very good comedienne to tickle her leading man.

Exhibitors Like Art Dramas

The Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City, distributor of Art Dramas for Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and several other states and territories, has received many letters from exhibitors in its districts, in which the showmen express satisfaction with the program.

The Savoy Theater of St. Joseph, Mo., writes as follows:

Art Dramas are really too good to run during the week, and as soon as I can make an opening I am surely going to play them on Sundays. I do not care to praise one production or any company, but if Art Dramas can keep up this kind of pictures it will surely be great.

The manager of the Columbia Theater, Kansas City, Mo., says this in his letter:

I feel it my duty to inform you of the pleasure I have every time I show an Art Drama in my theater. Thursday it poured rain. I had the pleasure of seeing a great attendance. Friday, more rain than ever, and still greater crowds. The drawing power of your pictures surely has been demonstrated during this inclement weather, and there is no other program I know of that gives me the assured feeling that there will always be a profit.

The Grand Theater, Chanute, Kansas, reports as follows:

I have often written to different film exchanges, in an attempt to get better service, but I have never taken the time to thank and congratulate them on sending me good service. After seeing the first two Art Dramas I have run, I cannot help congratulating you.

The Broadway Theater of St. Louis says:

I can recommend Art Dramas as being what I conscientiously believe to be the finest feature program on the market today. I have run some four or five of these productions in my theater, and they were all exceptionally good. But "The God of Little Children," starring Alma Hanlon, is the best feature production I have ever had the pleasure of running in my theater.

Many and varied are the departments necessary to the modern producing plant. Above is Vitagraph's Red Cross room, at the Brooklyn studios. Nurse Lovering is in charge of putting actors in condition for the next fight or screen accident.

Bluebirds on the Wing

Preparedness is in order at Bluebird headquarters, where everything is all set until July 16, when "The Greater Law" will be distributed to exhibitors of that popular brand. This feature has hitherto been referred to as "The Code of the Klondyke," the title of Chas. J. Wilson, Jr.'s, story, from which Director Lynn F. Reynolds made the production. To get the necessary Alaskan "atmosphere," Mr. Reynolds took his company to Truckee, Cal., during the past winter, where Myrtle Gonzales, George Hernandez, Lawrence Payton and the Reynolds stock company waded through knee-deep snow to produce the stirring episodes incident to life in the Klondyke.

The release for July 2 will have Dorothy Phillips as the star. Ida May Park, in "Fires of Rebellion," then furnishes her second contribution to the program, and she is now engaged in directing Miss Phillips in a future release to be called "The Rescue." Joseph De Grasse, husband of Miss Park, has also completed a future Bluebird, entitled "Vengeance of the West," in which Miss Phillips will also star.

July 9 Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon will appear in a comedy romance of the jitney bus, entitled "The Car of Chance." Wm. Worthington, who directed, is now employed, with Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon, in producing "The Clean-Up," for distribution early in the fall. Going further with their plans, Bluebird announces the following productions now in the making:

"La Cigale," directed by Rex Ingram, with Violet Mersereau playing the role made famous, years ago, by Lotta.

Frohman Aids Exhibition

In conformity with the recently adopted policy of the Frohman Amusement Corporation to assist the State rights buyers of super features produced by that company, President William L. Sherrill announces the completion of his plans in that direction, whereby he is now prepared to put into active effect a practical and technical assistance in the matter of exhibition of the Frohman Corporation's productions.

"I have been working on a detailed plan ever since the completion of our last production, 'God's Man,'" said Mr. Sherrill, "and our service department commences operations beginning with that production. For this special service department we have engaged Jesse J. Goldburg, whose successful activities in the motion picture industry is well known through all circles.

"As a part of our plan of operations, Mr. Goldburg has left on an extended tour of the United States, planning to stop off at the following exchange centers:

Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., Wichita, Denver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Waco, Dallas, Birmingham, Atlanta, Louisville, Boston, Montreal and Toronto.

"He will interview all of the reputable and responsible state rights buyers in each of these cities, essentially for the purpose of discussing in general, methods of booking and exhibition and to render such other assistance as may be requested of him. I feel," Mr. Sherrill further said, "that since our institution is devoting its endeavors to the production of super motion picture attractions, that these productions merit and assuredly deserve this unusual attention which we have actively begun."

New Metro Plays

Work on four Metro wonderplays has been started. Ethel Barrymore is busily engaged in a picturization of Basil King's popular novel, "The Lifted Veil." Mabel Taliaferro returns to the screen in "The Will o' the Wisp," from the pen of Katherine Kavanaugh. Emily Stevens is rushing work on William Christy Cabanne's patriotic story, "The Slacker," and Emmy Wehlen is to be seen in "The Trail of the Shadow," written by O. A. C. Lund and adapted for the screen by June Mathis.

Miss Barrymore finds in the role of the heroine of Basil King's story a part that will allow this talented star a splendid opportunity to display the unusual dramatic ability for which she is famous. In this production Miss Barrymore will be assisted by William B. Davidson, who supported her in "The Call of Her People," and by Frank Gillmore, who makes his screen debut in this wonderplay. George D. Baker is directing Miss Barrymore.

As Sheila Desmond in "The Will o' the Wisp," Miss Taliaferro is sure to add many people to her already large list of admirers. The role of the vivacious Irish colleen fits this star to perfection, and she has never been more happily cast. Her leading man will be Thomas J. Carrigan, who has the role of Neil Dacey, a dashing Irish lieutenant. Others in support of Miss Taliaferro will be Samuel J. Ryan, Nathan Sacks and Clara Blandick. This will be the first Metro picture directed by Tod Browning, who recently came east from the Fine-Arts studio.

Emily Stevens is rushing to completion "The Slacker," a timely picture which calls upon this popular star to show that rare talent which has made her one of the best known and most admired artists of the screen and stage. Walter Miller, Leo Delaney and Dorothy Haydel are among those selected to support Miss Stevens. Mr. Cabanne is directing the picture.

Emmy Wehlen will undoubtedly find her way further into the hearts of the patrons of motion pictures as Sylvia Mason, the heroine of "The Trail of the Shadow." It is a big story with a great climax, and in it Miss Wehlen reaches heights that she has never before attained. In support of Miss Wehlen, Eugene Strong, Frank Currier and DeJalma West will have prominent parts. This Metro wonderplay is directed by Edwin Carewe.

Viola Dana and her entire company worked all week at Marblehead, Mass., where the exterior settings for "Aladdin's Other Lamp," which John H. Collins is directing, are being photographed.

The Twilight Club, a New York organization which devotes its energies for the betterment of various arts and industries, recently held a dinner at the Biltmore to discuss the topic of "Motion Picture Problems." J. Stuart Blackton, director general of Greater Vitagraph, presided as toastmaster and enlightened his appreciative auditors on the early days of the motion picture industry and what the producers of today were trying to accomplish. Among the notables in attendance were Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Wm. P. S. Earle, Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton and Eugene V. Brewster, editor of the Motion Picture Magazine.

Tradition in Atlanta film circles until recently held that no feature or super feature, irrespective of its qualities, could ever survive successfully a week's run in that city. This precedent remained unbroken until the two Vitagraph V. L. S. E. productions, "The Girl Philippa" and "The Fall of a Nation," began their runs. They not only successfully survived the seven days but also drew capacity audiences.

Jane Grey on Stage and Screen

Jane Grey, who is scoring another splendid screen success in "Her Fighting Chance"—the picture version of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "The Fiddling Man"

Jane Grey as she appears in "Her Fighting Chance," the A. H. Jacobs production. Miss Grey will next season work on both stage and screen.

—returned to the stage immediately after finishing the picture and appeared in the title role of "Du Luxe Annie," opening in Atlantic City before her latest screen vehicle made its first public appearance.

For next season, Miss Grey has arranged her picture and stage contracts so that she can appear upon the screen and stage at the same time. Most of her studio work will be done in the morning under the management of A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., and will not be allowed to interfere with her stage activities, which will include appearances under the direction of Oscar Hammerstein and Lee Schubert.

While Jane Grey does not underestimate the great value of motion picture work in perfecting an artist's pantomimic acting, she feels that stage work is also necessary to all around artistic efficiency. The "feel of the audience" enables artists to judge whether or not their work rings true and Miss Grey holds that it is not good policy for them to stay away from audiences too long at a stretch for that reason.

Following Margaret Illington's tremendous success in her motion picture debut in Charles Kenyon's especially written photoplay, "Sacrifice," the Lasky-Paramount star will be presented in Basil King's celebrated novel, "The Inner Shrine." Both of these productions were staged under the direction of Frank Reicher, who has supplemented a successful stage career, both as actor and producer, by his clever direction of Lasky productions during the current year.

Lou-Tellegen's First Picure

The first production directed by Lou-Tellegen will be an adaptation of George Broadhurst's famous play "What Money Can't Buy," starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff. In addition to Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, who recently won pronounced success in the adaptation of Gene Stratton Porter's novel "Freckles," the cast includes such distinguished actors as Hobart Bosworth, Raymond Hatton, James Cruze and James Neil. "What Money Can't Buy" is an adventure story and a romance of the most delightful type, and is replete with action from beginning to end. Jack Pickford is Dick Hale, a youthful American who runs afoul of politics in Maritizia and lands in the fortress prison as a result of winning the ill will of Govrian Texler (alias Hobart Bosworth). He has had the temerity to fall in love with Louise Huff, the Princess Irena, thereby becoming a rival of the powerful Texler, who holds the Princess' impecunious father (Raymond Hatton), at his mercy by reason of the tremendous loans which he has made to the government. Theodore Roberts is Madison Hale, Dick's father, and a gentleman of infinite resource, who plunges into the tangle of politics and finances of Maritizia upon learning that his son is incarcerated in the fortress.

From that point on the action becomes even faster and more furious, and the kingdom of Maritizia is treated to a startling example of American ingenuity.

"The Heir of the Ages," a Pallas-Paramount picture starring House Peters, has two distinct phases; one which concerns only the Cave Man era, and the other pertaining to present-day conditions in a western mining town. The cast supporting Mr. Peters includes Nina Byron, John Burton, Henry A. Barrows and Adele Farrington. John Burton will be remembered for his extremely clever character interpretations, and Adele Farrington is well known for her clever work in support of numerous Famous Players-Lasky stars. Miss Byron and Mr. Barrows have also appeared in previous pictures, the latter most recently in "The World Apart."

Do you recognize this gentleman? It is said that producers have heard of him. He has no particular home and no place in the sun. He likes to bask in the light and obscure the screen. There are pictures that should not be shown, but what has that to do with political censors?

Ray as Clodhopper

Charles Ray, the popular Ince-Triangle star, will soon make his third appearance, since signing his new contract with Thomas H. Ince, in a comedy drama by Monte M. Katterjohn, entitled "The Clodhopper." This is the story of a country lad, whose feet, used to plowed fields, carry him to Broadway and riches, and back again to save those who understood him all too little.

Ray, as Everett Nelson, a raw country youth, is seen in his daily grind as his father's hired man—all work and no play. He has no spare time and no companions, with the exception of his mother and pretty Mary Martin, who lives on the next farm. Then comes the break with his close-fisted father; his leaving home and arrival in New York, and his success on the stage, due to his inimitable dancing. Mary arrives, at the height of his popularity, with the news of his father's financial condition, as president of the home-town bank, and he grasps the opportunity to save him from ruin. The closing scenes provide many exciting moments, and the story ends in an unconventional manner. Ray is, at all times, master of the part, and he proves himself a judge of values, weighing each situation so as to get the most out of it.

Margery Wilson, as Mary Martin, Everett's sweetheart, adds more laurels to her screen career, and makes this country lassie a charming and lovable personality. The supporting cast includes Charles K. French, Lydia Knott and Thomas Guise. The production was directed by Victor Schertzinger, and photographed by Paul Eagler.

An added touch of real old Western atmosphere is to be seen in the latest Triangle drama, "'Wolf' Lowry," by Charles Turner Dazey, in which Thomas H. Ince presents William S. Hart as star, and the realistic bit of acting, while only a detail, successfully accomplishes its purpose. The part is that of a Chinese, whose duty it is to fulfill the inner demands of a small army of cow-punchers three times daily. And to see him deftly cook and serve these silent, hungry ranchmen is a lesson in agility.

Farrar to Begin Work

Geraldine Farrar, who recently arrived in California to appear in Artcraft Pictures, will commence work on her initial offering under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, July 1st. Director De Mille, who is at present staging the new patriotic Mary Pickford subject, "The Little American," at the Lasky studios, will shortly conclude his work on this film, upon which he will take a well-earned vacation. Mr. De Mille will visit his cattle ranch for a few weeks and then return to the studios to work with Jeanie Macpherson on the new Farrar stories.

Before your keen eye ever got tangled up in these hieroglyphics you knew that these miniatures show the charming Alice Joyce. The play is "The Question," and there's a story about it below.

Alice Joyce in "The Question"

Greater Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon feature for the week of June 11 was "The Question," featuring Alice Joyce and Harry Morey. It is a powerful story of contemporaneous times, the theme of which deals with the poignant question of whether the fulfillment of a life long ambition should supersede love, and depicts the struggles of a woman who found the solution through defying the laws of convention.

"The Question" was written by Lawrence McCloskey and produced under the direction of Perry Vekroff, who directed "The More Excellent Way," "Her Secret," and many other Blue Ribbon successes. Supporting Alice Joyce and Harry Morey is a cast composed of such well known players as Charles Kent, Gladden James and Edward Davis.

The story deals with a scientist who is devoting his life to the search for a new serum. Realizing that the pursuit may not be concluded in his own lifetime, he has decided to train an assistant so that he can carry on the work. To this end, he has made his will, leaving to the younger man all his money and the key to the formula upon the condition that he devote all his time and energy to the work in hand and never marry until the work is finished.

John, however, is in love with Martha Wainwright, daughter of a clergyman. After the death of the old man, John breaks under the strain of his work, and Martha's father, certain in his own mind that John never will succeed, urges Martha to marry a wealthy suitor. She refuses. John collapses, and she hurries to him. She realizes that he needs her, and, torn by the question of love vs. convention, she decides in favor of the former. In dramatic action this play is similar to "Within the Law." It proves an ideal vehicle for the dramatic powers of Alice Joyce and Harry Morey.

Fairbanks Play June 24

The second picture starring Douglas Fairbanks, "Wild and Woolly," to be released by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation on June 24, has just been completed at the Lasky studios in California under the direction of John Emerson.

From the explosive country village of New Jersey, where munition plants are blown skyward by diligent "pacifists," to the rolling plains of Arizona, with their bucking broncos and bow-legged citizens, was the theatrically termed "jump" taken by Douglas Fairbanks in behalf of his second Artcraft offering. Staged in New York, Arizona and California, the story has to do with a city youth whose wild fancies of the great West eventually get the better of him. Clad in immaculate cow-boy attire, he travels to the land of his dreams where he encounters greater surprises than he pictured in his wildest fancies.

George Balsdon, manager of the New York exchange for V. L. S. E., was forced to decline the unanimous nomination for the presidency of the F. I. L. M. club of New York, which was tendered him by the entire management of the organization. In declining, Mr. Balsdon said that his business duties are so heavy at present, owing to the increased output of Greater Vitagraph, that he could not give the office the attention it should have.

TO FILM BIBLE

Leading Clergymen Attach Greater Value to Pictures Than to Dissertations—Support Movement to Picturize New Testament

Realizing the pulling power of the screen, and divining that perhaps the motion picture could do what able sermons and scholarly addresses have failed to accomplish, modern churchmen are at length planning to throw tradition to the winds and fight fire with fire.

For some time they have seen their congregations dwindling and it was not difficult to trace the missing ones to the motion picture theaters. They have talked to empty pews until they are tired. The necessity of combating the irrepressible films not with cool logic and impassioned appeal but with just more film, has finally been borne home to the churchmen, and borne home with such force that they are ready to act.

At first the very suggestion caused protests and shrugging of shoulders and lifting of eyebrows, but the promoters met every objection promptly and with arguments that could not be thrown over. The chief objection was the use of motion pictures in church edifices would "defame" them. The answer to this was that the pictures would be strictly in accord with just what the preachers were trying to teach. In short, the pictures will be Bible scenes and will apppeal to the eyes of the congregation while the preacher explains the significance of each scene.

Out of all the agitation there has grown the organization of the Bible Film Company, with studios in Las Vegas, New Mexico, which was chosen because of its resemblance to the Holy Land. Each picture will be censored by a body of nationally-known ministers and theologions. The personnel of this board includes such men as Rt. Rev. Frederick B. Howden, D. D., Episcopal bishop of New Mexico; Dr. Ozora S. Davis, Ph. D. D. D., president of the Chicago Theological Seminary; the Rev. Christian F. Reisner, D. D., pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of New York; Professor Theodore G. Soares, head of the department of religious education, University of Chicago, and Rev. Allen Andrews, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Fort Worth, Texas, who will be the chairman. The board is non-sectarian.

C. S. Edwards, associated with the Pathe Company for several years, has accepted the position of director-general and will have charge of the making of these Biblical pictures. The studio is located six miles out of Las Vegas, on an estate of 900 acres and the enterprise has already invested $700,000 in land alone, indicating that the promoters are going into the scheme with enthusiasm and on a large scale.

The topography of Las Vegas resembles Palestine more than any other spot and lends itself, particularly to the Biblical work. Perfect reproductions of the Horn of Hatton, the scene of the sermon on the mount; Mount Harmon, where the transfiguration occurred; Golgotha, where Christ was crucified and other typical scenes from the New Testament are to be seen near Las Vegas with a vividness that is startling. The climate is ideal for picture making, golden sunshine clear and mellow resulting in films of soft, rich texture and exceptional quality.

Army Officer Aids De Mille

In order that every detail in connection with the intimate war scenes of Mary Pickford's forthcoming Artcraft production, "The Little American," should be correct, Cecil B. De Mille, the director, induced Captain Ian Hay Beith of the British Army, and author of the famous story, "The First 100,000" to personally supervise these scenes.

Captain Beith happened to be in Los Angeles on a lecture tour and hearing that Mr. De Mille was staging Miss Pickford's new patriotic story, "The Little American," immediately offered to put his knowledge of modern warfare at the disposal of the director.

The scenes depicted the French army being driven back by the invading Germans, through a French village. The form of retreat and the working of the famous 75 millimeter guns was gone through under the supervision of Mr. De Mille and the military technical director, John Brown, recently of the American Ambulance Corp in France, and with the exception of a few minor details, was pronounced perfect by the captain.

Mr. De Mille felt reasonably sure that the military maneuvers were worked out correctly, as for two weeks he had a company in command of an invalid French artillery officer training and working with the guns. After the scenes were finished Captain Beith was induced to give a short talk to the entire force at the Lasky studio on his experiences in the trenches.

Standing on a table in one of the big sets, surrounded by the French and German soldiers appearing in the Pickford picture, carpenters and the feminine members of the stock company, the captain talked for nearly an hour, and was most enthusiastically applauded. Later he had the pleasure of dining with Miss Pickford, and the director and author, on which occasion he expressed himself as greatly surprised at the care in which director De Mille exercised in having even the smallest detail correct.

Coming Seligs

"Knights of the Saddle," is the title of a Selig production in two reels released Monday, June 4, in General Film Service. This film presents Tom Nix and other cowboys and girls at a Western rodeo. Among the interesting scenes can be enumerated fancy rope throwing, broncho busting, bulldogging, a derby, stage coach driving, and other feats of skill and daring in the golden west. This film promises to equal in popularity the production, "Movie Stunts," featuring Tom Mix in hazardous exploits. "The Font of Courage," is an exceedingly worthy pictureplay featuring Robyn Adair, E. J. Brady and Virginia Kirtley.

On Monday, June 11, the Selig Company announces for release "The Friendship of Beaupere," a two-reel drama of the Northland, written by Maibelle Neikes Justice. This is not a "snow picture" but an original and heart-touching drama of the northwest in the days of summer. An exceptional cast is announced, including George Fawcett, Vivian Reed, Will Machin and Eugenie Besserer. Al Green directed the production.

On Saturday, June 16, "The Heart of Jules Carson" is announced for release in General Film service. It is an exciting drama of plot and counterplot and of a woman's sacrifice and a man's redemption.

The Selig Company asserts that each and every one of these productions are unusually meritorious.

Mignon Anderson is playing the leading feminine role under the direction of Ruth Ann Baldwin in "A Rose Garden Husband," a five-reel drama, being filmed at Universal City.

PLANS HUGE CLEARING HOUSE

Selznick to Be in Pictures What American News Is to Magazines—Will Handle High-Class Independent Productions

Lewis J. Selznick, who has established the reputation of pacemaker in the moving picture industry, announced this week that he has decided to throw open his distributing system to independent producers. He proposes to make his organization a huge clearing house of high-class pictures, with doors open at both ends. As the founder of open booking for the exhibitor, he now plans to blaze a similar trail in behalf of the manufacturer.

"When I organized my distributing system," says Mr. Selznick, "it was because I was compelled to break away from all the old methods in order to get results for Selznick Pictures on the open market. Little by little I have improved my chain of exchanges until now I regard my distribution facilities as perfect.

"This distributing system has become so efficient that I am now able to market more pictures than the Selznick-Pictures producers can make. For this reason I am opening the door to the independents; I invite all producers to bring me their output. It will be subjected to the most critical scrutiny, and those productions which come up to the mark will be accepted. Hitherto the only distributing concerns which were in a position to take outside productions have been handling so many inferior films that they were not in touch with the exhibitors who wanted the higher grade of photoplays. As a result, many independent producers have lost money, or barely broken even, on pictures that should have been big financial successes.

"All exhibitors with whom I have done business, however, know that my system is not built upon the principle of extortion. What I have done is to prove to the exhibitor that it is better to pay $100 for a $100 picture than $5 for a $5 picture. I get more money for pictures than other distributors because I handle nothing but the best I can get. By my method we study the location, clientele, and all other circumstances concerning every theater we do business with. We co-operate in every possible manner, helping the exhibitor to increase his profits, and thus making it worth while to pay the advanced prices asked for Selznick-Pictures.

"By throwing open this distributing system to other producers, I am simply completing the bridge from studio to screen. The magazine publisher does not try to peddle his own publication among the news dealers. He circulates through the American News Company, which has perfected a system of reaching all sections of the country. I am going to do for the moving picture industry what the news company has done for publishers—provide the manufacturer with the quickest and most effective means of reaching his market. The result will be bigger profits for both producer and exhibitor, as it will stimulate the creation of photoplays of the very best quality.

"And, finally, I want it distinctly understood that this opening of the door to outsiders does not mean that cheap and shoddy goods are going to be slipped over my counters upon the unsuspecting exhibitor. My door is wide open only to pictures that are box-office attractions."

Lambert Hillyer, formerly of the Triangle-Ince scenario staff, is making his bow as a director in a beginning production at Culver City. He is directing one of his own stories in which Olive Thomas will be featured.

Here is Charlie Ray in "The Clodhopper." He can hop the clods all right but stumbles on his own feet when he hits the city.

At the immediate left is that sparkling little Australian star, Enid Bennett, in "The Girl, Glory," a new Triangle-Ince winner. Above is Wilfred Lucas and Eldar Millar in "Her "Excellency, The Governor."

A hint at "The Magnificent Meddler."

one's attentions on proceedings from the start and carry him through the virile story with a clean sweep of enjoyment which leaves no room for a trace of ennui. The last reel or so consists of rapid-fire melodrama. The action is accelerated, thrills are introduced and we have a regular piece of old-time horseback riding, rescues, fights, etc. For the short period of its duration this makes a fitting end for the picture and finishes it with a bang. Too much of this would have been tiresome, but it has been put on in such red-blooded, whirlwind style, that most any one will feel the force of the excitement.

The story has made the foundation for a good drama, but it is evidently not so much to the story itself as to its treatment, through fine direction, splendid types and good acting that the picture owes its success. Antonio Moreno has character as the red-blooded American youth who sets up a newspaper in a Texas wilderness of immorality and vice-graft and gradually gives the filthy little town a thorough house-cleaning, eradicating all of the undesirable elements of the place. The picture is Antonio Moreno's picture, without any doubt, and he makes the big part speak all the time. The fact that Mr. Moreno is, first and last, the featured party of this offering, ought to have some weight at the box-office, as he has done fine work in a good many excellent parts. Otto Lederer does well with an artist character part, getting in a deal of true-to-life newspaper office comedy. Leon D. Kent is all that a villainous, slinking Mexican heavy should be, while Mary Anderson is a suitable heroine. She figures more prominently in the last reels, and participates in one of the biggest thrills, riding on horseback with Mr. Moreno directly in front of a fast-advancing freight train. Safe on the other side of the crossing the pursuers are effectually cut off and the hero and heroine have a chance to cover some ground. We have never seen this particular mode of getaway used and it is a sample of some of the other away-from-the-ordinary things seen in the film.

We don't see just how this picture can fail at the box-office. It has a well presented story, a magnetic, virile star and a good cast. It has been exceptionally well produced by Director William Wolbert. His atmosphere, including everything from types to convincing sets, is entirely calculated to make the picture more real.

"The 13th Labor of Hercules"

Single Reel Series of Cinema Distributing Corporation Scenics. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS series of twelve one-reel trips around the great Panama-Pacific Exposition grounds at San Francisco is a collection of pictures that the exhibitor who is looking for something extraordinarily distinctive in this line cannot afford to overlook. All of the wonders of this vast world's fair have been caught in shots of beautiful photography. The whole series leaves no point of interest untouched in its comprehensive survey of the grounds. Panoramic views, interior views, and night scenes, all combine in making the whole a thing of beauty and interest. The scenes of night fireworks are the most impressive of any we have seen on the screen.

Among the things seen in the picture are: President Wilson's wireless signal setting in motion the machinery of the fair, causing the great fountain at the entrance gate to play, etc.; views of the famous Tower of Jewels; panoramic views from its top; the Palace of Transportation, with interior glances at many of the unusual exhibits; a sensational air flight of Art Smith, the eighteen-year-old aviator, turning three somersaults in succession high above people's heads; an extensive journey through the eleven million dollar amusement zone; the impressive closing exercises of the fair; and later the ruthless demolition of the temporary buildings. The toppling over of a high tower to the ground at no great distance from the camera affords a crashing sensation for the audience, and no mistake. From time to time distinguished Americans as well as foreign dignitaries are shown visiting the exposition.

For a scenic absolutely devoid of a slow or uninteresting moment these pictures are hard to beat. And in this case the beauty of the pictures is equal with the interest. They have another angle. The fair was representative of the prosperity and might of the country, and anything American at this particular time has a more than ordinary appeal to Americans.

"Filling His Own Shoes"

Bryant Washburn in Essanay-K. E. S. E. Feature of June 11. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is another comedy drama produced by Harry Beaumont with Bryant Washburn as his star, supported by Hazel Daly and a cast of well-known Essanay players. A magazine story by Henry C. Rowland is the basis of the play.

The offering is a satisfactory one and will please audiences generally. It has a number of unusual, humorous touches, such as characterized the preceding Washburn plays, and the acting and technical details are up to standard. The story itself, while out of the ordinary, is not as clearly told as it might be. As is frequently the case with pictures adapted from novels, one has the feeling that parts of the story lack explanation. As a whole, however, the play is very entertaining. It has been chosen by Manager Weil of the Castle Theater, Chicago, as the first number of his open booking series, and he reports that it is pleasing his discriminating clientele.

The Story: Ruggles (Bryant Washburn) is a shoe salesman for an American firm in Paris. He is interested in an art student, a young Englishwoman who refuses to meet him after she learns of his position. Then he meets Ruth Downing (Hazel Daly), daughter of the president of the shoe firm, and she urges him to better himself.

Determined to win Ruth's admiration, for he has fallen in love with her, Ruggles resigns his position and goes to the Balkan states. In a battle he saves the life of a Turkish nobleman. The nobleman later dies and leaves Ruggles a fortune and the custody of his three wards, Rosa, Roxana and Bulbul. Ruggles and the three girls return to Paris. One of the girls falls in love with Ruggles, to his great discomfort. The girl is jealous of Ruth, whom Ruggles loves, and causes trouble between them. This is at last cleared up when the girl elopes with Ruggles' friend. Then Ruggles marries Ruth.

"The Submarine Eye"

Williamson Brothers Story of Adventure and Thrills in Eight Reels. Reviewed by George W. Graves

WITH its story of novelty, adventure and thrills "The Submarine Eye" has about all that is required to keep its audiences in a perpetually interested state. Its very novelty, the awe of the fact that some of the participants in the story are actually seen by the camera many feet below the ocean's surface lends a sort of gruesome note of reality to the dramatic action. When it is time for the biggest thrill of all to arrive, we have the hero, in a diver's suit, attempting to open a large treasure safe on the ocean's bed. The awkward maneuvering necessitated by the cumbersome diving outfit and the great pressure of water is no proof against accidents. The door of the safe closes upon the hero's hands. The heroine, on the deck of the yacht above, sees the accident through a periscope device which penetrates far into the deep, but she, as well as the other members of the treasure cruising party are unable to lend any assistance. After hours of suspense, during which time a United States submarine, twelve hours' trip distant, is called upon for help, a deep sea sponge-fisher from the Nassau fisheries is prevailed upon to make the dive. He successfully releases the heavy door and encounters a man-eating shark on his way to the surface. The U. S. submarine, brought in, no doubt for patriotic purposes, is then wirelessed that the danger is over.

Throughout this period of suspense we have a villainous character, the heroine's titled lover, who has tried every means to keep his rival at the bottom of the sea, from giving whiskey to the air pumpers to the actual attempt to cut the diver's air pipe. When the treasure chest is finally raised it contains only a document written by a man years aback who had sacrificed all that was dear to him for gold. This mute testimony of the folly of inordinate gold-seeking leads the party to start for home in a better mood, glad that the treasure of gold was lost, rather than the treasure of human life.

The prologue to the story arrests the attention at once. It tells how the treasure happened to be left on this deserted isle and how two lovers met a terrible fate because of an intolerant father's insane sense of family honor. The prologue is well handled and it has a powerful effect on the spectator. The main story would have been doubly effective had the characters and events been made more convincing. One of the most hard-to-comprehend things comes to pass in the scene where the heroine gladly and even laughingly allows her lover to descend into the depths where a man-eating shark is disporting himself—after the experienced diver they have brought along on the voyage has said such an act would mean sure death. We wondered why they couldn't have waited a number of hours for the shark to get out of the vicinity or why they couldn't have disposed of the fish in one way or another.

It must be said of the under-sea photography that it is clear and that the ocean's bed certainly proves a location hardly rivaled by any other for dramatic action. The thought of the hero, forced to spend hour after hour down there without knowing whether or not deliverance is at hand certainly gives sympathy to that character. However, more sympathy is directed to the heroine, (part taken by Barbara Tennant) whose anguish in the awful period of waiting is made evident by good acting. Chester Barnett as the young inventor and hero makes a favorable impression, while others in a uniformly good cast are Lindsey Hall, Charles Hartley, Charles Slattery and Eric Mayne. Buller, "the Human Fish," a deep sea diver, who "will dive to the bottom of anywhere," creates a number of sensations all by himself. He is responsible for a big percentage of the picture's thrills. Winthrop Kelley directed.

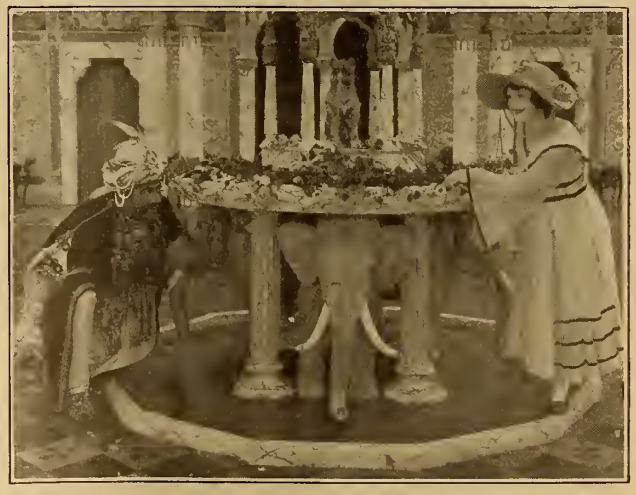
The picture ought to make a great state rights proposition, inasmuch as it is distinctly a special and an offering that is quite different from anything of the kind before attempted. It is novel in the extreme, exciting, and distinctly romantic.

"Oriental Love"

Keystone-Triangle Comedy in Two Reels Released May 27. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THERE was a lot of time consumed and money spent in making distinctive Oriental sets for this rousing comedy. In fact, the atmosphere is so apart from that of the average slapstick that one loses sight from time to time of the fact that it is a Keystone production in the absence of the Keystone cops, surf girls, park benches, loosely clothed villains and heroes and all the et cetera of the occidental world, up-to-the-minute slapstick. But Oriental grandeur can in no way hide the inimitable Keystone touches, which abound in laughable profusion in the picture. To outline the story would be almost as taxing a maneuver as it would be a fruitless one, since to tell the action of a Keystone comedy in sufficiently descriptive English were well nigh an impossibility. Suffice it to say that the confusion and trouble is all about a willful Rajah who relentlessly pursues the beautiful heroine that he may swell by one the number of his already overcrowded harem.

If there is anything that gets more laughs than any other one thing in the film it is undoubtedly a healthy and ambitious ram who butts with a will and a purpose. His escapades are sufficient of themselves, without the other innumerable Keystone touches to have an audience in "gales of laughter." We now humbly beg forgiveness for not having made mention of Ora Carewe, the heroine, before speaking of the "Royal Ram." The star is pretty and her work is fine throughout. A company of picked Keystoners gives her excellent support. "Oriental Love" is one more instance of the lengths to which the Keystone Company are willing to go to put realism, and, if possible, even scenic beauty, into their films.



This is "Oriental Love," as Mack Sennett sees it, at Keystone.

"The Mystery of No. 47"

Selig-K. E. S. E. Play of June 4 Features Ralph Herz. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

RALPH HERZ, the well known vaudeville and musical stage comedian, is the featured player in this farce-comedy, made at the Chicago Selig studios under Otis Thayer's direction. The picture is out of the ordinary in style, being more farcical than the usual five-reel comedy drama. It contains no slapstick, but its action is swift and frequently hilarious. The story is something of a novelty, and may be described as a burlesque of a detective story. Its amazing twists of plot resemble those of many a mystery novel and they are genuinely amusing.

The humor is that of situation, chiefly. The director has executed well his task of keeping the story swiftly moving with surprises cleverly sprung wherever possible. The story is written by J. Storer Clouston. The acting of the play is less important as a humorous element than its plot. Ralph Herz, with his mannerisms and facial expression, is fitted for screen work. His name will have a certain amount of advertising value. The balance of the cast is satisfactory, except the actress chosen as Mrs. Molyneaux. In the story she is mistaken for the adventuress, which is absurd. The nearer an extravagant story of this sort can be made to seem probable while played, the better the humor, and the more seriously it is played, the funnier it appears.

The offering will entertain all audiences which like comedy and light dramas and which take kindly to novelty features.

The Story—Irwin Molyneaux is an elderly Englishman of mild habits and limited income. When his cousin, a pompous bishop, comes to visit his home, the temperamental cook leaves and Mrs. Molyneaux acts as the cook. Molyneaux tells the bishop that his wife is visiting in the country. He tells the lie so badly that the bishop becomes suspicious, especially because the Molyneaux housemaid is a pretty girl and she and Molyneaux are on friendly terms. Angry because Molyneaux seems anxious to get rid of him, the bishop informs the police that he believes his cousin has murdered his wife.

The detectives and newspaper reporters set to work on the case. They believe the housemaid is an accomplice, but in printing photographs of the principals in the case they confuse Mrs. Molyneaux and the housemaid. A young lawyer who has loved the maid, not knowing her identity, now believes her murdered and sets to work to solve the crime. Then Molyneaux himself, under his pen name, for he secretly writes novels, is assigned to cover the story for a daily paper. He decides then not to confess the truth but to write the story and get the money. An endless number of complications arise, but in the end the comedy of errors is completely straightened out.

"Should She Obey?"

Arizona Film Company's State Rights Production. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS story is based on a sensational divorce case of several years ago and is set forth in a preachment play in which the present marriage and divorce laws are scored by a number of well known lawyers and sociologists. Opening with scenes of the once famous divorce colony of Reno and introducing a number of law-makers and public leaders, the picture then sets forth the story of a millionaire who, having risen to wealth through his wife's aid, forces her to divorce him so that he may marry a chorus girl. The audience will recognize the likeness to a real case. A second story dealing with an unhappy marriage, and the story of the chorus girl's own life are skillfully interwoven with the main plot. The arrangement of the story was made by Walter Howey, directed by George Siegmann.

The story is fairly well acted, the photography clear and the settings adequate. Some of the scenes, depicting the gay life which ensnares the millionaire, are quite elaborate. The story is clear and fairly well handled. The early part of the story might be condensed profitably. As a whole, the production is satisfactory. The settings and locations are varied and well chosen. From the exhibitor's standpoint, the value of the offering varies according to tastes of his patrons. It is an unhappy, sordid story, doubtless true to life in many respects. If your patrons like sensational stories, with a strong appeal to the sympathies, if they like rather lurid scenes of dissipation, they will be attracted by this picture and the advertising for which it gives opportunity, and they will not be disappointed in it. It lives up to its promises. As a study of sociological conditions, it cannot be taken very seriously. As an argument it is inconsistent and illogical. As a box-office attraction, it will be excellent in many communities. As a entertainment it will please those who like sensational themes.

The Story: William Gordan, something of a ne'er-do-well, working in a steel mill, marries Lorna against the wishes of her parents. She urges him to study and he makes a valuable chemical discovery which brings him a fortune and the presidency of a great corporation. Lorna does not care for society and Gordan becomes one of a dissipated set. He is infatuated with a chorus girl, Marie Gibson, who had risen from poverty. She urges him to divorce his wife and marry her, which he does. They try in vain to gain admittance to society here and abroad but public opinion bars them.

Lorna's friend, Mamie Blake, marries a worthless fellow who deserts her and becomes the manager of a musical show. Mamie had placed her little daughter at a convent school. The girl runs away and joins the chorus. Blake is the manager of the show but, not knowing the girl is his daughter, plans her ruin. The girl is later saved by her mother from an unhappy marriage. The story ends with Gorman's realization of the mistake he has made and with Lorna finding happiness in her son.

good as short numbers on a regular feature program. Their wholesomeness will serve as a welcome contrast to many too gloomy dramas.

Technically the offerings are up to standard. The acting and directing satisfy. Of the two numbers first shown for review, "The Wonderful Event," has the cleverer story, and its humor will appeal to all who love children. "The Guiding Hand" has a less probable story, but it is presented with good bits of business, the introduction of the pets and of a well trained dog being skillfully done.

"The Wonderful Event": Jane Wilson wants a baby brother. Having been told by her mother that she herself was found on a park bench, Jane becomes much interested in park benches thereafter. One day she finds a baby asleep on a park bench and, believing it is the longed for brother, she takes it home. The mother of the child frantically seeks the aid of the police and sometime later the "kidnapper" is located. Jane is heartbroken when the baby is taken away, but later we find her possessed of a real baby brother.

"The Guiding Hand": "Billie" Bell lives with her wealthy grandfather (Grant Foreman). Mr. Bell's stepdaughter and her husband covet the old man's wealth and fear he will leave it all to "Billie." They plot to win the old man through "Billie," and with their own children visit his home. They wish him to leave the child in their care. Bell sees their plot and outwits them, with the aid of his physician by pretending to be near death. The treatment "Billie" receives from them and their eagerness for the man's death shows their true nature. Bell's scheme is revealed and he drives away his false friends and continues to live happy with "Billie" and his other true friends.

"Poppy"

Selznick Eight-Reel Norma Talmadge Subject. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IF the story of this, based on that of Cynthia Stockley's unique novel, did no more than place the alluring star upon the screen in a character unusually interesting and individual, one in which her complete appeal is allowed to reach the audience and hold it delightfully absorbed, it would have a substantial reason for its existence. In the interpretation of the role the workings of a woman's mind, affected in peculiar ways by environment and fate, are handled in an intelligent manner, giving the character an appeal and interest which makes it something beside a figurehead in the plot.

From the start the story compels absorption. Not many feet have passed before we see the young heroine, a simple, trusting slip of a girl, being married to a wily individual of the "refined sensualist" type. The girl, completely deceived, thinks the proceedings are nothing more than those of legal adoption. So perfectly hoodwinked is she that even the band of gold on her finger is no medium of enlightenment. From this arresting start, the story relates in dramatic and subtle manner how the girl, left by her husband for a number of months alone on his big South African estate, develops into a womanhood of childlike ideals and untempered passion. A handsome, youthful explorer, made delirious through long illness, wanders away from the hospital, enters the garden of the estate and youth meets youth. The young man, Carson, leaves without the girl learning his name. Later the expectant husband returns home, and is astounded to find his wife with child. Poppy barely escapes to London with her life. How, becoming prosperous, she returns in later years to Africa and finds Carson and how a reconciliation is effected after the many complications are duly adjusted, provides an ending entirely satisfactory.

Norma Talmadge in "Poppy," the new Selznick play.

The work of the director, Edward Jose, is very good throughout. Realism was his motto. His artistic effects help perceptibly, the general atmosphere, that of a southern country, being well maintained. The garden of the estate with its dark shadows and witching, romantic appearance is a logical spot for the scene enacted therein.

The picture does not lack a strong cast. The star surely is at her best and she is ably aided by Eugene O'Brien (as the young explorer) and Frederick Perry (as the sensualist). Among the other capable players are Marie Haines, Edna Whistler, Jack Meredith and Dorothy Rogers.

A picture of painstaking production, and perpetually entertaining despite its length, this should show unusually good results at the box office. The coincidence of a unique story, complicated but clearly told, a popular star and good production makes it worth while and numbers it among the best Norma Talmadge pictures.

W. S. Hart and Margery Wilson in "Wolf Lowry."

"Wolf Lowry"

Triangle-Ince Western Drama Features William S. Hart. Reviewed by George W. Graves

'WOLF LOWRY' numbers among the best Hart pictures as a story. It has quaint humor, deep pathos, and exciting situations woven into the fabric of a story which offers the star a deeply sympathetic role straight through.

The desert "Wolf's" first unceremonious meeting with Mary, the sweet girl who is destined to soften his character, and his awkwardness in her presence which is carried throughout the whole story, afford a subtle humor which will amuse any audience. Lowry's rescue of Mary from the clutches of the real estate agent; the girl's promise to marry Lowry after his recovering from a long illness as a result of a wound received in the encounter; the elaborate preparations for marriage; the appearance of Mary's former lover, Owen Thorpe; her attempt to run away with him on the eve of her wedding with Lowry; the latter's discovery of the plot and, in savage wrath, leaving the lover to be devoured by wolves; his softening by force of Mary's hysterical pleas and bringing Thorpe back to safety; and his final stepping aside to allow the young people to be married—all of this makes a sequence of events which keeps the spectator always absorbed. The plot has the advantage of being exceptionally consistent and this is, perhaps, its great virtue.

Mr. Hart does some real emotional work in this and offers a deal of human comedy as well. His portrayal is calculated to boost him yet higher in the affections of a large following. The inward suffering which his noble sacrifice brings upon himself forms the basework of a sequence of big emotional scenes and the story skilfully brings about just the right conditions to make this agony the more intense. Margery Wilson as the girl who thought her former lover was dead and who ran away from the man she had promised to marry out of gratitude, to prevent a probable worse disaster, is, as ever, a very dainty, convincing heroine. Owen Thorpe is acceptable as the young lover, a part which does not make stringent demands upon him, and Aaron Edwards is fine as the blustering bully.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

Ernest Maupain, who plays the role of Jacob Zanin in "The Trufflers," has been with Essanay for two years. Previous to entering motion pictures he was one of the best known actors in France.

Mary Charleson, whose latest Essanay feature is "Satan's Private Door," was a musical comedy star before entering motion pictures.

Max Linder, the noted European comedian, has been forced to abandon temporarily the production of his Essanay comedy series owing to illness superinduced by wounds he received in the great war. The illness, however, is not regarded as serious.

Gladys Brockwell has formed a Red Cross class at the William Fox studios in Los Angeles, Cal. She is taking a course of training for nurse's work with four other members of the Fox organization. Instruction is being given by a member of the Red Cross of Los Angeles.

Courtney Ryley Cooper, author of the "Shoestring Charley of the Circus" stories which have delighted so many readers, is going to write scenarios instead of magazine stories. He is in charge of the scenario and publicity departments of Wharton, Inc., and is at work on his first feature.

"The Inner Shrine," Basil King's famous problem novel of Paris and New York society, will serve as Margaret Illington's second picture vehicle. Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun have arranged the story for the screen. Miss Illington will play Diane Winthrop, an American girl who, as the leader of a fast set, becomes the talk of Paris. The struggle which Diane is forced to make to prove herself worthy of the real love which comes into her life and which she almost loses, forms the basis of the story.

Marin Sais, the Kalem star, has been breaking in some young colts herself. They are destined for the ranch, and Miss Sais has been thoroughly enjoying her self-imposed work.

Mary Jane Irving, best known at the Culver City Studios as "Hart's Sweetheart," is playing an important part in the forthcoming Ince-Triangle play, starring Bessie Barriscale. Mary Jane, who is only two years old, decided, upon starting work in this picture, that she would only obey the dictates of Miss Barriscale, and it was necessary for the star to be present during the filming of each and every scene in which the baby appears.

A real "kiddies' picture" will take its place on the Triangle program soon. Thelma Salter, George Stone and the other Triangle youngsters are busy working under Director Irwin Willat on a story written by L. V. Jefferson for and about children. The grown-ups also will find entertainment in every situation.

William S. Hart describes his ride through the streets of St. Louis, Mo., at the head of 3,000 U. S. cavalry and infantrymen as being "the biggest and most blood-stirring scene I ever appeared in." He further states that he will be much better equipped to handle big mob scenes in Ince-Triangle pictures after seeing the manner in which these trained men obey orders.

"A Roadside Impresario," with George Beban playing the leading role, suggests an unusually delightful picture play, doesn't it; one that you must surely see? George Beban himself wrote the story, and Donold Crisp directed it. Mr. Beban is Giuseppe Franchini, an Italian fisherman, who becomes separated from his wife and little daughter by accident. They depart for America and Giuseppe, learning of his fact, starts out to find them in company with Bruno, his trained bear and bosom companion. This is a Paramount picture.

This cut can be borrowed for use in your program. Address MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Gail Kane, Mutual's new star, has become a social favorite in the few weeks that she has been at the American studio, Santa Barbara, and her telephone ringls often with invitations to go here and there. Miss Kane and her mother have taken a home at Santa Barbara. Miss Kane's work comes first however and she curbs her social activities to keep herself fit for her duties at the studio.

Henry Otto, who directed the famous "Undine" picture for Bluebird, is at work on another sea picture, much of it to be taken at the same places "Undine" was photographed.

Carmel Myers, who has appeared in many Fine Art-Triangle pictures, is now working in Universal pictures, directed by that famous woman director, Lois Weber.

William Duncan, who is directing "Hearts of Flame," the Vitagraph serial, took his company up to the San Marcus Pass, north of Santa Barbara, recently for the purpose of throwing an auto off the cliff into the ocean, eighty feet below. That's just one of the "thrills" promised in this speedy serial.

William Russell and Mary Miles Minter, the famous Mutual-American ingenue, are studio pals, and Miss Minter's delight is to go on a "breezer" with Russell in his big new racing car.

To welcome Juliette Day, the latest American-Mutual star, into their fold, Mary Miles Minter being the oldest star in years of service at the American studio, gave a dinner in Miss Day's honor. Among the guests were Juliette Day, Gail Kane, Francelia Billington, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, Kathleen Kirkham, Lucille Ward, Mary Miles Minter and William Russell, Rollin S. Sturgeon, Edward Sloman, James Kirkwood, Henry King, George Fisher and Edward Peil.

Robert Vignola, after staging two big court incidents in Pauline Frederick's picture "Her Better Self," has decided that the average court trial is entirely too dull and drab. He therefore suggests that the government hire a motion picture director to stage all trials. Mr. Vignola argues that by this means alone can the jury be kept awake.

George Beban is now at work on the last of his famous Italian characterizations until September 1. The well-known Morosco star has planned a long tour and camping trip with which he refuses to permit any such trifle as work to interfere. Consequently he will shortly depart for the mountains and will swear off on garlic until the fall.

Now that stage and screen stars are selling hats and various commodities for the Red Cross and other charitable institutions, Billie Burke has no conscientious qualms against working in a hardware store in her first Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Mysterious Miss Terry." She was not quite so happy, however, when director J. Searle Dawley carelessly suggested that she lift a keg of nails from the floor to a top shelf. After one rehearsal the director compromised on a paper of tacks.

In order to get real studio atmosphere for a series of magazine articles, Ethel Rosemon, a well-known newspaper and magazine writer, appears as an extra in "The Trail of the Shadow" and "The lifted Veil."

A three-legged dog is being trained as a motion picture actor at Essanay and shortly will be filmed in a feature entitled "The Golden Idiot."

Little Mary McAllister, the celebrated child star in Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series, is only six years old. She has been in motion pictures for the past two years.

Margarita Fischer (Mutual-Pollard) one afternoon every week sends her automobile to take three helpless old women out for an airing.

Mary Miles Minter (American-Mutual) owns a controlling interest in an ice cream factory at Los Angeles, but Mother Shelby won't let her eat any of it because of danger to her complexion.

E. K. Lincoln, at present starring in the Mutual-Jimmy Dale serial, "The Grey Seal," has just been engaged by the S. & M. Film Company of Philadelphia to star in a picture of Canadian military life, "For Liberty," which will be made under the direction of Romaine Fielding in Canada and at the Lubin plant in Philadelphia. Ira M. Lowry is general manager of the new film company and work on this production will begin in the near future. Mr. Lincoln will leave June 7 for Montreal, where the first scenes of this picture will be taken.

Antonio Moreno has been signed by Astra and will soon be at work in Pathe Gold Rooster Plays. Mr. Moreno comes from a long engagement with Vitagraph, where he had leading parts in many of that company's best known pictures, among them "The Island of Regeneration" and "Kennedy Square." Mr. Moreno was born in Madrid, Spain, in 1888.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Mutual Pictures

A Watery Grave—(TWO REELS)—No. 10 OF RAILROAD RAIDERS — SIGNAL-MUTUAL — June 11. —Featuring Helen Holmes. When Helen reaches shore after her long swim, she finds the overalls and coat of one of the workmen and dons these as a disguise while she goes in search of aid for Wilson. While sending a message from a telephone station, one of the raiders comes in and leaves an order for a telephone to be fixed. She offers herself as an assistant, and while helping the repairmen overhears the plans of the gang to rob the freight on the ferry that night. Helen cuts in on the wire and sends a message of the plans to Webb. When the raiders discover that the "helper" is not one of the regular force they suspect treachery and give chase to Helen. She jumps a freight, followed by Tony, and a fight ensues in which the plucky girl is thrown from the car. Webb appears in a boat and Helen hails him, suggests that he leave her to guard the freight on the ferry while he goes on to capture the gang. The raiders discover Helen on the ferry, throw her into the car they have just emptied, cut it loose and push it off the boat into the bay.

The Man Higher Up—(Two Reels)—No. 13 OF JIMMIE DALE SERIES.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Joseph Heiman, an underworld lawyer, holds a threat of exposure and death over three crooks and forces them to murder Henry Roessle, a mill paymaster, and rob him of $20,000. Heiman displays the evidence in an envelope marked "To the District Attorney." The crooks plan to kill Heiman and get the damaging papers and the Tocsin warns Jimmie Dale of the plans. Jimmie robs Heiman's safe of the envelope, but before he can make his escape the crooks arrive and a struggle ensues. The police then appear and Jimmie is wounded. The Tocsin rescues Jimmie, secures the envelope from his pocket and mails it to the District Attorney. Heiman and the three crooks are captured by the police and brought to justice.

His Cannibal Wife—(ONE REEL)—MUTUAL—JUNE 12.—Featuring Jean Otto and Zona Porter. As Zona is the star of a film company and Otto, her husband, only an "extra" man, she treats him with irritating scorn. One morning she has been particularly aggravating, and Otto, while sulking, meets the scenario editor, who asks him how he came to marry such a brilliant star as Zona. Otto, seeing an opportunity to get even, thereupon invents a blood-curdling tale of his adventures upon a cannibal island, where he was expecting death at the hands of a mysterious veiled figure to whom the natives kowtowed, but instead found himself married to her, and had rescued the maiden and brought her back to civilization. As Otto completes his story the scenario editor pronounces it a great find and gives him a handful of gold for his idea.

Jerry's Getaway—(ONE REEL)—CUB—JUNE 14. —Featuring George Ovey. Needing sleep badly, Jerry tries to obtain it in the park, but the police department and some wicked boys make it very difficult. When he finally does fall asleep, he has a beautiful dream of blowing up a lot of his natural enemies, the police, but awakens to find he has been made the victim of an explosion planned by the boys. He is then arrested by the police, who accuse him of causing the explosion. At the station house he succeeds in making his getaway, and then, in his efforts to make good his escape, he "butts in" on a five-pointed mix-up between Roxie, the cook for the Mills household, her two rival police lovers and the master and mistress of the house. Jerry saves the lives of the two lovers, one from being roasted and the other from being frozen to death, but involves poor Roxie in a jealous row between Mr. and Mrs. Mills and lands himself back in the clutches of the law.

Universal Program

Universal Screen Magazine—ISSUE NO. 23.—JUNE 15.—The first subject is the restoration of old papers, which has been the life work of William Berwick, at the Congressional Library in Washington. Among his work is the restored will of George Washington, which is shown to us. Curious secrets of metals, exposed by experiments in a chemical laboratory, are surprising and interesting. Dainties cheaply made at home for teas and receptions are illustrated by the Screen Magazine's expert cook, Mrs. Louise Andres. A preparedness feature shows the working of the periscope—the eyes, ears, nose and mouth of a submarine. Then we are shown the making of hand grenades, and their use in modern trench warfare. Animated sculpture, by Willie Hopkins, called "Flower Faces," closes the reel.

China at Work and at Play—(SPLIT REEL)—POWERS—JUNE 17.—With Dr. Dorsey. The south of China is a densely populated land, very rich and characterized by thrift and economy of its people. We see the main street of Shanghai, with modern buildings and street-chairs. Then we see glimpses of the cities of Singapore and Penang. The Chinese have a thoroughly equipped racetrack in Shanghai. We also see horse races in Penang, on the Malay Peninsula. On the same reel is:

A Pesky Pup (SPLIT REEL)—Jones and his pup are out for a walk. Jones finds a ten-dollar bill, but soon has to pay it away in fines. For his pup steals some meat from the butcher's shop. Then he knocks a painter from the top of his ladder. After many other such adventures the ten dollars is used up. On the same reel with China at Work and at Play.

Chicken Chased and Henpecked—(Two Reels) —L-KO—JUNE 13.—With Phil Dunham, Merta Sterling and Lucille Hutton. Henpeck falls a victim to the charms of Filet Mignon, a ballet dancer. Mrs. Henpeck is suspicious of her husband and determines to trap him. Many exciting incidents take place. The reel closes with Henpeck falling into the auto which is carrying Filet away from the house.

Heart of Gold—(Two Reels)—GOLD SEAL—JUNE 14.—With Walter Belasco and Zoe Ray. Fenstein is very fond of little Mary Forarty. When the little girl's mother dies, he takes the child to his home. For a time he and Mary are perfectly happy, but when a rich man and his wife come to adopt the little girl, Fenstein is forced to give her up. Later we see Mary playing in a gorgeous room while Fenstein in his humble home is fondly holding the doll he bought for Mary.

The Flopping Uplifter—VICTOR—JUNE 14.—With Ernie Shields, Yvette Mitchell, O. C. Jackson and Albert MacQuarrie. Lord Helpus accepts a job as social uplifter. Helen is mad about slumming and pretends to be a poor girl. Her father and sweetheart plan to cure her of her love of the slums. Bob sees Helen with Helpus and reports to the father that it is only a ruse to meet the man. Father goes after his daughter in a machine. Helpus thinks the girl has fallen a victim to the old man and arrests them. At the rooms of the society Helen and her father are recognized and apologies are made.

The Mysterious Outlaw—BIG U—JUNE 17.—With William Goettinger, Jane Bernoudy and Harry Carey. Martin receives a letter from Buck, an ex-convict, that he is going to "get" him for sending him up and marrying his girl. Martin and his wife move hurriedly, but Buck finds out where they are staying. Buck hides behind a door that Martin must pass to leave. Two drunken cowboys are quarreling and a shot is fired. When Martin comes out he sees something in the grass. It proves to be the body of Buck, who has been killed by the chance shot.

Her Strange Experience—IMP—JUNE 17.—With Louise Lovely. Marie is kidnaped and held for ransom. John, one of the crooks, rescues her. Later, Marie finds John in the park. He has been hurt and she takes him to her home. John becomes a servant in the family. Some time ater he receives a mysterious note that unless he hands over a certain gem, which is displayed among the wedding presents, the crooks will get him. He tries to steal the jewel, but Marie prevents it. She then causes the arrest of the crooks who are waiting to receive the jewel.

The Black Mantilla—(THREE REELS)—JUNE 12. —With Claire McDowell, Harry Mann, Gypsy Hart and Richard Ryan. Huanto of the Rurales, the most dashing caballero in the state, was loved by both Marachita and Guella. Trouble arose when Guella wore the black lace mantilla given to her mother by Huanto. Marachita thinks Huanto had presented it to the girl. That same night Marachita promised Juan she would be his sweetheart if he would get her a mantilla finer than Guella's. In order to buy the wonderful gift for the girl he loved, Juan took a valuable picture from the Mission and hastened to Calino to sell it. When the theft was discovered, Marachita quickly told them that Juan had stolen it to buy her a mantilla. Knowing that Juan would come through the pass, three men went to wait for him. Juan is killed by the men. Huanto comes across the body of Juan and takes the mantilla and the money. Arriving in the village he offers the mantilla to Marachita and kisses her. As he does so the shadow of a buzzard hovers over them. Exclaiming, "You, the mantilla and the coins are all accursed!" he left her. She slowly drew off the mantilla and went into the house.

Beyond the War Zone in France—GOLD SEAL—JUNE 12.—Released with "The Black Mantilla." Arbois is a small French town, near the edge of the Jura Mountains on the Swiss frontier. We see some of its streets and the market place where the market is held on certain days of the week. The inhabitants make good use of the Cuissance River, which flows through the town. Arbois is the boyhood home of the famous biologist, Louis Pasteur, the discoverer of the treatment named for him. The monument erected to his memory is seen.

A Blissful Calamity—(Two Reels)—VICTOR—JUNE 15.—With Fred Church and Fritzi Ridgeway. Westie, on account of his wealth, was a great favorite in society. He is invited to a supposedly stag affair, but to his dismay found many girls there. Finally he decides to say that he is engaged and when asked who the girl might be, manufactured the name "Annie Smith from Calliope Center." The host, thinking that he must be lonesome, wired to Calliope Center to Annie Smith, asking her to spend the week-end with them. Annie decides to take advantage of the invitation. Arriving at the house, Annie meets Westie and they plan that she should play the part of his fiancee. The guests insist that Westie and his fiancee should be married right away, and so Westie wires a friend to send a fellow to impersonate a minister. After the ceremony Westie learns that the minister was no fake. He rushes into Annie's room and tells her, adding that for himself he couldn't say he was sorry. She calmly remarks, "Well, don't expect me to be." He is stunned, but is also delighted.

To Be or Not to Be Remarried—NESTOR—JUNE 11.—With Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and Molly Malone. Jimmie and his wife quarrel after a week of married life. They receive letters from Tom and Bessie, who have become engaged. Jimmie calls up Tom and warns him, while Jimmie's wife does the same for Bessie. Tom calls on Bessie and they call off their engagement. Meanwhile Jimmie and his wife make up. Tom and his friends go to a cafe to celebrate the broken engagement, and Bessie and her friends happen into the same cafe for the same purpose. Jimmie and his wife also come in. All three parties meet. Jimmie tells Tom that there is nothing like being married, and all hasten off to be present at the hasty marriage of Tom and Bessie.

One Damp Day—JOKER—JUNE 16—With William Franey and Gale Henry. Bill watches all the pretty girls crossing the street on a rainy day. Gale is jealous and Bill is so angry that he has papers made out for a divorce. He happens to change coats with Milt and when he hears that Gale has been left a fortune he is very anxious to get back the papers. He has many exciting adventures trying to rescue his coat. Gale finds the papers about the divorce and the pictures fade out on her comparing the divorce paper with that of the legacy.

'Twixt Death and Dawn—EPISODE 13 OF The Voice on the Wire—RELEASED WEEK OF JUNE 4. —With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. Shirley has been warned by the "Voice" to watch for the hour between night and daylight. Cronin is trying to force Pale Ida to tell him who the voice on the wire is, but she resists him. At the professor's, Shirley is still watching Polly. Suddenly she asks him why it is so dark. The professor examines her eyes and finds that she is blind. The voice again warns Shirley that unless he drops his investigations at once Polly's sight will not be restored. Ida seems just about to give Cronin the information he desires when something seems to catch her throat. The phone rings and Cronin hears that Ida is speechless, and that if he attempts to make her write the name of the voice she will die on the instant. Cronin is completely baffled.

The Thief Maker—(Two Reels)—IMP—JUNE 16.—With Daniel Leighton, Jack Nelson and Molly Malone. Walter Stoddard, a wealthy broker, does not approve of the growing friendship between his son, Jack, and his pretty stenographer, Jane Godfrey. Jane is discharged. Later, Jack sees Jane on the street and finds that she is really suffering from want of food. He remembers Steve's suggestion, and tells the girl that he will soon have plenty of money. Jack enters his father's house and secures a valuable jewel. Then Steve takes him to a place where he can dispose of it. Returning to Jane he tells her what he has done. She persuades him to confess to his father. It turns out that Stoddard is the fence through which the crooks dispose of their ill-gotten goods. The old man now awakens to the fact that he is a thief-maker. He consents to the marriage of Jane and Jack.

Making Monkey Business—Victor—June 12.—With Ralph McComas, Eileen Sedgwick, Milton Sims and Joe Martin. Betty has a rich inheritance, but she can't find it. One day, "The Flea" comes to rob her, bringing with him his accomplice, the ape. Betty has just time to call her fiance, Detective Duffer, when she is locked in a cupboard. "The Flea" and Duffer fight. The ape goes up the chimney after Duffer, who hangs on to two bricks. They finally pull out and prove to be the gold bricks of which Betty's inheritance consists. They bless the ape as their friend.

Feature Programs

Butterfly

The Field of Honor—(Five Reels)—Butterfly—June 11.—With Allen Holubar, Louise Lovely, M. K. Wilson and Sidney Dean. It is April of the year 1861. Wade Clayton, a lawyer, is situated in a small Ohio town. He becomes very friendly with Laura Sheldon, the prettiest girl in Ohio. Her mother, however, favors George Baring. Returning from a business trip, Wade is surprised to learn that she has been married privately to Baring. The President calls for volunteers and Wade at once raises a company. Through the influence of Wade, George is made an officer. At the battle of Nashville, Baring entirely loses his nerve. He tries to run away but is halted by Poole's bullet. Laura is led to believe that her husband died on the field of honor. Her son is brought up to regard his father as his greatest hero. Later Laura surmises the truth. She consents to marry Wade.

Christie Comedies

Those Wedding Bells—(One Reel)—Christie—June 4.—When, on the eve of their wedding, Neal learns that Betty expects to take her two bull terriers on the honeymoon, he asserts himself and Betty petulantly declares there will be no wedding. Next morning at Neal's office Fate blows in in the guise of Miss Pimento Cheez, an old maid who must, to gain a legacy, be married before midnight. Neal is about to commit suicide, but agrees to marry Miss Cheez instead and receives a thousand on account. Miss Cheez is to come for him at three. But Betty relents, calls up Neal and at the sound of her voice Miss Cheez is forgotten. Granting Betty's apology, Neal says he will meet her at the church at the original hour of two. Watson, his valet, reminds him of the old maid, but Neal hasn't her address. So he dashes off, a little late, to marry Betty, who is waiting at the church. He is just about two laps ahead of Miss Cheez, who takes Watson and pursues. Neal rushes into the church and hustles Betty up before the minister. In the midst of the ceremony Miss Cheez dashes in, but Neal says he has a prior engagement. Miss Cheez must have a husband, and Neal has a happy thought of Watson, who will do anything for money, so there is a double wedding.

K. E. S. E.

A Day and a Night—Selig—(Two Reels)—June 25.—The fortunes of a country town minister in New York looking for a choir. Reviewed in next issue.

The Star Spangled Banner—Edison—(Three Reels)—Roger Shirley, an American by birth, is educated in England. His mother, a widow, marries Colonel Sherwood Barron of the U. S. Marine Corps. Four months later Colonel Barron is in command of the Marine detachment at the Bremerton Navy Yard, and his step-son, Roger, is expected home. When he comes he laughs at everything American, most of all the Marines. He does not make friends with the officers, nor the men, and when he is lost while hunting rabbits, his step-father calls for volunteers to find him. The entire regiment steps forth, for his father's sake. He lies in the bottom of a ravine with a broken ankle and is carried home, to learn the lesson of patriotism while his ankle knits. There comes a day when Roger stands at reverent attention while the flag is lowered and the evening gun fired.

A Place in the Sun—Do Children Count Series—(Screen Time 25 Minutes)—June 4.—Frank North, out of employment, leaves his family and goes to another city to seek work. He is terribly injured and unable to notify his wife. Rapidly the North family approaches starvation. Little Marion, the daughter, finds a wallet in the street, dropped by Banning, a miser. Believing that the Lord had sent the money for her sick mother, the child utilizes it to purchase medicine and groceries. Banning causes Marion's arrest. She is arraigned in the Juvenile Court. However, the judge, after hearing her story, throws Banning out of court. A charitable society takes care of the family, locates North and aids him to recovery then secures him a permanent position. Thus Marion brings her parents to a "place in the sun."

Where Is My Mother?—(Essanay)—(Screen Time 25 Mins.)—June 11.—Do Children Count? series, featuring little Mary McAllister. Nina Burdock, like every other child, thinks the whole world revolves about her mother. And when, suddenly, her mother disappears, Nina is broken-hearted. Burdock had returned to his home one evening and found his wife apparently in a compromising position with Robert Wilkins, a friend of the family. The couple had had a violent scene which ended in Mrs. Burdock leaving her home. Despite the pleas of his child for her mother, Burdock seeks a divorce. Nina, however, goes to the judge and pitifully pleads that he do not take her mother from her. The judge is so impressed he makes a special investigation and finds that Mrs. Burdock is innocent of her husband's charges. He gets Burdock and his wife into his chambers and, using the child as the "tie that binds," brings about a joyful reconciliation.

The Land of Long Shadows—Essanay—(Screen Time 65 Mins.)—Up in the land where the sun hangs low and the hungry wolves' long shadows play ominously over the everlasting snow, Joe Mauchin first meets Jeanne Verette. He is a trapper, come down to the little post of Mead's Pocket—a mining town which would have shamed Hell with its viciousness—for supplies. She, the daughter of a saloonkeeper who compels her to "drum up trade" among his maudlin patrons. Joe falls in love with Jeanne. A brute of a man seeks to interfere and in the resultant struggle falls dead. Joe and Jeanne flee that night to his camp, miles away, and a year's happiness follows. Then the trapper finds Constable McKenzie of the Mounted Police half dead in the snow. Joe revives the officer and carries him to his cabin. Straightway McKenzie arrests the trapper for the saloon death. A desperate fight ensues between the two, and the constable, overpowered, flees for aid. He is last seen in the woods, staggering from the effects of a wound, and with a pack of wolves slowly drawing in on him. Joe, in the cabin, draws to his arms Jeanne, who is shyly clutching a newly-made bit of baby clothes. It is that for which Joe had fought.

Mutual Master Pictures

Periwinkle—(Five Reels)—American—June 11.—Starring Mary Miles Minter. The story opens on a desolate beach near a life-saving station. The younger member of the life-guard crew, Ira, rescues a baby girl from a wreck. The child is cared for at the station, the men christening her "Periwinkle." Ephraim Rawlings, aged beachcomber, living near the station with his widowed daughter, Ann, takes charge of "Periwinkle" and cares for her until she is sixteen years old. Dick Langdon, wealthy young New Yorker, is rescued by "Periwinkle" from the wreck of his yacht. Through her innocent goodness and faith, "Periwinkle" transforms Langdon from a blasé ne'er-do-well to a useful member of society, and after a stormy courtship, marries him.

General Program

Mr. Pringle and Success—Black Cat Feature Essanay—June 9.—(Screen Time 29 Mins.)—Jonathan Pringle gets the "efficiency bug" from reading a book on "How to Succeed." He discharges his aged office manager and employs Kelly, a younger man. Eddie Delane, a reporter, is in love with Doris Pringle. However, her father squelches the budding romance. Eddie is not efficient, he thinks. The reporter and Doris appear at the Pringle Company's office to inform the old man that they intend to elope unless he gives his consent. Eddie catches Kelly in the act of robbing the safe. In his effort to be efficient, Mr. Pringle unknowingly had employed a notorious safe-cracker. It marks the downfall of efficiency, Pringle consents to the marriage and rehires his old manager.

The Rainbow Box—Black Cat Feature—June 16.—Essanay (Screen Time 26 Mins.)—Love or wealth—which does a girl most want? Carol Blair, a pretty little clerk in a modiste's shop, dreams of some day possessing the latter. Accidentally she meets Wesley Jamison, who appears to be extremely wealthy. Fearing he would spurn a mere modiste's clerk, Carol poses as a millionaire's daughter. She grows to love him too much, however, to continue to deceive him, so confesses her pseudom. In turn he confesses deception also, admitting that he is in reality only a bookkeeper. The parting of their ways seems to have arrived, but Carol decides that after all true love beats all the wealth in the world.

The Service of Love—O. Henry Series—Joe Larrabee came out of the Middle West with genius for pictorial art, and Delia Caruthers was sent by her family and admiring friends to New York to study the piano at a lot of expense. She and Joe meet at a studio party, fall in love and establish a small household of their own. Soon the expensive lessons of them both deplete their small funds and Delia, overcoming her husband's objections, finds a music pupil in the person of Clementina, daughter of General Pinkney, on Seventy-first street. There are to be three lessons per week at five dollars each. Joe finds a customer for one of his landscapes and receives orders for more. One Saturday night Joe gets home first, and when Delia comes in, her hand is bound up in cotton waste and oil. Clementina, she tells Joe, insisted on a Welch rarebit after her lesson and has spilled the boiling hot stuff on her hand. Joe wants to know at what hour the burn occurred, for at five o'clock he had sent up from the engine room of the laundry, where he fires the boiler, some cotton waste and oil for a girl who has burned her hand on the iron. Delia then breaks down—she has been ironing shirts in the same laundry. "When one loves one's art, no service seems too hard."

A Suit and a Suitor—Bickel Comedy—(One Reel)—June 11.—Papa Snyder objects to his daughter's love affair with Willie Follow, and takes her to Pineaway Inn in the hope of making her "forget it." Willie soon learns where she is and follows. When dad discovers Willie he is preparing to leave, when Cupid, in the person of Louis Dinkelspiel, intervenes. Louis finds his way into Snyder's room while Snyder is having his daily siesta. He spots Snyder's clothes and appropriates them, leaving his nondescript garments in their place. Mrs. Snyder, daughter and Willie see Louis flirting and naturally think it is Papa Snyder. The latter is seized for the theft of his own garments and a general mixup follows. When Papa Snyder recovers he is too broken-spirited to object further to the marriage of Willie and his daughter.

The Gold That Glittered—O. Henry Series—(Two Reels)—Armed with $25,000, a brave heart and a store of simplicity as to New York and its ways, General Falcon arrives in the metropolis from South America to purchase arms for one of those ever-fertile revolutions they have down there. He rambles about until he finds a small hotel where Spanish is spoken—if you believe the sign on the window. In the course of further rambles he is assisted to his lodgings by "Spider Kelley," who is no stranger to the police. Kelley plots with Jimmie Dunn to sell the General several thousand cases full of gold bricks, which they have placed in a warehouse. Mrs. O'Brien, the jolly landlady at the hotel, has almost won the General's heart, and she, realizing that he is about to be "sold," makes herself so attractive that he forgets about business. When the deal is about to be closed the widow pokes about and discovers the deception. When the hour for payment arrives the conspirators find him sans cash. He has married Mrs. O'Brien and she has blarneyed him into buying the hotel.

A Menagerie Mixup—Ham Comedy—Kalem—June 4.—Featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and A. E. Duncan. While indulging in a little hunting expedition with a bean shooter, Bud manages to mistake Ham for a target. In fleeing from the wrath of his burly friend, Bud contrives to upset Hester Honeysuckle, who is on her way to mail invitations to her masquerade party. When Ham rescues the fair maid, she rewards him with an invite, and Ham decides to go disguised as a bear. Ringworm's circus comes to town and the manager offers Bud two dollars to help him advertise the show. Ringworm puts a bear suit on him and gets the whole population out looking for his escaped bear. The village toper, I. C. Double, sees Ham and Bud, both disguised as bears, and he knows he is seeing things. Ham and Bud make a thrilling escape by jumping off a cliff, and when they get out of their disguises recognize each other violently. Bud gets the worst of it at the hands of Ham.

Keystone Studios' Third Successful Term Will Expire in August

Chicago News

SEVERAL exchange men and exhibhibitors went up to the Milwaukee theater men's convention last week.

W. R. Rothacker was in Manhattan a few days last week on business.

C. F. Chandler, who handles Essanay's advertising reins, broke away from Chicago last week and busted into Green Lake, Wisconsin.

Ralph O. Proctor, Art Dramas' managing genius and president of the Reel Fellows' Club, made a business trip to Kansas City last week.

Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's youngest star, has been "doing her bit" by selling Red Cross memberships in the booth at the Boston store.

J. Ellsworth Gross, now managing director of the film advertising department of the American Bioscope Corporation, severed his connection with the Zeigfeld Cinema Corporation on May 29.

C. E. Eckels of the American Bioscope Company attended the advertising convention at St. Louis last week. He also secured some commercial pictures while in the German city.

Ellis Cohen, publicity and promotion man with the local Universal office, has left for Seattle, where he will drive "The Grey Ghost," Universal's new serial, on to glory.

When Manager Weil of the Castle showed Bryant Washburn's new play, "Filling His Own Shoes," the actor himself appeared at the theater and attracted a good deal of attention, particularly from the ladies.

Theda Bara was among the distinguished visitors to our city within the last week. The Fox star stopped over for a few days en route to the Pacific Coast studios, where she is to play the role of the famous Egyptian queen in an elaborate ten-reel Fox special production, "Cleopatra," to be filmed in California.

"I want to say that I enjoy reading the reports from exhibitors which MOTOGRAPHY publishes in its 'What the Picture Did for Me' department," said Miss Bara. "I feel that the contributors are very sincere in that they give not their own personal opinions but the estimates of their audiences. The department shows what the public likes."

Taylor Holmes who made the distinct hit in Chicago when he appeared in "His Majesty Bunker Bean" at the Cort Theater last year, and wh is well known on the stage, has arrived to begin work with Essanay on some new comedy dramas.

Wallace McDonald, the star in Vitagraph's latest O'Henry story, "Vanity and Some Sables."

You missed something if you didn't attend the Reel Fellows ladies' night last Thursday, May 31. Several members, feminine and otherwise, of "The Bird of Paradise" company were entertained and entertaining. There was a big and jolly crowd and lots to eat.

Irving Mack, for several years assistant to Ralph T. Kettering, publicity director of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises, in Chicago, and before that connected with the publicity department at White City, has been appointed Chicago publicity director for the Bluebird and Universal Film Companies. In his new position he will have entire charge of all advertising and press work done in the interest of the company in Chicago and vicinity. Mr. Mack assumed his new duties Monday, June 3.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has begun an innovation in film salesmanship when Frances McDonald takes the road from Bluebird's Chicago office to call on exhibitors in the surrounding territory. Miss McDonald is believed to be the pioneer in her particular line, and Bluebird expects, through her, to demonstrate that woman's work may be successfully extended to the sales branch of the moving picture industry. Miss McDonald has been associated with several big dailies in the East. On the New York World she created a series on "The Girl Drummer," going on the road as a merchandise saleswoman to gain actual experience for her story. She also followed a band of confidence workers and turned out a story, of sensational bent, on "Collecting for Charity." She was a member of the Philadelphia North American's staff, working on a special series of articles for women.

Lately she has visited exhibitors in the East, interesting them in a premium plan that involved a merchandise scheme, and thus worked into selling films for Bluebird.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation gave a trade showing of its state rights production, "God's Man," starring H. B. Warner, at ten o'clock Tuesday morning, June 5, at the Playhouse. Jesse J. Goldburg of the Frohman Corporation is in Chicago in the interest of the film, his headquarters being at the Hotel Sherman.

ANOTHER SEA STORY

Henry Otto, the producer who made the big feature, "Undine," has been engaged by a new syndicate headed by M. P. Hansen to direct the first of a series of features for the open market.

The story is an original one and savors of the sea and Mr. Otto considers it the best vehicle he has ever been handed to work from and it gives him ample opportunities for the artistic effects which are associated with his productions as well as supplying some splendid dramatic possibilities.

A specially selected cast is being engaged and preparations are already under way.

Among other well known features made by Henry Otto are "Undine," the water classic; "Mister 44" and "The River of Romance," starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison, for the Metro.

Goldwyn's Call To the Colors

BY WAY of answering thousands of exhibitor inquiries, Goldwyn announces that its branches throughout America and the six branches of Goldwyn Pictures Ltd. of Canada will open for business immediately after June 15.

Our Goldwyn representatives go on duty on June 11. They will at once be in possession of our contract forms and be ready to inform exhibitors of our policies.

Each branch manager will be informed and equipped to talk rental prices.

In specific reply to one universally-asked question.

Exhibitors will not have to book six or eight or three pictures of any one Goldwyn star to obtain the one picture of that particular star they really want for their patrons.

TO THE 9000 EXHIBITORS

Reading Motography Each Week

We have turned something over to you that nobody in the world is going to be able to take away from you. We mean our department. It's yours, yours from the first capital letter to the last period. When that department is edited the blue pencil is thrown away, you are your own editor.

It's acknowledged the very biggest thing ever done in the motion picture trade journal field since the beginning of the industry.

It is real, unsullied, first hand, dependable, unbiased information about the picture, your stock in trade.

You are going to help yourself by helping the other fellow. If you aren't already sending in your reports, send one or two or a dozen today and we'll come right back at you and show you how it will be easy for you to do this each week.

No charge, no catch; just an honest to goodness offer that comes straight from the heart. Turn to that department and read it over. The deeper you get into it the more you will feel the enthusiasm of being represented in it creep up your spine.

We're not going to skimp on space; the more pages we can give you the better you are going to make us feel. You see, you and John and the whole nine thousand of us are just one big family.

Let's help each other a bit.

"Cut-Outs" in Producing Costs

HOW ONE PRODUCER ELIMINATES WASTE AND MAKES HIS ESTIMATES ACCURATE

By James A. Payant in System Magazine.

A Western producing company used to spend $1,000 a month for a single transportation item. Now it is spending an average of only $500 a month. This happens to be just one saving out of the many that have been effected in the same concern since it has been keeping accurate records of costs.

A new general manager decided some months ago, when he came with this concern, that the manufacture of motion pictures could be put on the same effective cost basis that he had found successful in other kinds of business. So he made a thorough study of the facts he needed to watch, and had a set of records worked out that gave him these facts regularly and accurately. This article is going to tell about his records. No doubt the interest in them will not be confined to producers alone, for the principles embodied in these records are the same as those which underlie the economical management of other branches of the business.

In the old days the estimated cost of a production at this plant was often little more than a rough guess at the facts. A picture that was estimated in advance to cost ten thousand dollars might easily run to twenty thousand dollars. No one was particularly surprised or disturbed by the discrepancy. In fact, it would probably have been a sourcre of astonishment if the estimated cost had met the actual cost much more than half way.

Careful Estimates Made

Under the new plan, however, the final cost does, with few exceptions, meet the original estimate.

As soon as a scenario is accepted, the script is turned over to the production department. This department makes an estimate sheet which lists every item of expense under all the various classified headings.

The estimate goes to the general manager for his approval. If the story appears to warrant the expense he authorizes the production and returns the estimate sheet, together with the script, to the production department.

The production is then definitely assigned to one of the directors. He is asked to approve the scene plot which the art director prepares. A scene plot is made up for each set, and indicates exactly the space that will be required on the stage, as well as the scenery and accessories which will be needed to dress the set. The director is required to approve the arrangement of this scene plot and to indicate the exact time when he will be ready to direct the picture.

Care is taken to relieve the director of all detail; for if he decides on eight o'clock of a Tuesday morning as the time when he will be ready to start the picture, the set will be ready for him at that hour. Under the old plan he had to make it his business to keep after the property man, the art director and perhaps two office boys to be sure that everything was in place at the appointed time.

How planning saves confusion—Every detail is planned out ahead of time, so that there will be no delay in production. Scene plots like that shown above are made for every set, and the production department sees that arrangements are made on time.

Copies of the scene plot, the estimate and a detailed working sheet with a list of props, costumes and the like are distributed to the different department heads who are to contribute to the production of the picture. It is up to each one to carry out his part of the work and account for any costs beyond those specified in the estimate.

One of the biggest problems, of course, is the assignment of players for the different parts. Under the old system each director had his own company, usually comprising a dozen or more players. With these, and occasional extras, he was expected to cast his plays. It often happened that he could not use all the players in his company. The others would remain idle, but drawing salaries, until the next production was put on in which they could be used.

Now, however, all the players drawing regular salaries are assigned by the dramatic department, as they are needed, to the various directors. This reduces the number of idle players to the minimum.

The work on which the different companies are engaged is shown on a large chart in the general manager's office. This chart occupies the entire side of one wall and covers a period of ten weeks. Across the top, from left to right, are the names of the different directors, and under each are two columns; one is headed "reels required," and the other "shipped." Down the left-hand margin are the days of the month for a period of ten weeks.

Records save money—Innumerable articles are required for productions, and the managers have found it pays to keep close tab on them. The card shown (front and reverse) is the perpetual inventory record used in this instance to keep track of the one item of French officers' hats.

When a picture is assigned to one of the directors, a number indicating how many reels there are to be in the picture is pinned in a square under the column "reels required." This number goes opposite the date on which work is started, in a particular instance, the 6th. If it is a one-reel subject it is probably allowed one week. Therefore the next assignment to this director may be made for the 13th. Opposite the 13th, therefore, another reel card will appear pinned on the chart. As each picture is completed the date of shipment is shown in the next column below. This indicates at a glance whether or not it was finished within the estimated time.

With this chart before him the general manager can see not only that directors are engaged on current production but also when they will be at liberty to undertake new work. Again, it indicates the date on which new plays must be provided for each.

In the dramatic department a somewhat similar schedule board shows every available player. Across the top, from left to right, are columns headed with the names of the different directors—there are a score or more. Under each name is a row of pins. On these are hung small colored cards bearing the names of the players. There are four colors—yellow for men, white for women, red for leads and purple for extras.

On another part of this board, also indicated by colored cards, are the names of the players who are not actually employed and whose services are available. In this way the director of the department can tell at a glance not only which players are actually employed, as well as under which directors they are working, but he knows also who can be cast for the new plays as they are ready for production.

At the end of each day an assistant checks up the progress of each picture, and he alters the schedule board to show which players have been released, as well as those who have begun work on new production.

In this department also are kept brief biographies and photographs of all the principal players. These records are kept in vertical files where they are convenient for quick reference. From them the director can select the best types for his various characters, and he can choose from a hundred or more players. In addition to the regular stock players, about 200 extras are usually on hand for use in mob scenes, society events and other pictures calling for groups and crowds.

A detailed report goes to the general manager each day, showing the cost for each production to date, and the original estimate. This careful checking of actual cost against the original estimate has aroused keen rivalry among the directors. Each strives to keep strictly within the prescribed figures.

As already mentioned, the expense of one transportation item previously ran as high as $1,000 a month, but it has now been reduced over fifty per cent. Again, the expense for props has also been greatly lowered. A prop may include anything from a nursing bottle to an elephant's tusk. It used to be the custom for the director to give a penciled list to one of the property men. The latter, as a rule, would see that the props were on hand when wanted, but it was usually left to an assistant to put them back when the scene had been taken. As no inventory of these props was kept, which of course represent a large sum of money, there was no record to show whether or not they actually did come back to stock. The result was that thousands of dollars' worth were unaccounted for. An antique clock, a valuable tea set or an imported rug, used possibly in only a single set, would disappear and the manager knew nothing more about it. The value of these articles—either lost, strayed or stolen—ran in a single year into thousands of dollars.

With the present system, every article is carded, and an inventory is taken at intervals to make sure that the cards are accurate. Also, the property man must receive a requisition before he lets the articles go out of the property room. He keeps this requisition on file until the articles are returned, when they are checked off and the requisition destroyed. In the property room everything is classified under different heads and conveniently assembled in bins or separate rooms. So it is easy to find any article that may be needed in connection with a picture.

So much for some of the main outlines of this system. Its installation has accomplished really remarkable results, and in an industry that at the outset seemed to some of its managers hardly to admit of such careful methods.

Guernsey State Censor for Illinois?

BILL PASSES HOUSE AND MAY BECOME LAW

IT is very possible that by the time you read this account Illinois will have an official state censor of motion pictures. All films exhibited in the state will be required to bear a permit from this state officer. The bill is designed to eliminate all local censorship.

The censorship bill for Illinois is now well known by all film men in the state. Exchangemen, producers and exhibitors have been fighting it for the past several months. This particular measure is known as the Guernsey Bill, having been prepared and introduced into the state legislature by Representative Guy Guernsey. The bill was supported by the Chicago Political Equality League, Mrs. Guy Blanchard, chairman of the pictures committee of the league, being particularly active in the preparation of the bill in securing support for it.

Bill Was Once Killed

The bill was once killed in the state house of representatives by 9 votes, there being 69 in favor and 77 against adoption. Last week the bill was brought up again and the house passed it by a vote of 109 to 19. Following this vote, there was one week in which the bill might pass the senate before adjournment, which is scheduled for June 16. It is understood that Mr. Guernsey is pushing the bill very energetically and that there is a chance that it will be passed.

Attorney David T. Alexander, who has been in touch with the progress of the bill from the first, throughout its history, stated to MOTOGRAPHY that in his opinion the bill will be passed in the final rush of measures that always comes up in the last few hours before adjournment.

Would Abolish Chicago Censor Board

Probably the most important effect the new censor bill will have if passed, is to abolish the notorious Chicago censorship board which is headed by Major M. C. L. Funkhouser. There has been some question as to whether or not this will be true, but authorities on the subject seem to agree that there would be no doubt but that the future bill would do away with all local censorship.

The central bureau would be at Springfield under charge of Director Shephardson of the department of registration. He will establish a Chicago office and such other offices throughout the state as are found to be necessary. The appointment of the state censor will also be up to him, subject to the approval of the governor. It will also be necessary to appoint several associate censors who will work with the official censor in examining the films.

Censor's Salary $3,500

The bill provides for a salary of $3,500 for the chief censor and the half dozen sub-censors are to be supplied by civil service. The fee to be charged for the examination of films is to be $1.00 per reel, with 25 cents per reel for additional copies. This income is expected to pay the expenses of the maintenance of the bureau.

The complete Guernsey bill was printed several weeks ago in MOTOGRAPHY and it will be repeated next week if the measure becomes a law. There has been a rumor that Governor Lowden would veto the measure if it comes before him for his signature. This, however, is a matter of conjecture.

Among the prominent film men who have been active in the battle against the proposed measure are Jos. E. Hopp, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Robt. R. Levy, Wm. J. Sweeney, national secretary of the N. P. E. L. of America, Alfred Hamburger and a number of prominent exchange men in Chicago. W. W. Watts of Springfield, treasurer of the state league. and Ed. Kunz, director, are on the firing line against the measure down state.

President Hopp, of the Chicago league, has wired the national association of the motion picture industry, asking its immediate co-operation in defeating the bill.

URGES UNITED ACTION

F. J. Rembusch Says Now Is Time for Exhibitors to Protest Against Proposed Federal Tax, Not When Too Late

An appeal to exhibitors urging them to unite and speak out so that there will be no attempt to re-establish the ten per cent tax on the gross receipts of picture houses, when that matter is brought up before the Ways and Means Committee in the House, has been sent out by F. J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana Exhibitors' League.

In his manifesto Mr. Rembusch says:

When the House committee proposed a tax of ten per cent on gross receipts the Indiana organization of exhibitors sent a delegation to Washington and found representatives of only one other state taking an interest in the tax question. Mr. Varner, Mr. Sams and Mr. Wells of North Carolina, the same gentlemen who came to the rescue of the small exhibitors two years, were again on the job.

We found Mr. Ochs and some trade paper folks and film manufacturers telling Congress that the proposed tax on the exhibitor was all right, but that no levy should be made on film.

Here Mr. Rembusch sounds a warning, not to say a threat, when he adds that everybody not an exhibitor should keep their hands off the exhibitors' business. "They don't know," he says, "what we can pay in the way of a tax and, furthermore, we should remember in the future anyone who takes a hand in this." Continuing, he says:

North Carolina and Indiana have been working diligently all the time and Mr. Crandell, a Washington exhibitor, was splendid help. Through filing briefs and seeing our representatives and senators we have been able to show and prove that a ten per cent tax or a levy of one cent on every ticket, which is 20 per cent on a five-cent ticket, would put most of us out of business.

Fortunately, North Carolina was in a position to be of great service, and Mr. Varner deserves a vote of thanks from every exhibitor in the United States. Our work, however, is not yet finished and we still need the co-operation of every exhibitor in the country. If you don't say anything, Congress may think that you are able to pay the tax. And now is the time to act.

We must use every influence possible on the members of the Ways and Means Committee in the House to get them to stay by the Senate bill after it passes the Senate and goes to Congress. Congress doesn't want to put us out of business, but it wants to know the facts.

A lot of people have been blowing their heads off about this business being the fifth largest industry in the United States and about money they never made and never will, and as a consequence the exhibitor suffers. There is scarcely an exhibitor who can't show that it would be suicide for him to pay a tax of ten per cent. If we can pay that tax, then railroads, bankers, farmers and merchants can pay a like tax a great deal easier. No industry could stand such a tax. Just at present it is absolutely impossible for the picture business to shoulder it, as we are at the lowest ebb in earnings and at the highest point in expenses.

Indiana and North Carolina senators and representatives have been advised fully by their exhibitors as to how drastic this bill is, and if exhibitors of other states will only do the same this measure will never menace the picture industry.

James Steele, District Manager

James Steele, secretary and treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation for the past year, has resigned that position in order that he may continue his residence in Pittsburgh and will hereafter be located in the Iron City, acting in the capacity of district manager over the Paramount offices in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland and Indianapolis. Mr. Steele will also retain his directorship on the Board of Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, controlling Paramount, Artcraft, Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas, producers and distributers of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

A five-reel comedy-drama entitled "Little Fairy Fix-It," featuring Ella Hall, has just been finished at Universal City.

All Industry Aided Loan

EXHIBITORS DO VALIANT WORK TO BRING LIBERTY SUBSCRIPTIONS

THE mobilization of all of the forces of the motion picture industry to subscribe a generous amount of funds for the government Liberty Loan has proved to be very successful. Exhibitors, producers and actors have not only lent their financial support to the government but have consumed an immeasurable amount of energy in boosting the sales of the bonds.

Exhibitors Aid

Thousands of exhibitors accepted appointments by president Wm. A. Brady on the Liberty Loan committees of the national association of the motion picture industry. These theater men have been showing the liberty bond slides at each performance and have also turned their theaters over to the "4 Minute Men" who were designated by the banks to address audiences in pictures theaters. These methods aided greatly in rolling up a large total for the Liberty Loan for the close of the subscription period on June 15.

The associated motion picture advertisers prepared and distributed some attractive posters boosting the loan and these were also used in great numbers by progressive exhibitors. The trailers also sent out by the national association were given a wide distribution. It is estimated that probably 95 per cent of the 16,000 theaters in the United States co-operated in winning subscriptions to the government loan.

Speakers at Strand in New York

One of the final moves in the drive by the national association for the Liberty Loan was to provide a prominent speaker who appeared at the Strand Theater in New York and addressed the audiences each day until June 15. Arrangements were made with Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, to allow time for the address at 3:45 and 9:15 a. m. Among the speakers selected were State Senator Walters of New York, Lieut. Gov. Schoeneck and Pres. Wm. G. Brady of the national association. The talks were limited to ten minutes. The Strand also planned to have prominent actors address the audiences and well-known actresses to distribute Liberty Bond literature in the lobby to patrons entering and leaving the theater.

Stanley Company Purchases $20,000 Worth

In order to stimulate interest in and the sale of Liberty War Bonds, among thousands of persons who are directly or indirectly affiliated with amusement producers in this city and country, the Stanley Booking Corporation of Philadelphia, the Stanley Theater, the Palace Theater, Arcadia Theater and Regent Theater, through their managing director, Stanley V. Mastbaum, has purchased $20,000 worth of Liberty War Bonds.

"In this national emergency," said Mr. Mastbaum, "everybody should assist." Mr. Mastbaum directed the attaches of all the theaters under the direction of the Stanley Company to use all methods possible and advertise the bonds that bring the need of the government before every visitor of its many resorts.

The Stanley Company also offered the free use of all the theaters under its direction for the use of the United States Government for the sale of Liberty Bonds, Recruiting Stations for the Army, Navy, Red Cross or any other service it can be to the Government. The week of June 11 was "Marine Corps Week" and appropriate picture programs as well as incidental music were arranged for this occasion at all the Stanley's houses.

Producers Still Active

The actors, actresses and office force of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have subscribed $79,000. When all the Western studios are heard from it is expected that the total will exceed $100,000. Nearly all these subscriptions are on the installment plan except a few subscribed outright by the officials of the company.

Employes of practically all the companies, including the exchanges, also supported the loan in thorough style.

Fairbanks Buys Bonds

Douglas Fairbanks is said to have purchased $100,000 worth of Liberty Loan Bonds from the Guaranty Trust Company, his New York bankers. John Emerson, Artcraft director, and scenario writer Anita Loos, have each purchased $10,000 worth of bonds and the balance of the Fairbanks organization are about to invest some of their earnings in these patriotic bonds.

Virginia Pearson established a record for selling the greatest amount of subscriptions for Liberty Bonds at the Namm Department Store in Brooklyn to the extent of $50,000. Each day the store advertised a star in connection with the sale of the bonds. The other actors and actresses in the silent field as mentioned before, also supported the Liberty Loan to the limit.

Many Organizations at Convention

CHARLIE CHAPLIN TO BE IN CHICAGO DURING BIG SHOW, JULY 14 TO 22

ONE of the factors which will work to make the National Exposition and Convention at Chicago, July 14 to 22, a big success is the large number of meetings to be held by various film organizations in the city at that time. Among the associations which have called important gatherings to be held in the Windy City at the time of the convention are, besides the M. P. E. L., of course, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the F.I.L.M. Clubs of America, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, and sales and executive forces of many producing companies.

Coliseum Space Going Fast

Ludwig Schindler, manager of the motion picture exposition to be held at the Chicago Coliseum, July 14 to 22, has sent word from New York that his success upon his visit there this trip was beyond his expectations. Many of the motion picture manufacturers and feature film men who were undecided a few weeks ago because of the unexpected turn in our national affairs have concluded that nothing should interfere with the enthusiasm created for the success of the exposition. Therefore they have grabbed up every possible space of vantage in the big Coliseum.

Most of the leading manufacturers, Schindler declares, have taken hold with a vim and they not only assured Schindler that they will be represented at the exposition but that they will send at least one or more of their stars to enliven things when the exposition opens.

Press representatives of nearly every office interested in motion pictures have given their promise to "throw their shoulder to the wheel" and co-operate in every possible way with the director of the exposition, and a great flood of publicity is promised through their efforts in the innumerable dailies scattered throughout the country and with which they are in constant touch. Exhibitors in New York have aroused enthusiasm among the eastern contingent which will visit Chicago during July and this large delegation is doing everything possible to have the eastern cities well represented.

William S. Hart is as game as they make 'em. When leaving Chicago a few days ago after having his clothes nearly torn off by enthusiastic fans, he said that he would positively attend the exposition. One of his friends suggested that he had better come equipped with a coat of mail, but Mr. Hart only laughed and said that the greetings of his friends are not a circumstance to some of his experiences before the camera.

Theda Bara to Be There

During her visit here last week, Theda Bara stopped "vamping" long enough to drop into the headquarters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in the Masonic Temple, and assure the management that she would come to Chicago and attend the exposition.

"I'm glad to hear it," said Chairman Schindler, "because that will mean an enormous attendance of women and girls every night you are there, to guard their husbands and sweethearts."

"Cease chaffing," said the world's champion vampire. "If people only knew how absolutely un-vampirish I am, —but then, what's the use? The more I say I'm not, the more every one will think I am. Why, I've positively begged managers to let me just once play a different role and they figuratively hit the ceiling. Once I almost 'vamped' a press agent in an effort to persuade him to say something really nice about me, and he said, 'Aw, be reasonable. I've been telling all the newspapers that you're the only real vampire in captivity and I dassent back up.' So bring on your husbands and sweethearts and I'll be as conservative as possible."

Wisconsin Coming Strong

Big Bill Sweeney, the popular secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, received information that the State of Wisconsin is planning on sending a party of nearly one hundred exhibitors to the exposition. It will be held at the time of year when all the boys will want to take a few days off and they could not spend it to better advantage than by attending the big show in July.

Wisconsin will be represented at the convention by the following delegates and alternates:

Mr. Sherwood, Madison; J. Grauman, Milwaukee; George Fischer, Milwaukee; T. A. Lee, Fond du Lac; H. Trinz, Milwaukee; J. Rhode, Kenosha; Mr. Langmack, Milwaukee; Mr. Fisher, Madison; F. Cook, Milwaukee; J. C. Smith, Oshkosh; Mr. Langheimerk, Milwaukee; T. Brinmer, Milwaukee.

Do not forget that this is to be a great get-together meeting at which all branches of the industry will thresh out the evils that beset them. Don't overlook the fact that you may pick up a few new ideas that you could use to advantage in your home town.

D. J. Sullivan, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, after selecting the space for the Mutual exhibit and signing the contract, said, "I think we are going to have a great exposition. The Mutual Film Corporation is going to do all in its power to make this the biggest success in the history of the industry, and when I make that statement I mean that we are going to have Charlie Chaplin present, also Helen Holmes, James McGowan, and also the dainty little star who is loved by all—Mary Miles Minter." President Freuler of Mutual confirmed to MOTOGRAPHY the news that it is highly probable that Chaplin will attend the exposition.

Exhibitor Asks Information

The convention and exposition is interesting exhibitors all over the United States and quite a number are going to attend even though they are operating in states that are not organized under the National League banner. The following letter, received by Ludwig Schindler from Sherman, Texas, shows that they have some live wires in the far South:

Sherman, Texas, June 3, 1917.

Mr. Ludwig Schindler, Exposition Manager, Chicago:

Am thinking of attending the exposition in July. Will you please give me all the information possible? I want all the dope I can get.

We are not organized in Texas but I am coming just the same. Oh! yes, wifey and the boy are coming also.—Yours truly, Jim B. Wilson, Sherman's Leading Photo Theaters.

Secretary Gerson of Manhattan Branch of M. P. E. L. Protests Action of President Ochs in Overruling Convention

The following letter, dated at New York, June 7, has been received by MOTOGRAPHY from Secretary M. J. Gerson, of the Manhattan Local of the M. P. E. L.:

As secretary of Manhattan Local No. 1 of the Exhibitors' League, I desire to protest against the high handed action of Mr. Lee A. Ochs at our meeting on Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

It seems that our worthy National president has absolutely no regard for such things as constitutions, by-laws, parliamentary laws and regularity. It was generally acknowledged that the last state convention of the New York State League at Albany was the finest and the most largely attended convention ever held in this state.

Ochs Asks New Delegates

At that time, in the regular order of business, and according to the constitution and by-laws of the National League, delegates were duly elected to represent this state at the convention to be held in Chicago this July. For some reason known only to Mr. Ochs, the delegates legally elected in Albany did not seem to please that worthy gentleman, so he determined to have delegates more friendly to his candidacy elected here in New York. In spite of the fact that our National vice president, Samuel H. Trigger, protested that such action would be irregular and illegal, Mr. Ochs insisted on having these new delegates elected, stating that his credential committee, whom he would appoint at Chicago, would decide which delegates would be seated in the convention.

Since the inception of this local, no election for officers or delegates has ever been held without due notice in writing being previously sent to each of the members; and in the notice sent out for this meeting of June 6, no mention whatever was made of the fact that an election of delegates was to be held, as no action of this kind had ever been discussed or mentioned at any previous meeting, so that even had it been legal to elect delegates here, in spite of the fact that delegates had previously been elected in Albany at the state convention, an election in our local without due notice being given to the members in advance is certainly illegal and it cannot hold.

It was a sorry spectacle to see our National president, Mr. Ochs, who is an active candidate for re-election and last year was president of the State League, state publicly at our meeting that the New York state organization was a joke, and really did not exist, and that its officers were worse than useless.

He was probably tempted to make these disparaging remarks about our state organization and its officers with a view to justifying his action in attempting to throw out delegates who were duly and legally elected at the state convention in Albany.

Will Attend Convention

Among the delegates elected at Albany was myself, and I had already made arrangements to attend the convention in Chicago, at my own expense, knowing that the state treasury did not have sufficient funds at this time to pay the expenses of all its delegates; and I still intend going to Chicago, and I further intend making a fight for my rights as a delegate to a seat in the National Convention, in spite of the efforts of Mr. Ochs to keep me and the rest of the state delegates out.

It is time for the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America throughout the country to rise and protest against the steam-roller tactics of Mr. Ochs in his desperate efforts to re-elect himself president of the league, which office he has during the past year used almost solely for the furtherance of his private business interest.

(Signed) M. J. Gerson, Secretary Manhattan Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

THE CREAM OF ADVERTISING

EVER write your advertisements in ice cream? A good example of brains that can run smoothly outside of the old grooves is found in the case of a western theater manager who has induced the chef of a local confectionery store and soda fountain to originate a new ice cream concoction and call it the "Triangle Sundae." It is said this advertising has gained an extensive circulation among residents of the town—and the stomach is close to the heart, you know.

The Reel Fellows' Club is going to issue a publication, probably to be christened "The Reel Fellow," and with Scoville and Strauss as papas of it.

The club has started a great many things, including a few arguments, why not a paper?

All the Regular Fellows will sure read it.

Frank Flaherty, the genial German of the Universal office, is the latest film man to have his car kidnapped. Harry Miller, you remember, lost his Elgin a few weeks ago when he forgot to hook it to his watch chain.

It seems to us that the film men are getting carless.

WAIT! WE'RE GOING TO WAR

"Bashful cattle are holding up the production of the last Vitagraph Antonio Moreno feature," swears Nat Stronge, the Vita publicity geyser. Then he goes on to tell how the herd all kicked up their heels and ran away from the camera when they were about to be shot in a great stampede scene.

Well, they'll have to try some udder cattle.

Treasurer Harry Miller has resigned from the Reel Fellows' Club again.

We don't blame 'im. Trying to hang onto thousands of dollars is a wearying responsibility.

Besides, Harry has to attend an occasional performance at the Madison street photoplay halls.

There is now a D. D. in the local Paramount office. He's the only one the film business has in captivity. And he's a permanent fixture, too.

His name is W. K. Hill.

His degree is Doctor of Difficulties.

He should also be decorated with the letters L. S.—Lemon Squeezer—for he can extract real revenue out of lemon houses that have sent many a manager to the financial bow wows.

Hill is about as lively a piece of landscape as you'd want to meet. He's in charge of Famous Players' exhibitor service department and, believe us, he belongs, for he has lifted the mortgages from houses from Tampa to Troy. If there's a swarm of mosquitoes or a dance hall or what-not nine blocks from a theater he can tell you just how it will affect attendance.

If our theater ever gets the flivveritis we're going to let Doc Hill administer the ipecac—after we get the theater.

U. S. ARMY ALL PROPPED UP

It is said (to use a brand new phrase), that eight prop men from the Metro studio have enlisted.

All their captain will have to do is to say: "Bring me them German cannon and be quick about it!" and the prop men will get 'em or bust, by force of habit.

MEET MISS BOOK

It isn't any too seldom that writers about pictures—aye, even exhibitors—get spellings wrong and players' names mixed with the titles of books. B. L. T. quotes the following in his "Line-o'-Type" in the Chicago Tribune:

YOU REMEMBER ARSENE

From the Peoria Journal

"Earle Williams and Arsene Lupin will appear jointly at the Princess Theater today and tomorrow. These two artists are probably as widely known as any other two who are now appearing on the silent stage. Mr. Williams has always been a strong drawing card with the feminine followers of the films, while Miss Lupin is equally popular with the masculine screen scanners."

An Example of Remarkable Staging

THE spirit of Americanism and patriotism ran rampant through the presentation of George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones" when the Yankee Doodle boy made his screen debut at the Circle Theater, Indianapolis, Indiana, recently. Likewise the successful combination of stage spectacle with the drama on the screen was made by S. Barret McCormick, managing and producing director of that big new house whose theory is that the future of the "big" motion picture lies in combining these two in a hippodromic fashion.

The striking and be-star spangle bannered stage setting used by the progressive Circle Theater of Indianapolis for the showing of "Broadway Jones."

"The Top of the U. S. A." was the title of the stage spectacle and was presented as a curtain raiser to the All-American program which was presented three days, shortly after the declaration of war by the United States. The Circle Theater, which maintains its own scenic studios for the production of its settings, constructed and painted a striking stage picture representing the broad vista of New York's skyline as seen from a lofty roof garden overlooking Broadway. The cycloramic drop which formed the background measured over one hundred feet in length and sixty feet in height. The scene was night and over the broad panorama the city was seen aglow with its millions of lights, illuminated buildings, and electrical display.

Massive columns draped in flags and with a stage banked in red, white and blue flowers, with illuminated American shields overhead and with small cafe tables snuggled in the coves on either side of the stage, the scene pictured a festive roof garden and symbolizing in its decorations and display of the colors, that here was "The Top of the U. S. A.," with the spirit of America and patriotism carried to the heights.

With lights gleaming and the stage bathed in the soft blue of night the curtain rose on "Give My Regards to Broadway," following an overture of Cohan musical hits, disclosing the stage with its picturesque panorama of New York at night.

With the stage filled with gay diners, Ada Lee Chase, as "the American Maid," gowned in a fetching costume of stars and stripes and wearing a dashing bonnet designed in the shape of an aeroplane, sang the rousing new recruiting song, "It's Time for Every Boy to Be a Soldier," and as she finished the chorus calling America's young men to the colors, a young man in soldier costume stood up in the audience and while a spot light singled him out sang a new chorus to the song, an answer to the call to arms and shouting his pride at being a soldier, while as though giving realistic expression of the desire of America's men to serve their country, a company of soldiers under command of an officer marched in upon the stage bearing the colors and guidons of their respective branch of the army and formed the inspiring background to the patriotic scene.

Through the co-operation of Adjutant Gneral Smith of the Indiana National Guard and with his hearty approval Mr. McCormick made the stage spectacle an important publicity factor in the recruiting campaign. A separate day was set aside for each branch of the service —the state troops, regular U. S. Army, the Navy and Marines, the Artillery, and Signal Corps, each being given the chance to make their recruiting appeal.

UNUSUAL EFFECTS USED

As the song ended and the troops, following a short drill, marched from the stage, the stage lights dimmed and the back drop showing Broadway slowly descended while over the towering roofs of the buildings the audience beheld a new scene, the illuminated New York skyline as seen from New York harbor, with the bay stretching out and framed by the semi-circle of illuminated buildings.

By the aid of an especially arranged projection machine focused upon the scene the waters of the painted drop were made to turn to reality while through them crept an enemy submarine, stealing like a phantom buccaneer upon the city. Then across the stage and out over the harbor a mechanical miniature aeroplane soared in pursuit while, as the submarine sank below the waves, the fleet of the enemy was seen to steam into the bay and open fire upon the city. By a method of double projection and masking Mr. McCormick made it possible to show the mighty fleet of American battleships steam into the scene and stand like mighty and grim defenders, firing upon the enemy and waging a fierce sea battle to victory for the stars and stripes.

As the motion picture effects faded away the scene again showed the peaceful harbor, and as the vibrant strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" floated out over the house a beautiful woman draped as the Goddess of Liberty slowly rose from the waters, the gleaming of her torch spreading a radiant glow over the scene.

Novel Stunts for Railroad Serial

The ingenuity of the motion picture exhibitor in the exploitation of money-making productions has been demonstrated by the way in which clever and original ideas have been put to work in making "The Railroad Raiders," Mutual-Signal photonovel, a record-breaking box office success.

To aid the exhibitor in exploiting the picture, Mutual issued a service book which apparently has been put to more effective use than anything of its kind previously published. Exhibitors have gone farther, however, than the suggestions offered by Mutual's advertising experts and have added their own ideas to the ideas which were laid out for general exploitation of the picture.

P. G. Cameron, proprietor of the Crystal Theater, Dallas, Texas, devised a clever scheme to interest all the railroad employes in his city in the serial by sending them passes for the showing of the first chapter at his theater.

Mr. Cameron utilized the rotogravure herald issued by Mutual as his messenger. Inside the herald were slipped the complimentary tickets, and on the back page of the leaflet was written the following personal message:

We are enclosing you complimentary tickets which will entitle you to see the first episode of "The Railroad Raiders," featuring the fearless Helen Holmes. This is the most stupendous railroad story ever released. It's big, it's spectacular. It shows sensational railroad wrecks, mad races between speeding engines and automobiles, the burning and looting of big railroad shops and roundhouses.

We invite you to bring your family and see the entire number. We know you will enjoy every one of them because these pictures were made to entertain and enlighten railroad people. Remember the first episode will be shown Sunday and Monday, April 29, and 30, and each consecutive episode every Sunday and Monday thereafter. Trusting you, your family and friends will enjoy all the chapters,

Yours very truly,
CRYSTAL THEATER.

REAL SWITCHES IN LOBBY DISPLAY.

"Seventeen hundred seats—the full capacity of the Whitehouse Theater—and we held them out—that's what 'The Railroad Raiders' did for us when we showed Chapter I," writes O. L. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theater, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"Helen Holmes and Mutual's newspaper campaign are a combination hard to beat, unless you add to this a lobby display like we installed for the new serial.

"We borrowed 'honest-to-goodness' switches from the St. Paul road—and they were tickled to loan them to us—and we constructed a freight car that looked like the real thing, and ran the painted rails out over the sidewalk. Clanging engine bells and tooting whistles every once in a while completed the display. When the day was over we wondered where all the people had come from."

ALLOWS PATRONS TO CHOOSE SERIAL.

The people of Kings Mountain, N. C., are very fond of serials and as soon as one is finished they demand another. The manager of the Pastime Theater found he was not always fortunate in choosing the production which pleased his patrons, so he hit upon the plan of allowing them to choose for themselves. He provided a ballot on which were listed four of the latest serial productions and asked each patron to mark his choice and turn in the vote to the box office.

Marbles and Gold in Palace

While the municipal jury was not called upon to pass upon the intrinsic merits of the new box office in the lobby of the Palace Theater, Philadelphia, which has just been opened for public inspection and has met with an enthusiastic approval, had the members of that tribunal for a city beautiful visited this popular house they would have undoubtedly declared that it is not only the handsomest department of its kind in any motion picture house in this city and country but that it is a genuine contribution towards enhancing Market street, on which it is located.

The style of this office, which cost $6,000 to erect, is the idea of Stanley V. Mastbaum, who besides being the managing director of the Stanley Company which operates this theater, and many others, is also a devotee of the art in its truest sense, and in its construction these ideas were closely followed by the expert designers and builders.

It is situated in the center of the spacious lobby entrance and is octagonal in shape, having eight sides and eight angles, and is symmetrical in all its harmonious lines. The sides are finished in expensive Italian marbles, highly polished and framed in gold.

The interior, which is cylindrical, is fitted with all up-to-date adjuncts for the proper and swift manipulation of business by the expert box office corps, and the top is surmounted by a large mosque-like dome decorated with large and radiant dragons. The box being in a conspicuous place, can be seen and admired by the thousands entering and leaving the theater and by the many pedestrians who, day and night, pass this handsome house of the photoplay.

Display a Hearty Success

Attractive lobby displays for Marguerite Clark in the "Valentine Girl" were used by Manager W. J. Fahey of the Palace Theater, Long Beach, California. Mr. Fahey is standing at the left of the accompanying picture and his show card man, H. C. Ketelson, originator of the display, is at the right.

The Palace has been open since October, 1916. The house is beautifully decorated and is well designed and modern in every detail. The ushers are garbed in neat uniforms. Needless to say, the slogan of the house is "Fine pictures and absolute courtesy."

The chief programs used are Paramount, Artcraft and Clara Kimball Young productions.

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

A NUMBER of exhibitors in Halifax, Nova Scotia, are planning to raise the price of admission 5 cents to their evening shows and not charge the 1 cent war tax. This, they say, they will pay themselves, and it is understood the Government will accept their sworn statement as to admissions.

Two exhibitors in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, were recently compelled to appear in court on charges of desecrating the American flag. They had printed the emblem on their theater programs and were charged with using the flag for advertising purposes.

The owner, fire guard, and operator of the Alvin Theater, Chicago, were arrested last week on complaint of the inspector for the fire prevention bureau, because of the owner's refusal to purchase a uniform for his fire guard after having been ordered to comply with the law.

The Clemmer Theater, Seattle, was constantly packed during the afternoons and evenings of May 23 and 25, when J. Warren Kerrigan appeared on the stage and talked to his admirers. On May 24 the exhibitors and exchangemen of the city gave a luncheon in his honor.

Paper films are among the latest inventions in the motion picture industry, according to an article in Popular Mechanics Magazine. These paper substitutes are said to be especially adapted for use in the home or school, both because they are non-explosive and because their cost is so much less than that of transparent films.

The Philadelphia North American recently blew itself when it invited several hundred morning newspaper carriers, and their wives and families, to view a special production of the "Masque of Life" at the Garrick Theater. It used to be a picnic or a box of candy, but now it's a visit to the picture house.

A series of four-minute talks, on national and local problems arising as a result of the war, were started last month in the theaters of Fargo, North Dakota. These talks are being given by some of the leading citizens of that city in an effort to get the proclamations and announcements of the government before the people in understandable form. The first topic discussed by these speakers was the Liberty Loan.

A new requirement for war secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. has been found by the New York branch of that institution located at 318 West Fifty-seventh street. In order to make the secretaries more effective in their social work, they are asked to learn how to operate a picture machine. In the camps and on the border in Mexico this qualification was found to be very desirable.

In the case to test the power of the Kansas City censorship board, William H. Rudolph was fined in the Jackson County Criminal Court the sum of one dollar for displaying "The Unborn" without first submitting it to the local censor for approval or possible eliminations. Under the old law it was possible to exhibit pictures in that manner, the censor waiting till requests were made by reliable parties before acting. There is now a fully equipped censoring department for the inspection of all films shown in Kansas City and the surrounding territory.

There are now more than fifty members in the Theater Owners' Association which has its headquarters in Los Angeles. The organization is rapidly developing in strength and is taking an active part in all matters pertaining to the welfare of Los Angeles exhibitors. E. L. Patterson is president of the association and H. S. Lewis is secretary.

A fire that caused $25,000 damage played havoc with the Bon Ton Theater, 49 Newark avenue, Jersey City, last week, when a blaze that started in the booth holding the picture instrument defied the fire department for two hours. There was no one in the theater when the fire started except the operator, who was making arrangements for the afternoon performance.

The Rialto, New York, last week ran the highly colored Paramount picture entitled "The Jaguar's Claws," in which Sessue Hayakawa appears. Mr. Rothapfel's other features for the week were "The Thirteenth Labor of Hercules," and the second installment of the "Land of the Rising Sun." A selected comedy bill rounded out the Rialto program.

Pictures to show how department store employees could do their share toward reducing the high cost of living and assist in increasing the nation's output of food products were taken in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, recently, and exhibited there in a local theater. The films made by the Anthracite Film Company showed the employees of the Duncan and Homer Company at work at intensive gardening in a five-acre lot.

Advices received at the headquarters of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, during the past week, indicate that the film measure now before the judiciary of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, taxing manufacturers nearly $700,000 a year, will never be reported out. The Pennsylvania bill would have imposed a tax of a cent a foot on all film passed by the Board of Censors of that state.

One of the most important deals in motion picture circles to happen recently was concluded when Stephen A. Lynch, owner of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, which conducts a string of film theaters throughout the South, obtained a controlling interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation. Mr. Lynch was elected president of the corporation following a general meeting of Triangle during which the capital stock of the organization was increased about $3,000,000.

A theater building comprising an auditorium that will seat 2,000, with stores, offices, and apartments adjoining, will be started at the corner of Fort street, Military and Cavalry avenues, Detroit, sometime in July. Another addition to the list of Detroit theaters is scheduled to take its place at the corner of Kercheval and Parkview avenues. This house, to be known as the De Luxe, will open early in the fall if the plans of C. M. Orth, head of the new De Luxe Theater Company, go through.

"The Barrier" has finished its phenomenal run at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, and "On Trial" now occupies the screen there. At the Studebaker Theater, Chicago, the first run of "The Submarine Eye," by the justly celebrated Williamson Brothers, is drawing the crowds. The La Salle, another of the Jones, Linick & Shaeffer loop theaters, is showing Alice Brady in "The Divorce Game."

The women's clubs of Connecticut are taking a deep interest in the subject of better films. At the annual convention of the Connecticut Federation of Women's Clubs held in Bridgeport on May 24 the subject of motion pictures occupied a very important place upon the program. The chief speaker was Orrin C. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review, and secretary of the National Committee for Better Films.

Former President Theodore Roosevelt was the guest at a "patriotic evening" given under the auspices of the Red Cross Society at the Lyric Theater, Oyster Bay, on the evening of June 18. Knowing the interest Colonel Roosevelt takes in motion pictures, Miss Elizabeth F. Swann, who has charge of the affair, arranged with V. L. S. E. for a showing of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," during the evening. This is the preparedness picture which was made by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton at the suggestion of Colonel Roosevelt.

With an elaborate ceremony last week the McHenry Theater of Baltimore, Maryland, built by the Southern Amusement Company, at a cost of $75,000, was officially dedicated. Many city officials attended the opening of this new temple of the silent drama. The McHenry has a seating capacity of 1,100. It will show only first-run photoplays and Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager, is making an effort to get the best music obtainable.

Mr. Sherman, formerly of the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, is now in New York, where he expects to go into the production end of the business. He sold out his interests in the Minneapolis concern to Mr. Elliott, who will continue to operate the concern as before, and under the same name. Mr. Elliott controls the rights to the "Birth of a Nation" and "The Crisis" in thirteen states. He also operates a string of theaters.

J. A. Quinn, owner of the new Rialto Theater in Los Angeles, which only recently had its grand opening, is about to undertake a campaign designed to stimulate interest in home gardening, by means of films dealing with the subject. The various producing companies of the West Coast are to be asked to contribute film stock and the technical work necessary for the production of the pictures, while every Los Angeles exhibitor will be asked to run the films in his theater. The pictures will show with what ease and profit many vegetables can be grown at home.

The first hill in the fight against the blue laws of Iowa have been won by the exhibitors in a decision handed down by Municipal Judge Meyer of Des Moines, who held that exhibitors arrested for a violation of these laws were not guilty. In giving the amusements immunity under the blue laws Judge Meyer declared that the operation of theaters was a "necessity" to community life. In his ruling he held that recreation and diversion are a necessary part of existence and that the picture house is the most popular place of amusement. As the statute stands it prohibits all labor of any kind that is not performed through necessity or charity. All Des Moines exhibitors were arrested May 13 and the arrests were used as test cases.

One of the livest pieces of advertising put over in a long time was done by J. E. Rickards, manager of the Hip Theater, Phoenix, Arizona, in connection with the showing of the Essanay feature, "Skinner's Dress Suit." When he was running this feature Mr. Rickards interviewed two of his city's leading clothiers, a couple up-to-date tailors and the leading shoe store owner, with the result that a coalition was formed and a whole page in the Arizona Gazette, the leading daily of Phoenix, was contracted for. All the advertising of the stores was written around the story of "Skinner's Dress Suit," and the whole layout was tremendously effective for all concerned.

Indianapolis theater managers appeared before the city council recently to protest against the passage of an ordinance to increase the annual license fee of theaters charging $1 or more for admission from $100 to $500 a year, and the fee for motion picture theaters charging more than ten cents admission from $25 to $100 a year. The managers, headed by Charles Pettijohn, were not backward in admitting that the theatrical business at the present time was hazardous enough without a raise of license fees. The council after the hearing decided to postpone all action relating to theater licenses until a future date.

Sidney R. Lust, who was in Richmond, Virginia, last week attending a meeting of picture men, happened to walk down Broad street one day and noticed "Tillie's Punctured Romance," a slap-stick comedy in five reels, billed at a local theater. Mr. Lust had purchased the exclusive rights for the picture in that district, but did not remember having leased it to this particular theater. He started to investigate and found that the film had been leased by the K. and R. Film Company, and immediately brought suit for its possession, with the result that at midnight the five reels lay in the sheriff's office in their shipping box.

Typical of the invaluable assistance furnished the United States government in the disposal of its Liberty Loan Bonds by the moving picture industry is the action of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association which has pledged itself to help all it can in this movement and to run free advertisements telling the public why the bonds should be purchased. They also have organized their employees into a club to buy bonds. If a tax were put on theaters that caused many of them to close down it is easy to see that the government would not only lose the immediate revenue from the gate receipts but an advertising medium second to none which is now being furnished free of charge.

The first photoplay in which Helen Gibson, the new Universal star, will appear is "Mettle and Metal," a two-reel railroad story.

The Show-Going Habit

PICTURE SHOW attendance is a habit. With thousands of people it is little more than a habit. They go because there is nothing else to do; because the average human being will not stay quietly at home with a book or a magazine and is totally incapable of entertaining himself, but positively must have something to look at, or to listen to, so that he may escape the evils of introspection and thought—both of which are unpleasant. The picture show is a wonderful blessing because it provides a way out that is easy, economical, convenient and always new.

This sounds like philosophy, and therefore highbrow. But it is not. It is a solemn truth about human beings; and as human beings supply a living for exhibitors, it is well to know all about them.

This craving for the stimulant of entertainment explains the success of the motion picture as an entertainer. To be more explicit, it explains why the people are not more discriminating; why they continue to go to poor shows when, by exercising their power of choice, they might eliminate the bad shows by patronizing only the good. For, to the entertainment-hungry, a poor show is always better than no show at all.

The danger in the situation lies in the fact that the entertainment hunger is rapidly becoming satisfied. When people can satisfy their desires by merely walking around the corner, they soon become critical. Social conversation about picture shows today is more critical than complimentary. Film men do not know anything about this, because they live mostly in a trade atmosphere.

The show-going habit, constructed out of a world-old desire, easily acquired and hard to break, has made money for many an exhibitor who didn't really have brains enough to run a candy shop. The inevitable saturation of the entertainment market has taken the edge off the public's appetite. Hereafter the showman will have to show some showmanship to succeed.

The exhibiting business wants a lot of men with the genius to contrive new ways of showing old stuff. It wants men who not only have imaginations, but who can put their imaginations into practice. That is the real test of a real showman—and many a man who calls himself an exhibitor fails to respond to it.

In the years to come, as this motion picture industry grows bigger and bigger, it is going to take brains to stay in the exhibiting game.

The Elimination of Shady Films

ATTEMPTS to extinguish the suggestive or frankly immoral picture, like most efforts toward uplift and betterment, are generally based on unpractical methods. They rest their case on an appeal to the morality of the individual who makes or presents pictures; they try to shame him into righteousness. We expect to be criticised for calling the moral appeal unpractical; but we know well that, humanly speaking, it will not suffice to eradicate evil.

Business today recognizes the practical value of the Golden Rule, and tries to live up to it. But that achievement in practical morality came about because the Golden Rule proved its value as a business asset, not because some apostle of spiritual conduct held up his finger and called for converts. The business men of the world have simply found that it creates good will, brings repeat orders and helps establish credit. It means more money.

Among the theoretically righteous even that old proverb, "Honesty is the best policy," has been condemned because honesty, they say, should not be a policy but a quality without a negative. Yet the business success of that same proverb rests upon the fact that it is a policy, and that experience has proven it the most profitable one.

The wise business man knows that a dishonest business, even if it be twice as profitable as an honest one, cannot last one-tenth or one-hundredth as long. And the wise exhibitor knows that even if shady pictures will fill his house with shady people, he is not building up a business house. He is establishing no good will, no credit, no reputation upon which he can expand and grow.

The narrow side streets near the railroad depots still hold darkened stores that live upon dishonest merchandising. They are small stores. They never grow larger, and they never will. Their shifty proprietors work harder for the trade they get, and resort to more ingenious subterfuges, and get less happiness out of life for themselves, than the honest operators of honest stores. Yet so long as mankind is imperfect, so long will warped individuals conduct twisted businesses and wonder why life is always a struggle and a nightmare.

The exhibitor of immoral films is the same kind of an individual as the keeper of the "pull-'em-in" stores that prey on the unsophisticated transients. The only difference is that the exhibitor of shady films employs no "runners," but relies on carnal instinct to pull 'em in. That puts him no higher in the human scale, but rather lower. The illegitimate store keeper does not pull his customers down to his own level; the shady exhibitor does.

There was never a trade association whose membership was compulsory, and cannot be. Therefore, an association can only resolve to keep its own membership straight; it cannot dictate the ethics of those who choose to stay out of it. There will always be men who are willing to produce immoral pictures while there is a market for them; not because they are immoral, but because they can sell them for money, and money is what they are after. The most effective place to attack the shady picture is in the theater rather than in the studio.

The two methods of attack are the legal and the educational. By the strict enforcement of existing laws every exhibitor of immoral pictures can be made very uncomfortable. As has been said before, it is the duty of the picture trade itself to take an active and aggressive part in such prosecution. Let every exhibitor and every exchange man and every producing executive do his utmost to bring the despoilers of motion picture decency to justice, and prove to the world that the law and the picture are always on the same side.

The education of those few remaining exhibitors who are still ignorant will eliminate the shady picture by reducing its customers until it is no longer a profitable production. Then nobody will be tempted to manufacture it.

No worth-while result is ever accomplished except by keeping everlastingly at it. The utter elimination of immoral or shady films can be attained only by concentrated effort on the part of all branches of the industry, aided by whatever assistance the law may offer.

Less than one per cent of the exhibitors of this country will accept a shady picture if it is offered to them. The reduction of that figure to no per cent at all is a matter of effort and application in which all would join if they realized that the industry is judged by its weakest and not by its strongest members.

Time will correct even that error of public judgment. The meat industry is not judged by those few who sell bad beef; literature is not condemned because an infinitesimal percentage of writers cultivate the immoral and the near-obscene. Neither is the motion picture exhibitor required by justice to be his brother's keeper; but the public is inclined to saddle that burden upon him.

He who believes in wholesome pictures as the only possible business policy for the upbuilding of the art and the establishment of permanency is required to direct not only his own efforts but the efforts of all his associates into that same conviction. Whether by law, by example or by persuasion, the film men must take the initiative for clean films.

A few glimpses of Frank Frost's mystery story, "The Maelstrom," which will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon on June 18.

Earle Williams and Dorothy Kelly are the leading personages about which the romantic storm surges—and surges heavily, too.

"THE MAELSTROM"

Blue Ribbon Release of Greater Vitagraph Lives Up to Its Name—Story Full of Thrilling Action

The theme of "The Maelstrom," Greater Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon release for the week of June 18, deals with the thrilling adventures of a wealthy red-blooded clubman. He is thrust into the turbulent midst of a band of international crooks and implicated in a mysterious murder, following in the wake of being accosted in a dense fog by a pretty stranger whose agitation appeals to his chivalrous instincts and prompts him to comply with her request to deliver a package of unknown contents which she thrusts into his hands and then flees. His subsequent series of thrilling incidents forms action, replete with suspense and surprising happenings, and culminates in a powerful and startling climax.

The dramatic value of the entire offering is greatly enhanced by the dominating personality of Earle Williams, who plays the leading role of the adventurous clubman, Jimmie Hallet. He is ably supported by a cast of Vitagraph notables headed by Dorothy Kelly and including Julia Swayne Gordon, Denton Vane, John Robertson, Gordon Gray and Bernard Seigel.

The story concerns Jimmie Hallet, millionaire New Yorker, who steps from his club into a fog-blanketed night and stops under an electrolier to light a cigarette. A girl springs out of the fog, thrusts a package of papers into his hand and says: "Take it—run!" She vanishes into the fog, but not before Hallet gets a glimpse of her features.

The papers left with Hallet include a bundle of cancelled checks and an envelope giving a street address. He goes to the address and is led to the library. As Hallet enters the room, he is felled by two burglars who previously had killed Mr. Greye-Stratton, owner of the house. Hallet regains consciousness for a few moments and calls the police headquarters. The murder of Greye-Stratton is a profound mystery, but Chief Menzies immediately suspects the slain man's profligate son.

More views of "The Maelstrom," the vital Vitagraph feature which appears June 18, with Earle Williams and Dorothy Kelly in the lively leads.

Peggy Greye-Stratton, who had left her father's roof because of his oppression of herself and her brother, visits headquarters to learn if they have captured the murderer. Hallet arrives about the same time and the girl is sent into an ante-room. Later she is put in the identification line and Hallet recognizes in her the girl of the fog. He pretends not to know her, but as she starts from the building he stops her, revives old acquaintance and leaves with her.

Returning to headquarters, Hallet learns that Peggy is the wife of a criminal named Ling, and Menzies expresses the belief that she is shielding her brother, a member of Ling's gang. Hallet goes to his apartment and there receives a note from Peggy, begging him to come to her aid.

Hallet is admitted to the house by a woman, who springs a trap and Hallet is plunged into a cellar. Menzies enters the house and meets the same fate. When he finds Hallet, the latter is bound and gaged. They escape from the cellar, but not before the gang has fled.

The police learn Ling's new hiding place and the fact that he is wounded. They get into the house, but while they are searching upstairs Ling sets fire to the building and escapes with Gwennie. The two seek refuge in a Chinese den. Menzies and Hallet force their way into the opium den and after a fight overpower Ling.

Ling, Gwennie and "Dago Sam" are brought together at headquarters. Finally the gun with which Greye-Stratton was killed is bashed and Sam admits that he fired the shot. This clears up the mystery. Peggy tells Hallet she had married Ling to prevent him from exposing a minor crime of her brother's, but Menzies reveals the fact that she was not really Ling's wife, because he has another wife living. Thus Peggy and Hallet, their romance born in the maelstrom of mystery, are free to wed.

Exhibitors Oppose License Raise

The exhibitors of Chicago have for some weeks been carrying on a strenuous campaign against the proposed increase in theater licenses. Each time the proposed new ordinance was brought up for hearing a large number of theater men were present, there being something like forty on hand for the meeting held June 5 in the committee room of the city hall. A number of conferences were held with the sub-committee on licenses of the city council.

The matter is not as yet completely settled. The exhibitors have drawn up a scale of proposed licenses which increases the tax on large houses and lower it on the smaller ones. They suggest as a just tax a license of $100 a year for houses seating 300 or less and charging an admission of 25 cents or under; houses seating 1500 or over and charging 25 cents or under, a license of $350 per year. Houses charging from 26 cents to 50 cents admission, to have $25 added to the above license fees, and the same amount would be added to the fee of houses charging from 50 cents to one dollar, and so on.

In spite of the great amount of negotiation and discussion which has been going on, it is difficult to forecast how the council committee will act. The results of the hearing of the committee of June 12 will be given in the next issue of Motography.

"Maud Muller," is the title of Gale Henry's current Joker one-reel comedy.

Mabel Bollin with Vitagraph

Miss Mabel Ballin, who gave up art work to go into motion pictures as a member of the Famous Players, has left that organization to join the Vitagraph company. She was chosen by Director W. P. S. Earle to play the leading feminine role opposite little Bobby Connelly in the new Greater Vitagraph series featuring that diminutive star.

Mabel Ballin, new Vitagraph leading lady for Bobby Connelly.

Miss Ballin, a member of an old Philadelphia family, had won a position in the art world before she became a photoplayer. She studied art at the Industrial Art School in Philadelphia, but before she took up the work seriously she had a whirl at the stage, appearing in musical comedy.

Then came the call to the screen. Her first appearance was with Marguerite Clark in "The Valentine Girl."

Casting about for a winsome young leading woman to appear opposite Bobby Connelly, Director Earle chose Miss Ballin. She not only is young and pretty, but is tiny in stature and these characteristics, combined with her ability as an actress, made her an ideal choice for the role. Miss Ballin already has worked in five pictures of the series, which will consist of ten one-reel subjects. The release date for the first of the series has not been decided upon.

Maxine Elliott Back Again

The change in plans by which Maxine Elliott remains in this country instead of returning to Europe, as previously announced, are shrouded in the official mystery which surrounds all passenger traffic between the United States and Europe. Miss Elliott's plans, following the completion of her two Goldwyn pictures, contemplated her immediate return to northern France, there to resume her activities in behalf of the allied wounded. Preparations were made to carry out this schedule. Miss Elliott gave up her comfortable appartments at the Ritz, her numerous trunks were packed, her friends were bade farewell, and then followed the announcement of her sailing—with the details of ship and port withheld, as is customary.

Now comes the report of her return from an unnamed port in either the United States or Canada—and Miss Elliott is in New York again. What official advice against proceeding with her journey, what warning U-boat or commerce-raider sent her ship scurrying back to port is not divulged. It may have been the same rumor which closed the harbor of New York to traffic last week. But the fact is that Miss Elliott's trip is off, for the present at least, and possibly for all summer.

Eight property men of the Metro Studios have enlisted in the United States Naval Reserves.

MUTUAL RELEASES FOR WEEK

Marjorie Rambeau and Jackie Saunders Appear in New Box Office Attractions—Rest of Schedule Up to Snuff

Two star productions top the list of Mutual releases for the week of June 18—"The Dazzling Miss Davison," featuring Marjorie Rambeau, and "A Bit of Kindling," in which Jackie Saunders plays the lead.

The name of Marjorie Rambeau of course is always effective and in the "Dazzling Miss Davison" she is a winner.

"A Bit of Kindling" shows Jackie Saunders as a ragged newsgirl. A girl similarly dressed, parading in front of the theater or through the neighborhood calling "extra" and distributing handbills announcing the play and the star might have an effect that would be felt at the box office. A big pile of kindling wood on either side of the entrance topped by a big placard announcing the title of the play and the star might also attract attention.

More Thrills in "Railroad Raiders"

"A Desperate Deed" is the eleventh chapter of "The Railroad Raiders" scheduled for June 18. One thriller follows another in quick succession. Helen Holmes manages to escape from the box car which is sinking in the water. She jumps from the top of the pilot house of a barge and catches the beam of a jackknife bridge just as the bridge starts to open and then—but why spoil a good story?

"Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal"

The fourteenth chapter of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" series ready June 22, is "A Sheep Among Wolves." The story shows the underworld maddened by the Grey Seal trying to apprehend the gentleman criminal while committing some crime.

La Salle and Cub Comedies

"Tillie of the Nine Lives" is the La Salle Comedy released June 19. A small pig plays one of the principal roles in this comedy.

The Cub Comedy for June 21 is "Jerry's Red-hot Trail," and Jerry just escapes being hung from the limb of a tree.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," which come to the screen on June 19, show Nantes, a port of western France; Pozzuoli, an ancient town of Italy; and a Russian village in winter.

"Mutual Weekly" will be released on its regular day, Wednesday, June 20.

"Reel Life," scheduled for June 21 is made up of five subjects—knitting hosiery; an auto drawn train; reclaiming the Everglades; a tilting match on the water: and the most perfect child.

Who Is Miss Davison?

An atmosphere of mystery surrounds the story of "The Dazzling Miss Davison," the Mutual feature scheduled for release June 18, in which Marjorie Rambeau is starred. There is a puzzling problem as to who and what Miss Davison is. She claims to be a designer but evades the question of where her shop is or for whom she works.

She ostensibly makes a good deal of money at her trade for she wears expensive and beautiful clothes and is most generous with her gifts to her family. But there are scenes in which Miss Davison is taken into a police station between two officers; there are scenes where valuable jewels and necklaces pass from some one's hand into hers; at an evening function she jokingly demonstrates how light-fingered she is and how easily she can lift wallets from inside coat pockets; she enters a large shop and disappears just as there is a cry of shoplifter. Numerous other incidents keep the audience guessing as to just what the profession might be.

Further perplexity is added to the movements of Miss Davison by a mysterious man who evidently is in league with her and appears wherever Miss Davison does, but whose face is never seen. His back becomes familiar but his face is not revealed until the climax of the story.

Very mystifying are the actions of Miss Davison at the beautiful and hospitable home of the Van Santens. Miss Davison seems to be happy only when she is in the card room watching the men playing poker, and the higher the stakes the more fascinated she becomes. When a quarrel ensues because Mr. Van Santen is found cheating it is Miss Davison who runs after and tries to persuade the injured man not to report her friends to the police.

The puzzling situations are all cleared up, however, when it is discovered that the Van Satens are a band of notorious crooks and card sharks and Miss Davison is a member of the Secret Service who has gained distinction for her clever rounding up of crooks.

OREGON EXHIBITORS MEET

Convention of Oregon League and Film Ball Held in Portland—President Meighan Away Fighting War Tax

(Special to Motography by A. R. M. Sutton.)

The Motion Picture Men's Association of Oregon held their annual convention in the Multnomah Hotel at Portland on May 29 and 30, and rounded out the event on the evening of the thirtieth with a Film ball which was attended by Margarita Fischer, Dorothy Dalton, and J. Warren Kerrigan. Unfortunately the president, C. W. Meighan, manager of the People's Theater, was called to Washington to help fight the footage tax just before the date set for the convention, and he was missed very much during the entire proceedings.

The first day's meeting was opened by an address of welcome by Vice-President Grapen, after which a telegram was read from the absent president. Then the vice-president called on Malvin G. Winstock of Seattle, formerly president of the People's Amusement Company of Portland. Mr. Winstock gave a very interesting talk comparing the motion picture business of the days when the People's Amusement Company was first formed and that of today. After the close of this speach a motion was made and carried that a committee be appointed to meet seven senators from other states who happened to be in Portland to attend the funeral services of Senator Lane, and ask them to come to the convention next day and take up with the picture men the question of the war tax. The committee waited on the senators but found that most of them were leaving before the meeting next day, so they were unable to take the matter up.

On Wednesday, A. H. McDonald, of the Rex Theater, Eugene, Oregon, was the first to address the picture men. The subject of his speech was, "Pictures Past and Present," and Mr. McDonald made some very interesting comparisons on the difference in length, subject, and photography of the pictures of ten years ago and now. Next the chief operator of the People's Theater, the oldest operator in Portland, gave a talk on "Projection." J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Seattle World office, spoke on the subject of "The Exhibitor and the Exchange Man," making a plea for greater confidence between the two branches of the industry. Mr. Langerman discussed the question of the war tax, W. H. Whiteside, of Corvallis, Oregon, gave a short talk, but begged to be excused from making a regular speech.

Ball Rolls Up Large Attendance

The ball on the night of the thirtieth was a tremendous success both from the standpoint of entertainment and attendance. The tickets were a dollar per couple, and a nice profit was realized. Margarita Fischer, who is a native of Oregon, led the grand march with Judge Gatens, the most popular man in Portland.

The producing companies had booths on the mezzanine floors, and some of them were works of art. The display of the World Film Corporation was particularly admired. The film managers of the territory had come down from Seattle to look after the decoration of their respective stalls.

"Among Those Present"

The film men present were:

A. W. Eden, manager Seattle Fox office; W. A. Mead, Fox salesman; C. A. Faris, Seattle Vitagraph manager; Fred C. Quimby, Pathe Northwest supervisor; E. H. Sperry, Portland Pathe manager; M. Rosenberg, manager De Luxe Feature Film Company, Seattle; L. Rosenberg, De Luxe salesman; Seattle Paramount manager; C. J. Kerr, Seattle Metro manager; W. A. Crank, Metro salesman; R. C. Cunningham, Seattle Artcraft manager; Jack Lennon, manager of the Greater Features Company, Seattle; I. Rosenthal, manager of the Western Civilization Company, Seattle.

Among the out of town exhibitors present were:

C. E. Stillwell, of the Stillwell Amusement Company, Spokane; Mr. Kolstadt, of Hood River, Oregon; Mr. Morris, of McMinnville, Oregon; Manager Durham, of the Grand Theater, Camas, Wash.; Fred Park, of the Lyric Theater, Mullalla, Oregon; Mr. Cooley, of Silverton, Oregon; Mr. Hinckley, of Independence, Oregon; Mr. Coble, of Ben, Oregon; Manager Bettenger, of the Grand, The Dalles, Oregon; Manager Gill, of the U. S. A. Theater, Vancouver, Wash.; George Hunt, of the Page Theater, Medford, Oregon; A. H. McDonald, Rex Theater, Eugene, Oregon; George Bligh, Liberty Theater, Salem, Oregon; W. H. Whiteside, Corvallis, Oregon; Messrs. Herbert and Percy, of Medford, Oregon.

Fairbanks' Book Aids Bookings

Exhibitors all over the country are reporting good use of the Douglas Fairbanks book, "Laugh and Live," in the way of a medium for creating additional interest in connection with the presentation of the Fairbanks-Artcraft film, "In Again—Out Again." Copies of these books are being used in many different ways by live-wire exhibitors. Manager E. L. Bleakley of the Park Theater, Franklin, Pennsylvania, recently secured immense publicity displays in local papers on "In Again—Out Again" as a result of his presenting each newspaper editor in his town with a copy of the book.

Another progressive manager at Leavenworth, Kansas, succeeded in placing copies of "Laugh and Live" in the public library and carried a notice in all the local papers bearing on this fact. In addition to this he ran a slide announcing that copies of the book could be had at the library. This campaign he conducted in advance of his showing of "In Again—Out Again," so that when the picture was shown the entire town had been reading about the popular star. In addition to stimulating interest for his own benefit he received the thanks of the library officials who co-operated with him to a great extent. Many other reports from exhibitors in connection with this proposition have been received at the Artcraft headquarters and various exhibitors are planning similar book campaigns for the next Fairbanks-Artcraft picture, "Wild and Woolly."

Eighteen pigmies are included in the cast of a forthcoming King-Bee comedy. When their work was completed at the Jacksonville studios the band of pigmies left for New York on a Clyde line steamer. They attracted much attention among their fellow passengers.

Can You Help Him?

Motography, Chicago:

I'd particularly like to know, from the exhibitors who have run it, how "Pearl of the Army," Pathe's serial starring Pearl White, has proved. Would other exhibitors kindly tell me in Motography? I think that this department, "What the Picture Did for Me," can be of untold benefit, and I am glad to send in my "bit" each week.—Yours very truly, A. N. Miles, Eminence, Kentucky.

THE NEW IDEA IN GOLDWYN

Samuel Goldfish Describes His Company's Plan of Production—First Trade Showing at Exchanges to Be Held in July

Practically on the eve of showing the first of the Goldwyn productions to the nation's exhibitors at the various Goldwyn branches in the United States and Canada, Samuel Goldfish has for the first time talked personally about his organization's productions.

Goldwyn's first trade showing at its exchanges will be held in July and not less than four pictures, with as many stars, will be ready for inspection. In commenting lately on the superiority of Goldwyn methods Mr. Goldfish said:

We have deliberately set out in our Goldwyn Pictures to show both exhibitors and the public that there is a great deal more that can be put in a motion picture than the featured personality known as the 'star.'

I have a feeling now that goes much deeper than the feeling I had four years ago when I founded and organized the Lasky company, whose productions were innovations in the film industry. I believe that today and for a long time into the future the quality of the story and the manner of its production will be the essentially big factors of successful pictures.

I make no prediction about the lessening influence of stars, nor do I foresee the elimination of the star system. In Goldwyn we frankly recognize what we term star values by having exclusively in our service immensely popular women known everywhere and having box office value everywhere. We expect exhibitors to advertise and exploit these stars because of their powers of audience attraction, but we know from within our organization that we can make the production itself our greatest mercantile asset. Incidentally, we make the stars themselves much better through the medium of powerful stories produced and directed by important artists.

The splendid successes achieved by Edgar and Archibald Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Arthur Hopkins, who are the associated owners of Goldwyn, as well as the achievements of the other distinguished factors we have enlisted with us, could not fail to exert a great influence for good in the world of motion pictures.

In this alliance we have not been scared or even slightly influenced by precedent—which is the dangerous obstacle to progress in any art or industry. We have defied all of the established picture conventions, as well as the business conventions of the industry. We have resisted from the beginning any and all influences that cause a producer to make timelock pictures. We prefer to make pictures slowly.

We have inventive, creative, imaginative artists in our service, and we have not wanted them to think and work under excessive pressure. In other words, we have taken our time and will continue to do so.

I have always resented the attitude of contempt with which motion picture professionals regarded American authors. Obviously, so long as an attitude of that sort was maintained, little help could be expected from the distinguished writers of the country. It was our original thought that the authors with whom we dealt should play an active part in the making of their pictures. We have carried this thought out in practice. With us the author is consulted about and works on every detail of the picturizing of his story or play. His contact does not cease until he has helped cut, assemble and title his own work. In our studios Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Irvin S. Cobb, Roi Cooper Megrue, and other authors devote days of their time to this work, neglecting new creative work for the time being to make their former successes have the same degree of finish on the screen as they had on the stage.

These things constitute the "new idea" in the production of motion pictures. We do not minimize the stars—we make them bigger, better, abler than it would be possible for them to be with a poor story perfunctorily directed and mounted. Made with such intelligent effort and industry, I think Goldwyn has not taken merely the next step ahead in the screen art, but the next four or five steps, and we expect to go still farther.

Alice Brady makes an extremely pretty figure in the Colonial costume of Betsy Ross, in the new World-Picture Brady-Made of which she is the titular center. This is regarded as a particularly timely photoplay showing the incidents surrounding the making of the Stars and Stripes, and embracing numerous other episodes of striking historical interest.

Mae Marsh and Vernan Steele are in a Goldwyn drama and the oval. Below is Madge Kennedy in her first play on the two-dimension stage and the stately and appealing Jane Cowl stands at your right.

Peggy Hyland and "Bill" Davison at work on "Persuasive Peggy," the first Mayfair production.

Mayfair Studios Bustle

Peggy Hyland and her company of players including her leading man, "Bill" Davidson, have returned from Long Island, where they have spent the last few weeks filming the exterior scenes of the first Mayfair production, "Persuasive Peggy," under the direction of Charles Brabin.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, has expressed the greatest satisfaction on the beautiful settings used as backgrounds for these scenes and also complimented the entire cast for the excellent work they have done thus far.

Now that the exteriors are filmed the studios bustle daily with activity as some "sets" are erected while others are "struck." Stage hands, carpenters and electricians find plenty to do as no effort is being spared to make this production meet the greatest expectations of state right buyers and exhibitors.

A number of scenes will be exceptionally beautiful and artistry will be the keynote throughout.

In "Bill" Davidson, Miss Hyland finds a leading man well adapted to play opposite her and she is making her characterization all that could possibly be desired.

Cornell Man in Kennedy Picture

Frank Morgan is one of the quartet of four principals who help to create the fun in the first of the screen farce comedies in which Madge Kennedy is starring for Goldwyn Pictures; Miss Kennedy herself is chief of the group. Mr. Morgan, who is not to be confounded with Ralph Morgan, his brother, is a well-knit and good looking young man of twenty-seven, a typical son of Cornell, of which university he is a graduate. Frank Morgan learned the technique of comedy playing on the stage, his first appearance having been in that money-making farce comedy, "A Full House." Following this were a number of productions in a stock company, during which Mr. Morgan outgrew his novitiate, and an engagement in "In Cold Type."

On the screen Mr. Morgan has been seen in "The Girl Phillippa," "A Modern Cinderella," "A Child of the Wild," and other photoplays released by Vitagraph, Edison, McClure and Fox. His role in the Madge Kennedy picture calls forth greater efforts than have yet been required from Mr. Morgan by any character he has portrayed on stage or screen. And Frank Morgan is paying in full all drafts on his ability as an actor.

F.I.L.M. Club Elects

A large, enthusiastic meeting of the New York F. I. L. M. Club was held June 5 at which officers for the ensuing six months were chosen, business was transacted, and a ripping time thrown in for good measure. The new officials elected are E. M. Saunders of Metro, president; H. H. Buxbaum of General, 1st vice-president; S. B. Kramer of Bluebird, 2nd vice-president; W. E. Raynor of K. E. S. E., treasurer and secretary, and S. Zieler, chairman board of directors.

Retiring President A. F. Beck delivered an interesting talk in which he complimented the members on the many reforms effected since the club's organization and predicted greater successes to come. He pointed out that exhibitors all recognize now that their interests are being conserved by the liberal policy of the club which has been exceedingly just in rendering decisions.

A communication was read from National President Lee Ochs inviting the club to send a representative to the National Convention in Chicago, to address the convention and explain the aims and objects of the organization. Another invitation was received from the Chicago F. I. L. M. Club urging the members to attend the National Convention of Exchange Managers to be held in that city during July.

Several reports were read in which the prosperous outlook for the industry was emphasized and gloom was given an inconspicuous place on the shelf.

New Ince Vampire Picture

Louise Glaum, the Ince-Triangle vampire "de luxe," whose popularity is increasing with each new performance, soon will be seen in a part distinctly different from the usual vampire roles when she is presented by Thomas H. Ince in "A Strange Transgressor," by John Lynch. This is the story of a woman who becomes the mistress of a man through love—and love alone. Her life, with the exception of this one unforgivable sin, is without blemish. Then comes the time when the man tires of his plaything. He tells her of his desire to marry a good woman, who will exert the proper influence over his son, who is falling into evil ways. The woman begs him to marry her, but he insists that he must not darken his son's future. She then confesses that she, too, has a son—a little boy who is being protected amidst the cloistered surroundings of a religious institution. But even this has no effect. From here the play presents many thrilling and exciting situations, each a big climax in itself. It broadens out until the spectator is enveloped by the overwhelming heartthrobs that each new scene presents.

Both Pittsburgh and Minneapolis claim June Elvidge, the radiantly beautiful World-Picture star, as a native daughter, but June herself is silent on the subject. Such is the diplomacy of studio life.

Geo. M. Cohan's New Screen Vehicle Is "Seven Keys to Baldpate"—Hugh Ford Directing Popular Actor-Author-Producer

George M. Cohan commenced work on his second photoplay for Artcraft Pictures last week at the Famous Players studio in New York City. As his new motion picture vehicle, following "Broadway Jones," which scored an immediate hit all over the country, the popular actor-author-producer has selected his famous theatrical success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." This well known play proved one of the season's most favorite stage offerings four years ago when it appeared on Broadway at the Astor Theater under the direction of Cohan and Harris.

The story of "Seven Keys to Baldpate" is by George M. Cohan and tells of the experiences of a writer of sensational fiction who makes a wager with a fellow clubman, that he can create one of his masterpieces in twenty-four hours. He comes to Baldpate Inn on the top of a mountain which is deserted, in the dead of winter. Here he is to find solitude and win his $5,000 wager, but many incidents happen, all of which leap up to a great surprise as the climax. The subject is replete with humorous incidents together with various dramatic situations that present a variety to the theme to this swift moving farce. Those who are familiar with the story will readily appreciate its splendid adaptabilities to the screen and particularly to the Cohan type of characterization.

The second George M. Cohan production to be released by Artcraft, is being staged under the direction of Hugh Ford, whose many successes under the Famous Players trade-mark on the Paramount Program, have placed him among the very foremost exponents of modern screencraft. Mr. Ford's distinctive manner of photoplay presentation is well known both in and out of the trade as evidenced in his production of Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick and Marie Doro film vehicles. Prior to his affiliation with the Famous Players organization, Mr. Ford has had considerable success as producer of such popular plays as "Joseph and His Brethern" and "The Yellow Ticket."

In commenting on the new Cohan production, Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, said: "Although we had not intended to start the second Cohan-Artcraft picture until a later date, the many requests from exhibitors for this production in the near future, as a result of the sensational success of his first film, 'Broadway Jones,' have prompted Mr. Cohan and Artcraft to stage this subject immediately. Few stars of the stage have ever registered such an immediate hit among patrons of the screen. The prediction that he would become an immediate favorite in view of the fact that he introduces a new and distinct character to the screen has more than been fulfilled. Even were George M. Cohan an unknown quantity he would have become an immediate favorite for just this reason. Everyone who has seen the play or is familiar with the story of 'Seven Keys to Baldpate' will readily realize that this is a most happy selection, not only because of the fact that it offers an ideal vehicle for the particular talents of the star, but because it presents a most desirable screen story of rapid-fire theme disclosing many humorous as well as dramatic surprises."

Edna Goodrich Working

Edna Goodrich has completed the production of "Reputation," and has started on her second Mutual feature, the story of which is laid in Maryland and is built up around Southern society life. The scenes will afford Miss Goodrich an opportunity to display a number of the beautiful gowns for which she is famous.

The scenario is from the pen of Samuel Morse of the New York Times, and the production will be under the direction of John O'Brien.

Fairbanks Picture Arrives

The negative of the second Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Wild and Woolly," was delivered personally to the Artcraft headquarters in New York by Billy Shay, assistant to Director Emerson, who just arrived from California. Positive copies are now being made of the film in the East and will be ready for an advance trade showing shortly.

Here's America's Big Smile in his newest opportunity for fun and athletics. "Wild and Woolly" is the name. Eileen Percy, a stage beauty, is "Doug's" attractive opposite.

THE CALL "TO INVEST"

Manager of V. L. S. E. Asks Employes to Invest Money Received from Profit-Sharing Fund in Liberty Bonds

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., has called upon all the employes of the organization to invest the money they receive from the profit-sharing fund of the organization in the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

The profit-sharing plan of V. L. S. E., which has been in existence for about two years, has been the cause of the distribution of thousands of dollars to the employes. These profit-sharing checks are given as an appreciation of loyalty and good work.

When the profit-sharing plan was first perfected the employes were requested to use the money distributed through the fund as an insurance against illness and advancing age by starting a savings bank account with the first check.

This plan was followed by many of the employes and subsequent checks, which are distributed every thirteen weeks, usually found their way into several savings banks of the country to join the original deposit.

It is this accumulation of eight profit-sharing checks that Mr. Irwin now suggests the employes use for the purchase of Liberty Bonds. Not only does he urge that the savings be used but that subsequent profit-sharing checks go to the same channel.

The next profit-sharing check will be distributed for the thirteen-week period ending July 28 next. Mr. Irwin predicts that the amount to be distributed at that time, from present indications, will be larger than the preceding distribution of April 28, which was one of the largest in the history of V. L. S. E.

In a personal communication sent out to all employes urging them to use their profit-sharing money for the purchase of Liberty Bonds, Mr. Irwin says:

The profit-sharing fund distributed at the end of each thirteen weeks period during the past two years among all of the members of this organization has been a very substantial financial benefit to each.

From the hundreds of letters received from members of this organization since the establishment of the profit-sharing fund, it is apparent that the co-operative policy of this company has been the means of creating innumerable savings bank accounts which otherwise would not have existed.

The home office now desires to impress upon the personnel of this company the individual duty of each, to not only aid themselves by investing their savings in the United States Government Liberty Bonds, the highest class security issued throughout the entire world, but what is far more to the point, to actively support the government in its strife for the liberty and freedom of the entire world.

Let each one see to it that the moneys distributed on April 28th, together with all of the other savings that have accrued within the last two years, are at once invested in the Liberty Bonds.

Your savings bank or any other bank will be only too glad to instruct you with regard to your subscription, and to obtain the bonds in your behalf, without any charge for the services thus rendered.

Remember also that future government loans will require your support. Conserve the funds which you will receive on July 28 and likewise add to your savings account by a definite percentage of your salary, so that you will not only possess the gratification of being able to participate in the Liberty Loan, the subscriptions for which close on June 15, but also will become an active supporter of the government by subscribing for bonds under the loan which will be issued during September next.

The fourth episode of "The Mystery of the Gray Ghost" is being filmed at Universal City.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" Filmed

William Fox has completed a picturization of "Jack and the Beanstalk" which should prove an epic of the screen. The film was directed by C. M. and S. A. Franklin, the great child directors.

The production is elaborate and was months in the making in the Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., and on vast "locations" in California valleys. This version of the greatest story of really universal appeal for young and old was obtained at a cost of $500,000. The picture is in ten reels.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" will be released as a special offering in September by Fox Film Corporation. The production will be the first of the Fox Kiddie Features to be issued by Mr. Fox each month. These subjects will be of interest not only to children, but to adults, because of the remarkable way in which they will be screened.

The films will be faithful to the world known stories from which they are adapted. One of the most amazing features of "Jack and the Beanstalk" is the fidelity to every detail.

Loew Theaters Run Special

Harry Samwick, who recently completed negotiations and concluded contract with President William L. Sherrill for the exclusive exhibition rights to the latest Frohman Amusement Corporation master-production, "God's Man," through the entire state of New York has entered into agreement with the Marcus Loew offices, for the showing of "God's Man" throughout the entire Loew circuit. In view of the extreme number of feature productions which have come before exhibitors during the past few weeks, and with the consideration of the early date at which the showing of "God's Man" in Loew houses is to begin, both Mr. Samwick and the Frohman Corporation have reason to feel well pleased with this stamp of absolute approval which this exceptional booking has accorded to this production.

The Loew presentation begins June 25, simultaneously at the New York, De Kalb, Orpheum, Fulton, Bijou, Avenue B and Delancey theaters, continuing thereafter over the entire circuit for an aggregate run of sixty-two days. The Loew circuit have also booked the Jersey City Theater through the Mammoth Film Corporation, holders of the northern New Jersey rights to the production.

Teachers Study Pictures

Special to Motography.

The Central Council of the Parent-Teachers' Association of Seattle is having a regular course of lectures on the subject of motion pictures. Prof. Knisely, of the University of Washington, is giving talks on the picture as an educator; Dr. Sarah Kendall, one of the leading women physicians of the city, is treating of pictures from the viewpoint of their moral effect; and Edward H. Watson, assistant manager of the Greater Vitagraph office in Seattle, is giving a series of talks in which he explains to the parents and teachers of the city how they can get better pictures by co-operation with the manufacturers, who wish to produce them, rather than trying to force the showing of good pictures by censorship.

Fifteen dollars a day is a pretty good salary for a dog but this is the price that was paid for two Pekingese pups appearing in "Mary Moreland," the picturization of Marie Van Vorst's novel on which Marjorie Rambeau is now working for Mutual.

WAR TO HELP INDUSTRY

V. L. S. E. Head Thinks Exhibitors Will Prosper After Temporary Depression—Experience of Canada and Great Britain Indicate This

That the war will have no deterrent effect upon the exhibiting end of the motion picture industry has been demonstrated by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., through an exhaustive study made by two of his assistants, one of whom recently returned from Great Britain and the other who has just returned from a five months' trip through all parts of Canada.

The reports made to Mr. Irwin by both representatives of V. L. S. E. are practically identical, revealing the fact that for the first two months after the declaration of war business in Great Britain and Canada was poor. Following the first panic, however, business became normal and the normal period was followed by an era of prosperity that is now being enjoyed by exhibitors.

Mr. Irwin ordered this investigation as a service to exhibitors generally in order to be able to inform them whether it would be wise to trim their sails for a business depression or put on more sail for the prosperous period. He believes that the history of the motion picture business in other countries at war will be duplicated in the United States, now that the United States is at war, and, after receiving the reports of his traveling representatives he advises the exhibitors to be prepared to do a tremendous business. Every wise exhibitor, Mr. Irwin declares, should arrange right now for his program months in advance in order to assure his audience of good shows.

E. Auger, eastern traveling representative of V. L. S. E., after five months in Canada, has made a detailed report to Mr. Irwin in which he quotes statistics and reasons for predicting that the exhibiting end of the business is about to see a tremendous boom. He writes:

After making a thorough study in Canada of the effect of the war upon motion picture exhibiting conditions, I feel it is safe to predict that the exhibiting end of the business in the United States is on the eve of a tremendously prosperous era.

I base this prediction on what has happened in Canada. For a few months following the declaration of war with Germany the motion picture business of Canada was in a chaotic condition. For a short time bankruptcy appeared to be the final solution of most of the motion picture exhibitors.

There appear to have been two reasons for the panic. The first is that the exhibitors themselves became panic stricken and stopped campaigns to get patrons to their theaters and economized to such an extent that it became false economy. The second is that for the first few months all the people of Canada could think of was the war to the exclusion of everything else.

Conditions in Canada, however, were readjusted rapidly in so much so that today practically every motion picture exhibitor is making money.

The reason for prosperity in the motion picture business of Canada today is not hard to find if sought. Canada has a population of approximately seven million, and of those five hundred thousand men are at the front. This means that one out of every fourteen has responded to the call to arms.

The leaving for the front of five hundred thousand Canadians means that approximately four hundred thousand women have been left without their husbands or their usual escorts. The household duties of the married women have been decreased largely by this. Many of them have a late breakfast and an early dinner as the result of not being forced to await the return of their husbands from work.

With the young unmarried women left without their usual escorts the same condition applies. They must depend upon their own earnings for their pleasures and this causes them to seek the motion picture theaters for amusement because the attendance at the motion picture theaters does not entail a heavy drain on their resources.

And the final reason is that almost anything that might distract attention from the war and from the casualty list for even a few hours is received with welcome.

These I feel are the reasons for the prosperous conditions in Canada and I believe I am safe in predicting that the same conditions will prevail in the United States very shortly.

Strong Lucas Characterization

Wilfred Lucas finds himself again in a political role in the Triangle production, "The Food Gamblers," in which he is featured with Elda Millar under the supervision of Allan Dwan. In this play, which is a timely and forceful comment on the present food problem, Lucas plays the part of a food commissioner whose social conscience is not so sensitive as to keep him from trading on the necessity of his fellows by price manipulations. Because he loves a girl, however, and because he himself comes face to face with starvation, his better nature is awakened and wages a successful battle against his own colleagues for constructive legislation.

The starvation scene has a strange counterpart in Lucas' private life, and his acting in this scene brought vividly to his memory three foodless days he spent on the plains of New Mexico several years ago. Lucas was riding horseback from Secora to Albuquerque, depending entirely on the larders of the natives along the road for his meals. A storm came up suddenly, a fury of wind and white alkali dust that blinded both Lucas and his horse completely.

Losing the mail train, the horse stumbled and threw his rider, and hours later Lucas awoke to find himself with a broken leg and a wounded horse, and the angry red eye of the setting sun just disappearing below the horizon.

For three days he struggled on, becoming fainter by the hour for lack of food. He forgot the pain of his injury, he says, in the frenzied craving for food, and when he was finally discovered by an indolent Mexican and taken to his hut he consumed all the beans in the house and begged for more. With the memory of such an adventure as a groundwork, it was not difficult for Lucas to "starve" in "The Food Gamblers."

Washburn Film Draws

Breaking an iron clad rule the Castle Theater of Chicago laid aside its regular program to make room for a pre-release week's run of the latest Essanay-Washburn feature, "Filling His Own Shoes." It is very apparent that Bryant Washburn has struck his stride and has recently become a distinct box-office attraction. Credit for this is due to the fact that in his latest features, he has been perfectly cast in subjects best suited to his qualifications. His portrayals of such characters as Skinner, in the series of that name, and as Ruggles, in "Filling His Own Shoes," is that of a typical clean-cut, fun-loving American. The star's personal appearance at the Castle afternoon and evening, simultaneously with the picture, resulted in a record breaking week. It is reported that the highest film rental ever paid for a picture in the loop was obtained by K-E-S-E Service for "Filling His Own Shoes."

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., Longacre Building, New York, have sold the state rights of "The Battle of Gettysburg," for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, to the Specialty Film Corporation, Pittsburgh.

Battle on Brakebeams

Helen Holmes, adventuress of the screen, who drove an automobile for a thirty-foot leap to the deck of a barge, is worsted in a hand-to-hand battle on the brakebeams of a moving freight train and, imprisoned in a freight car, is pushed off a ferry into the middle of San Francisco Bay in Chapter X of "The Railroad Raiders."

Helen Holmes "on the rods."

The fight on the brakebeams provides as big a thrill as Helen Holmes ever staged. "Tony" of the raiders, riding the bumpers, discovers Helen on the brakebeams and makes his way beneath the car toward her. As the train rushes along, they fight fiercely. Helen loses her grip and falls to the roadbed. Lying face downward on the ties, she escapes injury as the train passes over her.

She manages to get to the ferry before the car leaves. The raiders overpower her and place her inside the car. In the middle of the bay they push the car off the end of the ferry into the bay. Helen recovers consciousness as the water reaches her waist.

Art Dramas for June

Four stirring Plays of unusual variety, are scheduled for release by Art Dramas during the month of June. These are from three studios—Apollo, Erbograph and Van Dyke. The latter supplies two instead of the usual one, having had two companies at work during the past month.

Jean Sothern, Marian Swayne and Alma Hanlon, Art Dramas' popular stars, are featured in the releases of the month, which are considerably superior, according to those who have seen them, to any previous assortment from this company's studios.

All types of drama are represented in the list as the company wishes to have, not merely good pictures, but also unique stories, so that no exhibitor can find fault with them on the grounds that they are all alike.

Consequently the first release for June, which comes from the Van Dyke studios, is a comedy drama with numerous clever twists in it. The role taken by Jean Sothern in this, alone, marks the film off from the usual run of pictures. The title of this picture is "A Mute Appeal."

"The Golden God," featuring Alama Hanlon, is the second of the month's releases and comes from the Apollo studios. "The Road Between," Marian Swayne's second Erbograph picture, is the third release.

Griffith Calls Players to Europe

Owing to the absence of D. W. Griffith in Europe, where he went to attend the presentations of "Intolerance" at Drury Lane Theater, London, sailing from New York on March 17, there have been many rumors of his subsequent movements. These have brought a statement from the Griffith offices.

Since "Intolerance" was launched in England Mr. Griffith has been in the battle trenches in France and Belgium and has been doing some special work for the British War Office and for the French Government. The nature of this work is secret and naturally cannot be announced at this time. Without violating any of the restrictions of the military censorship in England or France it is quite evident that whatever is being done will have an American participation as Mr. Griffith has called to the other side several of the best known people who have appeared in his recent productions. Among these are Bobby Harron, the Gish Sisters, Lillian and Dorothy, and Billy Bitzer, his camera man, who has been with Mr. Griffith ever since he began making big feature pictures. Bitzer and the American players sailed on the same English ship that took General Pershing and his staff to England, where they landed June 8.

No other authoritive statement of what Mr. Griffith has been doing abroad can be announced at this time, but it is quite evident that he will have a local touch to whatever European subject he may undertake to finish when he returns to this country in the near future. These movements were taken upon Mr. Griffith's personal initiative and have nothing to do with any arrangements made prior to his sailing for Europe.

Cummings Gathers Recruits

Irving Cummings, at the head of his own company of players, now busily engaged on their first feature to be released by Superlative Pictures Corporation, was called upon through unanimous vote of the civilian populace of Port Henry, N. Y., to induce the young men of that town to enlist for service in the army, and made so impressive an oration that several youths hit the trail.

Mr. Cummings, who was recently associated with the Fox Film Corporation is of the usual satisfied nature, that is, he was till he was approached by M. F. Tobias, a film pioneer, to arrange the formation of a producing company headed by Mr. Cummings, and bearing the title of the star himself.

Theater Manager to Watch for Subs

H. Clark Mooney, manager of the Triangle Theater, Brooklyn, has received a commission as lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps and has received orders to join his command at Fort Hancock in the near future. Mr. Mooney is an ex-officer and at the outbreak of hostilities offered his services to the government. He has severed all relations with the theater with which he has been connected and is now preparing to devote his time and energy to knocking the spots out of any German submarines that show their noses off the United States coast.

TRIANGLE'S INTERESTING

Debut of Olive Thomas of the "Follies"—Charles Ray Also to Be Seen in "The Clodhopper" on June 24

Olive Thomas will make her debut on the Triangle program as a full-fledged star on June 24, when Thomas H. Ince will present her in a rollicking comedy of high spirits and novel situations entitled "Madcap Madge." On the same date Charles Ray will also make his appearance under Ince auspices in a comedy drama known as "The Clodhopper."

When she was the bright particular star of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, Olive Thomas won fame as the "consolation of the tired business man," and in her first big screen characterization she is said to have more than made good her right to retain this title. "Madcap Madge" might be described as the pilgrim's progress of an up-to-the-minute-debutante. Madge is being educated at a fashionable finishing school by her socially ambitious parents when the story opens, and she has original and rather thrilling ideas regarding the development of mind and personality. Wild pranks and hazardous feats of prowess, such as leading a grand pajama melee on the campus at midnight, and the introduction of an untamed infant bull into the school dormitory carry the plot to a gatling-gun climax. Miss Thomas is supported by Charles Gunn, Dorcas Matthews, J. Barney Sherry and other well known Ince players.

Charles Ray's part in "The Clodhopper" is that of a raw country youth who drags out an uninteresting existence as his father's hired man. He has no leisure and no companions except his mother and pretty Mary Martin, who lives on the adjoining farm. Then comes the break with his close-fisted parent, his departure from the farm and his arrival in New York. An unexpected turn of events lands him on the stage, where he makes a hit as an eccentric dancer, and money pours in on him. In the end he is able to show his grasping and icy-blooded father that he is of the metal that rings truest when thrown down hardest. Margery Wilson takes the part of Ray's country sweetheart and by her charming impersonation adds one more success to her growing list of successes.

New Marguerite Clayton Two-Reeler

The vogue for sharp, snappy two-reel comedy dramas continue to be met by Essanay with its "Black Cat" features, according to a bulletin from General Film announcing the current release of "The Rainbow Box." As usual, some of Essanay's most favorite players appear, the leads in the present instance being Marguerite Clayton and Roderick La Rock. Miss Clayton, who does as attractive and conscientious work in the short films as in the five-reel features, plays the sympathetic part of Carol Blair, a pretty little clerk in a modiste's shop who dreams of wealth. She poses as a millionaire's daughter to win Wesley Jamieson, an apparent heir to riches. By the time she discovers that he is in circumstances as moderate as her own Carol has taken the more wholesome view of life and she weds him for his intrinsic worth.

The policy of choosing all Black Cat stories for their comedy-drama value is proving a hit with exhibitors, branch managers of General Film agree.

"When You and I Were Young"

The next picture from Harry Raver's company will be "When You and I Were Young." Work on this has already been started at the Apollo studios in Fort Lee, where the company has just finished "The Golden God."

"When You and I Were Young" is an original story by Frederich Rath, and it is founded on the famous old song of the same name. It is said to abound in pathos and heart interest, and to interweave the dreams of youth and age in a compelling and deeply moving manner. Alma Hanlon plays the leading role, supported by John Sainpolis, who returns to the Apollo company after finishing a Paramount picture with Pauline Frederick, in which he played the leading male role.

TO INTRODUCE FRACTIONS

Stories of Paralta Plays to Run Till Told—Not to Be Confined to Fixed Number of Complete Reels

Under the contracts existing between Paralta Plays, Inc., and the Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan producing companies, the Paralta company will have control of the cutting and assembling of the films of each production, which will be only of such length as the dramatic merit of the story may warrant.

No effort will be made to produce a uniform number of feet in releases. If a story is worth but 4,200 feet it will be told in that length. If 8,500 to 9,000 feet are required, it will be given approximately nine reels. Laboring for specific footage will have no place in either the Barriscale or Kerrigan studios.

The details of the productions made by each company will be under the guidance of Miss Barriscale or Mr. Kerrigan, Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta Plays, Inc., Robert Brunton, supervising art and technical director for each company, and the dramatic and photographic directors. This should give to each photoplay the best efforts of several tried and experienced minds.

When a production is finished the negative will pass to a committee to be cut and assembled. This committee will consist of Mr. Kane, Mr. Brunton and the star of the piece. The fate of the film will not rest in the hands of one arbitrary craftsman to cut, slash and eliminate as he may fancy to fit a certain requirement of footage.

As there will be no fixed length to Paralta releases, all that is vital to the telling of the story may be retained. Whatever clogs action, or is inconsequential, may be cut out, for there will be no necessity to carry it. The cutter is not the court of last resort. The assembling and cutting of a Paralta Play will be the work of competent, collective minds—not the duty of one person who may exercise arbitrary whims at will. Better results from this plan are quite certain.

"The Star Spangled Banner"

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce that keen interest is shown by exhibitors in "The Star Spangled Banner," the three-reel Edison production based on a story of life in the U. S. Marine Corps. A regiment of Marines assisted in making this picture. "The Star Spangled Banner" is a story in which a young man, born in America but educated abroad, permits his environment to influence him to such an extent that he almost forgets that he is an American, but when the crucial moment arrives his Americanism asserts itself and he is ready to go to the trenches with his father, a commandant in the U. S. Marine Corps. The release date of the feature, June 10, fits in very nicely with the drive for recruits that the U. S. Marine Corps is making during the week June 10 to 16. "The Star Spangled Banner" has been approved by the Government and it is expected to prove a great stimulator toward recruiting.

Change in Release

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce a change in their release schedule July 9. On this date Edison's five-reel feature with Shirley Mason in the titular role, "Light In Darkness," will be substituted for "Little Orphan Annie," a Selig production. The release date for the latter picture has not been announced.

Studios Shown in Comedy

The atmosphere of a motion picture studio enfolds the LaSalle comedy, "His Cannibal Wife," which will be released through Mutual on June 11. There are scenes showing studio life, the scene sets, the taking of pictures and the actors and "extras." The picture reveals the humiliations which Otto has to bear because his wife is star of the company while he is only an "extra," due to the wide class distinction in a studio between the head of the company and the player who just fills in now and then.

You will like "His Cannibal Wife"—unless you happen to have one in your family.

Otto decides to show these scoffers that he is somebody after all, and invents a highly colored story of his bravery on a cannibal island. He immediately becomes important, not because of his described heroism but because he has outlined a splendid scenario for the use of the company.

New Famous-Lasky Scenario Head

Robert E. MacAlarney, former city editor of the New York Tribune and well known short story writer and playwright, has succeeded Hector Turnbull as head of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department. Mr. Turnbull will devote himself exclusively to the writing of original photoplays and to the completion of several plays for which he has contracted.

Robert E. MacAlarney, who succeeds Mr. Turnbull, has been associated with him as a member of the Famous-Lasky scenario departments ever since he resigned from the New York Tribune to join what was originally the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. He is a Harvard graduate and at present a member of the Columbia University faculty.

An elaborate photoplay edition of "The Garden of Allah" is being prepared by Grosset & Dunlap, the book publishers. The book will be exploited in connection with the Selig production of "The Garden of Allah."

CLOSE BIG FOREIGN DEAL

John Olsen & Co. Secures Scandinavian Rights for Fairbanks, Arbuckle, Pallas, Morosco and Bosworth Feature Productions

One of the most important foreign picture deals which has been closed since the opening of the war in 1914 has been consummated between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and John Olsen & Co., by the terms of which the latter concern acquires control of the Douglas Fairbanks, Artcraft, Pallas, Morosco, Bosworth and Arbuckle-Paramount pictures for Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

This huge importing firm represents the three largest renting concerns in Sweden, Norway and Denmark, which are respectively Fotorama, the Swedish Biograph and the Scandinavian Film Central.

In view of the alliance of D. W. Griffith with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and his plans to direct six productions a year to be distributed by Artcraft, it is worthy of note that the first purchase made by the Olsen interests after their arrival in this country were the rights to Griffith's "Intolerance," and "The Birth of a Nation."

John Olsen, the head of the Scandinavian firm is now in this country, having brought with him O. Hemberg of the Swedish Biograph and Ernest Mattason who has been the London representative of the concern. The latter will remain in this country and will be in personal charge of the American offices.

According to Mr. Olsen, American subjects are in great demand in Scandinavian countries, having to a great extent replaced the demand for Italian and German productions. They have practically eliminated the continental pictures in the short time that American productions have been introduced by the Olsen company. So far Mr. Olsen estimated that the motion picture public in these countries totals about 11,000,000 people, but it is the belief that the interest in photoplays is growing so rapidly that this number will increase continually.

Little Madge in "Jerry-for-Short"

Work upon the production, "Jerry-for-Short," featuring little Madge Evans, is now nearly completed. The story gives this young star ample room to show her ability and the handling of her part is extremely creditable.

The heroine in this feature is an American-born heiress of a British earldom, and her disinherited father has died in New York leaving wife and baby in straitened circumstances, so that when the widow succumbs, the little girl is sent to an orphanage. From this hateful place she escapes and "joins out" with a circus. Here the agents of her grandfather, the earl, finds her and take her home to England. But the old man is a woman hater of the most rabid sort, believing his wife of years past to have eloped with his best friend—so he compels little Geraldine to array herself in boy's apparel and wear the cognomen Jerry, for short. The youngster prowls lonesomely through the ancient castle, where one day in a long unused tower, she comes across the skeletons of a man and woman, the earl's wife and suppositious lover, incarcerated by accident in the death chamber that was also their tomb. The old gentleman, stricken with remorse at the injustice of his aspersions upon the dead countess, restores little Geraldine to her rightful place in his household, indicating a happy future for his suddenly beloved heiress.

The tenderness shown toward her stricken mother in the final hours; the horror of existence in the orphan asylum; the gayety and abandon of life with the circus; the oppressive loneliness of days and nights in the grim, forbidding old castle; the shock of the gruesome discovery in the tower, and the final delight of her liberation to natural life—all these present opportunities of which Madge avails herself to their fullest value.

The most recent appearance of this child actress for World-Pictures Brady-Made was in "Maternity," in which Alice Brady was the star player. It was in the extraordinary fire scene of this drama that both Miss Brady and Madge had most of their hair singed off, a matter of such trifling consequence to the joyous little maid that less than two minutes after the genuine peril had passed, she was fast asleep in her blanket in the automobile bound for home.

"The Peddler," U. S. Production

Announcements made last week by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, to the effect that it had secured the services of Joe Welsh, the famous Jewish comedian, to appear in his play, "The Peddler," led to the misunderstanding that this picture would be released on Art Dramas Program.

This is incorrect. "The Peddler" will be a special production by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, and will have no connection with Art Dramas.

You have probably wondered what the new Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," will be like. Here are a couple of peeps at it along with a little likeness of the bewitching heroine, Pricilla Dean.

New Stars Chosen for Russian Play

Herbert Brenon, who is now making splendid progress on "The Fall of the Romanoffs," a huge portrayal of the overturn of the Czar and his government, now feels that this big state rights production will be completed much sooner than at first anticipated.

Announcement made by Mr. Brenon this week, however, reveals that Iliodor will be in celebrated company in his picture, as Nance O'Neil, one of the country's ablest emotional stars, has been signed to enact the role of the Czarina and that Ekaterina Galanta, the remarkable Russian actress, who recently played in the big spectacular drama, "The Wanderer," likewise has been engaged for a big role.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs," the Russian play being produced by Herbert Brenon.

The selection of Miss O'Neil was made personally by Iliodor, who stopped work in the very midst of a scene to rush over to Miss O'Neil and beg her, speaking in Russian, to honor him by playing the Czarina role in the big picture.

Almost none of the members of Mr. Brenon's actors in "The Fall of the Romanoffs" speak English. Iliodor himself speaks Russian. Therefore all communication that Herbert Brenon holds with him has to be carried on through an interpreter.

Iliodor asserts that Nance O'Neil bears a remarkable resemblance to the ousted Russian Czarina, and so great was his interest in the remarkable American actress that he declined to continue his scenes until she had consented to appear in "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

The grounds of the Herbert Brenon studio have been transformed into a little Russian village which looks like a glimpse of the old world.

Bluebirds Coming

With the schedule fixed until July 16, when "The Greater Law," will be shown, Bluebird directors are busy on the West Coast preparing subsequent issues for that popular series. Dorothy Phillips, in "Fires of Rebellion," and Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon, in "The Car of Chance," will be the July release preceding "The Greater Law."

Dorothy Phillips will be provided with her regular monthly vehicle for August and September. "The Rescue" has just been finished by Ida May Park, with William Stowell and Lon Chaney in their customary stations as Miss Phillips' chief supporters.

Lynn F. Reynolds, having completed "Back to the Primitive," is now at work on "Mr. Opp," in which Neva Gerber will replace Myrtle Gonzalez as leading lady of the Reynolds organization. George Hernandez, the rotund comedian, will continue as the featured one in the Reynolds "nature-study" Bluebirds.

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon have come under a new director, Elmer Clifton, who is now working on "The Fourth Glove." Rupert Julian, who will also co-star with Ruth Clifford, is directing Ruby La Fayette and a selected company in "My Mother," the title role to be played by Miss La Fayette, an actress of the old school who, at the age of seventy-three, is now gaining her first screen experience.

"Little Miss Fix-It" will be used to return Ella Hall to Bluebird, probably late in August.

Anita Stewart Ill

Miss Anita Stewart, the Greater Vitagraph star, is in a sanitarium in Connecticut, suffering from a temporary breakdown in health, and probably will not be able to resume her work for several weeks. Her collapse is due, indirectly, to an attack of typhoid fever which she passed through last summer, but is the direct result of overzealousness on the part of the young actress.

When she began to recuperate from the typhoid attack, Miss Stewart, against the advice of her physician and the wishes of the Vitagraph company, returned to the studio before she had fully recovered her strength and insisted upon resuming her work. Since that time she has done several pictures and on several occasions has been on the point of collapse, but valiantly kept up her work.

In addition to her duties at the studio, Miss Stewart was active in behalf of the Actors' Fund and conducted a booth at the Fair, but when the great benefit event closed she was forced to give in. On the advice of her physician she went to a sanitarium in Connecticut and will remain there until she is thoroughly rested and her health regained.

Power with Marine Film

Tyrone Power has signed a contract with the Marine Film Company of Los Angeles, his signature being obtained by the general manager of the concern, M. Philip Hansen on June first, at one of the biggest salaries ever paid a stage star.

The first feature which Mr. Tyrone Power will appear in is a sea story written by Richard Willis and which is being directed by Henry Otto, the producer who made "Undine," "Mister 44," "The River of Romance," and other successful features.

The feature will be a state right one in six or seven reels.

General Manager M. Philip Hansen is responsible for the statement that the Marine Film Company is pledged to make "Occasional Pictures," in other words, to make features at any time the right stories and opportunities arise, without having any fixed policy. He is himself heavily interested and heads a small syndicate which is financing the proposition.

"THE IMMIGRANT" ARRIVES

Chaplin's Latest Whirlwind of Merriment Said to Be His Best—Star Has Close Call When Tackle Block Falls

Charlie Chaplin's latest comedy "The Immigrant" is one of the cleverest things he has ever done, according to critics who have seen private runs of the new offering in which Charlie has a wide range of opportunity for the display of his fun making genius.

The play is No. 11 of the Mutual-Chaplin series. It leads the comedian through a series of side-splitting episodes, each more amusing than the last, and winds up in a whirlwind of merriment in which the entire company, brought into the melee, takes part. Edna Purviance, the clever young leading woman, whose work has been apparent in previous Chaplin productions, is again to the fore with plenty of fast action to keep her busy from first to last. Miss Purviance, who is the daughter of an immigrant in this latest play,throws tremendous verve into her acting, and is never given a minutes rest by her rapid fire principal.

"The Immigrant" cost more to produce than any previous Chaplin comedy, there being a larger company employed and a far wider range of location. With his usual insistence on complete satisfaction with his work as a preliminary to its release, Mr. Chaplin made and re-made the various scenes of "The Immigrant" time after time, passing on to the next episode only after his final O. K. had been placed on work completed. The result is a play that holds hilarious attention throughout its progress and conveys the unmistakeable impression of Chaplin at his best. Not less than 20,000 feet of film went into the construction of the play, innumerable cuts and re-takes accounting for the heavy consumption of material. The completed film is 2,000 feet.

During the filming of the shipboard scenes, Mr. Chaplin narrowly escaped serious injury through the falling of a heavy tackle block from the rigging overhead, Chaplin having undertaken to haul on the line before the block had been properly secured. The block, which weighed fifty pounds, crashed down on deck within three feet of Charlie's head and the Mutual's $670,000 a year comedian had the closest shave of his adventurous life.

Mr. Chaplin had a hard time arranging for the filming of the ship scene, because it involved keeping a big steam ship "laying off and on," as her captain called it, for nearly two hours. That little stunt cost $1,500, which the polite skipper admitted was exactly what he would have to pay his pilot.

The selection of the widely various types employed in the immigrant mob aboard the boat cost Mr. Chaplin many anxious moments. Every one of the men and women appearing in this scene was chosen by the star from scores of applicants.

Cattle Bashful Before Camera

Bashful cattle are holding up the completion of "The Lady Sheriff," the last Vitagraph feature in which Antonio Moreno worked before severing his connection with that company. One of the big scenes of the picture is a cattle stampede and Director William Wolbert delayed this for the last to be taken.

When he went to make preparations, however, he had trouble finding a cattle raiser willing to permit his herds to be stampeded, but he finally did find one and Wolbert went out to get his scene. He had reckoned without the cattle. They stampeded, all right, but away from the camera. They scattered to the adjacent hills and it was four days before the "critters" were rounded up. Wolbert made two more trials, but the result was the same. The cattle were camera-shy and all the efforts of the cowpunchers to run them in the right direction were futile.

On the last attempt to get the picture the herd stampeded into the hills and at last reports from the coast they had not been rounded up. Until the cattle are caught or a new herd, less modest is found, "The Lady Sheriff" must remain unfinished.

Here's a certain comedian named Charlie and his brother Syd, chinning a bit at Charlie's workshop.

Below is Mr. Chaplin, Edna Purviance, his leading blonde, and John Jasper, studio manager. They were resting a bit during the making of "The Immigrant."

NO TIME TO PASS BUCK

Fichtenberg Says Producers Should Decrease Rental Charges to Exhibitors Rather than Advocate Raise in Admission Prices

HERMAN FICHTENBERG, the New Orleans exhibitor, who is the father of the Paralta Plan of distribution, and chairman of the board of directors of Paralta Plays, Inc., which will release the new Bessie Barriscale and J. Warren Kerrigan productions, is opposed to any proposition to increase prices of admission to moving picture theaters at this time beyond covering any per capita admission war tax the government may impose.

Herman Fichtenberg.

"The moving picture theater," said Mr. Fichtenberg, "is the poor man's amusement. To advocate any increase in prices of admission now, when the cost of living is so high and likely to go higher, is a very bad proposition, especially when there is no actual necessity for it except to keep the burden of a per capita tax on attendance off the already overloaded small exhibitor, should the government require payment of such a tax.

"Instead of advocating increase in prices of admission, producers will do well to find a way to decrease rental charges to exhibitors.

"The exhibitor has a right to live as well as the producer, and many producers in time to come may have cause to regret that they did not give more thought to keeping the little ten and fifteen-cent theaters alive. This is the real velvet of the producing interests. Unfortunately, the number of picture theaters in this class showing a profit is very small indeed.

"The $10 to $20 a week employee, who has learned to seek amusement for himself and his family in a moving picture theater has heard about the salaries equal to kings' incomes paid to the big picture stars, and also about the enormous salaries paid actors, directors and managers, out of all proportion to their legitimate earning capacity. He will immediately meet any proposition to increase prices of admission with the remark that any business that can pay these enormous salaries can find a way within itself to get by the present situation without putting the screw onto the spectator.

"When railroads get into a tight place through extravagance of their officers, mismanagement or hard times, they do not raise fares. They cannot. They cut the salaries of their employees straight down the line and retrench in other ways. This would be a good thing to do in moving picture production and distribution, even though some of the big salaried ones are having to give up some of their earnings through the personal income tax.

"If the moving picture is to continue as the poor man's amusement, the greater part of the exhibition of pictures must continue to be done in the main on a ten cent basis of admission. The moving picture is sustained by the repeated and constant attendance of many people in a comparatively small community—and the people are able to keep up this attendance only because it costs little. Raise the prices from 10 to 15 cents—fifty per cent—and then watch the result.

"The solution of the situation is not higher rentals. It lies in decrease in cost of production and distribution on one hand, and increase in attendance in general on the other. Make fewer productions, and make them better at no higher cost by cutting out "rush" in the making. Work for quality rather than quantity. Three good pictures handled well will produce more money for all concerned than any six of the mediocre things we now see. The poor people who pay ten cents admission will gladly help the government fight the war by paying their per capita tax, if the government demands it, but they will not stand an increase for the very plain purpose of sustaining producers in paying an almost insane standard of salaries to stars and directors and the extravagance and waste at present rampant in this industry—not with potatoes at 9 cents per pound."

Louis L. Arms with Goldwyn

Louis L. Arms, one of the best known of the younger American newspaper men, has joined Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in charge of its editorial offices through which are handled the publicity and newspaper feature exploitation of Goldwyn's famous artists.

Mr. Arms has been dramatic or sports editor of influential daily newspapers in the larger American cities. He has worked on the Hearst staffs in two cities, in Los Angeles and on the New York Journal, where last year he wrote the "Right Cross" column. He has been dramatic and sports editor of both the St. Louis Star and the St. Louis Republic; on the staff or the Elpaso Herald and on the Grand Rapids Herald, in his home city.

Prior to coming to the New York Journal he was on the staff of the New York Tribune in association with that brilliant young writer, Heywood Broun.

The value of his association with Goldwyn lies in the fact that having exercised the judgment and decision of a dramatic editor and emphasized his own abilities as a special writer he will know the news and feature requirements of the theatrical and motion picture departments of the newspapers he will serve with Goldwyn material. He is also an author of vaudeville sketches and short stories for several of the popular magazines.

Anna Little with Metro

Five days after receiving a telegraphic request to come west to appear with Harold Lockwood, Metro star, in "Under Handicap," Anna Little had signed a contract, gathered her wardrobe in Los Angeles by telegrams and special messengers, journeyed from New York to the Quarter Circle V Bar ranch near Prescott, Arizona, and was in make-up and at work in the picture.

H. T. Knapp has been appointed manager of the Dallas, Texas, office of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

I am a constant reader of your department of MOTOGRAPHY and have got some useful information from it and now I want to ask one question myself. I have two Motiograph, motor drive machines and a spot lamp in my booth and am using 60 amps. A. C. through compensarcs on each machine. I have been using this outfit for over two years and the manager of the house has spent less than $10.00 on repairs since the house opened. I have an 86-foot throw and a 10x14-foot picture and am getting good results on the screen.

Now for the trouble. I have a spot lamp and use it once a week when we have amateurs as an added attraction, and for the last few weeks the light has been growing dim and the rheostat gets very warm. The rheostat is located in the base of the lamp stand and is of the wire coil type. I have never noticed it heating up much until just lately. Can you tell me what to do to remedy the light and to keep the rheostat from heating up?—W. F. J., Illinois.

Your trouble is in the rheostat and I think that you will find the coils have begun to deteriorate and are losing their resistance powers. Open the case that encloses the rheostat and examine the coils carefully. See that every connection is tight and that the coils do not touch each other or the frame of the lamp. If the coils touch each other they will cut out some of the resistance of the rheostat and if they touch the frame it will cause a ground or short circuit on the lamp.

After seeing that the coils are clear of each other and the frame, and that all connections are making a good contact with each other, then try out the lamp and if you still have trouble with the light and the rheostat the coils are giving out, and the only way to remedy that trouble is to put in new coils. You can get them from the supply house or by writing direct to the firm that makes the lamp. Before putting in the new coils, take a piece of fine emery cloth and clean off all connections well, in fact, it would be a good idea to loosen all the coils that are in there now and clean the ends of the coils and the contacts. If the rheostat (I do not suppose that it is) is adjustable, be sure that the contacts on the lever and the buttons are clean and making a perfect contact. If you do order new coils, be sure to give the make and the model of the lamp that you want them for.

Has Trouble With Condensers

I am having trouble with the condensers breaking in one of the two machines that I am using. I have two Power's machines and am using about 60 amps. D. C. on the lamps. I have broken four condensers on one machine in the last two days and the manager seems to think it is my fault. The back condenser is the one that breaks. I do not have any trouble with the other machine at all. And it is just lately that I have had any trouble with this one. The condensers fit very loose in both machines and I cannot figure out why they break in one machine and not in the other. Can you tell me what might be the cause of this?—J. J. F., Montana.

Condenser breakage is generally caused from one of two things. A lack of ventilation in the lamp house may be to blame. Or perhaps the condensers fit too tightly in the holder and do not have room enough to expand when heated up. The later machine models have changed the condenser mounts so that the condensers fit in them loosely, and that has been a big improvement over the old style mounts. If your condensers fit loosely, as you say they do, then your trouble is caused through poor ventilation in the lamp house. It may be caused by a draft from an open window or a fan striking the lamp house that causes the condensers to cool too rapidly.

Clean your lamp house thoroughly. Take a stiff brush of some sort and clean all the gauze wire in the top of the lamp house inside and out. I would advise you to have a tinner fit a vent pipe from the top of the lamp house and run the pipe to the main vent pipe of the booth or out to the open air. This vent will allow perfect ventilation of the lamp house and at the same time go a long way toward keeping your booth cooler. If you cannot get the vent pipe installed then I would advise you to open the door on the far side of the lamp house, about 2 inches and put a piece of wire from the knob of the door to the latch so that it will stay open about that distance all the time. This will allow ventilation of the lamp house but is not nearly as good as the vent pipe. If you have the Power's 6B machine then there is a place provided for the vent pipe in the top of the lamp house. But if you have the Power's 6A then the best way to put in the pipe is to remove the top flap of the lamp house and have the tinner make a hood that will fit down about 2 inches below the top. If you use the lamp for stereopticon as well as motion pictures, then have him make the hood wide enough to let the lamp slide across from one to the other. If you have the 6B then he can provide the pipe with a slip joint to take care of the moving of the lamp house.

Another thing that can be used to lessen the breakage of condensers is the improved mounts made for the condensers. Either the Preddy or Elbert holders are very good and will pay for themselves in a short time in what they save in breakage. Either one of them can be installed on any machine and can be ordered through any first-class supply house at a nominal cost. In ordering them do not forget to state what make and model of machine you want them for. They can be installed very easily.

Lemon Now a Paying Proposition

The Alhambra Theater, one of the finest and largest theaters in Indianapolis, Indiana, closed its doors this week and will be closed for eight weeks during which time the house will be remodeled. The contractors on the job are working three shifts of men and expect to have the work completed before the time specified in the contract.

The new house will seat 1,200 people and will have all of the latest improvements. The booth is to be the last word in booth construction and will be equipped with the latest booth equipment. This house was opened several years ago and was never a success until the present owners took charge of it about two years ago. Last year they remodeled it and spent $10,000 on it. Now they find that the business has outgrown the house so they are again enlarging it. This only goes to show and is just one instance of how the picture business may be made a success if handled in a business-like way. The Alhambra is one of four houses operated by Barton and Olson of The Central Amusement Co.

Wants to Know About Lenses

I am a reader of MOTOGRAPHY and would like a little information in regard to changing the length of throw of my picture. We are building a larger house and expect to move into it in about three weeks. Our present throw is 49 feet and we have a 9x12 picture. In the new house we will have an 85-foot throw and would like to use the same size picture. What can be done with the lenses? Can they be regulated to fit the screen at 85 feet or will we have to buy new ones? If we have to have new ones, will you please tell me what size lens it will take for a 9x12 picture at 85 feet?—F. R., Russellville, Indiana.

The only way you could use the present lenses would be to send them back to the manufacturer and have them changed. This will take time and you would not be saving much at that. The lens that you are now using is a 3¾ and the one you will want for the new house will be a 6¼. You can order these through your supply house or direct from the factory. I would advise you to place the order at once so that you will receive them in plenty of time to test them out before you open the new house. You will also have to have a new stero lens, that is, if you use the stero attachment. In buying new lenses do not let a few dollars stand in the way of getting first-class ones. Cheap lenses mean poor projection.

Vitagraph to Release "Caste" in July

Greater Vitagraph, through special negotiations just concluded, has obtained the exclusive film rights for the United States and Canada, to "Caste," the famous satire on English social prejudice. The picture, which is in five reels, features Peggy Hyland and Sir John Hare, England's most famous character actor. It will be put on the Greater Vitagraph program for July and will be released as a Blue Ribbon feature.

In giving "Caste" a place on its program, the Greater Vitagraph organization is following its rule of seeking for its clientele the highest class of plays obtainable, because this drama is probably one of the most famous ever produced on the English speaking stage.

"Caste" is an intensely human play, having for its main theme the argument that filial love counts for more than mere social position. The play is a direct attack on snobbery in England, the home of social pride, and its appeal has won friends among all classes. It was the favorite play of the late King Edward, the royal democrat, and he saw it whenever he had the opportunity.

In the film version of the play, Peggy Hyland is shown in one of the finest portrayals of her career. The role of Esther Eccles, the ballet girl chosen for a wife by one of the greatest aristocrats in England, is an appealing one and gives Miss Hyland an opportunity to display her sweetness to its best advantage.

Sir John Hare, who plays the part of the old vagabond, Eccles, is one of England's most beloved actors, and takes rank with Irving and Tree and the other great artists who have made England's stage history.

In making the picture, the Vitagraph company surrounded Sir John and Miss Hyland with one of the finest casts obtainable in England, and the result is that superb acting is presented. Also, the picture has been staged in lavish fashion and some splendid photography is offered. One of the most effective scenes, perhaps, is a London street, enveloped in the famous pea-soup fog, and this fog atmosphere has been photographed in a remarkable manner.

Triangle Issues Novel Slide

Triangle's supply department is getting out a novel and timely aid to exhibitors in a series of patriotic colored slides, made from original designs.

One of Triangle's new patriotic slides.

They are not only appropriate to the present war situation, but may be used for Fourth of July, Labor Day, Washington's and Lincoln's Birthdays and other national occasions.

The subjects featured in this series of slides were selected from several hundred designs and portray critical events in our history. The American flag is not played up too flamboyantly, but appears only whenever it is an actual part of the picture. The national colors are, however, used as a decorative border in order to give each slide the proper patriotic setting. It will be noted also, that while these slides are exclusively a trade production they do not carry either the Triangle imprint or trademark but are distributed to exhibitors with the purpose of co-operating with them in the work of stimulating patriotic sentiment.

Gratifying results have been obtained by the Master Drama Features, Inc., 1493 Broadway, New York, for their seven reel spectacle production "Who's Your Neighbor?" The production made its debut at a private showing to be held at the Broadway Theater on June 15.

"Who's Your Neighbor?" is a propaganda picture dealing with the segregation of vice in large cities.

JOHN BUNNY IS BACK!

King of Heavy Weight Comedians Reappears on the Screen in Favorite Film Features—Reissued by Vitagraph

Several hundred motion picture exhibitors of the United States have answered in the affirmative and in no uncertain terms the question whether the picture in which a famous comedian was starred, who died some time ago, should be reissued.

The question was asked by Walter W. Irwin, general manager for V. L. S. E., relative to the pictures in which the famous John Bunny was starred, all of which were made by Greater Vitagraph. The suggestion that the pictures be reissued through the Favorite Film Features brand of Greater Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., came from a widely known exhibitor.

Mr. Irwin was in doubt as to the wisdom of such a course, basing his doubt upon the question of good taste, or rather, if the distributing organization could be accused of commercializing the memory of the dead comedian.

The answers received from the exhibitors by Mr. Irwin have dispelled all doubt as to the wisdom of reissuing the pictures, the great majority of the exhibitors taking the stand that the reissuance of the Bunny pictures should be considered as a tribute to the memory of the comedian. They also assert that the fame of John Bunny has been brought down to posterity and many persons, now patrons of motion picture theaters, but not patrons when the Bunny pictures originally were released, would welcome the opportunity to see him on the screen.

Another argument advanced by several exhibitors is that one of the strongest arguments in favor of motion pictures is that they perpetuate the memory of the dead.

As a result of the widespread requests from exhibitors for the Bunny pictures, more than 100 in number, Favorite Film Features will reissue the entire series. They will be re-edited and re-titled but every inch of film showing John Bunny will be preserved intact. In the series such well known stars as Sidney Drew, Mrs. Sidney Drew and Clara Kimball Young appeared with Mr. Bunny.

The Bunny subjects listed for release by Favorite Film Features are:

"He Who Laughs Last," "Doctor Cupid," "Queen for a Day," "Unexpected Review," "The Widow Visits Sprigtown," "Soldiers Three," "The Leading Lady," "The Latent Spark," "In the Arctic Night," "The Subduing of Mrs. Nag," "The Return of Widow Pogson's Husband," "The One Hundred Dollar Bill," "Intrepid Davy," "Captain Barnacle's Baby," "The Wrong Patient," "A Slight Mistake," "Her Crowning Glory," "The Tired, Absent-Minded Man," "Her Hero," "Ups and Downs," "Selecting His Heiress," "Kitty and the Cowboys," "The Gossip," "The Ventriloquist's Trunk," "Vanity Fair," "The Old Doll," "In the Clutches of a Vapor Bath," "The Politician's Dream," "Captain Jenk's Dilemma," "A Sure Cure for Pokeritis," "Captain Barnacke's Messmate," "Chumps," "The First Violin," "Umbrellas to Mend," "Winning Is Losing," "Bunny and the Twins," "Stenographer Wanted," "Irene's Infatuation," "The First Woman Jury in America," "Mr. Bolter's Infatuation," "The Suit of Armor," "An Eventful Elopement," "Captain Jenk's Diplomacy," "At Scrogginses' Corner," "Working for Hubby," "How He Papered the Room," "His Mother-in-Law," "Red Ink Tragedy," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," "Who's to Win," "Diamond Cut Diamond," "Leap Year Proposals," "Pandora's Box," "Chased by Bloodhounds," "Pseudo Sultan," "The Troublesome Stepdaughters," "Her Old Sweetheart," "Bunny's Suicide," "Martha's Rebellion," "A Persistent Lover," "The Awakening of Jones," "Suing Susan," "Bunny and the Dogs," "Lovesick Maidens of Cuddleton," "Two Cinders," "Bachelor Buttons," "Bunny All at Sea," "Bunny at the Derby," "Michael McShane, Matchmaker," "Doctor Bridget," "Who Stole Bunny's Umbrella?" "Freckles," "Mr. Bolter's Niece," "The Three Black Bags," "Ma's Apron Strings," "And His Wife Came Back," "Stenographer Troubles," "A Trap to Catch a Burglar," "The Man Higher Up," "The Locket," "Suspicious Henry," "Pickwick Papers I and II," "Hubby Buys a Baby," "His Honor, the Mayor," "The Wonderful Statue," "The Blarney Stone," "He Answered the Ad," "Bunny's Honeymoon," "The Fortune," "Seeing Double," "There's Music in the Hair," "Bunny Versus Cutey," "Cupid's Hired Man," "Bunny and the Bunny Hug," "Bunny's Birthday Surprise," "Bunny as a Reporter," "His Tired Uncle," "Bunny's Dilemma," "One Good Joke Deserves Another," "Love's Quarantine," "A Millinery Bomb," "Hubby's Toothache," "The Pickpocket," "A Gentleman of Fashion," "When the Press Speaks," "Those Troublesome Tresses," "The Feudists," "Pickwick Papers, Adventures of the Shooting Party," "John Tobin's Sweetheart," "Bunny for the Cause," "The Autocrat of Flapjack Junction," "The Pirates," "Flaming Hearts," "The Schemers," "The Girl at the Lunch Counter," and "The Golf Game and the Bonnet."

"Brass Monkey" Appears

"A Brass Monkey," is the latest Hoyt comedy announced for release by the Selig Polyscope Company in K. E. S. E. service. Charles Hoyt, known as America's most versatile writer of humorous philosophy, never wrote a better play than "A Brass Monkey." The Selig company is said to have retained all the original Hoyt flavor and to have introduced a succession of comedy situations that will cause laughter in any audience.

The story of "A Brass Monkey" has to do with an image taken from a temple in India and later brought to America. The brass monkey proved to be the champion hoodoo and a chapter of accidents occur to anyone possessing it. It is claimed that the comedy has a well defined plot and a large number of amusing situations. Included in the cast are James Harris, Wm. Fables and Amy Dennis. J. A. Richmond is the director.

Eleven Thousand for Wrecks

The Signal Film Corporation in a little over ten months has spent upwards of $11,000 for railroad equipment for staging spectacular wreck scenes in "The Railroad Raiders," the serial featuring Helen Holmes, which is being released through the Mutual Film Corporation. This does not include cars that have been built for wrecking purposes by the technical staff at the studio.

There have been all kinds of wrecks, freight trains have been demolished, Pullman cars have been thrown from the rails and rolled down embankments, warehouses have been destroyed, box cars have been burned, dynamited and thrown into the bay—all to cause thrills for the sensation-loving public.

Copper Freezes to Death

Policemen in the "movies" are generally shown as falling over each other, having a hot chase after a criminal, or making ardent love to the kitchen maid; their role is one of quick, continuous action. But there is a new sort of picture policeman in "Jerry's Getaway," the Cub comedy released through Mutual on June 14. This copper has one of the funniest roles in the comedy but he does not move at all—not even a muscle of his face. He can't, because he hides in the icebox so the man of the house will not know he has been making love to the maid, and he sits so long on a cake of ice that he becomes a statue of frosted ice.

NO GOLF FOR GOFF

Too Busy at Branch Houses Explaining New V. L. S. E. Service About to Be Inaugurated for Fat Man's Pastime

Albert W. Goff, assistant general manager of V. L. S. E. left on June 8, for his regular semi-annual trip, which, before its conclusion, will take in every branch office of the big Blue Ribbon distributing organization.

His trip at this time is for the purpose of explaining to each branch manager personally the exact manner in which every unit of the new service about to be started by V. L. S. E. should be handled.

Two of the units in the extensive service consist of a new series of "Big V" comedies directed by Lawrence Semon and starring James Aubrey, and a series of ten pictures in which "Bobby" Connelly, the regular youngster, is starred, supported by Mabel Ballin.

Three of the new series of "Big V" comedies have been completed, edited and titled. They have been named "Boots and Bones," "Shells and Shivers," and "Boasts and Boulders." There will be seven more of this series of "Big V's" and all will be completed within the next three weeks.

The "Bobby Connelly" series, in which Bobby does the best work of his career of seven years, also will consist of ten pictures. Four or these have been completed. They have been named "Bobby, Director," "Bobby, Philanthropist," "Bobby, Pacifist," and "Bobby's Bravery." The balance of this series will be completed at the rate of one a week as Bobby, Miss Ballin and Director Ruggles are in thorough accord and get through their work very rapidly.

These two series will be released under the regular Blue Ribbon brand and will add two reels a week to the V. L. S. E. service. With the regular five-reel Blue Ribbon weekly release this accounts for seven reels regularly released by V. L. S. E.

But by early in July at the latest V. L. S. E. will be releasing the Favorite Film Features' brand, which, while released through all of the V. L. S. E. branches, will not carry the brand of the Blue Ribbon features. Two of the well remembered series to be released under this brand are the John Bunny and the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies. The greater part of Mr. Goff's time, however, will be devoted to minute discussions of the plans to release Greater Vitagraph's coming serial, "Hearts of Flame." This thriller will be issued under the Blue Ribbon trade mark and will add two more reels to be issued through V. L. S. E. branch exchanges, making a total of twelve reels weekly.

A National Literature in Films

The works of Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Turgenieff, Sinckiewicz, Pushkin, Ostrovsky and Andrieff in filmed form will soon be as familiar to the patrons of American motion picture theaters as they are now familiar in book form to the cultured public of all the European countries. A gigantic campaign has just been started for the popularization of these authors throughout the United States. The better known of their novels are already to be had in public libraries. But a film library of Russian fiction and drama, now being assembled, will interest millions where a written library attracts thousands.

Among the great works to be presented through this medium are Tolstoy's "War and Peace," Sinckiewicz's "The Deluge," Dostoevsky's "Nicholas Stavrogin," Ostrovsky's "The Busy Inn," Pushkin's "The Queen of Spades" and many others. The actual filming was done in Russia, at or near the scenes in the respective stories.

Russia owes the recent overthrow of autocratic government principally to its great writers. Even more important than the playwrights for filming purposes are the novel-writers. It is generally acknowledged that the Slav novelists tower head and shoulder above any other national school, Great Britain and France alone excepted.

The achievements of Count Leo Tolstoy as prophet-reformer and fictionist are well known. Henryk Sinckiewicz is as important to Poland as Tolstoy to Russia. Those who have enjoyed his "Quo Vadis?" in book, film or play will be glad to learn of the picturizing of "The Deluge" and the other members of his famous trilogy of Polish historical novels.

F. M. Dostoevsky, the thrilling portrayer of underworld criminality and Siberian suffering; I. S. Turgenieff, the polished artist of atmospheric realism; A. S. Pushkin, Russia's greatest poet, are represented in the film library by characteristic works. The success of the project hinged on the obtaining of actors of national eminence to play the important personages in the stories, but this was easily managed owing to the war conditions and the consequent general theatrical inactivity.

J. L. & S. Buys "Submarine Eye"

Williamson Brothers have just closed a deal with Jones, Linick & Shaefer of Chicago, whereby the latter concern takes "The Submarine Eye," and after giving it an extended run at the Studebaker Theater, will book it throughout Illinois. The sum involved was a large one.

The Studebaker was the scene of the first triumph of the Williamson Brothers, which four years ago played the production known as the Williamson Submarine Expedition Pictures.

Messrs. Jones, Linick & Shaefer have devised a number of splendid business-getting stunts which they expect will make "The Submarine Eye" a long summer attraction in Chicago.

Cartoons for Educational Film

Harry Palmer leaves the Mutual Program to produce cartoons under his own name, Harry Palmer, Inc. He will release his cartoons every week through the Educational Film Corporation of America. Mr. Palmer was the creator of such well-known comic cartoons as "Babbling Bess," "Twas Ever Thus," "That Elusive Nest Egg," etc. His cartoons graced the pages of the largest daily and Sunday papers in the country for many years. He is a pioneer of animated cartoons—his slogan is "draw pictures that move—not jump."

Mr. Palmer in the past five years has been connected with the General, Kriterion, Paramount and Mutual programs and has probably produced more cartoons for the screen than any other cartoonist.

"Miss Captain Kiddo," the second Baby Marie Osborne picture made by the Lasalida Films, Inc., for the Pathe Exchange, has just been completed.

UNIQUE SERIES IN CHICAGO

"Follies of the Week," Single Reelers Featuring Personages, Being Filmed for Use by American Military Relief Association

There is something new in the film line being created in Chicago.

The Titan Film Corporation, under the supervision of President Frederick Russell Clark, is producing and will distribute a series of unique single-reel pictures to be released in groups and called "Follies of the Week." Each reel treats in a striking and humorous manner some popular fad or sport, such as "Hawaiian stuff," baseball, etc. In each film is appearing a well known figure of the stage or public life. Raymond Hitchcock, Ernest Truex, Charles Grapewin and others have already appeared. Ty Cobb is to be one of the next stars to "work" in the novel series.

The income from the pictures is to be employed by the American Military Relief Association for the purpose of providing for the men in the United States army and camps a number of the comforts which are luxuries to soldiers, such as tobacco, articles of apparel, etc.

The "Follies," in charge of Director Weber, brother of Lois Weber, are being made at the Rothacker Film studio in Chicago. The distributing will be handled through independent exchanges.

Washburn in "Slacker" Feature

A story with a powerful patriotic appeal has been selected for Bryant Washburn's next Essanay feature.

"The Man Who Was Afraid," is the title. It was written by Mary Brecht Pulver, the noted authoress, and published in the Saturday Evening Post last summer. At that time the National Guard was being mobilized for border service. Hinging on the President's call to arms, and portraying a man who was afraid to answer the call, the story caused a sensation. It proved a strong aid in recruiting fighting men.

The screen version has been altered to fit present conditions. However, it has not lost any of the patriotic fervor with which the story was filled. The aim is to make it one of the most rousing stimulants to patriotism ever screened.

"The Man Who Was Afraid," Bryant Washburn's next Essanay feature. It appears July 2 via K. E. S. E.

The story, briefly, is as follows:

Benton Clune (Bryant Washburn), is a mamma's boy. Because she is afraid for him to go to war, he renounces his commission in the National Guard when the President's call comes. His friends spurn him. The girl he loves calls him a "slacker." Lashed to a frenzy by the derision, he hurls his mother from him and goes to fight for his country. Reaching the battle line, he finds his side is losing. The enemy threatens to annihilate it. A volunteer is called to face almost certain death in a perilous attempt to get reinforcements. The men who had spurned young Clune stand back. He steps forward and asks to go. A thrilling ride follows, with a desperate fight with the enemy, but Clune gets through their lines and saves the day. Back home again later he wins redemption and the girl's love.

Fred E. Wright is directing the production. It will have a screen time, approximately, of sixty-five minutes. The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service will release the film July 2.

Are You Booking Open, Too?

The department of your paper "What the Picture Did for Me" I consider a most valuable feature. In fact it has everything else beaten from an exhibitor's point of view, especially if he is booking open, which I am.—Yours very truly, A. B. Arnett, Majestic Theater, Midway, Kentucky.

Unusual Touches in Wharton Pictures

Once upon a time Wilkie Collins, the collaborator of Robert Louis Stevenson, was giving some advice to writers.

"Boys," he said, "always put something into your story that the ordinary person doesn't know, and you'll have a good story. News in stories is just as essential as it is in newspapers."

And that theory is one of the practices which the Whartons are following in the making of their super-features of which "The Great White Trail" was the first. In that picture many of the untold bits of history from the gold rush to the Klondike were told, and so it will be in all future releases.

"We want to put a lot of little touches into every picture that will make the patron glad that he saw the picture because he learned something in addition to being entertained," says Theodore Wharton. "Not that we mean to make a news pictorial of our super-features, or anything like that, but in every picture it is an easy matter to inject into the action an atmosphere which is away from the ordinary and yet which sticks to facts. For instance, in 'The Great White Trail' there was a scene which showed the method which the 'mushers' took to get their heavy packs over the road. This was to carry a part of them up the hill, then slide back to the bottom of the hill like a great crowd of schoolboys—then start their work all over again. It not only made a good bit of action for the picture, but it also told a little story of the gold rush that is not generally known."

Since the Mutual Film Corporation announced that Julia Sanderson had been added to the galaxy of famous stars appearing in Mutual star productions, this actress has received no less than ten letters from actors asking that they be permitted to appear as her leading man.

Capellani Directs New Star

Albert Capellani, recognized as one of the foremost directors of silent drama, has been engaged by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to direct for the Empire All Star Corporation, the productions of Julia Sanderson, the latest of the Charles Frohman stars to be added to Mutual's "Big stars only."

Albert Capellani, directing Julia Sanderson for Empire and Mutual.

The name of Albert Capellani is familiar to every exhibitor in the United States, for it is linked with a series of successful productions extending virtually from the infancy of the industry. He leaves the post of director-general of the Clara Kimball Young corporation to become affiliated with the Mutual organization.

Mr. Capellani's career began in the Paris studios of Pathe where he entered the motion picture business as an assistant cameraman. He became, during his five years with Pathe of Paris, cameraman and director. The following seven years he spent directing feature productions in France, leaving Europe to come to the United States as a director for World. His productions for that company included "Camille," "The Dark Silence," "A Face in the Moonlight," "The Flash of an Emerald" and "The Imposter." When the Clara Kimball Young corporation was organized he was chosen to direct Miss Young in "The Common Law," producing later "The Foolish Virgin."

"I am more than delighted with the prospect of directing Miss Sanderson," said Mr. Capellani in commenting upon his new connection with Mutual. "I have watched Miss Sanderson's stage career with interest. I have long thought her peculiarly well fitted for pictures. With an actress of her ability and with the thoroughly harmonious conditions under which we shall work, I can promise splendid results."

Miss Sanderson has just deserted Broadway to appear before the camera. She enters pictures after an enviable career behind the footlights. One of her biggest successes was with DeWolf Hopper in "Wang" and among her recent hits have been "The Siren" and "The Sunshine Girl."

New Wharton Picture Coming

The next super-feature with which the Whartons intend to follow "The Great White Trail," which has just been finished, is to be filmed largely upon the water. Incidentally it will include many spectacular scenes, one of which will depict the destruction of two pirate vessels of the seventeenth century, while another will be the burning of a present day yacht. The cast is now being engaged for the picture, which will go into active filming very shortly.

Coming Universal

Jack Mulhall, juvenile star, is featured in the Butterfly five-act drama, "The Fire of Youth," which heads the Universal program for the week of June 18.

Mulhall is seen in a role different from any he has heretofore portrayed. As the happy-go-lucky, shiftless son of a millionaire, he wins the sympathies of his audience.

"The Fire of Youth" will be presented Monday, June 18. On the same day will be released "Jilted in Jail," a Nestor comedy featuring that celebrated trio of funmakers, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

The features for Tuesday, June 19, will be the Gold Seal three-act melodrama, "The Brand of Hate," starring Tina Marshall. This production is remarkable for a three-reel subject.

The other Tuesday offering features Pat. Rooney, the eccentric comedian, in the Victor comedy, "A Pirate Bold."

The chief offering for Wednesday, June 20, is the L-KO two-act comedy "Where Is My Che-ild?" with Dan Russell and Gladys Varden in the principal roles. Other releases of this date are the Laemmle drama, "Bartered Youth," and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly.

"Helen Grayson's Strategy," a two-act society drama, will be presented under the Rex brand on Thursday, June 21. Ruth Stonehouse in the Victor comedy, "Puppy Love," is another release of this date.

"She Married Her Husband," a two-reel Victor comedy drama, featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail, is the leading release of Friday, June 22. Issue 24 of the Universal Screen Magazine will also appear on this date.

For Saturday, June 23, the Bison two-act Western drama, "Lone Larry," is the feature.

Issue 6 of Universal Current Events and the Joker comedy, "A Burglar's Bride," with Gale Henry and Jack Dill, are other Saturday releases.

On Sunday, June 24, the releases are the Powers split reel, "Young Nick Carter, Detectiff," a comedy cartoon, and "China's Wonderland," a Dorsey Educational, and the Big U drama, "The Two-Gun Parson," featuring W. C. Dowlan.

During the week the fifteenth episode of "The Voice on the Wire" will be released.

Posters on Boston Common

For the first time in history an advertising poster is being displayed on the historic Boston Common. The advertising poster is the big patriotic twenty-four sheet gotten out by Greater Vitagraph-V. L. S. E., for the purpose of arousing patriotism and at the same time advertising the Greater Vitagraph preparedness picture, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation."

Recruiting in all branches of the service, the army, navy and marine corps, did not come up to expectations in Boston and the authorities sought methods to create more interest. Arrangements were made with Manager Thomas D. Sorerio of the Park Theater, who borrowed several of the big "Womanhood" posters from the Boston V. L. S. E. exchange. One of them was immediately placed on the Common, much to the indignation of some members of the old New England families.

Some of the striking scenes from "Christus," which is now pleasing Broadway.

"CHRISTUS" HITS BROADWAY

Spectacular Feature Meets Approval in First Run on Great White Way—Has Big, Universal Appeal

Before the Broadway run of "Christus" had terminated on June 10 it was announced that the spectacular picturization of the Christ-drama had been booked for an early fall engagement of several weeks' duration in the leading theater of one of the large southern cities.

Meanwhile inquiries have come in from all sections of the country to Historic Features, Inc., owners of the American rights, regarding "Christus." A special trade showing, given at the Criterion Theater on Friday morning of last week, was attended by several hundred state right buyers, exhibitors from New York and many nearby cities, and others connected with the industry.

During the run of nearly 100 performances at the Criterion, the same facts regarding "Christus" were brought out as are said to have evidenced themselves in the presentations at Rome, Paris, and Madrid, before the production was brought to this country—that this superfeature makes its appeal alike to people of all religious sects, and to those of no particular religious leaning. Comment was repeatedly made, in letters received by the management, that apart from its religious value, its artistic, dramatic, historical and educational aspects are such as to make it of value and interest to every patron of the silent drama.

A noteworthy feature of the New York engagement was the attendance of a great number of parties of children and young people, ranging in number from 25 to 100, brought by school and Sunday school teachers, that they might witness in its most graphic form the greatest spiritual event of all time.

Superlative Announces Plans

At a luncheon tendered the trade press recently in the College Room of the Hotel Astor, the policy and plans of the Superlative Pictures Corporation were made known by Maurice F. Tobias, president of the company.

Superlative will release the productions of two companies, the Irving Cummings Pictures, Inc., and the Lois Meredith Pictures, Inc.

Superlative's releases will average twelve during a period of fifteen months. Undesirable types of pictures, such as lurid melodramas and sex plays, will not be among their output. The officers of the companies are as follows: Superlative Pictures Corporation, Maurice F. Tobias, president; Irving Cummings, vice-president; Arthur Blumenkrohn, secretary and treasurer. Irving Cummings Pictures, Inc.: Maurice F. Tobias, president; Irving Cummings, vice-president; Arthur Blumenkrohn, secretary and treasurer. Lois Meredith Pictures, Inc.: Maurice F. Tobias, president, Lois Meredith, vice-president; Arthur Blumenkrohn, secretary and treasurer. Milton Loewenthal, publicity.

Private Showing of "Parentage"

The feature film "Parentage" was recently given a private exhibition at the Rialto, New York. Its enthusiastic reception by a critical audience of prospective state-right buyers and exhibitors is considered a happy augury of the success attending this production. As a study in characterization of parts and masterly grouping of types "Parentage" is interesting from the producers' point of view.

In the treatment of the engrossing subject its title signifies "Parentage" is a welcome departure from the usual. While pointing out in a pleasing and wholesome manner a lesson from which all may learn, it never at any time becomes mawkish or "preachy." The voices of producers, state-right buyers and exhibitors were unanimous in predicting a great future for this feature.

In the picture a fine distinction is drawn between sentiment and sentimentality. Those who saw it were gratified that so strong an appeal could be made without resort to the sensational methods which, in the past, have brought no little odium upon the silent drama from the more intelligent and thoughtful people.

A distinct success again is scored by the child actors in "Parentage" under the tutelage of Mr. Hobart Henley, who wrote the picture and directed it. Lois Alexander and Matty Roubert, the juvenile actors who play opposite each other, are very effective.

The advertising service which goes with the picture, greatly adds to its money-making qualities for the exhibitor. Mr. Frank J. Seng, the well known exhibitor, has learned from long experience the value of effective advertising, and in this service he has given practical expression to his views upon the subject. The obvious fault in much advertising which appears in trade papers he believes he has corrected in the service behind "Parentage." State-right buyers and exhibitors do not have to take anything on trust. Investing in "Parentage" they are given every opportunity to know just exactly what they are buying and have every assurance beforehand that their money is well spent.

It is hoped that the advertising service which goes with "Parentage" will strike a death blow at the old regime of excess in language. Too often exhibitors and state-right buyers have been misled and disappointed by advertised assertions which seem to have been built upon the misapprehension that "nothing succeeds like excess."

Exhibitor Praises Service

Many letters received at the headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation recently praised that organization's policy of co-operation with the exhibitor in the exploitation of its productions. One of the most recent communications of this kind was just received from John Atchison, one of the livest small town exhibitors in the country, whose Palace Theater is constantly playing to capacity business in Skiatook, Oklahoma. Mr. Atchison writes:

I was assistant manager at the Lyric Theater, Tulsa, Oklahoma, for almost four years and have been running this theater for the past three years, and I can truthfully say that I have never had the pleasure of dealing with an organization that took as much interest in and tried to help the exhibitor as much as you do.

Selznick-Pictures to Orient

When D. R. Howells, film exporter, who has done more to introduce American motion pictures to Oriental audiences than any other man, sails from the Pacific coast for the Far East next week, he will be prepared to blaze the trail for Selznick-Pictures in Japan, China, the Dutch Indies, India and the Philippines.

Mr. Howells recently returned to New York from the East and during his stay contracted with Lewis J. Selznick for the exclusive agency in the Oriental countries mentioned above, for the entire Selznick output. Out of the whole field of American productions, Mr. Howells selected Selznick-Pictures and the productions of one other company as best suited to Oriental consumption. In explaining his choice, Mr. Howells said:

To be successful in the East, a picture must be universal in theme, and after looking over the Selznick Pictures produced so far I found them easily adaptable to the understanding of the native spectators in the Oriental picture theater. American producers have neglected the great opportunity offered in the Oriental market. The motion picture is one of the few Western inventions that has taken hold in the Orient. Picture theaters are springing up like mushrooms overnight in all sections of the Eastern countries.

In China, Japan and the Philippines, the subtitles on the films are usually translated into the written language of the country, but in the interior of those nations and in the Dutch Indies, where the natives do not read even their own language, it is customary to place an interpreter beside the screen. This dignitary first familiarizes himself with the scenario, and then keeps up a running narrative as the story unfolds itself on the screen.

The three Selznick-Pictures that Mr. Howells took with him as samples were prints of Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law," Norma Talmadge in "Panthea," and Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case."

Kathleen Clifford Not with Pathe

On the cover of its issue dated June 9, Motography printed a photograph of Kathleen Clifford, with the caption, "with Balboa-Pathe." This should have read merely, "with Balboa." P. A. Parsons, advertising and publicity manager for Pathe, calls our attention to the error. Miss Clifford, he states, appears in no pictures for Pathe, and "The Twisted Thread," in which she is starring for Balboa, is not to be released on the Pathe program.

Exhibitors Favor Vitagraph Plan

Since the announcement by V. L. S. E. of the unit of its service to be known as Favorite Film Features, the brand name under which Greater Vitagraph favorites with all-star casts will be reissued, exhibitors from all over the country have commended the move. Bert Goldman, manager of the Princess and Majestic Theaters, in commendation of the Favorite Film Features, writes:

Just a reminder. Don't overlook the "Reincarnation of Karna," with Rosemary Theby and Courtney Foote; and "He Never Knew," with Anita Stewart and Gladden James. In my opinion and also the opinion of my patrons when I ran them, I believe about three years ago, they were considered the greatest two-reel pictures ever made.

I receive requests for them right this day.

Being the first run exhibitor for your Blue Ribbon Features in St. Paul, I write this thinking a suggestion of this kind would no doubt be appreciated.

They were not listed in your re-issues. I surmise it was an oversight!

How nice either one will fit in to complete the program when I run "Mary Jane's Pa."

Ben H. Loutham, manager of the Majestic Theater, Janesville, Wisconsin, writes:

We note with pleasure that the Vitagraph Company are reissuing not only some of their large features but the shorter ones as well.

In the writer's own personal opinion and in the opinion of dozens of his steady patrons whose judgment he respects, this is one of the best moves the Vitagraph Company has ever made, for the reason that your company has in its vaults hundreds of negatives of subjects that are infinitely better than anything else that is being marketed today, and by issuing the subjects one a week, if possible, you will not only be rendering a distinct service to the exhibitors of the country, but we believe you will find it very profitable, as the first great cost in making the negative is eliminated.

Camels Parade to Cleveland Theater

"The Garden of Allah," Selig's big production, which opened last week at the Hippodrome, Cleveland, Ohio, was accorded a most enthusiastic reception.

Leon D. Netter, head of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, which concern controls the production for Ohio, indicated, in presenting this feature, that he is keenly alive to the necessity for introducing new ideas in exploiting feature photoplays.

Prior to the opening of the picture at the Hippodrome, Mr. Netter arranged a caravan procession through the streets of Cleveland, made up of camels bearing Oriental maidens, Arabs, etc. He carried his ideas into the theater, surrounding it with the atmosphere of the Orient, in keeping with the settings of the photoplay. A special stage setting was arranged showing the sun rising over the calm desert, and revealing the caravan slowly moving across the level stretch of sand.

Then followed the presentation of the picture to the accompaniment of music especially written for it. Throughout the picture one is possessed with a sense of being carried off to the Far East, and not until the end of the production is announced does one realize that it has all been just a beautifully produced and marvelously enacted photoplay.

Artcraft in Tiny Town

Several months ago the Artcraft Pictures Corporation announced with considerable pride that it had put Mullen, Nebraska, "on the map," and justly so. This town has a population of 105 and Artcraft felt it had established a record in the way of showing high-class pictures in such a tiny city. This record, however, has been smashed to smithereens by Artcraft itself, according to a letter from its Kansas City manager, P. C. Wreath, who has closed a contract with the Royal theater, at Royal, Nebraska. The last official census of Royal gave this town a population of twenty-seven people.

In Mr. Wreath's territory there are now twelve towns with a population below the 500 mark showing Artcraft pictures. Included in the list of these twelve towns are four which were not in existence at the time the last census was taken recently. All of which goes to prove that Artcraft caters to the small community as well as the metropolis.

Viola Compton with Goldwyn

Viola Compton, who is playing a character comedy part in Mae Marsh's third Goldwyn picture, comes of the prominent English stage family of Comptons. Henry Compton, the famous comedian, was her grandfather, and Edward Compton, her father, is a well-known actor in England and has identified himself with Old English comedy for the past thirty years. Compton Mackenzie, the novelist, and Frank Compton, actor, last seen in New York in "The Whip," are her brothers and both are serving Great Britain, the former as a captain in an Irish brigade on the French front, and the latter in the diplomatic service.

Nell and Fay Compton, her sisters, are prominent on the London stage, and have been seen in plays on the American stage in recent seasons. Viola Compton herself, came to this country with the late Lawrence Irving, and has played in Shakespearean repertoire. She has appeared in a number of well-known pictures and many comedies.

The first Triangle-Ince play starring Olive Thomas, produced under the direction of Raymond B. West, has just left the cutting room and will shortly be scheduled for release. Her second story is described as a photoplay that will offer a new angle on the small town girl who leaves her country home for the bright lights of a big city.

"SAVE THE NIGHT LIFE"

This Freuler Thinks Should Be Picture Men's Slogan—Warns Exhibitors of Danger in "Set the Clock Ahead" Campaign

"Exhibitors everywhere should fight the 'save an hour of daylight' campaign," warns President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation. He continues:

"Save the night life" should be the slogan of the motion picture business and every other branch of the amusement business.

Matinee business would not suffer from a general adoption of the project to set the clock ahead an hour, but the night business would suffer seriously.This is not guess work; it is certainty. It has been proven, for instance, in Australia, where evening admissions at the motion picture theaters and at the speaking stage shows have fallen off very noticeably since the enforcement of the plan there.

The "save an hour of daylight" movement is now being given attention as a means to greater industrial efficiency in the preparation for war. It may promise something of a saving in certain industries, but this is debatable. It is certain that there are many offsetting disadvantages.

The save-an-hour-of-daylight campaign can only destroy the routine of the city folks, including their habitual patronage of the theaters.

Let us consider the case of Broadway, New York, the so-called amusement capital of the world. Broadway is now doing practically all of its business between the hours of eight o'clock in the evening and one o'clock in the morning. This is a period of five hours. The adoption of the "save an hour of daylight" plan would in effect take one hour off the dark end of this period—one-fifth of the earning hours or twenty per cent. Broadway would not and could not get as much money in admissions by shutting down at what is now midnight. And Broadway tends to set the pace for the nation in amusement.

However, I much doubt any important success for the movement to set the clock ahead. All such artificial steps toward even minor revolutions in society fail or attain merely sporadic successes. We can cite, for example, the spelling reform movement. It has resulted in nothing particularly except a picturesque incongruity in the language as handled in about two publications of national importance.

Hundreds of the most able business men in the country are counseling that we must continue business as usual if crises are to be escaped and production is to continue. This seems to me to be an excellent reason for letting the clock alone.

The picture business will have quite enough to do for the next few months without having to readjust itself to daylight reforms.

Sampliner Case Ends

In the midst of its trial the Sampliner suit against the Motion Picture Patents Company, directors of the General Film Company (Inc.), film manufacturers, and various individuals, collapsed rather dramatically in the United States District Court in New York, June 4. After the plaintiff's witnesses had been heard the defendants at once rested and moved that the case be given to the jury under direction by the court. This was opposed with a like motion by the plaintiff. It yielded immediate and demoralizing results. Judge Julius M. Mayer turned to the jury and declared that the suit had features which seemed champertous and a form of speculation. The jury was directed to return a verdict for the defendant, which was done.

The history of the Sampliner case is unusual. Several years ago the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company at Cleveland, Ohio, had difficulties with the defendants, and claimed it had been injured by restraint of trade in interstate commerce. The company retained Joseph H. Sampliner, an attorney of Cleveland, and he did work for which he made a charge of $5,000. He got no money for his debt, but he took from the Lake Shore Film and Supply Company an assignment of its cause of action. Armed with this assignment he sued the General Film Company in the Federal Court in Cleveland and under it claimed his client had sustained $101,000 damages, the damages to be tripled under the provisions of the Sherman Act. Under the same assignment he sued the Motion Picture Patents Company, etc., in New York, asking $250,000 damages, the damages to be tripled. It was this latter case that he lost the other day. It was such a decisive defeat that it is scarcely believed by the defendants an appeal will be undertaken.

Circus Men Buy "Deemster"

One of the most important state rights deals ever negotiated has just been closed by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, with John B. Warren, part owner of the Haggenback-Wallace Circus, and Fred Clarke, president of the Riverside Show Printing Company of Chicago.

Messrs. Warren and Clarke, in association with their partners in the circus business, the racing world and the United Fairs Booking Association, bought "The Deemster" for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin and straightway opened offices at 64 West Randolph street, Chicago.

The big Hall Caine spectacle starring Derwent Hall Caine, will open an extended engagement at the Colonial Theater, Chicago, Sunday, June 17. No sooner had the contract for "The Deemster" been signed by Messrs. Warren and Clarke and Mr. W. E. Shallenbarger than the great showman telegraphed his man at Peru, Indiana (headquarters of the Haggenback-Wallace Circus), to ship two circus wagons (one band wagon and a Peacock float) to be used in Chicago as perambulators. Daily parades wherein the band wagon will precede the Peacock float loaded with juvenile male voices and an organ, will be a part of the Chicago program. Concerts will be given along the route.

Irving Cummings Starts Work

Irving Cummings and his own company, included in the cast of which are the following: Ruth Sinclair, Arthur Morrison, Roy Applegate, William Cooper, Marie Martin, and Baby Thelma, are now hard at work at Port Henry, N. Y., on the first feature to be released by Superlative Pictures Corporation.

Austin O. Huhn has been selected by Irving Cummings as director. Lewis E. Taylor is cameraman, assisted by Victor McKenzie. The business details are being looked after by Arthur Blumenkrohn.

Russia and U. S. Exchange Films

The Society of Russian Dramatic Authors and Artists has appointed N. S. Kaplan of the Russian Art Films its official representative in this country. He has arranged to present the film plays of Andrieff, Tetmeyer, Pazukhin and other famous living authors in a Broadway theater at a date to coincide with the stay of the Russian commission in New York.

Among the members of the commission are several authors who have contributed to the Kaplan cycle. A cablegram has been received from them thanking the manager for securing their film copyrights at the Library of Congress and expressing the hope that the interchange of art products between America and Russia would be protected and facilitated by a new treaty.

"The Circus of Life"

Little Zoe Rae Plays Star Role in This Butterfly Offering. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is a human interest story which combines thrill and sympathetic appeal. Its characters are real enough to be interesting and the events which revolve around them varied and entertaining. While the characters are of the middle and lower classes, the picture is not an underworld story, exactly, and while there is sorrow and wrong-doing in the play, there are also humorous incidents, and the playing of the child star, Zoe Ray, lightens the story.

Most audiences will take kindly to the offering, especially those in the neighborhood houses. The story progresses smoothly and has been well directed and photographed. The cast of players is a capable one. Besides Zoe Ray, there are Pomeroy Cannon, Elsie Jane Wilson, Harry Carter, Mignon Anderson and Emory Johnson. Rupert Julian directed the play from a story by E. J. Clawson.

The Story: Danny and Mamie are happily married until Danny becomes jealous of Bouvais, an artist and philosopher for whom Mamie poses. Bouvais tries in every way to win Mamie from her husband, but is unsuccessful. Kate and Tommie, a young couple in love with each other, are friends of Danny and Mamie. Tommie is a gambler and loafer and Kate tries to reform him. The brightest influence in the lives of the four is Daisy May, the small daughter of Mamie and Danny. The child tries to straighten out the troubles in the lives of her parents and friends, but is unsuccessful. Then on her birthday, her father takes her for a ride on the brewery wagon he drives. He has been drinking too much and cannot manage his horses. There is a runaway and Daisy May is seriously hurt. Then the four people who love her promise to mend their ways if she is spared to them. Daisy May recovers and they keep their promise.

"A Roadside Impresario"

Five-Part Pallas-Paramount Feature Released June 18. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

IN this latest offering on the Paramount program, George Beban is again seen in a characteristic role. Mr. Beban is well known for his clever and wonderfully human impersonations of the Italian people. He is so sympathetic and natural that he is sure to touch the hearts of all. In "A Roadside Impresario," he plays the part of a roaming Italian musician, who, with his trick bear, performs for the children in the wayside towns, and often does the trick which his faithful Bruno is supposed to do.

Mr. Beban, the author of this story, is surrounded by an excellent cast of players, including Harrison Ford, Fred Huntley, W. A. Carroll, Julia Faye, Adele Farrington and Harry De Vere. The story is clearly told, the photography is excellent, and the settings are effective. As a whole, the production is satisfactory and will please most audiences. Under the direction of Donald Crisp, the feature may be considered up to the Pallas standard.

George Beban, in "A Roadside Impresario," gives a wonderfully human impersonation.

While attempting to rescue a man from an overturned boat, Guiseppe Franchini is picked up by a fishing schooner and is unable to return home for six months. Then he learns that his wife is dead and his little daughter has been taken to America, leaving Bruno, the bear. With the bear he starts to America in search of his baby, and for sixteen years he wanders around the country.

Finally he reaches the town of Monterey. Slade, the editor of a newspaper and also the proprietor of a roadhouse, attempts to ruin Craig Winton, the reform candidate for mayor. Guiseppe saves a little child from being run over; meanwhile his bear wrecks Vandergrift's pet apiary. Bruno is put in jail and Guiseppe is informed that he must furnish a hundred dollars or lose his pet. He secures a job in a restaurant and after the frame-up on Winton, finds a paper that implicates Slade in the plot. He takes the paper to Adelaide Vandergrift, who has befriended him and who is engaged to the young candidate.

Slade is driven out of town. Guiseppe recognizes Vandergrift as the man he pulled from the water years before. When he learns that Adelaide is his own daughter, he is eager to take her in his arms, but realizing her station in life and that he is only a wandering musician, turns away. He is seen on his way to the next town, where he will amuse the little children.

"The Telltale Step"

Shirley Mason in Edison-K. E. S. E. Release of May 28. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

AN UNUSUAL means of identifying a criminal, a blind girl's recognition of the sound of his foot-step, serves as the basis for this detective story and gives the picture its title. The scenes are laid in the Italian district of a large city and the leading characters play Italian roles. Shirley Mason appears as the blind girl. Her work is especially pleasing and she should be featured in advertising the play. Sally Crute and Pat O'Malley have important parts and audiences which liked "The Law of the North" will be interested in these players also.

The picture is entertaining largely because of good acting. The settings and photography are right, but the story is not worked out as clearly as it might be. There are loose ends of plot evident; motives are not always clear and dramatic situations are not forcibly presented. The ending is good, comedy relief following the tragic events in the early part of the play. The picture leaves the patron in the right frame of mind and the average fan will have enjoyed its progress.

The balance of the cast, all clever players, include Bob Huggins, Guido Collucci, Charles Sutton, Nellie Grant, Bigelow Cooper and Jessie Stevens.

The Story: Giovanni Pallazzi and his blind daughter, Lucia, come to America. Pallazzi had once been a member of a criminal "society," and when he tries to free himself from the band, one of their number is appointed to kill him. The blind Lucia was in the room when her father was killed and she insists that she would know the sound of the man's walk. Several

In "The Telltale Shop," the small but charming Shirley Mason is full of fire.

Italians are held for the murder. Luigi, a brutal fellow, succeeds in being appointed Lucia's guardian. He forces the girl, accompanied by his own young son, to play her violin and beg for money. But the man's cruelty is discovered and Lucia wins the interest and protection of a young lawyer. Through this lawyer's efforts, a specialist undertakes an operation on Lucia's eyes and her sight is restored. Later, when the trial is conducted, Lucia, blindfolded, recognizes "the tell-tale step" of one of the men. He confesses his guilt and reveals the fact that Luigi is implicated. Lucia, who for a time had come between the young lawyer and his fiancee, marries Pietro, Luigi's son, and the lawyer marries the girl of his own station.

"A Naked Soul"

Brady-International Service-World Drama in Five Reels. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE two things that stand out most vividly in a person's mind after seeing this picture are the exquisite acting of the lead, Susan Grandaise (seen for the first time in America), and the magnificent artistic production. Both magnify the proportions of the drama, as a story, to a point of greatness of appeal that it would not otherwise have attained and both make an impression on the spectator that at first startles him out of an indifferent, set-for-a-boring-ordeal mood (induced to a great extent by the ordinary, unprepossessing movie-ish title), then has him watching transfixedly the figures on the screen before him, and lastly has him stirred to an uncommon pitch of glowing sympathy.

Well may the exhibitor and his more or less jaded patrons acclaim with joy the advent of Susan Grandaise on American theater screens, for here is a promising gleam on the horizon piercing the colorless clouds of the commonplace. After their first taste it is safe to predict they will besiege the producers for a second production, and it is reassuring to observe that the actress' arrival in this country to act under the personal direction of William A. Brady is heralded as being a reality of the near future. Miss Grandaise is a through-and-through dramatic artist—and that with a big A. She is an actress of the un-selfed type, not mawkishly accentuating personality by resort to the inartistic, and never straying for a moment out of the strict bounds of her portrayal. She is graceful, delicate, winsome. Her very being exhales an aroma of tasteful refinement. Susan Grandaise can act; she can sway an audience and bring it to moistened eyes.

The picture was produced abroad by Louis Mercanton and Rene Hervil, two more gentlemen whose work, along with that of others of their countrymen, seems to make it axiomatic that French directors are past masters in artistic picture mounting. The warm sunshine of "sunny France" fairly radiates to the audience. Leafy grottoes, brooks gleaming in the sunlight, beautiful pastoral shots, etc., all make up the romantic setting, giving immeasurable impetus to the drama's character and sentiment. We don't remember one exterior shot that was ill chosen, in an artistic sense. The photography is excellent. The interior of the goatsherd's hut, with its massive stone fireplace, is an example of painstakingly constructed interiors. The work of the directors in superintending the action is also distinctive. The scenes fall into line in smooth, almost unnoticeable succession and there is little excess action. The members of the cast, including Brenton Marchville, George Treville and Grace Derval, make their characters praiseworthily realistic.

The story, of itself quite in the commonplace class, is lifted well out of this through the magnificent portrayal of the star, aided by her support, and the production. Its development is similar to that of other tales about true lovers whose letters are cruelly intercepted and who are precipitated upon the rocks of sorrow and misfortune. An unhappy ending is affixed by having the heroine die, and this is the only remarkably novel twist in the plot. Though unhappy, this ending is satisfactory, since the tricked hero and prince has contracted a marriage which will be a vital benefit to his country, and the tragic end of his first sweetheart results in less suffering for the majority.

"A Naked Soul" sounds a clarion note in vividly acted, quality entertainment. It ought to relieve inertia in the sale of tickets in any theater that needs such relief. Those who see the afternoon performance will undoubtedly see to it that the evening performance witnesses a capacity house in any community of discriminating theater-goers.

"The Field of Honor"

Butterfly Offers a War Drama on June 11. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE fact that Brand Whitlock, U. S. minister to Belgium, is the author of this story, which is taken from his novel by the same name, may have advertising value for some theaters. The play is laid in Civil War times and contains a large number of beautifully picturized war scenes. In fact, the photography and settings add much to the enjoyment of the picture.

The story has several original twists of plot and a good bit of action. The main situations are well presented. Although the period is that of the Civil War, the theme is of bravery and cowardice and so is timely. Its problem, that of the man who proves cowardly in the battle, can be used as an advertising point which will interest at this time.

Allen Holubar directed the play and has the leading man's role. Louise Lovely is opposite. Others are M. K. Wilson, Sidney Dean, Frankie Lee, Helen Wright and Frank MacQuarrie.

The Story: Laura marries George Baring just before the outbreak of the Civil War. Wade Clayton, who has been in love with Laura, raises a company of volunteers. George Baring joins against his will and because his wife wishes him to do so. He is made an officer through Wade's influence but proves a coward and deserts. He is shot as a deserter but Wade will not let Laura learn the truth and tells her George died a hero. After the war Wade begs Laura to marry him but she declares she will be true to her husband's memory. She has taught her little son to consider his father a great hero.

A number of years later Laura changes her mind and promises to marry Wade. Then just before their marriage, George Baring, who had managed to escape death, returns. When he learns through Wade that he is considered a hero by his wife and son, he refuses to let them know the truth and kills himself rather than destroy their ideal of him.

Rothacker Gives Credit

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, has sent the following communication to MOTOGRAPHY in reference to the production of the feature "S. O. S.," recently produced by the Sunshine Film Corporation in Chicago:

In justice to the Sunshine Film Corporation, to correct false impressions, and to discourage confusing rumors, I wish to make the following statement:

The Sunshine Film Corporation is entitled to full credit for the production of the feature film entitled "S. O. S.," and the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company had nothing to do with this production other than the fact that we rented our studio outright to the Sunshine Film Corporation for several days, during which time the studio was controlled and operated exclusively by the Sunshine Film Corporation, none of our employees being used other than the studio electrician. The Sunshine Film Corporation employed its own director, cameraman, cast, in fact, everything, and the majority of the interior scenes were taken at a studio operated by the American Bioscope Company.

"The Great White Trail"

Seven-Reel Drama Released by Wharton, Inc., State Rights. Reviewed by George W. Graves

"THE Great White Trail" is a virile story of the North marking the entrance of the Whartons into the state rights producing field. The story was written by Leopold D. Wharton and his was also the guiding hand in direction and it can be said emphatically that both these prime requisites of the finished picture have been handled with surpassing and masterly treatment. The story contains human interest of the strongest sort, real, virile and likable characters, thrills, suspense and that great interest sustainer—smooth, uniformly advancing action. In spite of a rather complicated plot with time changes, location changes, etc., every bit of the action is made clear and it is safe to wager that nobody in the audience will be bothering their neighbors for an elucidation of something they "didn't get." With the exception of one or two events happening in the early reels the story is sound as far as conviction is concerned. The picture also has sufficient comedy relief.

When the story-action moves into the far North the audience gets enthusiastic, applauding from time to time at the shots of marvelous beauty across the snowy wastes and the unusual effects of the travelers winding in and out of mountains of snow. Some very unusual and sensational views of fast sledge riding are also impressive. In the opening reels we are shown how, through a weak brother, a devoted husband and wife are estranged, how the wife loses her child, and the husband, finding he was in the wrong, cannot locate either his wife or child. After a lapse of many years Carrington, the husband, learns that his wife, Prudence, is still alive, and that she has gone as a nurse to the Klondike region of Alaska. At the same time the minister who has adopted the child of the separated couple, goes to the same region to preach the gospel. A breathless succession of dramatic events keeps the members of the family, each of whom is now a complete stranger to the other, apart, but they are deftly and touchingly brought together through a series of big climaxes at the end.

Unstinted praise is to be awarded every member of the cast. Doris Kenyon has real opportunities in her big part. Her work is fascinating and convincing. Louise Hoteling, Hans Robert, Edgar Davenport, Paul Gordon, Thomas Holding and Richard Stuart—all the members of the cast, in fact—have caught the spirit of sincerity and conviction that exists throughout the play. But to our mind the most noteworthy and memorable thing about the whole is the direction, and Mr. Wharton certainly deserves a congratulatory hand-shake for this as well as for the excellent scenario. Without any shadow of doubt the picture is a promising state rights proposition.

"The Jaguar's Claws"

Lasky-Paramount Drama in Five Parts Released June 11. Reviewed by George W. Graves.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA has one of the most forceful, virile roles yet to come his way, in this, as a black-souled Mexican bandit who is the terror of his community, taking whatever he sees that he wants and wanting most that he sees, including other men's property, and occasionally their wives. The role requires much more of the star than many of those he has previously interpreted, inasmuch as it is a straight heavy, requiring "hard," forceful acting with a great range of expression. The star proves that he can act a heavy part realistically without the theatrical taint of overdoing it. El Jaguar stands out as something more than a mere movie villain and he is bound to be liked in spite of the fact featured villains do not always register as popular with audiences.

The scenario, by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun (from the story by William M. McCoy and Roswell), tells its story with action aplenty, suspense and engrossed interest, working up to a climax of towering power. The line of continuity unfolds without jars or jumps and augments interest with the passing of every reel. The story is delightfully exciting and definitely, comprehensibly told. Marshall Neilan's direction is worthy of especial praise and this picture certainly figures among the best that he has directed. His was a large part in the unusual, distinctive and realistic telling of the story. Supporting the star is one of the most efficient and appropriately selected band of players that has yet been aggregated in a Paramount offering. The players are Tom Moore, Fritzi Brunette, Marjorie Daw, Tom Forman and Mabel Van Buren.

The first episode of "The Silent Terror," the latest Universal serial, is under production. Marie Walcamp, heroine of "Liberty," plays the featured role.

"The Dazzling Miss Davison"

Marjorie Rambeau in Powell-Mutual Feature of June 18. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is the pleasantest, most enjoyable screen story Marjorie Rambeau has appeared in so far. It has excitement and suspense, but its excitement is the clean, adventurous sort that everybody likes. Suspense is well maintained and the secret of the story is not revealed until the last scene, but events are clear and easily followed. The viewpoint of the audience is that of the leading man and it will be puzzled just as he is.

The production is one of the best examples of a detective story told on the screen. Barring a slight dragginess toward the end, which is counteracted by the surprise finish, there is nothing to find fault with in direction. Acting, settings and photography are satisfactory. The large cast contains a number of well chosen types. Miss Rambeau is always interesting and charming and her name will have drawing power wherever her previous pictures have been shown.

In advertising the picture, the exhibitor must be careful not to spoil the excellence of the ending by revealing the secret in advertising or program story. Instead, he may suggest kleptomania as the explanation, as the story itself does, until the fact that the heroine is a detective, not a crook, is made clear. Since patrons will enjoy the picture most if they see it from the beginning, the exhibitor who is careful of their pleasure will call attention to this fact, letting them know at what time shows begin.

The cast of players includes many who have supported Miss Rambeau in former pictucres. Among the players are Fred Williams, Aubrey Beattie, Agnes Eyre, Robert Elliott, and others.

The Story: Gerard Buckland (Robert Elliott), a young society man, notices on the street one day a pretty girl talking earnestly with a shabby old man. The man gives the girl a diamond necklace.

Later at the home of a friend he is amazed to meet the girl. She is as charming in conversation as in appearance and manner. To entertain her friends she picks their pockets with professional skill, later returning the property with laughter.

Miss Davison appears to be making a very good salary and says she is a designer, but Buckland's suspicions are aroused and he determines to solve the mystery of her employment. He becomes convinced that she is either a kleptomaniac, an accomplice of professional thieves, hypnotized by an elderly man often seen to meet her, or preying on society through her beauty and wit.

Later, Buckland learns that Miss Davison is a member of a house-party in the country with a disreputable set. He succeeds in gaining admission to the party. There is much gambling among the guests and a quarrel arises which results in the calling of the police. The hosts and most of the guests are found to have police records. Buckland expects to learn that Miss Davison is one of their number, but instead the detectives compliment her on her work in tracing these internationally famed crooks—for the dazzling Miss Davison is the best woman detective in the country.

"The Spirit of '76"

A Twelve-Reel Historical Drama by Robert Goldstein —Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THE dramatic value of American historical events and the powerful way in which the screen may present them, educating its audiences and enkindling patriotism, is one obvious conclusion to be drawn from this production. That the producers have not made the best use of their opportunity in this is equally obvious. The offering, because of its timeliness and also because of much publicity given it by the objections of the Chicago censor board, drew a large and interested audience at its first presentation at Orchestra Hall, Chicago.

The early part of the production is, especially at this time, unusually interesting. The applause which greeted the picturization of Paul Revere's ride, the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the ringing of the Liberty Bell was spontaneous and the audience was genuinely stirred. But the story of Catherine Montour, which becomes the main thread of the plot, is unfamiliar to the average person and, questions of historical accuracy waived, it is unconvincing. Adda Gleason, who plays Catherine, is a capable actress, but she fails to make the character real.

The play, as given in Chicago, is in twelve reels. Additional cutting would improve the production. The action is rather jerky, but some of this may be due to the work of the censor's shears.

To sum up, the picture contains a number of splendid moments and a great deal of narrative neither convincing nor interesting. The photography and tinting is fine throughout. Many of the sets are elaborate. A few are repeated rather too many times in the last part. The picture gives opportunity for elaborate patriotic display. Judging from the comments by the audience, the significance of the play at the present time was keenly felt. While the appeal is a patriotic one, no feeling of resentment is aroused against any of our present allies. The objections of the censor board arose, we understand, through fear that the picture might cause a feeling of resentment against England. As now presented, there is not the slightest danger of its so doing. Instead, it will give many people a clearer idea of the necessity of the present conflict.

The work of Adda Gleason as Catherine Montour stands out above the rest of the cast. Others among the players are Doris Pawn, Jane Novak, Howard Gaye, Jack Cosgrove, Norval MacGregor, William Colby, Lottie Cruez, William Freeman, Ben Lewis, William Lawrence and William Beery. The plot of the story as presented follows.

The Story: The romance between King George Third of England and a Quaker girl, Catherine, who becomes his morganatic wife, forms the early part of the story. This girl is really half Indian, being the daughter of a French adventurer and an Indian woman, adopted and brought to England by a Quaker voyager. The hardships of the American colonists are shown and their rebellion against the English rule. In this rebellion, Catherine sees a chance to avenge herself upon the king, who has legally married a German princess. She goes to America and becomes a power over a tribe of Indians. One of her aids is her own brother, who had been adopted by a colonist. Brother and sister are unaware of the relationship until the close of the story.

The gallant fight which the Americans under General Washington wage against the English troops and the Indians under Catherine's lead, form a thrilling phase of the story and the chief incidents with which every American is familiar are dramatically set forth. In addition, there are several minor plots and romances, some of which end happily, others tragically, when the war is over and the fight for freedom won.

Helen Gibson, working under the direction of Universal Producer J. D. Davis, has completed in two reels a thrilling railway drama, "Mettle and Metal."

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

Marguerite Clark, having completed her next Famous Players-Paramount picture, has retired to her home in Rye, N. Y., for a short rest, which will be chiefly spent in knitting wristlets and sleeveless sweaters for the sailors.

In the July number of Vanity Fair is a portrait of Naomi Childers, the Art Drama's star. The caption under the photograph reads: "A. Rosetti, Burne-Jones, Pre-Raphaelite type of beauty, whose success in pictures, however, is due to her possession of something more than mere good looks.

Marian Swayne, who is featured in Art Drama pictures, is not a sister of Julia Swayne Gordon, the Vitagraph actress. Miss Swayne has no sisters.

Mollie King, heroine of "The Double Cross," and star of many Pathe pictures, was born in New York City April 18, 1898. She made her first appearance at the age of eight months and has been on the stage ever since. She played in several Broadway successes and was a feature at the Winter Garden after a two-year tour of the Orpheum Vaudeville Circuit, where she and her sister Nellie did a "sister act." Miss King comes from a theatrical family. Her brother, Charles King, is known throughout the world as a member of the famous team of Brice and King, and her sister Nellie is a vaudeville artist.

Kathlyn Williams, Donald Crisp and George Beban may be seen with their heads together in the far corner of the Morosco studio at almost any hour of the day. It is not a matter for the secret service to investigate—they are merely collaborating on the preparation of George Beban's next production, which was written by Miss Williams.

Robert G. Vignola, who is ordinarily considered to be one of the best natured and most thoroughly amicable directors in the business, is preparing to burn Pauline Frederick alive. Of course, these preparations are all at the instance of the scenario writer, Scudder Middleton, who is the author of the photoplay. Complete plans for the incineration of Miss Frederick have not been perfected, but the method will be announced shortly.

Albert Parker, director of the Triangle play, "The Food Gamblers," has a strong belief in realism which he puts into practice in making this production. In a big scene laid in a state senate chamber he has no less person than Frank Ward O'Malley, special writer for the New York Sun, and one of the best known newspaper men in the city, seated at the reporter's table. This is O'Malley's debut in moving pictures, but being a reporter in a picture is so much easier than in real life, that he is seriously considering touching Parker for a permanent job.

Allan Dwan, supervisor of the eastern studio of the Triangle Film Company, says he has his best results from makeup on an anemic complexion, and since he made that public announcement, a line of sallow, colorless, unhealthy but otherwise beautiful maidens have swarmed at the gateway of the Yonkers studio to qualify for a job as star de luxe.

William Russell Married

Santa Anna, California.—Married—William Russell and Charlotte Burton.

This little announcement sprung a surprise in the film colony of the Western

William Russell and his leading lady—that is she led him to the altar and they're married now. If you'd like to borrow this cut just say the word to "MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago."

coast, and consummated a romance of two years' duration.

It was a film romance pure and simple, which started at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, and two people who have often been seen making screen love found it impossible not to make real love.

Charlotte Burton joined the forces of the American-Mutual studios about five years ago, but it was not until two years ago that William Russell was especially engaged for an important role in the American-Mutual serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," and Miss Burton was chosen to play opposite him. It was while they were portraying the roles of the arch villain and villainess of this famous serial that the more personal feeling began to creep into their work. Last winter Miss Burton severed her connections with the American Company and came east. But she returned to take the little side trip to Santa Anna which resulted in her becoming Mrs. William Russell.

Douglas Fairbanks recently gave a swimming party in Los Angeles to celebrate the completion of his new swimming pool. Many innovations in bathing suits were introduced by the invited guests, which included Mary Pickford, John Emerson, Eileen Percy, Same de Grasse, Mrs. Pickford, Ted Hemmer, John Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Bull Montana, Anita Loos, Joseph Henaberry, Florence E. Gribbon, James Hogan, Ruth Allen and Victor Fleming. Mary Pickford's bathing suit was of a futuristic style, including a long cape, which was Fairbanks' reason for asking if she was on her way to the opera, instead of a swimming party. The guests all remained for dinner and then motored down to Clune's Auditorium to attend a performance of Fairbank's first Artcraft picture, "In Again—Out Again." Mr. Clune, owner of Clune's Auditorium, reserved three special loges for the Fairbanks party and after the Artcraft film had been projected, turned the spot light on the celebrities. Fairbanks responded to the many cries for "speech," after a flattering introduction by Mr. Clune.

Thelma Salter, Georgie Stone and the Ince-Triangle kiddies, accompanied by scores of "extra" children, have been filming fairyland scenes in the San Fernando mountains, under the direction of Irvin Willat. The trip was considered, by the children, a "regular picnic" and they all had the time of their young lives.

The International News Service reports the arrival of Ruth McCord, the Ince-Triangle Girl, who is motorcycling to the four corners of the United States, in San Francisco. Miss McCord was met outside the city limits by several motorcycle clubs and escorted to the Palace Hotel, where a luncheon was given in her honor.

Mary Pickford has donated to the local Red Cross of Los Angeles the ambulance which plays an important part in her new Artcraft picture, "The Little American." The vehicle of mercy was specially built for the Pickford picture and was designed by a surgeon connected with the American ambulance corps. It will doubtless see service in France shortly.

Douglas Fairbanks has in his possession a wallet, found on a German battlefield, recently presented to him by a newspaper correspondent.

Frank Borzage, the well-known leading man and director, has returned to the Ince-Triangle fold after an absence of about two years, during which time he has acted as director and played his own "leads" at the American studios. Borzage will be remembered by Triangle patrons for his characterizations in "The Typhoon," "The Wrath of the Gods," and "The Cup of Life." He will make his first appearance opposite Bessie Love in her second Ince-Triangle play, by J. G. Hawks, under the direction of Charles Miller.

Anna Little, who will be remembered for her role in many American-Mutual western pictures, is to be Harold Lockwood's new leading lady, taking the place of May Allison, who resigned from the Metro Company. Miss Little, who has been living in New York for a number of months, will return to Hollywood.

George Periolat is one of the American Company's stand-bys. Despite offers made him from time to time he prefers to stay where he is and avers he could not be treated as well anywhere else. Besides, it would take a month or so to dismantle his sitting room; it is filled with rare curios and furnishings, and all those things which go for good taste and comfort.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

Mutual Pictures

A Desperate Deed—(Two Reels)—Chapter 11 of Railroad Raiders—June 18.—Helen Holmes featured. When Helen regains consciousness after the blow dealt her by the raiders she finds herself in a box car which is rapidly filling with water. She has tried every means of getting out and has about given up the quest when a tug smashes into the car and cuts it in two. Managing to climb up on the roof she signals the crew of the tug and they take her on board. Still pursuing the raiders, Helen urges the owner of the tug to try to beat the local freight to the bridge where she can board. They make the bridge just as it opens up. Helen jumps from the top of the pilot house and grasps the lower beams of the bridge, working her way up. When the bridge closes down for the local Helen jumps to the top of the train. The crew assists her in chasing the raiders, but they uncouple the last car and escape. They jump a passing passenger train, and Helen turns the nearest switch, just in time to send the passenger into a siding and stop it.

A Sheep Among the Wolves—(Two Reels)—Fourteenth Episode of Jimmy Dale Series—June 22.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. The story opens showing the underworld maddened with the thoughts of the Grey Seal. Travers, Marie La Salle's lawyer, and for the time being her chauffeur, receives papers from Australia that will convict the Pretender and the Woman in Black. The Pretender is informed of the arrival of the documents, and plans to trail Travers and secure the papers. The Tocsin instructs Jimmy Dale to meet and return by her chauffeur, the ring which she dropped in his car. Jimmy obeys. The taxi which meets him and takes him in, is in a collision. The driver whispers just before the accident a few words which are meaningless to Jimmy Dale. On regaining consciousness, Jimmy Dale finds himself in a library. When he bids the host adieu and starts to leave, he is detained. They show him the ring found on Travers, and demand the paper and other information regarding the owner of the ring. Jimmie claims to know nothing about it. The Pretender uses desperate measures to obtain this information, shows Travers dead in the adjoining room, and threatens Jimmie with a similar fate unless he gives the desired information. Jimmie says it is impossible, and the Pretender, believing this, allows him to depart.

Tillie of the Nine Lives—(One Reel)—June 19.—The villain, greedy for more wealth, consults a noted seeress, who in a vision shows him a treasure chest guarded only by a single country maiden. Together they go to search for this treasure and find the country girl in Tillie. The seeress hypnotizes Tillie, who with her pet pig in her arms, is carried away to an old barn loft which serves as a temple for unholy rites. They torture Tillie in an attempt to make her tell where the treasure is hidden. Tillie manages to dispatch the pig with a message to her sweetheart tied to its tail, saying, "I am in the hands of a hypnotist—save me." The pig delivers the message to Tillie's sweetheart and then guides him to her prison, where he arrives just in time to save her life.

Jerry's Red Hot Trail—(One Reel)—June 21.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry is "in bad" with a sheriff of a western town and is ordered put off the country. Jerry puts an outlaw to flight who is holding up a wealthy man, his wife and daughter, and is invited to ride with them. Later the bandit captures them, takes Jerry and the girl prisoners, and orders the chauffeur to drive on with the parents. That night Jerry has a lurid dream in which Indians are torturing him when the girl comes to the rescue and throwing herself before him is shot and killed. He is glad to wake up and find it all a dream. The next day Jerry and the girl are rescued by the sheriff. Jerry is hailed as a hero, is congratulated by the sheriff and wins a wealthy father-in-law.

China's Wonderland—(Split Reel)—Powers—June 24.—With Dr. Dorsey. Along the river front of Shanghai, which is the most commercial city in the Far East, we see some of the million population, forty thousand of which are Japanese. The Chinese are among the shrewdest traders of the world. Canton, the next view, is the oriental Venice. People here are born, live and die in boats. The ports of China are well protected. At the end of the reel we see the water sports at Singapore. On the same reel is:

Young Nick Carter, Detectiff—(Split Reel).—Young Nick Carter determines to become a detectiff. He is going to be the real thing. He has a dog which he calls his sleuth hound. They trace the desperate desperado to his lair, but fail to get him. They have so many exciting adventures in his pursuit that they determine to give up the profession of detectiff after all. On the same reel with "China's Wonderland."

The Living Death—Episode No. 15 of The Voice on the Wire—June 18.—With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. Shirley and Polly, fascinated, watch the disembodied hand writing. The hand writes that he was a member of the "Black Seven," a psychical and scientific research body of Paris. Five of these men were the five victims of the "Voice," the sixth was Renolds, and the seventh was Emil Laroux. Laroux was positive that he could recall a soul at will and called his new experiment "The Living Death." The story goes on to relate how Laroux was found dead. In his hand was clenched a confession of his insanity and of his mummifying Renolds' wife's living body and sending her to the "Black Seven" to prove his theory of "The Living Death." Renolds was bitten by a poisonous snake and his servant cut off his hand to save his life. Later a human arm was grafted to Renolds' body and he found that when his astral body was projected the hand was the only thing visible. He had means of revenge, but waited seventeen years for his son's aid, killed all the "Black Seven," one by one. Renolds never found the mummy of his wife's "Living Death." He had killed his own son, "Red" Warren. Renolds fires into his own body and falls. Shirley tells Cronin that the "Voice" is dead, and to bury the confession with his son—"Red" Warren.

Where Is My Che-ild?—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—June 20.—With Dan Russell, Mrs. Moore and Gladys Varden. Mr. Weazelbiffer is henpecked at home, but at his office he is boss. He has a neat arrangement for getting rid of inconvenient people. They sit in a certain chair and are shot through the wall and into a pool of water. The Gilspev household is just the opposite; Hubby does all the work and Wife flirts. Gladys flirts with Weazelbiffer. Gladys' husband takes the baby and goes to Dan's, saying, "You took my wife, now take my baby." Dan hides the child in all sorts of places, finally in the stove. The cleaner hides it again. At last the dog finds the baby for them. The cleaner turns out to be Weazelbiffer's bookkeeper and declares himself revenged.

Helen Grayson's Strategy—(Two Reels)—Rex—June 21.—With Irene Hunt, Malcom Blevins and L. C. Shumway. Helen Grayson had thought herself in love with Lloyd Bayless until it came to the point of leaving her husband. Bayless attempts to compel her to keep her promise, but she is firm and says that she will remain. Grayson, returning, discovers that his wife was about to leave with Bayless. He tells her that he is going to shoot him. Grayson, while examining a revolver in his own office, accidentally wounds himself and he is taken home. Bayless goes to Helen and tells her that she will go with him or he will kill Grayson. She pretends that she will and he embraces her. At that moment she takes a necklace from her neck and drops it into his pocket. She calls for help and a policeman comes to her aid. Bayless attempts to kill the policeman, but the man shoots first, killing Bayless. Grayson never knew of the real tragedy that was enacted in his own house.

Lone Larry—Released Week of June 18.—With Charles Dorian, Percy Pembrook, Kingsley Benedict, William Dyer and Leonard Clapham. Jack Homer, upon arriving in the Western town, is taken for "Lone" Larry, an outlaw. Kitty, the foreman's daughter, does not believe it. Many thrilling incidents take place. Jack is about to be lynched, when his friend, Cressy, arrives and identifies him. Kitty and Jack find happiness in each other.

She Married Her Husband—(Two Reels)—Victor—June 22.—With Jane Gail and Matt Moore. Matt falls in love with Jane, but the girl's mother fancies Lord Fauntleroy for her husband. The couple elope and are hastily married. The parents have the marriage publicly annulled. Matt is in despair, but is cheered by a message from Mrs. Van Emery asking him to give a seance in her home in Tuxedo. By mistake he enters the De Puysters', where he is held up by mother. She forces him to remain in the house as butler until her daughter is married to Lord Fauntleroy. Jane and Matt succeed in being married over again, and Mrs. De Puyster is reconciled when she learns that Matt is not a Hindu Swami.

The Light of Dawn—Episode No. 14 of The Voice on the Wire.—With Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber. Shirley and Polly are still in the home of the professor. The door opens and closes, but no one appears. The "Hand" fires simultaneously as Shirley fires, and Red, just starting to open the window, is hit by the bullet from the "Hand." Red is carried into the house, where it is found that he cannot live long. "Red" refuses to say anything and dies. Shirley answers the 'phone to hear the "Voice" say that he, Shirley, has waited long, but at twilight he shall know the truth. At twilight they see the "Hand" hovering over a pile of papers. The Voice says, "On this paper will be written the truth."

The Honor of Men—(Two Reels)—Bison—June 14.—With Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. The story opens with two men, Dick and Jerry Hatton, struggling in a cabin. Dick leaves Jerry bound to a chair. That same night Dick holds up a rancher and in the fight that follows wounds him. The rancher notifies the sheriff, saying that he recognized the man to be Jerry Hatton. Jerry is captured by the posse and taken to jail. Janice Mercer, the school teacher, who is in love with Jerry, helps him to escape. His escape is discovered and a search is made. Dick is shot and killed by the posse, who mistake him for Jerry. Jerry clears up the mystery by explaining that Dick was his brother whom he had sent for in the hope that he could make him go straight. Janice is delighted at the outcome of affairs and Jerry embraces her as the picture fades.

A Burglar's Bride—Joker—June 23.—With Gale Henry and Jack Dill. Esmeralda is the maid of all work at the Buffem's. Her ideal is a burglar. When she catches a burglar breaking into the house, she persuades him to stay and marry her. He does so to avoid the police. He thinks she is the lady of the house. When the master and mistress return, he finds his mistake and makes a bolt for freedom. Esmeralda pursues with her marriage certificate. At last, rather than go to jail, he accepts life as her husband.

A Pirate Bold—Victor—June 19.—With Pat Rooney, Kewpie Morgan, Mary Haines and Julia Rooney. The Pirate Chief and his flunky are marooned and cast ashore on a cannibal island. The flunky is caught and made king by the elderly queen. The Chief and the councillor conspire together and the flunky is caught. The Chief is discovered and is given his choice of death or of marrying the queen. When he refuses he is put into the pot. Dynamite blows it up and the Chief lands in the flunky's boat. Everything is just as it was before.

The Two-Gun Parson—Big U—June 24.—The Parson of Bear Ridge befriended Louise and helped her take home her drunken father. When the people interfered the parson showed them two guns, and declared that he was going to stay. Slim, one of the disaffected, set out to prove that the parson was yellow. He writes a note and puts it in the parson's coat, but Louise sees him do it. Then Slim informs the sheriff that the parson is nothing more than a horse thief, and that he can prove it. They gather around the parson and demand the letter in his coat. Louise hands it to them, telling the sheriff how she saw Slim put it in the parson's pocket. Slim's plan recoils upon himself.

Bartered Youth—Laemmle—June 20.—With William V. Mong, Gretchen Lederer, Millard K. Wilson and Molly Malone. John Gallagher, a wealthy retired statesman, has married a woman much younger than himself. Mrs. Gallagher is in love with young Wilbur James. When Gallagher learns that his wife wishes to be free, he tells her to make arrangements for a divorce as he is leaving for Europe. Meanwhile, James has met Dorothy Whiloby, the girl of his dreams. He makes up his mind to break all relations with Mrs. Gallagher. That night at a dance, Mrs. Gallagher sees the two lovers gazing tenderly at each other, and she reads her own doom in their eyes. Heartsick and miserable, she returns to her home, where she tells her husband that as she sold her youth to him, she is still his if he wants her. He looks at her coldly, measuring her with steel-like eyes, that were once so full of love for her.

Puppy Love—Victor—June 21.—With Ruth Stonehouse, Dave Kershaw and Lydia Titus. Jimmy takes the tickets at the picture theater and Ann is in love with him. Her mother tells her it is "puppy love," and she cries. On the other hand, Jimmy is crazy about a spoiled, pretty girl who scorns him because he has no money. Ann buys some pretty clothes and goes out on conquest bent. Jimmy, longing for money to treat the pretty girl, sees Mrs. Kelly drop her purse. His first impulse is to return it, but he stuffs it in his pocket instead. Mrs. Kelly tells O'Brien to arrest him, but Ann interferes. She says that it is all the fault of the "vampire," and that Jimmy is the man she loves. O'Brien lets him off.

Jilted in Jail—NESTOR—JUNE 18.—With Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts, Lee Moran and Fred Gamble. Sam loves Kitty, but her father, the Chief, wants her to marry William, his assistant. The police are unsuccessful in arresting a crook who does business as a minister. Sam and Kitty plan an elopement. She is to dress in boy's clothes, and he will have the minister waiting. Kitty is arrested by William, and when Sam arrives with the minister they are arrested, too. They are all put in a cell together, the marriage has taken place, when William brings the Chief to see his capture. Of course, that is the end of William.

Universal Screen Magazine—ISSUE No. 24.—JUNE 22.—The manufacture of coke, by the beehive process, is shown in a plant near Pittsburgh. Mrs. A. Louise Andrea demonstrates time savers in the modern kitchen. A new invention is bullet-proof armor, just tested, which by the distribution of the shock of impact, abolishes all danger of dislocated joints when the bullets hit. This may revolutionize modern warfare. A physical culture lecture is given by Irma Rivers, assisted by Will Bingham. This lady is a jiu-jitsu expert, and demonstrates how women may acquire this most effective method of self-defense. A sculpture in clay, by Willie Hopkins, inventor of the animated clay cartoon, called "What Will Baby Be?" ends the reel.

The Fire of Youth—BUTTERFLY—JUNE 18.—With Jack Mulhall and Donna Moon. Jimmy Gordon is sent to Calabas Island, by his father, who suspect the foreman of double dealing. He says a hurried good-bye to Lucy, his sweetheart. At the island, Jasper Sneedham, with the assistance of McCool and his native servant, Juan, has been systematically cheating the company. The only honest person is the foreman, Haimer. Jasper has a step-daughter, Nadine, who is as pretty as a nymph. Jimmy has a thrilling experience on the island, but is successful in causing the arrest of the thieves. He also saves Nadine from a horrible death. Jimmy, with Nadine, returns to the mainland. The girl waits outside while he makes his report to his father. The old man is delighted, but says that he has bad news for Jimmy. Lucy has eloped with Wyndham. Jimmy is tickled to death with the news and brings in his "real girl," Nadine, whom old Gordon receives with affection.

Cristie Comedies

A Bold, Bad Knight—(ONE REEL)—JUNE 18.—Father thinks no rich man's son is a proper husband for his daughter, so he forbids Betty to see Neal. They had a date for the masquerade ball that night, so Betty tells Neal that she will describe his cavalier costume to the cook, who will let him in at the back. But "Slim" Dorgan, crook, overhears this. When he goes to get his costume, Neal sees an old suit of armor outside the shop and the man tells him it is left outside all the time. Betty and Neal get ready for the ball, but as Neal is on his way to Betty's he is waylaid by "Slim" and a pal, who take from him the cavalier costume. "Slim" puts it on and starts for Betty's. Neal thinks of the suit of armor, goes and put it on. At Betty's, Officer Griffo is making love to the cook, Stella. The costume gets "Slim" in and he finds Father counting his money. Neal arrives and catches the pal, watching outside. The crook shoots at Neal, but the bullets have no effect on his armor and the crook runs away. Inside, "Slim" and Father are fighting and Father is knocked out.

Neal tries to get in but is refused admission. Betty has come down and "Slim" attacks her. The pal comes back to warn "Slim" and is captured by Griffo. Neal has gotten in and engaged in battle with "Slim." Neal bests him and saves Betty just as Father comes to. Griffo takes the crooks and Father decides that Neal will make a good son-in-law, after all.

The Yellow Umbrella—DO CHILDREN COUNT SERIES—(SCREEN TIME 25 MINS.)—ESSANAY—JUNE 27.—Starring Little Mary McAlister. It was years ago that Jeremiah Crozier and Margaret Kenly quarreled over the civil war. They never spoke to each other afterward—that is, not until Dot Hazelton, Margaret's niece, hears the story. Straightway, Dot hunts up Jeremiah, wins his friendship and invites him to call on her. Jeremiah, not knowing Dot's real identity, but loving children, calls to play with the child. Margaret is there. With childish simplicity, Dot leads Jeremiah to Margaret and places his hand in hers. Her smile of childish love for both, wipes out the old quarrel and seals their union. The marriage is celebrated by the burning of the yellow umbrella which Jeremiah has carried ever since his quarrel with Margaret, as a symbol of his hatred of all women.

When Baby Forgot—(FIVE REELS)—JUNE 24.—Featuring Baby Marie Osborne. The little family of three is very happy until the God of Money ordains that the father shall devote his life to the pursuit of gold. Society swallows up the mother while the husband is buried in his work. Baby is forgotten. The result is a separation and baby goes with her father. The loss of the child is torture for her mother.

The baby tries to remember a prayer her mother taught her. She calls upon the different pastors of the city with the plea that they give her a start on her prayer, but no one can help. The child becomes ill. Then the faithful butler seeks out someone to give the baby the first line of the prayer. No one can until he finds Marie's mother. The mother dashes to the child, whispers the opening lines of the little prayer and a double miracle is wrought: The baby regains her health and husband and wife are reunited.

Commuting—KLEVER COMEDIES—(ONE REEL)—JUNE 18.—When Vic is comfortably settled in the bungalow he makes his first trip to town by train. Although they hold him the station was only a stone's throw from the bungalow, he wonders what kind of a fellow threw the stone. Arrived at the station the train has gone and there is no other until the next day at the same time. He "hoofs" it to town, and five hours later arrives at the office. It is closed because it is Saturday and there is a half holiday.

His wife has given him a long list of shopping and he decides to purchase the things and get back home. When he has his arms full of bundles he goes to the station to find that the next train leaves at 7:30 that night. Going through the yards he sees two men with a hand car going towards his home. He persuades them to take him on, but loses half the bundles and both the men before he gets home. At Bentwood, the car leaves the track and goes dashing up the hill. Before Vic can stop it, it crashes into the bungalow, upsetting the range and setting the house on fire. It burns to the ground and nothing is saved. Vic remarks to his wife that it is some joke on the agent.

A Roadside Impresario—(FIVE REELS)—JUNE 18.—Starring House Peters. Guiseppe Franchini, a fisherman on the coast of Italy, in attempting to rescue a man from an overturned boat, is picked up by a fishing schooner and is unable to return home until six months later, when he learns that his wife and baby have let for America, leaving Bruno, the bear. Guiseppe and Bruno go to America and for sixteen years they wander around the country, Guiseppe playing on a flute and the bear performing a few simple tricks. Finally, they reach the little town of Monterey. Here Slade, the proprietor of a roadhouse, and the editor of one of the newspapers, attempts to ruin Craig Winton, the reform candidate for mayor. Guiseppe saves a little girl from being run over by a horse and meets Adelaide Vandegrift, the adopted daughter of a wealthy resident. Guiseppe, after the frame-up on the candidate for mayor, finds a paper that implicates Slade in the plot. As Adelaide has befriended him, he shows it to her, and she, being engaged to Craig Winton, brings it before the young candidate. Slade is driven out of town. In talking to Vandegrift Guiseppe recognizes in him the man whom he pulled from the water years before and Vandegrift then informs him that Adelaide is really Guiseppe's own daughter. Guiseppe is eager to take her into his arms, but when he realizes that she has had all the refinement of life and he is only a wandering musician, he turns away and leaves her to her love.

General Program

Selig World Library, No. 4—JUNE 6.—The Cliff Dwellers of New Mexico, showing the homes of the aboriginal American race that preceded the Pueblo Indians and built ancient communal dwellings. Fashions at the Beach—Novel and nifty costumes exhibited on our bathing beaches. The Whaling Industry—The modern method of capturing whales, valuable chiefly for their oil and teeth. A Peep into Jungleland—Oswald, aged 250 years, eats 55 pounds of beef three times yearly.

Knights of the Saddle—(TWO REELS)—SELIG.—A film for those who love the great out-of-doors. A picture-play in which men and women who have spent years in becoming expert in riding, roping, shoooting, and in "bulldogging" steers are seen in the performance of their most daring feats. Among the feats of skill presented are fancy roping, riding bucking bronchos, a Roman chariot race, bull-dogging, efficiency test riding, changing saddles and chaps, efficiency test pitching tent and making a fire, stage coach driving, etc. During the course of the production an accident is shown in which Tom Mix, the movie star, and others were hurt.

The Font of Courage—SELIG.—George Fuller, a sheriff, is known for his bravery, but his son, Sid, has been a coward from childhood. When grown to manhood Sid falls in love with Stella Brandt. "Bull" Parker is known as a bad man. He goes on a rampage and finally brands Sid as a coward. When Sheriff Fuller goes to arrest Parker he is shot and wounded. He tells Sid that he must arrest Parker to save the family honor. The boy meets Parker and his nerve is about to fail him when Stella calls for his aid. Then it is that courage returns, and he arrests "Bull" Parker.

The Friendship of Beaupere—SELIG—JUNE 11.—In the heart of the Caribou district, far above fifty-three, dwells Jules Beaupere, a trapper of the North, who lives for Celeste, who has grown to womanhood after her parents had sickened and died, leaving no reckoning of their history. Roger Lynn, only heir of an aristocratic mother, prospects for gold in the Northland, meets Celeste, falls in love with her and marries her. After many months a greater happiness comes to them in the person of an infant son. Roger, in response to a letter from his mother, leaves for the States, but soon returns. Shortly after his return he is killed by an avalanche. Beaupere writes to Roger's mother, telling her of his wife and son. Mrs. Lynn comes North and gets the child, separating the little fellow and his mother by law. Celeste now sickens and dies. On her deathbed Mrs. Lynn is remorseful and tells Roger, Jr., of his mother. He and his bride go into the North in search of Celeste, but find only Beaupere, who leads him to his mother's grave.

He Made the Band Box

JACK HAAG, who has been connected with the Band Box Theater for the last year as manager and has a wide acquaintance in the film industry, is about to sever his connection with that popular house. It was he who placed the theater where it is today and made it one of the best money makers in the loop district of Chicago, and widely known from coast to coast.

Jack Haag, the progressive Band Box manager, who has parted company with the Madison street house.

Mr. Haag is a hard, conscientious worker and believes in getting the most out of a picture, also giving the public a run for their money, and the loop will miss him. It would be difficult to find a better type of theater manager than Mr. Haag. He belongs to the most progressive and most intelligent class of men controlling the exhibiting policies of the houses of the country.

Jack is an active worker in the Exhibitors' League and secretary of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago. The present active condition of the club is due to a great extent to Jack's untiring efforts, with the other club officials.

Chicago Notes

H. SCHOENSTADT & SON are building a new theater at West Twenty-sixth street and Crawford avenue. It is expected that the house will seat 1,800 people and will cost somewhere around $250,000.

The Logan Square Theater has divorced itself from pictures and is now running vaudeville exclusively.

Albert Hale, pioneer director, well known in the "profession," is again living at the Sherman Hotel.

The city has again started war on "The Birth of a Nation." The showing of the picture was stopped by the police at Fred Schaeffer's Victoria Theater last week.

Albert Graham, formerly assistant manager of the Detroit Universal office, is now on the job acting as city salesman in the local Pathe office.

Bryant Washburn narrowly escaped drowning on June 12 while working on "The Golden Idiot" at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin.

Pathe has a brand new assistant manager. He is H. P. Reynolds, who was formerly an exhibitor in Mishawaka, Indiana, having managed the Temple Theater there.

Victor L. Hodupp, assistant business manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., was in Chicago a short time last week. He attended the funeral of his father at Portland, Indiana.

The well-known Bob McKnight, formerly photoplay editor of the Chicago Examiner, and also with the publicity department of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is now filling a berth in the news department of the American Film Company.

Exhibitors will now have a chance to see "New York" without leaving home. This Pathe feature, starring Florence Feed, has been passed by the Chicago film clippers after having been held up for a year.

Aaron J. Jones has had another ride punched out of his Twentieth Century commutation ticket. He was in New York City last week with his hook and line angling for more big features. He never fails and we should hear of Jones, Linick & Schaefer grabbing off some more big ones within the next few days.

Greiver & Herz are handling an extensive list of productions in their new office in the Consumers building. Among them are the A. Kay productions, Sunshine comedies, "Should She Obey?" the new Arizona feature, "America is Ready" war pictures, "Reel Life in China," and a number of others.

William N. Selig recently entertained in Chicago Edward Nelson, president of the Sherman-Elliott Film Corporation, and David H. Beeber, vice president, both of Minneapolis; Messrs. Sleeth, Shannon and Wolfberg of the Masterpiece Film Corporation, handling "The Crisis" in Pennsylvania and other states.

After several weeks spent here taking special scenes for the forthcoming Selig production, "The City of Purple Dreams," Director Colin Campbell, Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi and Lafayette McKee left, June 5, for Los Angeles. The skyline of the city was filmed from an entirely new angle. Campbell and a cameraman climbed to the top of one of the towers of the municipal pier and took a "long shot" of the silhouette of Michigan avenue.

Paramount and Artcraft held a very successful business meeting in Chicago last week. The sales and office forces of the two exchanges were present to the extent of twenty-eight. Among the officials were L. Lischman, general manager of Artcraft; Max Goldstine, distributing manager; C. J. Stoughton, local Paramount manager, and C. R. Peavey, Minneapolis manager. The meeting was held at the Sherman Hotel, June 8, and the purpose was to discuss the new combination of Artcraft and Paramount and the future workings of the new organization.

Reel Fellows Publish Paper

The Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, always on the jump for something new, has decided to issue an official paper. This will go to members and to those interested and will be conducted by Messrs. Scoville and Strauss, who have donated their services. The idea is to print news and personal items and keep the film public in touch with the affairs of the club. A number of those interested have already promised the paper their advertising support. Although as yet un-named, the new publication will probably bear some such title as "The Reel Fellow," or "The Regular Guy."

At its last meeting on June 8, there was a good deal of lively and interesting discussion in regard to ways and means of promoting the club. Cook, of Artcraft, was awarded the long distance talking medal; others who participated were Jos. E. Hopp, President Ralph Proctor, Secretary Jack Haag, Vice-president M. G. Watkins, Kenneth M. Scoville, Rice of Arizona Film Company, Strauss of the Sunshine Company, and Treasurer Harry C. Miller.

Both ends of the attractive rooms proved to be as popular as ever and the gathering dissolved only after the first wee small hour of the morning.

This latest portrait of Mr. Charles Chaplin is being used by the Mutual Film Corporation in the 3-sheet paper for "The Immigrant," latest of the Mutual-Chaplin specials to be released shortly. The extreme accuracy of the likeness presented in the lithographs will commend itself to every reader. It delineates one of Mr. Chaplin's best known emotional expressions.

Watkins Leaves American Standard

ONE of the least expected and most surprising announcements of the week in Chicago film circles was the substantiated report that M. G. Watkins, secretary and general manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, had resigned from that organization after three and one-half years' constant service. Mr. Watkins, during his seven years in the motion picture business, has gained a national reputation not only for his ability and aggressiveness, but as being one of the best informed men in the industry.

Typical of the man the first inkling of his resignation was not had in local film circles until the meeting of the Reel Fellows Club of Friday, June 8, the day previous to his leaving the concern which he has served since the beginning of 1914 without taking a single day's vacation.

While still a shade under thirty years of age, Mr. Watkins is one of the men in the business who has learned it from the ground up, in both the production and distribution ends. At one time he is said to have spent nearly six months in the laboratories and studio of one concern, without even carfare as a salary, in order to get a general knowledge of that end of the business which might be useful to him in later years. It evidently has proved of greater benefit than he had anticipated since, coupled with the experience he had as one of the pioneer road salesmen of film, it brought him a financial interest and an official position in a large and successful institution in a few years' time. During the past two years he brought success to the American Standard through having conceived and put into operation a percentage distribution plan with thirty-two exchanges across the country, making his company the national distributor for several producing companies.

Having accomplished this successfully it is evident that he makes this recent move to mark progress in even greater fields of activity, despite the fact that he has not divulged his intentions. At least two flattering offers are known to have been made to him by prominent film men in attendance at the Reel Fellows Club meeting above mentioned, but were not accepted.

Mr. Watkins' past connections, in order named, are as follows:

Assistant advertising manager the Billboard, Cincinnati; publicity manager, DuBrock Features; traveling representative for Menlo Moore, State Rights; traveling representative and later sales manager for Allardt Brothers, representing Union Features of New York; sales manager with D. W. McKinney of Acme Film Co.

He is interested financially in American Standard, Emerald Motion Picture Co., France Films, Inc., now producing "The Natural Law" in New York, with Marguerite Courtot and Howard Hall, and in four other companies.

Chicago's attractive contribution to Metro's constellation. Her name is Alice MacChesney.

Alice Metro MacChesney

Alice MacChesney, Metro's new ingenue lead, is fast becoming as popular on the screen as she was in Chicago, where she won the big popularity contest a few years ago. Miss MacChesney is but eighteen years old and will be seen in the forthcoming Metro wonderplays, "The Trail of the Shadow" and "The Will o' the Wisp." Later on she will become leading woman for a well known male star.

Miss MacChesney came to the screen directly from school. She was born at Glen Elleyn, Ill., and when sixteen years of age won, by a comfortable margin, a popularity contest held in Chicago, near which city her home is located.

After much persuasion, following her graduation from the Lewis Academy in Chicago, she accepted a two-year contract with the Essanay motion picture company. She appeared in support of Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Richard Travers, Eddie Arnold and other Essanay stars. Her success on the screen was instantaneous and as soon as her contract with Essanay expired, Metro Pictures Corporation eagerly signed her to a long term contract.

Miss MacChesney has played emotional parts as well as ingenue leads, and in both she has won many favorable notices from the critics. Everyone acquainted with the young lady predicts an exceedingly bright future for her in the silent drama.

The new Metro favorite is very athletic. She is a swimmer of note and can handle a high powered automobile as dextrously as she gracefully rides a spirited horse.

New Concerns

CERTIFICATES of incorporation for seventeen new amusement enterprises have been filed with the secretary of state of New York the past week.

The total amount of capital invested in the new concerns aggregates $723,600.

The list of new corporations follows:

Could you spare Czar to do one feature picture showing progress revolutionary movement? Salary five thousand dollars week, to be devoted to your cause. Four weeks guaranteed.

THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION

"Now, King, register a little more cheerfulness. Make it snappy. We ain't got all summer, you know!" Who can tell? In the course of human events perhaps all the kings will have to take jobs as film actors and the directors will be obliged to put up with a lot more temperament. Thanhouser has not yet announced whether or not the Czar can get away for the proposed engagement, although he is at present understood to be disengaged.

Goldwyn Pictures

Apply the "Egg Test" To Goldwyn

ANY housekeeper has a hard time detecting doubtful eggs merely by looking at them. But when she holds them up against candle or gas-light, she knows in an instant whether they are good or bad.

Goldwyn's application of this method to the film business is that exhibitors can see our pictures in advance of booking.

We invite you to test the power of the Goldwyn productions under an honest system of open bookings.

We have spent a fortune and taken ten months' time in which to produce a powerful and artistic new type of motion pictures and we are ready to sell them honestly.

Again we say to exhibitors: You will not have to book a series of pictures of any one Goldwyn star to obtain the one particular picture of that star you desire for your audience.

No State Censor for Illinois

GUERNSEY BILL KILLED IN SENATE BY ABSURD AMENDMENT

ILLINOIS will have no state censor of pictures. The Guernsey state censorship bill, which was introduced into the state legislature some months ago, was passed by the house of representatives but died before it could become a law because of the fact that in the closing days of the session the bill did not come to a vote before the senate.

In case the bill had ever come before the senate for a vote, there was little chance of its passage on account of the eleventh hour amendment saddled on to it by those interested in protecting the Chicago censor board. This particular amendment specified that at present the Chicago censor board should be untouched and also that any city, village or town, which now has a local censor, created by ordinance, or that hereafter may create one, is exempt from the state law as proposed. The bill, with the above amendments, and a number of others, was reported favorably from the senate judiciary committee, but the members of the senate who were familiar with the amendment were decidedly against the passage of the bill.

Needless to say, the men representing every branch of the industry in Illinois are greatly relieved over the fact that this offensive movement on the part of the censor has been repulsed. Great credit is due to the Chicago Exhibitors' League, under the leadership of Joseph Hopp, who mobilized its forces and did a great deal of effective fighting for the sake of the principal of freedom of the screen, although, of course, the whole matter was more vital to producers and exchanges than to the exhibitors. In reference to the other branches of the trade, the strong Chicago Exhibitors' League held the same position as that taken by the United States in relation to the Allies in the war against Germany. It was a fight for liberty and liberty won.

Exhibitors on the Firing Line

Besides General Joseph Hopp, Wm. J. Sweeney, national secretary of the M. P. E. L., and Fred Hartman, in the first line trenches, there were other active Chicagoans, including Robert Levy, George Laing, and others. Among the theater men of the state who aided were W. W. Watts and E. Kunz, of Springfield; Dee Robinson, Peoria; William Bradley, Ottawa; and G. M. Luttrell, of Jacksonville, president of the state branch of the league. J. Pegler of Mutual was also prominent in the fight.

The Chicago league, through President Hopp, was in constant touch with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, represented by Theodore Mitchell, at 807 Longacre building, New York.

Among those on the battle ground at Springfield during the closing days of the session were Wm. J. Sweeney, and Robert Levy of the Chicago league; Major M. C. L. Funkhouser, head of the Chicago censor board, who was undoubtedly responsible for the amendment protecting local censor boards in connection with the proposed state law; Mrs. Guy Blanchard, of the Woman's Equality League, who sponsored the bill and secured its introduction by Senator Guy Guernsey. Adolph Powell, who was one of the four disturbers recently asked to resign from the Chicago league, was also present at the capitol.

How Representatives Voted

When the state censor bill was voted upon in the house of representatives, the following members proved their loyalty to the picture industry by voting against the proposed statute: Representatives Browne, Bruce, Burns, Chas. Curren, Devine, Epstein, Fahy, Gallagher, Gorman, Carl Green, Haverill, Lynch, Mueller, Rethmeier, Arthur Roe, Seis, Tutle, Weber and Young.

Russian Stars Direct Own Pictures

When the Russian art films are presented here with the leading national actors of Moscow and Petrograd in the principal roles, Broadwayites will witness one marked innovation from the usual practice of American studios.

The Russian stars direct their own plays. Not only do they accept or reject with absolute finality the parts they deem congenial or unsuitable to them, as the case may be; not merely do they study the roles for months, with the same attention, in fact, as in the "legitimate," but furthermore they rule the proceedings in the picture studio and retain entire freedom of action as to the expression of their individualities.

The logical result of this is that there are no dolls nor mannikins in Russian pictures. The artists know their parts thoroughly, pick their subordinates, and build the structure of the play as intelligently as they would build up a spoken production at the National Dramatic Theater or the Theater of Arts. In Russia there is a total absence of "Register scorn!" "Indicate hate!" "Fall down in a faint!" and other stereotyped commands of filmdom. It is contended that far greater heights of dramatic power are attained when the actors know what they are doing and follow their own bent than can possibly be attained under the old mechanical system of following a studio director automatically.

I. I. Mozjukhin, Russia's leading actor, possesses a resourcefulness of ideas, a broad method and a sweeping attack that cause him to dominate to a large extent. He plays old men and young heroes equally. Mozjukhin never permits a studio director to tell him "where he gets off." The action of the play must harmonize with the ideas of its interpreters, and subordinates who try to enforce their own ideas are thrown out.

With Mozjukhin are associated the women stars who have worked with him in the "legitimate" national theaters of Moscow and Petrograd. The other big men of these theaters are likewise associated with him in films. A cast made up of one star and a lot of nonentities is unheard of. A number of stars collaborate in all the important works.

The three greatest dramatic names among the women are Mmes. Olga Gzovskaia, Nadia Lisenko and Vera Kholodnaia. The first named is the Sarah Bernhardt of Russia, but in the prime of youth and beauty.

The great "vampire" of the Russian stage is Mme. Lisenko, who is also affectionately styled the "Queen of the movies." Mme. Lisenko is a bewitching beauty who graced the National Dramatic Theater at Moscow prior to achieving her extraordinary success in the films. Vera Kholodnaia is a dainty and fascinating artiste, also of high dramatic experience at the National. "Kholodnaia has the tiniest feet in Russia!" is apt to be the first information vouchsafed when the man in the street is asked about her.

POOR ADVERTISING HIT

Advertise According to Drawing Power Rather Than Rental Price, Says Spoor—Let Pulling Power Determine Film's Selection

"A great many instances of exhibitors basing their advertising campaigns on the proportionate rental price of a picture or series of pictures rather than on the drawing power, has recently come to our notice," says George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company.

It would certainly seem that this is a mistake as it always puts the exhibitor on the defensive. He books a picture at an exorbitant price and then feels that he is forced to advertise heavily in order to break even. Now, wouldn't it be much better for him if he would book according to advertising possibilities and put the same amount of effort behind a medium priced picture having comparatively the same drawing power?

Do not misinterpret this question. Naturally, there are many big features worthy of higher admission prices and upon which a great deal of money spent in advertising is a ready economy. On the other hand, we are repeatedly receiving information through our investigation department which shows that a large per cent of theater managers have more than doubled their film rentals in the last two years without increasing their admission price a penny.

Take as an example our new series, "Do Children Count?" With the advertising suggestions we have issued on these twelve subjects it will be possible for any exhibitor to make a larger percentage of profit several times over if he will conscientiously exploit them than he could if he were to book twelve disproportionately high priced features and offer them at the same admission price.

Essanay's policy in producing this series was to supply pictures which could be made the feature of short subject programs or a co-feature on a bill where a five-reel subject is being shown. The rental prices will be unusually low when compared to the pulling power of the title and the quality of the productions. Certainly it would seem that such a proposition, with a very low first cost and an opportunity for a correspondingly large profit, would appeal to everyone.

To make this point more clear I might sight three of our recent five-reel subjects, "Skinner's Dress Suit," "Skinner's Bubble" and "Buring the Candle," which though released in the regular service, we know are daily bringing bigger returns at the box office than many of the so-called specials or super features.

Therefore the best suggestion I can make to the exhibitor is to select his subjects on the strength of the business he can secure with them and on that basis alone.

Motion Picture War Committee

President Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has appointed the following War Co-operation committee:

D. W. Griffith, chairman; William L. Sherrill, vice-chairman; Arthur S. Friend, Richard A. Rowland, P. A. Powers, John R. Freuler, Ricord Gradwell, J. A. Berst, Walter W. Irwin, W. R. Rothacker, J. E. Brulatour, J. H. Hallberg, Walter J. Moore, Arthur James, Lee A. Ochs, Samuel H. Trigger, Louis F. Blumenthal, Louis L. Levine, S. A. Lynch.

This committee is to act in conjunction with the committee on public information recently appointed by President Wilson, of which George Creel is chairman.

Screenshine

By Mel

"WHO is the mysterious Miss La Salle?"

"The Mystery of the Mallers Building."

"The Exchange Manager's Secret."

"Where is Fred?"

"Who Got Stung?"

Any of these Thr-r-illing Titles would fit the Real Life Scenario enacted in the Mallers Building a few Days ago. Here's the whole Romantic Story, in tablet form:

An Exchange Man in the Mallers Film Temple had his phone wires crossed with a Lucious-voiced Dame who proved to be both Lonesome and Loquacious. Like most Film Men, he was quick to see his Opportunity.

He dated her all up.

She was to call that afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Office of Another Film Man and ask for Mister Gesshoo, a w. k. Exchange Manager. You see the Film Man who did the Dating also saw His Opportunity to exit from the Romance.

She called, looking like the amount of the Liberty Loan. The Hard Working Exchange Manager was dumfounded. She recalled all the telephone conversation in Lucious Terms. That was right in the Reception Room and Mister Gesshoo had to Blush.

"And you know," she bubbled, "Fred is in the Sanitarium and I just can't help being Lonesome."

"Will You wait on the first floor?" gulped the Brave Exchange Manager. "I'll be down in five Minutes."

She went. But He never came. He saved His Reputation.

"New York office's trying to get something on me, but they won't!" He said.

Nobody in the office could give him any Information.

He is still trying to solve the Mystery of the Mysterious Miss La Salle.

WE DON'T KNOW WHAT HIGH COST IS.

We dislike to shove the yellow slide over Screenshine, the immaculate, but it mite be permissable to take a peep at one phase of the divorce suit now bubbling in the courts and involving a w. k. film actor and his better three-quarters.

The following appeared in the newspaper accounts of the case:

"The actor admits his annual earnings amount to $26,000. But he says this represents only $5,850 net, and lists these items as the yearly expenses of keeping a movie star before the public and alive:

Publicity, $1,200.
Photos and posters, $1,000.
Scenarios, $3,000.
Wardrobe, $1,500.
Valet, $1,000.
Living quarters, $1,200.
Clubs, $5,000.
Unprofessional clothes, $1,500.
Food, $1,400.
Auto service, $2,600.
Insurance, $750."

He must have omitted two items—rose-scented cigarettes, and plate cuspidors, monogramed, $987.

The employes in Pathe's Portland branch struck a short time ago—for the purpose of witnessing the ceremony of the presentation of a gold watch to Manager Kofelt from the members of the office staff.

It is said then that Manager Kofelt was struck—dumb.

On with the strikes. Let gifts be unconfined.

THE LAMB, with Douglas Fairbanks (Triangle)—"This is one of Fairbanks' first pictures but nevertheless it is the same Douglas. Pleased audience very much. Played to big houses all day."—Charles E. Hagen, Kenmore Theater.—In high class neighborhood.

ON TRIAL (Essanay)—"A well produced, well acted play. It is drawing pretty good business and my patrons say they like it better than the stage play."—Norman E. Field, Colonial Theater.—Downtown house.

THE FALL OF A NATION (Vitagraph)—"This picture was a record breaker for me. This is rather a poor time of the year for pictures but I did excellently with it and everybody went away well pleased. I made a cleanup."—C. M. Shaw, Princess Theater, Geraldine, Mont.

THE COURAGE OF SILENCE, with Alice Joyce (Vitagraph)—"Alice Joyce drew good business for us. She is very popular here. There is a little too much sadness in this picture to make it tremendously popular."—Maude Crews, Alamo Theater, Fayette, Mo.

SALLY IN A HURRY, with Lillian Walker (Vitagraph)—"Not up to Vitagraph standard nor as good as this star's previous vehicles. The picture draws fairly well on account of the star's popularity."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

MIGHT AND THE MAN, with Elmo Lincoln (Triangle)—"This picture was not as bad as I had heard it was. It is a melodrama which will be liked in some neighborhoods and not in others. It is one of those 'all hero" stories. A poor box-office attraction."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

THE MILLIONAIRE'S DOUBLE, with Lionel Barrymore (Metro)—"An average program picture which provided pleasant amusement. Contains a little humor and the star plays his part well. Average business."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

THE EASIEST WAY, with Clara Kimball Young (Selznick)—"This star seems to be losing her popularity. The picture is all right but it did not seem to draw well. The title is O. K."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

THE RINK, with Charles Chaplin (Mutual)—"A repeat engagement. It played to as big business as at the first showing."—Harry Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

MAX COMES ACROSS, with Max Linder (Essanay-K. E. S. E.)—"Not a drawing card like Chaplin. Played to fair business."—Harry Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

MINA, THE FLOWER GIRL, with Bessie Love (Triangle)—"A fair picture but not a drawing card."—Harry Everhart, National Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

THE HIDDEN CHILDREN, with Harold Lockwood and May Allison (Metro)—"Good business owing to the popularity of the stars. The picture was the poorest in which these two have been featured."—L. A. Schwager, Royal Theater, Ashland, Wisconsin.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This is a 'sure fire' box office attraction and any exhibitor desiring to 'cash in' should not overlook this 'bet.' I consider the acting, story, directing, photography and settings of the very first class."—K. H. Sink, Pastime Theater, Greenville, Ohio.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This serial has more than met our expectations. It is not only pleasing the 'fans' in acting, story, directing, photography, settings, but also proving satisfactory financially.. It is a No. 1 box office attraction."—W. C. Sutton, Bijou Theater, Xenia, Ohio.

ENVY, with Ann Murdock (McClure "Seven Deadly Sins" series)—"This picture is very good. The star is well liked. Business good."—C. R. Brown, Hub Theater, Gaylord, Minn.

A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS, with Helen Holmes (Mutual)—"This is sure a winner. At the first episode I had a house of 190. Episode No. 4 brought a house of over 320. All say it is the best they have ever seen."—H. J. Walrad, Kansas City, Mo.

THE NEGLECTED WIFE, with Ruth Roland (Pathe serial)—"A clean-up to date. This serial will draw a large attendance of women. The first episode went big."—Julius Lamm, Gaiety Theater, South Chicago, Ill.

THE CURE, with Charles Chaplin (Mutual)—"Excellent businses always accompanies Chaplin. The picture is up to standard."—L. A. Schwager, Royal Theater, Ashland, Wisconsin.

BRAINSTORM, with Billie Mason (Fox)—"These Fox comedies are proving quite popular."—L. A. Schwager, Royal Theater, Ashland, Wisconsin.

SACRIFICE, with Margaret Illington (Paramount)—"Everybody knew this story before the first reel was over. The star was unknown. No business."—C. D. Buss, Third Street Theater, Easton, Pa.

HEART'S DESIRE, with Marie Doro (Lasky-Paramount)—"A fair picture. Poor business. I don't think this star will ever draw very big."—C. D. Buss, Third Street Theater, Easton, Pa.

KITTY MACKAY, with Lillian Walker (Vitagraph)—"A remarkably clever subject. I think it one of the best Miss Walker has appeared in here at least. Let's have more of the light comedies. They make a decided hit over the heavy dramatic subjects."—M. C. Kellogg, Homestead Opera House, Lead, S. D.

A Maiden's Trust, with Ford Sterling (Keystone)—"These new Keystones are all good. In a class by themselves."—C. D. Buss, Third Street Theater, Easton, Pa.

Arsene Lupin, with Earle Williams (Vitagraph)—"This is the kind of picture my audience likes. It keeps them guessing what is coming next."—William B. Rosenberger, Firemen's Hall, Perkasie, Pa.

The Man Who Made Good, with Jack Devereaux (Triangle)—"A pleasing picture, that is about all. It will not draw well. Triangle had better wait until this star becomes better known and more popular before starring him."—Charles H. Ryan; Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Sowers and Reapers, with Emmy Wehlen (Metro)—"A good picture which was liked by all. The star does not draw as well as some of the other Metro stars."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Atonement, with Regina Badet (World)—"A dry and uninteresting picture. I do not see what attracted Mr. Brady's attention when he picked this one out of the foreign market. Business very poor with it."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Movie Stunts, with Tom Mix (Selig)—"A comedy out of the ordinary. Tom Mix at his best. A great two-reeler."—T. Lancaster, Grande Theater. Detroit, Mich.

Hell Morgan's Girl, with Dorothy Phillips (Bluebird Special)—"The stars are at their best. Miss Phillips was never better. A good money getter. Good business."—T. Lancaster, Grande Theater, Detroit, Mich.

The Dark Road, with Dorothy Dalton (Triangle)—"A splendid picture of the present war. The star is some vampire. Business good."—T. Lancaster, Grande Theater, Detroit, Mich.

U. S. Defenders (Mutual)—"The first four installments are very instructive and interesting, giving the public a good insight into Uncle Sam's fighting machine."—L. A. Schwager, Royal Theater, Ashland, Wisconsin.

The Spirit of Romance, with Vivian Martin (Paramount)—"A kind of comedy that has little or no punch to it. Business was fair on this day."—Edward Trinz, West End Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

The Devil's Assistant, featuring Margarita Fischer (Mutual)—"My patrons were well pleased with this feature and so was I. The best I have seen for some time."—Edward Sachs, Morningside Theater, New York, N. Y.

My Fighting Gentleman, featuring William Russell (Mutual)—"This is sure a grand picture. I think Bill Russell one of the greatest actors on the screen. Everybody was pleased."—Thomas Johnson, Orpheum Theater, Reedsburg, Wis.

Whose Wife? with Gail Kane (Mutual)—"Was more than pleased with this Gail Kane production. Box office returns excellent."—Ira P. Moser, Palace Theater, Buffalo, N. Y.

Serials

The Secret of the Submarine (Mutual Serial)—"This is the best drawing card I have had in a long time."—Francis Frosio, Happy Hour Theater, Sonora, Texas.

Pearl of the Army, with Pearl White (Pathe)—(Comment requested)—"Not a world beater but will go over. The title is not as good as it should be. It is not quite as good as the previous serials this star has worked in."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Pearl of the Army, with Pearl White (Pathe)—"The best money getting serial we ever played. Always capacity."—V. H. Oxley, Grand Theater, Bradford, Pa.

Patria, with Mrs. Vernon Castle (Pathe serial)—"The best box-office serial we have run. Plenty of action and thrills. A story appropriate at this time."—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield Theater.—In middle class neighborhood.

Humorists to Be Goldwyn Guests

The American Press Humorists, who will hold their annual meeting in New York City during the week of June 25, have set aside one day on their program which is to be known as Goldwyn Pictures day. On the morning of Wednesday, June 27, the members of this distinguished newspaper and magazine organization, with their wives, will depart for a day's outing at the Fort Lee studios, where they will be the guests of the Goldwyn officers, authors, stars and technical staff. They will be entertained at luncheon by Mae Marsh, Jane Cowl and Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn stars, who at that time will be working upon three separate productions.

Among the honorary members of the association who have said they expect to accompany the writers and cartoonists upon this excursion are John D. Rockefeller, an enthusiastic member of the American Press Humorists, and John Purroy Mitchel, mayor of Greater New York, who is to be taken into the organization on the opening day of the meeting.

The men who make America laugh are desirous of seeing motion pictures in the making, and when James A. Waldron, editor of "Judge," on behalf of Goldwyn Pictures, tendered the program committee an invitation to visit the big studios at Fort Lee it was speedily accepted. Don Marquis, nationally famous as the columnist on the New York Evening Sun, and Roy K. Moulton, paragrapher on the New York Evening Mail, have promised to contribute a vest-pocket scenario which is to be acted, directed and photographed by members of the association.

In addition to acting their own stuff, the distinguished writers and artists, of whom there will be about 200, will watch Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy and Jane Cowl working in Goldwyn features that are to be released in the early fall.

Stars Twinkle at National Show

RED CROSS BOOTH TO SELL SOUVENIRS FROM SCREEN FOLK AT CONVENTION

SOME of the stars that have promised to shine at the national motion picture exposition and convention in Chicago, June 14 to 22, are Charlie Chaplin, Helen Holmes, Mary Miles Minter from the Mutual Film Corporation; Norma and Constance Talmage from Selznick; Francis Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Harold Lockwood to represent Metro; Mae Marsh and perhaps Mary Garden from Goldwyn, and Violet Mersereau to twinkle in the Universal booth. There will also undoubtedly be a number of stars from Vitagraph, Paramount, Art Dramas, Triangle, Pathe and the other producing organizations. Anita King, Henry B. Walthall, Rose Tapley and Hobart Henley have also stated that they will be present.

Opening Day of Exposition

Promptly at 10:30 on Saturday, July 14, the doors of the big national exposition and convention will swing open at the Chicago Coliseum. Governor Lowden of Illinois has promised to arrange his affairs in order to be on hand and greet all of the visiting delegates and the motion picture trade with a few opening remarks.

The vast hall will be beautifully decorated and there will be three convention chambers during the time of the exposition. Not only will the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America be in session but also the executives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, the F. I. L. M. Club of America and the Association of Motion Picture Engineers.

The exposition will open its doors to the public at 11 a. m., and run continuously to 11 p. m. The opening day will be known as Goldwyn-Mae Marsh day and Mae Marsh and other Goldwyn stars will be present.

Stars to Aid Red Cross Booth

The Red Cross will be well represented at the exposition and hopes to gain a good many members among the picture fans of the United States.

It is the aim of the exposition management to interest the prominent picture stars in this worthy Association and they trust that all will donate some little article for the Red Cross Booth. These articles will be auctioned off by the several stars who will be present at the exposition. In this way a goodly sum will go to the aid of the army.

Prominent Chicago society leaders have promised to take charge of this booth and the Chicago papers are sure to give it lots of publicity.

The exposition management will not be benefited by any of the money taken in at this booth. If you are a star, send the managers an article or as many as you wish for the Red Cross. Articles should be tagged securely and sender's name written on identification card. Address, "Exposition Manager, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 1416 Masonic Temple, Chicago." Mark—For Red Cross Booth.

Schindler Back

Ludwig Schindler, the hustling manager of the convention and exposition, is once more at his desk.

"I am glad to be back on the firing line," said Ludwig. "You know I was in New York for ten days and while I was not loafing by any means, having received some very nice contracts, still it was play compared to this. From now on it will be peg away from 8 to 6 and you know I don't object to Sunday work. Most all of the large producers have contracted for space and their locations assigned."

Story of Films Represented

Evolution from a mere vehicle of amusement to one of the greatest industries in the world will be the big story of the exposition. More than half of the many thousands who will be in attendance can well remember the day when the moving pictures meant a "hole-in-the-wall" theater and a series of jerky, faulty figures projected upon the screen.

Today many of the handsomest theaters in the world are used and have been built for exclusive display of moving pictures. Whole cities have been erected to provide adequate settings. Mountains have been scaled, almost impassable rivers crossed. Every nook and corner of the globe has been invaded. The Bedouin, the Hindoo, the Eskimo, the South Sea Islander, the Zulu Warrior, are now familiar figures to countless thousands who formerly could only read about them.

The most brilliant minds in the world are now employed at commensurate salaries. Science, the arts, mechanics, agriculture, have all received a definite and salutary impetus, and the civilized world is being both amused and instructed by the greatest educational factor —the moving picture.

Chicago will entertain and be entertained by the men and the women whose courage, perserverance and foresight have built up this wonderful industry, at the coming exposition and convention. Under the direction of Ludwig Schindler, producers, exhibitors, directors, stars from every corner of the United States, will be in attendance. It is a mere statement of fact to say that able representatives will come to Chicago from the Arctic circle to the torrid zone, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mary Garden has promised to attend and will be the star on a special "society night." "Our Mary" Pickford will give visitors another opportunity to see her winsome face in the real, instead of the reel. Max Linder, Charlie Chaplin, William Hart, Anita Stewart, Pauline Frederick, and a dozen or more other big stars will be present.

Quick to recognize the fact that virtually every line of modern commercial business has been directly benefitted by the screen, Chicago business men are seizing the opportunity to advantageously display their wares, and the floor exhibits will be the finest ever seen in the Coliseum.

Manufacturers of every kind of wearing apparel, for men and for women, from hats to shoes, realize that moving picture stars are today setting the fashions for the millions.

There'll be lots of importance to you at the exposition. Keep up with the times. Be there.

Another bit of praise has come to "The Great White Trail," the new super-feature by The Whartons. This time it came from the National Board of Review, which, after looking at the picture, passed it as being perfect in every particular. The vote to name the picture a 100 per cent production was unanimous, and not a cut or change was suggested.

JUNE TO ESTABLISH RECORD

Expect 90 Per Cent of Film Companies to Be Represented in National Association of Motion Picture Industry by July

The month of June will establish new membership records for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, if applications continue to be received at the headquarters in the Times Building at the rate they were filed up to the 15th.

This is substantial evidence that the success which has attended the association's efforts during the past few months has had the desired effect, not only as regards the benefits derived for the entire industry, but this new support has come in the form of applications from many important companies, which is most gratifying to President William A. Brady and Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott and the other officials who have worked day and night, Sundays and holidays to give the motion picture interests as representative a national organization as any other industry in the world.

The film companies have not been the only ones to do their share towards supporting the work of the association, but other companies which are dependent upon the industry to a large extent for their business, have seen the wisdom and advantage of affiliating with the national body representing the five great branches of the trade.

The companies which have joined the National Association since the first of June are as follows: Triangle Distributing Company, to be represented by S. A. Lynch; Metro Pictures Corporation, as a producer member, to be represented by Joseph W. Engel, Metro having been one of the founders of the National Association as a distributor member; Louis J. Selznick Enterprises, represented by Louis J. Selznick; Astra Film Corporation, represented by L. J. Gasnier and Balboa Amusement Producing Company, represented by H. M. Horkheimer.

Poster and Lithographing Division

Two lithographing companies were added to the supply and equipment class through the receipt of applications from the Otis Lithographing Company of Cleveland, which will be represented by its president, W. N. Brewer, and the Alpha Lithographic Company of New York, represented by George L. Cooke. These companies, together with the H. C. Miner Lithographing Company and the Acme Lithographing Company, will form the nucleus of a Poster and Lithographers' Division, of which Walter J. Moore, vice-president of the former, is chairman, and L. P. Weber of the Acme is secretary.

Among the prospective applications from producers are the Star Film and Rolin Film companies, Lasalida Films, Inc., and the Myers-Theby Comedy Corporation, all releasing through Pathe Exchange, Inc., Bray Studios and the Klever Komedies releasing through Paramount, L. K. O. releasing through Universal, Norma Talmage Film Corporation and Triangle Film Corporation. The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's application is promised as a distributor, which will make a total of twelve companies comprising the distributors' branch. Goldwyn has been a producer member of the association for some time.

Upon the closing of the books, June 15, there were thirty-five producing concerns in the National Association representing 75 per cent of the big companies, and with the applications assured before July 1 it is confidently expected that the producers' branch will have a membership totaling upwards of forty, representing 90 per cent of the film companies in this country.

Makes First Triangle Appearance

The news that Melbourne MacDowell has become a member of the Triangle stock company at Culver City should prove of unusual interest to those screen fans who also recall the striking impersonations that this actor contributed to the legitimate stage in years past. With his wife, the late Fanny Davenport, one of the most celebrated American tragediennes of the past generation, MacDowell appeared in many classic productions.

Melbourne McDowell, new Triangle man, in "The Flame of the Yukon," and in his regular clothes.

He followed the sea intermittently from his eleventh to his twenty-first year, only taking time enough off to spend a few terms in high school.

The rugged outdoor life built up a wonderful physique. He now stands a half inch less than six feet in height and weighs 200 pounds in working trim.

As the heavy lead in "The Flame of the Yukon," opposite Dorothy Dalton, MacDowell will make his debut in the silent drama. Without previous experience in screen acting, he is said to have created an unusually telling characterization in the role of "Black Jack" Hovey, proprietor of the Midas Cafe, where the big scenes in this Alaskan drama take place.

Trigger Annexes Another House

Sam H. Trigger, president of Manhattan Local No. 1, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has taken a long lease on the Park Theater at Corona, Long Island. This is a beautiful 600-seat house and will open July 1 with Harold W. Rosenthal as manager. This makes the fourth local theater in which Mr. Trigger is interested and we are told that it is his intention to establish a chain of about twenty picture theaters in Greater New York, New Jersey, and Long Island.

Industry Subscribes $5,000,000 to U. S.

EVERY BRANCH EXERTED SUCCESSFUL EFFORTS IN AID OF LIBERTY LOAN

ALTHOUGH it is too soon to get exact figures of the amount subscribed to the Liberty Loan through motion picture sources, reports received by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry indicate that it will approximate $5,000,000. This direct result does not take into consideration the countless millions subscribed by people who were influenced by the vigorous loan campaign conducted upon the screen of America's motion picture theaters.

The National Association brought every resource of the picture industry into play with such success that in all probability the final returns will show the allotment to be exceeded by a comfortable margin. The producing and distributing companies rallied to the call and employes of motion picture concerns entered with a will into the campaign. Prominent motion picture actors and actresses responded with enthusiasm. Their subscriptions alone will total upwards of a million. Subscriptions from the big companies jumped quickly into six figures while men and women of the screen both volunteered with their money and services.

There is absolutely no way of measuring the results of this motion picture propaganda for the bonds, but its importance cannot be overestimated. Since the government sought to interest the entire nation in the loan, motion pictures—the most popular form of entertainment—was requisitioned. The work was done under the direction of a special committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry appointed by President William A. Brady.

15,000 Exhibitors Co-operate

The committe sent 30,000 patriotic slides to the 15,000 motion picture exhibitors of the United States, together with letters from Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo and President Brady, asking for co-operation. Of perhaps greater influence was the patriotic trailer which was distributed broadcast to exhibitors. In animated form this told the need of supporting the Liberty Loan, ending with an inspiring paragraph from President Wilson's speech asking Congress to declare that a state of war existed.

The full story may never be told, as some probably will never make a report. Every studio was active in securing subscriptions from actors and its many other employes, and the companies themselves subscribed for large blocks of bonds. In this connection it is interesting to recall that in two department stores in New York and Brooklyn eighteen motion picture actors and actresses, secured subscriptions of $1,100,000 from the general public. This is only one instance from many showing the fruitful activities of the various branches of the motion picture industry.

Report of Loan Activities

Special Committee on Liberty Loan appointed by President William A. Brady, on May 16, with sub-committees on finance, subscriptions, trailers, slides, publicity, advisory, proclamations and poster advertising.

Twenty-seven meetings held during this period by the various committees.

Trailer Committee, prepared copy, arranged for distribution and shipped out 8,006 trailers within one week's time. George Eastman of Rochester, donated 500,000 feet of raw stock for the trailers.

Slides, 150,000 exhibitors received 30,000 slides through the co-operation of the American Bankers' Association. 15,000 exhibitors received letters from Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo and President William A. Brady, requesting their co-operation and appointing each exhibitor as a member of the National Committee. Thousands of letters received from exhibitors accepting appointment and offering to co-operate in any way.

Organization, of the motion picture actors, Earl Williams, chairman, Montague Love, secretary. Organization of actresses committee, Kittie Gordon, chairman, and Jean Stuart, secretary. Studio directors met with actors committee and arranged for distribution of liberty loan literature and securing of subscriptions through these committees.

Strand Theater Co-operation. Ten minutes addresses at afternoon and evening performances, Sunday, June 10, to Friday, June 15. The following prominent persons appealed for subscriptions: Mrs. Henry O. Havemeyer, William A. Brady, Marcus A. Marks, President Borough of Manhattan, Senator Ogden L. Mills, Frank A. Vanderlip, Gordon Knox Bell, Mrs. August Belmont, Walter E. Bell, Harris Forbes & Co., Miss Elizabeth Marbury and Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson.

Publicity, has been given to the industry's activities, by the trade papers, periodicals and newspapers. Announcements were issued at various intervals from the Secretary of the Treasury's Department at Washington and sent out by the press associations in which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was commended for the co-operation rendered.

Prompt and effective co-operation was rendered by representatives of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers who assisted in the preparation of publicity announcements issued by the National Association.

Reports received up to June 15 indicate approximate total subscriptions to the loan from the industry of $5,000,000.

Files Reports on Pictures

We enjoy and appreciate your magazine, especially "What the Picture Did for Me," and will undoubtedly have use for it as a reference file for years to come.—F. E. Dawson, manager Cotter Theater, Cotter, Arkansas.

That eminent English tragedian, C. Spencer Chaplin, in his latest drama, "The Immigrant," with Edna Purviance, the ravishing blond.

"The Immigrant" Arrived June 18

The Mutual Film Corporation released the Mutual-Chaplin Special, "The Immigrant," on June 18.

The entire action of this comedy takes place in two locations—the steerage of an ocean steamer and a cheap restaurant patronized by the foreigners in America.

On shipboard Charlie divides his time between flirting with a pretty immigrant girl, played by Edna Purviance, and playing cards with her gambling father. These card games are literally cut throat affairs, and lucky are the players if they get through a game without some blood shed. An old chest is used for a card table and upturned buckets form the chairs. When Charlie found that the other men "sat in" with revolvers and stilettos, he secured the emergency fire hatchet and placed it across his knees.

The restaurant set is most realistic with its whitewashed walls and marble topped tables. The walls are decorated with pencil sketches of the habitues of the place drawn by their fellow diners, the ceilings beautified by strings of varicolored tissue paper cut in fantastic shapes, and the doors hung with curtains of beads and straws. In these tawdry surroundings Charlie once more meets his sweetheart of the boat, and together they consume their beans and black coffee, while Charlie is torn between his love making and his anxiety as to where and how he is going to secure the money to pay for what they have eaten.

Bessie Love in "The Sawdust Ring"

Bessie Love will soon make her first appearance on the screen as a bareback rider in the latest Triangle drama, "The Sawdust Ring," in which she is presented as a star.

Janet Magie, played by Miss Love, is a quaint and interesting little character. Though she is snubbed by the other children, owing to her mother's extreme poverty, she is possessed of a bright and happy disposition, and finds solace in the company of her one playmate, a boy of about her own age, who is the victim of the same snubbery that Janet has always suffered. The two children finally take to the open road. Both are determined to start a circus of their own. Arriving in a distant town, they are offered a "job" with a real circus that is playing there. The proprietor later recognizes his daughter, after many unusual scenes in the big circus tent, and little Janet is overjoyed. Miss Love gives a truly remarkable and realistic performance.

"Dogs of War" to Devour Chaplin

Charlie Chaplin will entertain the sailors of one division of his Majesty's dreadnaughts as they wait impatiently "somewhere in the North Sea" for the German fleet to venture through the Bight of Heligoland. His Royal Highness, Prince George of Battenberg, has placed an order for the entire series of Mutual-Chaplins for the men of his command.

The rental fee for the films has been handed over to Lady Beatty's fund for wounded soldiers and sailors. Lady Beatty is the wife of the first lord of the British admiralty and the widow of Marshall Field II of Chicago, son of the American merchant prince.

A British publication, commenting upon the matter, says:

> It will be a source of great pleasure to everyone to know that the inimitable antics of our greatest of all English cinema comedians will be thus used for cheering and heartening the many dull hours that our brave Jack Tars must necessarily endure during the time that they are guarding our interests in all parts of the world.

Chaplin's Mutual comedies are booked on virtually every American battleship and news that Chaplin is to be on the evening's program brings a wholesale cancellation of shore liberty and when the screen is raised the fore deck is jammed with officers and seamen. The "skipper" himself is invariably present.

F. A. Tomes, manager of the Houston, Texas, branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has joined the United States Army and is expecting his call to the front any day. T. W. Chatburn, formerly branch manager at Tampa, has been transferred to Houston and will act as traveling representative out of that office until such time as Mr. Tomes leaves to follow the colors.

What Theater Men Are Doing

AN OPEN FORUM FOR EXHIBITORS

This is a department of, by and for exhibitors. We want YOU represented here. Other managers and proprietors of picture theaters want to hear YOUR experiences, your opinions and your advice. Write to this department telling us your story, how you started, how you grew and all about your theater and how you manage it. Mention your advertising methods and your lobby displays. If possible send in photographs of yourself and your house. Address, The Forum MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Performance at One A. M.

PERHAPS you can pull off some such show as this at your house. It is great for local publicity.

Miss Wilhelmina May Rector, leader of Los Angeles Four Hundred, originated a novel method of entertaining when, with the manager's co-operation, shhe arranged a midnight preview of Fox's "Heart and Soul," featuring Theda Bara, at Miller's Theater.

At 11:30 on the evening selected there was a big crowd in Miller's lobby. The society folk were attired in low-cut evening gowns and evening suits, for the affair was strictly formal.

The idea of giving so novel a function occurred to Miss Rector a few weeks ago. In her tireless search for a new form of social diversion, she hit upon the motion picture as that least exploited. She immediately communicated with Miller's, and made provisions for the private preview when the next Bara picture came.

The theater meantime concluded special negotiations with the New York office of Fox Film Corporation, and received permission to stage the event.

Invitations were sent to 500 persons, and 470 of these accepted. Before the photoplay was thrown upon the screen, a light luncheon was served in the theater.

Promptly at 1 o'clock on Saturday morning the performance began. Miller's Theater was decorated appropriately. The lobby was hung with flags and bunting and a great portrait of Miss Bara stood within a bower of palm leaves. The interior of the house was festooned with garlands of California blossoms and lighted with Japanese lanterns.

Exhibitor Appointed Censor

John Hamrick, manager of the Rex Theater, Seattle, has been appointed by the mayor to serve on the censorship board of the city.

This is a step in the right direction. There are a great many conscientious exhibitors whose judgment and motives are of the best and who would make the best kind of censors.

T. & D. Captured Star

The Tivoli Opera House, San Francisco, secured a lot of valuable advertising and gave its patrons a treat recently when the diminutive star, Mary Miles Minter, appeared on the stage and gave an interesting little talk on her screen experiences connected with the taking of the picture "Periwinkle," which was being shown at that theater.

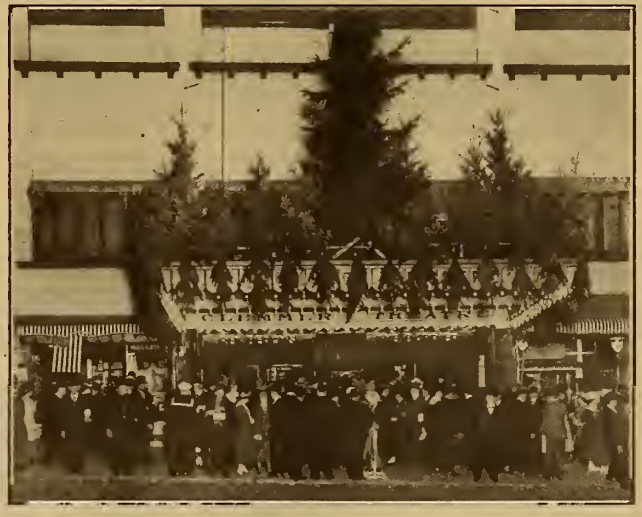
Miss Minter delighted her audience with her bright flow of conversation. She made as big a hit as she registered last April when she appeared at the New T. & D. Theater, Oakland, California, when she packed that house, holding four thousand, till there wasn't even standing room in the aisles. During her speech at Oakland this captivating little sorceress brought cheers from the audience repeatedly.

"It is impossible," she said, "for me to attempt to thank the management of this beautiful theater for the opportunity to meet and talk to you. I am really overjoyed. I never knew that Oakland boasted a theater of such size and beauty as this one, and I never before realized how many admirers I had till I came upon the stage and looked upon this tremendous lily pond of upturned faces.

"To you my appearance is probably nothing remarkable, but to me it is an inspiration and incentive giving me an overwhelming desire to perfect my ability in screen expression and to labor for greater triumphs. This meeting will always remain in my memory as a most pleasant experience and one that will materially assist me in doing better work. I will have the knowledge that you will see me on the screen and I shan't want to disappoint you.

"The picture my director is now making is entitled 'Periwinkle' and is a play of the sea. I understand it will receive its premier presentation in Oakland, and I do hope that you will like it. The coming production, 'Environment,' in which I play the lead, is a lively tale in which I have to wash clothes and suffer a lot for things of which I am not guilty. But everything turns out nicely, of course.

"In conclusion, I want to thank you all for coming today. I also want to thank the Turner and Dahn-



"The Barrier" has been having an unusually good run in Seattle, as can be seen from the above photograph, which was taken on the first night of the week's showing at the Clemmer Theater. The lobby was made up to represent a board and log cabin after the manner of the roughly constructed cabins of the far North, the effect being gained by covering it with painted canvas to represent the boards and logs. The native fir trees further added to the far North atmosphere.

ken circuit for their many courtesies and this opportunity of meeting you, and I mustn't forget to thank the Oakland newspapers for the many nice things they said about me."

Mr. Jobelmann declares it was a big advertisement for his theater and that he got hundreds of dollars' worth of free publicity, besides making a big hit with his patrons.

The unique front of the Old Mill of Dallas.

Old Mill Starts Turning Again

Since the reopening of the Old Mill Theater, Dallas, Texas, destroyed by fire last February, that house has been playing to capacity crowds despite an increase in prices. Like the Phoenix, it arose from its ashes finer and more beautiful than ever, and when the current started flowing again, E. H. Hulsey, its efficient manager, thought he would see if the new Old Mill couldn't grind a little larger denomination of chicken feed than the old one had ever attempted. As a result of his experiment there are even fewer empty seats in his theater now than formerly, although the present prices are 10, 15, 25 and 35 cents, whereas they were formerly 10 15 and 25 cents.

And nobody who patronizes this house feels that he is not getting his money's worth, for it is one of the finest show houses in the Southwest. With a seating capacity of 1,500 persons, rich decorations, a vacuum system in the basement equal to 238 average sized fans in cooling power, which assures a uniform, delightful temperature, a canary bird chorus and rest rooms for ladies and getlemen, this model theater could scarcely be other than popular.

Military ushers greet you as you enter, and as a special feature of its service the Old Mill management has provided a reserved section until six P. M. for children under twelve and unaccompanied young ladies. Triangle pictures, Keystone comedies, and special productions are the features that make its program attractive, and keep the name, Old Mill, ever in the minds of its patrons as a real amusement center.

This message printed on the back of the rotogravure herald issued by Mutual advertising Helen Holmes in the serial, "The Railroad Raiders" is the way Jule Rachman, manager of the Grand Theater, Omaha, Neb., introduced the serial at his theater.

Russell Writes Own Play

William Russell is not only the star but also the author of "Pride and the Man," his next production now being filmed at the American studio for release through Mutual. In "Pride and the Man," Mr. Russell appears as Handsome Jack Bronson, the champion heavyweight and idol of the ring. The greater part of the story is founded on incidents in the life of Mr. Russell during the several years he held the eastern championship as gentleman boxer. There is one prize fight scene which will give his admirers a chance to see William Russell in a real ring battle fight.

The Old Mill of Dallas is now grinding out a fine quality of entertainment following its reconstruction.

"Split Reel" Notes for Theater Men

HOW OTHERS ARE STEERING THE SHIP

JULY 4 is the date set for the Louisiana Exhibitors' Convention to be held in New Orleans at the Grunewald hotel. Mayor Martin Behrman of New Orleans will open the convention with an address of welcome and it is hoped to have Governor Pleasant and other prominent state and city officials present. Over $1,000 has already been subscribed as an entertainment fund for the convention.

A part of the proceeds from the Valentine Theater, Toledo, Ohio, were donated June 1 to the Gardening association of that city to buy seed potatoes for the poor.

Chaplain Chouinard of the Twenty-third infantry has opened a picture house at the Fair grounds in Syracuse, New York. The soldiers will be admitted without charge.

Theodore K. Coleman, aged 14, manager of a picture house at Mt. Carmel, Illinois, is probably the youngest theater manager in the country. This youth contracts for all pictures, pays all bills, and banks all profits.

William J. Pierce, of Rochester, Minnesota, has given up his interests in the Metropolitan Theater in that city to J. E. Reid. Mr. Pierce has taken over the Grand Theater, which has just opened.

Jack Forester, owner of a picture house at Ringling, Oklahoma, was killed last week at his home by two robbers who stole the day's receipts of the theater. He was counting the money at the time he was attacked.

In compliance with the injunction of Fire Chief A. J. Trodick of Great Falls, Montana, theater owners in that city are going to install sprinkler systems around the operating booths as an added protection against fire.

Representatives of the St. Paul women's clubs have met to discuss plans for the formation of a film censorship board. Their idea was to appoint a central committee, composed of representatives of all women's clubs, and a number of sub-committees to inspect the theaters.

Exhibitors of Grand Forks, North Dakota, have acted in concert in boosting admission prices on the grounds that it was necessary to "keep business going" or else succumb to the unprecedented increase in costs. They decided to stay in business.

Edison Conquest pictures have been selected by the Woman's Club of Omaha, Nebraska, for children's performances which are to be given Saturday mornings in various Omaha theaters. The films selected are endorsed by schools, churches, women's clubs and Y. M. C. A.'s all over the country.

Probably the most successful exhibition conducted by the Y. M. C. A. in this country is that in Coatesville, Pennsylvania, where the association has an auditorium seating more than one thousand persons. Only the best pictures are shown, and a man is employed to give his entire time to selecting pictures and conducting exhibitions. This association has been conducting pictures for more than five years, the exhibitions being given every afternoon and evening with daily change of program. On Saturday afternoons special entertainments for young people are given at which a charge of 5 cents for two admissions is made.

In observance of what was known as Second Regiment Week, the history, scenes, buildings, industries, organizations and people of Troy, New York, were presented last week in motion pictures at Proctor's Griswold Theater. The Second Regiment Band was in attendance and furnished the music at each performance.

Every move the Liberty Loan made during the last days of the campaign for the $2,000,000,000 was recorded on a dial established in front of the Rialto Theater, New York. One hand of the dial showed the progress of New York subscriptions and the other kept track of the total subscription throughout the country.

Just as an absorbing photoplay reached a thrilling crisis in the Central Square Theater, East Boston, recently a large portion of the plaster of the ceiling under the balcony loosened and fell on the audience below. Fully fifteen people were showered with the falling plaster but only two were injured. The audience was frightened at first but order was soon restored.

The Strand Theater, New York, presented its patrons a treat one week when in conjunction with the exhibition of the picture "Roping Mountain Lions in Montana," it also introduced in flesh and blood, Bob Bakker, the most daring wild animal roper of the West. Mr. Bakker delivered a lecture on "lion taming," as executed with a rope, while his pictures appeared on the screen.

The management of the Strand Theater, New York, is already beginning to feel the country's call to arms. Several of the military looking ushers have already left to join the colors and others have given notice that they will do so in the near future. Manager Edel has issued a statement to the employes of the theater that any young man now in the employ of the Strand who enlists will be given his position back after the war if he so desires.

James McClenaghan, former manager of the Regent Theater, 602 Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Minnesota, has been sentenced by Judge W. E. Hale to 90 days in the workhouse for showing the film, "Garden of Knowledge," which a jury declared was obscene. McClenaghan was convicted by a jury in district court three weeks ago after a five-day trial. On the appeal of his attorney he was given his freedom until June 25.

The residents of Borough Park, Brooklyn, turned out in large numbers the day before national registration day in a visit to neighborhood playhouses whose proprietors had agreed to donate the day's receipts to the cause of the Borough Park Home Defense League. June 4 had been set aside in which to raise money to buy uniforms and equipment for the members of Borough Park in the citizen body of local defenders who were unable to equip themselves out of their own pockets. And the theater managers came to the rescue. They displayed their patriotism in rather unmistakable form, and incidentally got themselves in mighty solid with the people on their side of the river Jordan.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of Bluebird photoplays that are now being shown at the Playhouse, Chicago, has put in operation at that theater a novel scheme to boost business. Any citizen soldier presenting his registration card will be admitted free to the Playhouse providing he is accompanied by one paid admission. In other words, anyone's registration card will admit two for the price of one.

A small fire in a closet off the first balcony of the Globe Theater, New York, one day last week caused considerable excitement and choked Broadway between Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh streets, with a tremendous crowd. The flare-up occurred just as the last of the afternoon audience at the firm, "The Lincoln Cycle," was filing into the street. By the time firemen had arrived ushers had put out the fire with small damage.

A new and "best yet" lot of war pictures were shown at the Strand, New York, last week in conjunction with the regular program of that theater. Manager Edel considers himself fortunate in obtaining "Fighting with Our Allies in the Balkans," which, he claims, are the most realistic battle pictures yet shown in this country. They were taken on the actual battle field under the auspices of the French general staff for the National Archives of France.

A committee representing the moving picture interests of Paterson, New Jersey, appeared before a recent meeting of the aldermatic board of that city to protest against the $10 fee now charged for holding carnivals within the city limits and urging that $1,000 be substituted for the amount now asked. The picture men say the carnivals are injuring their business, and that Paterson, because of its $10 a week fee, is drawing more of them than all the rest of the Atlantic coast.

The Empress, Majestic, Liberty, Lyric, Folly and Palace Theaters of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, publish a snappy sixteen page bulletin each week devoted to the bills for the ensuing week which are to be found on the screens of the above mentioned houses of entertainment. By combining and issuing the publication together they get rather an imposing paper, bristling with newsy screen gossip and snappy cuts. H. W. Smith is the editor and C. E. Beard holds down the position of business manager on this "share and share alike" playhouse gazette.

"On Trial" was the play which held the audiences at New York's Rialto last week. Mr. Rothapfel in presenting this picture to Broadway planned striking innovations for its premiere debut and provided stirring music fitting the action of the play. "The Land of the Rising Sun," the serial with Japan as a background, entered its third week on the Rialto screen. "The Thirteenth Labor of Hercules" and Animated Magazine pictures were the films which completed the program.

The last program of the Garfield Theater, Chicago, announced the week of June 18 was to be "Feminine star week." A new celebrity of the gentler sex appears in a five-reel feature each day of the week. Alice Joyce headed the bill Monday; Dorothy Dalton, Tuesday; Nance O'Neil, Wednesday; Ethel Clayton, Thursday; Bessie Barriscale, Friday; Frances Nelson and Ruth Roland, Saturday; and Susan Grandaise, Sunday.

Manager William M. James of the Broadway Theater, Columbus, Ohio, was placed under arrest Monday, June 4, as a result of showing the feature film entitled "Purity." A number of Columbus preachers denounced the picture in their sermons of the day before, and the warrant charged that the film was "not passed upon, approved nor stamped by the state board of censors." This charge was denied by the censors, who declared that their certificate of approval was attached to the film some time ago. Scantily draped poses of Audrey Munson, who was featured, were the cause of the complaints against "Purity."

Directors of the Fort Pitt Theater Company, owners of the Pitt Theater of Pittsburgh, voted last week to increase their capital stock from $20,000 to $100,000. This increase, it is explained, is made for the purpose of purchasing outright for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia all big pictures which will be exhibited from now on in the Pitt Theater. William Moore Patch, president and managing director, explains that heretofore the owners of these pictures have exhibited them at the playhouse on the percentage basis. In the future the theater will not exhibit any picture that it does not own outright in this territory.

The use of picture houses in Philadelphia has been enlisted by the First regiment infantry, national guard, of that city which has entered upon a recruiting campaign to bring the regiment up to war strength. At thirty-two theaters slides were shown at each performance bearing inscriptions calling upon the men of the city to sustain the reputation of one of its crack military organizations. One slide read as follows: "Male help wanted. An old established organization which is well and familiarly known as a Philadelphia institution, has urgent need of 600 clean, live and aggressive hustlers, 18 to 35 years, to join in a little enterprise that may include an ocean voyage and a visit to Berlin." First Regiment Infantry.

The big motion picture theaters are forcing the smaller show houses out of business, Charles Abrahams, a theater owner, told a Chicago aldermanic committee recently in protesting against the plan for a sliding scale of theater license fees.

"I have three motion picture theaters, each having a seating capacity of 300, that cost me $12,000, $15,000 and $17,000 respectively," he said. "Today I cannot sell these theaters for 25 per cent of what I paid for them. The big houses are grabbing off the feature films and placing them on exhibition so that the small houses cannot get them. They are driving the small theater owners out of business."

Mr. Abrahams suggested that in his opinion a proper license fee for picture theaters would be at the rate of 45 cents a seat for a year.

Making the Audience Uncomfortable

EYE-STRAIN used to be rather a popular term among the enemies of motion pictures. Learned doctors wrote treatises and read papers pointing out the optical dangers of picture show attendance, which were promptly denied and refuted by other doctors equally learned—or perhaps more so. After projection principles and improvements had been brought more carefully to the attention of the public, discussion along this line died down, and now the subject is seldom mentioned. The national picture show habit has brought none of the predicted train of eye troubles.

Nevertheless, it occasionally happens that the major portion of an audience will leave a performance complaining of headache, dizziness and pain in the eyes. That happened at a local theater the other evening; a theater whose projection normally is beyond reproach. Steady patrons, who had never experienced the trouble before, watched the pictures with a distress that was more keen and lasted longer than their pleasure.

The theater manager's neglect of duty in such cases is too obvious to need comment. Of course it is the operator's function to see that his shutter is correctly adjusted, and to leave it that way. But the manager is responsible for the operator's mistakes. Furthermore, the manager should know enough about projection to recognize the symptoms of bad work at a glance. He should not have to acquire a headache of his own to know there is something wrong.

The fact that bad projection induces disagreeable pathological effects is no criticism of the picture business, any more than cramps is an argument against swimming. The time is past when oculists can gain a hearing by attacking the films. Reading in a bad light is just as baneful; but in that case the individual is at fault. With bad projection it is the innocent spectator who suffers. It is not the industry, but the careless management, that is to blame.

And the careless manager who allows even one audience go home with a headache pays in money for his shiftlessness. Some of the people with sore eyes do not come back as soon as they intended to. Worse still, perhaps they switch their allegiance to another house. And they tell their friends about the headache, too. It is the more interesting as a subject of discussion because it is a surprise and a mystery. They probably never experienced it before, and do not want to again.

With all the money and brains that have been spent by manufacturers for the perfection of projection, there is absolutely no reasonable excuse for painful pictures. The theater man who buys the latest improvements in projecting machines and then neglects to check up on the work of his operator is at least a poor executive. And being a poor executive and consequently a poor exhibitor, costs money in lost business that the average exhibitor can ill afford.

The picture theater business is not prosperous enough to carry any suspicion of a public-be-damned policy and get away with it. And a careless policy is just as bad. The absent proprietor and the fifteen dollar a week manager are responsible for a lot of pretty expensive losses.

One little detail of neglect may cost only one per cent of the trade—and that isn't very much.

But ten such details may very readily lose the theater enough business to slide it from the profit to the loss column. And when you add up careless projection, lack of courtesy, admittance of rowdies, disturbances of the audience, poor ventilation, indifferent selection of programs, nondelivery of promised pictures, indifferent music, misleading advertising and offensive posters, it is quite easy to find ten objectionable items.

Running a picture theater is getting to be quite a business of details—and invariably the details are more important than the pictures. The exhibitors who cannot learn that fact will continue to report that business is "rotten."

Why Film Progress Is Slow in Church and School

BECAUSE entertainment is the great hunger of the human race, and because the motion picture satisfies it as no other art has ever done, the words "motion picture" and "entertainment" have become practically synonymous in the popular mind.

That peculiar yet natural condition has been the greatest of all obstacles in the path of advancement of the motion picture along educational and commercial lines.

It is a fact that a proposal to use, in school, films of the most intensely educational nature cannot be distinguished, in the public eye, from a proposal to furnish entertainment for students.

Not only parents, but school boards, regard the installation of projectors in class rooms as a transplanting of the theater into forbidden environment. There are many exceptions to this attitude among educators of course, but not enough to encourage the rapid advance of that branch of the art.

The same thing is true in church circles—probably on a still less logical and more emotional basis.

In every church there are always some people who object to the showing of films during services on the grounds that "entertainment should not be introduced to a house of worship." They will not concede that a motion picture can be anything but entertaining. Being entertaining it must be frivolous—possibly sacrilegious—certainly unorthodox.

So the two most conservative institutions in the world, the church and the school, shy away from the motion picture because it has been used for pleasure—is, indeed, customarily used for pleasure, since pleasure is the chief end and aim of mankind. They forget the parallel of music; music, which has been used for pleasure, for sorrow, for virtue and vice, for the lowest of carnal and the highest of spiritual purposes since the world began. With their customary lack of logic they fail to see that the motion picture, like music or the printed word, is but a passive vehicle for registering and transmitting the purpose of its composer.

The motion picture is just as suitable, just as efficient, and just as appropriate for religious work or educational work as is the book, which may be a bible, a history or a novel, all printed by the same house and from the same type. The picture itself is neither entertaining, educational nor religious. It is merely used for entertaining, educational or religious purposes, as the case may be. The distinction should be clear to those who possess reasoning faculties; but it still seems to be obscure to many.

We speak often of the progress the film is making in educational and religious circles, and in proof we cite a few lone examples of its use. But we know that the pictures are really making slow headway in those fields where they could be of paramount usefulness to mankind.

The educational and religious causes are distinctly the losers by this neglect; the picture is doing well in those fields which have adopted it. But to round out its full value to civilization we would like to see it doing its effective work in the school and the church as well as the theater. It will achieve that place only when the guardians of school and church learn that amusement has no monopoly of the moving illustration.

Attempt to Destroy Preparedness Film

OPERATOR UNDER ARREST AS ALIEN ENEMY

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of V. L. S. E., as a result of an attempt to destroy the preparedness feature, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," has issued a warning to the motion picture interests of the country to take every precaution to safeguard films against damage by persons in the employ of the German government.

The warning comes as a result of the arrest of George Hann, who had been acting as an operator at the Windamere Theater, East Cleveland, Ohio, who is being held under ten thousand dollars bail as an alien enemy, after approximately two hundred matches had been found in the shipping case containing the reels of "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Greater Vitagraph's big preparedness spectacle.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," had been presented at the Windamere Theater for two days and the print shown was due for presentation at the Auditorium Theater, Newark, Ohio, on May 30.

The assistant shipping clerk of V. L. S. E. arrived at the Windamere Theater before the last show of the day had closed. He personally packed the "Womanhood" reels in the shipping case and started for the express company office in an automobile.

Before starting, according to testimony, George Hann, the operator, asked permission to ride in the automobile as far as his home.

Hann was dropped at his home and the trip was continued to the express office, where the case was shipped.

Manager Fenberg of the Auditorium Theater drove over from Newark and claimed the print at the office of the express company at Columbus. He had ordered that a complete musical score of "Womanhood" be shipped with the print, and as soon as Mr. Fenberg received the shipping case he opened it to see if the musical score, which he had ordered, had been included.

He found his musical score, but he also found two hundred of the old-fashioned sulphur matches which had been carefully arranged so that the friction or the heat of the projection room would ignite them. Not only did he find the matches, but he found that the covers of the boxes were open and ends of films were sticking out.

The matches were carefully arranged between the box containing the bottom reel and the next above, and between the box containing the top reel and the next below.

After finding the matches Mr. Fenberg reported the details to the state fire marshal's office at Columbus. An investigation was started, with the result that George Hann was placed under arrest by federal officers. Later a statement was issued from the state fire marshal's office that Hann had placed the matches in the shipping case while it was in his possession in the rear seat of the automobile during the trip from Windamere Theater to East Fortieth street.

Federal authorities acknowledge that the war preparedness pictures such as "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," and "The Battle Crop of Peace" have had a gratifying effect in increasing enlistments wherever they have been shown and the authorities expect that these and pictures along the same lines will have tremendous weight in overcoming some of the opposition to general conscription when the men already registered are called to the colors. And they are prepared to go the limit in the punishment of any person who endeavors to prevent the showing of these preparedness pictures.

Vitagraph Renames Officers

Albert E. Smith was re-elected president and treasurer of the Vitagraph Company of America, at a meeting held on June 14. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton was re-elected vice-president and secretary. Former Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock was elected chairman of the board of directors and general council of the company.

A. E. Smith (center) who has just been re-elected president and treasurer of the Vitagraph Company of America, and, on the left and right, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, re-elected vice-president and secretary, and former Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock, made chairman of the board of directors and general council for the company.

Prior to the election of officers a meeting of stockholders was held, at which those selected as directors were Albert E. Smith, J. Stuart Blackton, Walter W. Irwin, Clendennin J. Ryan, H. T. Vreeland and Frank H. Hitchcock.

Immediately following the selection of directors Messrs. Smith and Blackton were re-elected by the unanimous vote of the board.

The board of directors was in session for several hours, at which production plans were discussed for the forthcoming year.

While everything appeared to have been going at top speed at the Big V. studios in Brooklyn and at Hollywood, California, upon leaving the meeting Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E., the sales organization for Greater Vitagraph, predicted that within seventy-two hours the two big studios would be far outstripping any previous effort.

Netter Opens New Office

Leon D. Netter, head of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, announces the opening of his new offices at 404 Sincere Building, Cleveland, Ohio, from which he will operate through the Ohio territory.

In addition to "The Garden of Allah," Mr. Netter will exploit such big features as "Beware of Strangers," Audrey Munson in "Purity," "The Libertine," with John Mason, and Rex Beach's "The Ne'er-Do-Well," in conjunction with a number of other feature productions.

KERRIGAN BEGINS PRODUCING

Star Back in Los Angeles After Five Months' Tour of Picture Centers of United States—Plunges Into Work

J. Warren Kerrigan ended his five months' tour of the principal picture theaters of the United States on June 5, when he reached Los Angeles after completing a journey of over 12,000 miles.

In that time he visited 300 cities, appeared in nearly 1,000 theaters, and addressed or shook hands with people computed to number over 750,000. He was personally greeted by many public officials, attended formal and informal banquets and distributed some 20,000 autographed photographs.

When Mr. Kerrigan left his train in Los Angeles he went immediately to the home of his mother in Hollywood, where he spent the remainder of the day. He would not talk business with anyone until the next morning. Mr. Kerrigan has always been noted for his devotion to his mother. She was his first thought on his return from his journey. His first day at home after his long absence belonged to her.

After arriving in Los Angeles, Mr. Kerrigan visited his studio and signified that he was ready to begin work on "A Man's Man." This will be his first fling as an independent producer.

Lois Wilson, the young screen beauty, who won high praise for her work in many special feature productions, is Mr. Kerrigan's leading woman. Eugene Pallette plays the role of "Captain Benivedo," Harry Von Meter, "Ricardo Ruey," Edward Coxen, "Tom Cafferty, alias Don Juan Cafertero," and Ida Lewis the important character part of "Mother Jenks," the proprietress of a cantina in the capital of a Central American republic. Mr. Kerrigan plays the role of John Stuart Webster, a western mining engineer.

The locale of the scenes of "A Man's Man" are a railroad station in an Arizona desert, Denver, New Orleans, and a Central American republic called Sobrante, which is on the verge of revolution.

Bessie Barriscale's company, producing "Rose o' Paradise," had some railroad scenes to film, and, as the first big scene in "A Man's Man" is a railroad station in an Arizona desert, Mr. Kane put both companies, numbering about 400 people, on a Salt Lake railroad train one day last week to cover these features.

Here's Doug Fairbanks watching someone else work. Director John Emerson is with him on the tower of art and they're observing a scene from "Wild and Woolly." Photograph exclusive to Motography.

Best Guide for Exhibitors

Motography, Chicago:

The department of your paper "What the Picture Did for Me" is the best guide for exhibitors that are using the open booking plan that has ever been printed. Most departments of this kind are not valuable to the exhibitor.—E. R. Prigmore, Idle Hour Theater, Charleston, Mississippi.

The Barriscale scenes were first made and then the train was turned over to the Kerrigan company. A run was made to a station forty miles distant which met requirements. Here Mr. Kerrigan, as Webster, the mining man just off the desert, thrashed a drummer who persisted in annoying Miss Ruey, traveling alone.

Both the Kerrigan and Barriscale companies witnessed the fight of the mining man and the drummer in this scene. Mr. Kerrigan followed the book and scenario very faithfully in this incident. After pummeling the commercial man all over the station platform he gave the scene a very sensational finish by tossing him over his head.

"A Man's Man" will be ready for release in August.

NEW PICKFORD PICTURE

"The Little American," Said to Be Greatest Dramatic Effort of Famous Star—Is All Ready for July 2 Release

What is expected to score the greatest dramatic triumph ever experienced by Mary Pickford, in addition to presenting a particularly timely film production, has just been completed at the Lasky studios, Hollywood. The new picture, to be released by Artcraft on July 2, has been aptly titled "The Little American" and discloses a story of powerful patriotic appeal staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

As a result of combining the two arts of Mary Pickford and Cecil B. De Mille in the presentation of this spectacular subject, the producers feel they have achieved a distinct advance in the present photoplay standard. Captain Ian Hay Beith, author of "The First 100,000," and British army officer, was among those whose assistance proved invaluable in making the picture.

As Angela Moore, the little American girl who braves the dangers of the war zone, Mary Pickford appears in a part that demands much of her histrionic finesse. Among the spectacular scenes in which she personally appears are those depicting the sinking of the "Veritania" in mid-ocean. The realism presented in these views is pronounced the most startling ever shown on the screen.

Although the story deals with the war, it is not of the same type as the ordinary war drama, as it deals more with the intimate than with the general. It is felt that the picture will strike a responsive chord in the breast of every American, and released, as it is, in time for July 4th presentation, should create a sensation wherever shown. In keeping with the work of the star is that of an exceptional cast, including such well-known players as Hobart Bosworth, Jack Holt, James Neill, Raymond Hatton, Guy Oliver, Edythe Chapman, Lillian Leighton, Walter Long, Dewitt Jennings and Little Ben Alexander.

We have no doubt but that this romantic American-Mutual offering will meet with the hearty approval of exhibitors. It's "The Upper Crust," and appears June 25.

Gail Kane in "The Upper Crust"

Gail Kane has an excellent medium for display of her effective genius in "The Upper Crust," her latest American-Mutual production with a strong dramatic plot and a vein of comedy. "The Upper Crust" is released June 25. Miss Kane is at her best in a role that has a touch of the rogue in it. She is at her prettiest when "putting one over" in some prank that involves her in complications, and she always manages to smile her way out with ease and grace.

"The Upper Crust," developed from Charles Sherman's amusing novel of the same title, furnishes Miss Kane with just the opportunities she requires. There are complications through which Miss Kane, as the pretty Molly O'Toole, the young Irish housekeeper, makes her way with fascinating dash and good humor, landing, in the finale, just as she always does, completely vindicated and victorious.

As the pretty housekeeper pursued by eager swains who believe her to be a widow with a million or two, Molly plays with fir and almost gets burned, for by the time she had led the man with a fortune of twenty millions to the point of proposing, she discovers that her heart has been given entirely to the penniless chauffeur who drives her mistress' cars. At last her heart triumphs, the twenty millions dwindle into oblivion, and she gives herself to the poor chauffeur only to find that he is really the son of the wealthy family for which she is working—and has a few millions to his own credit.

MORE FIRE RULES

Two Blazes in Theater Booths Stir Up Fire Prevention Committee—Appeal for Greater Precaution in Handling Film

An appeal to the owners and managers of motion picture theaters in metropolitan districts urging the immediate adoption of greater safety precautions in the handling of film in projection booths and rooms has been issued by the committee on fire prevention of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

During a recent week there have been two motion picture fires in the projection booths of motion picture theaters. In one well known theater a slight fire in the booth through the prompt attention of the operator and the theater attendants was extinguished before the firemen arrived and the audience quickly marshaled out of the theater without panic.

In another theater, however, a small blaze spread to the films in the booth and caused a bad panic in the audience, although the fire did not spread beyond the booth. Women and children were trampled upon and badly injured but fortunately no one was killed.

These two fires serve to emphasize the fact that it is the panic hazard which must be guarded against and that every precaution must be taken to prevent the occurrence and spread of a film fire within the booth itself. The following recommendations are offered to the theater owners and managers from the wide experience in fire prevention of the national association's committee.

1. Comply strictly with local regulation and see that the employees do the same.

2. Enforce the "no smoking" rule in the booth absolutely. The great majority of film fires are really caused by lighted cigars or cigarettes, although defective wiring, electrical sparks, spontaneous ignition are offered in most cases as excuses.

3. Keep all film when not actually in use in tin cans or other containers. The burning of one reel of film will fill a theater with its fumes.

4. Don't keep in the booth or a connecting room any film except one day's supply. Unfortunately the booths in many theaters serve as store houses for old junk and unless this practice stops there is going to be some film fire.

5. Keep the booth neat and clean and free from rubbish. Throw all film scraps and clippings into a self closing metal can.

6. Have the wiring, globes and electrical equipment frequently and regularly examined.

7. Have a couple of pails of water in the booth, also have a pail of sand. If the sand is thrown on a small film fire it will quickly smother it and not injure the film. A soda acid and extinguisher is also a mighty good thing. The best precaution of all, if you can arrange it, is to have a couple of automatic sprinkler heads put in the booth.

Most film fires have started through carelessness and could easily have been put out at the start with a bucket of water.

Jane and Katherine Lee, small of size but internationally big in reputation, the two best known and most loved of motion picture children, have been rewarded by William Fox with a five-reel production in which they will have the stellar roles.

INCE AND TRIANGLE PART

H. O. Davis, Formerly of Universal, Now General Manager of Triangle—Is Already in Charge—S. A. Lynch Is President

Thomas H. Ince has closed a deal with the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Triangle Film Corporation, whereby he sold them all of his holdings in both companies, and has entirely severed his connection with both companies. The sum involved was $750,000.

H. O. Davis, Triangle's new general manager.

Mr. Ince's plans for the future are not as yet decided, but he will undoubtedly produce large features on his own account.

Mack Sennett has also severed his connections with Triangle, making Mack Sennett-Keystones a thing of the past.

H. O. Davis, formerly general manager of Universal City, is now general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. Davis has already assumed active charge of the producing units of Triangle and has started things which promise big developments and improvements in their pictures.

Mr. Davis' motion picture career is more brilliant than lengthy. He entered the business about a year and a half ago as executive head of Universal City. He put the plant upon an efficient basis in short order. Radical changes were made under his direction, needless expenditures were cut to a minimum, quality was raised, inner factions were eliminated, and within a surprisingly short space of time this immense plant was ship-shape and running smoothly.

"It is possible that we will increase production with the opening of the Fine Arts studio," Mr. Davis said to a representative of MOTOGRAPHY. "Just who will work there and what productions they are scheduled to make, we are not ready to announce as yet, but the studio will be running again soon. Culver City and the Keystone plant we still own and control, with their entire equipment, directors and stars."

Mr. Davis is authority for the statement that William S. Hart and C. Gardner Sullivan, the powerful writer who has been responsible for so many of the Ince stories, are both to remain with Triangle.

Fifty per cent of the common stock of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and $950,000 of the preferred stock and other interests formerly owned by Superpictures, Inc., and other interests, have been acquired by S. A. Lynch, who was recently elected president of Triangle Distributing Corporation and S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc. Y. F. Freeman has been elected secretary of the Triangle Corporation, to take the place left by the resignation of Frederick L. Collins. R. W. Lynch has been made vice-president and Fred Kent, treasurer. Mr. Lynch and Mr. Freeman now hold the places on the board of directors formerly occupied by Mr. Collins and R. W. France.

President Collins of McClure publications and Superpictures has made the following statement:

We are withdrawing from Triangle with every good wish for its success. Mr. Lynch has paid us every cent of money that was coming to us and a substantial profit besides. I have great confidence in Mr. Lynch's ability to handle the Triangue Distributing Corporation's business, also in the manufacturing and general business policies of the Triangle Film Corporation under the new general manager, H. O. Davis. The best evidence of our attitude on this point is a contract we have just entered into for the manufacture by Triangle Film of six big productions to be sold on state right basis and the distribution of twelve additional pictures per year through Triangle Distributing Corporation. Full details in regard to these forthcoming Superpictures will shortly be announced.

"The Deemster" Sold Abroad

"The Deemster," with Derwent Hall Caine, son of the great Manx author, in the star role, has been sold in several foreign countries within the past fortnight. Mr. Jury, of London, bought it for England and the United Kingdom, while J. L. Nerlien, Ltd., of Christiania, Norway, bought the rights for Norway, Sweden and Denmark. The Commonwealth of Australia and New Zealand were the buyers for their countries, and Regal Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, secured the rights to Canada.

During the same period a number of states have been snapped up by state rights buyers in this country. Mention was made last week of Warren & Clarke, the circus people, getting the rights to Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Immediately after that sale, Walter S. Butterfield, of the State Film Company, Battle Creek, Michigan, bought the Michigan state rights.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has allied himself with some of the ablest men in the industry for the distribution of his massive photoplay, "The Deemster." Lewis J. Selznick has the New York state rights; Louis B. Mayer, the New England state rights; F. E. Backer, Mammoth Feature Film Corporation, the New Jersey state rights; Stanley V. Mastbaum and Harry Schwalbe, Eastern Pennsylvania; B. Amsterdam, of the Masterpiece Feature Film Company, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Messrs. Wilson and Stedman, of the American Maid Film Company, Minneapolis, the Minnesota and North and South Dakota rights, and Charles Klopoth, of Exclusive Features, San Francisco, the California, Arizona and Nevada rights.

Every one of these buyers report excellent bookings for "The Deemster" and unqualified newspaper reviews wherever the picture has been shown.

Essanays in Two Sizes

For the present the Essanay Company is confining its output to two and five-reel subjects. It has been found that these two lengths are more in demand than any others.

Much care has been taken with the Black Cat and "Do Children Count?" subjects so that many exhibitors who are devoting one or two nights a week to short subjects or variety programs may use one of these pictures as the chief attraction. This plan is proving especially successful where a daily change policy is still adhered to and the patrons have tired of too many long features.

Goldwyn Elects Officers

BRANCH MANAGERS NAMED—OTHER GOLDWYN NEWS

Samuel Goldfish, president Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and Alfred Weiss, one of the vice-presidents.

GOLDWYN DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, recently chartered at Albany, New York, with a capital stock of $1,000,000 to handle the Goldwyn Pictures releases throughout the United States has held its first meeting and elected the following officers:

President: Samuel Goldfish.
Vice President: Archibald Selwyn.
Vice President: Alfred Weiss.
Vice President: F. B. Warren.
Treasurer: Gabriel L. Hess.

At this meeting, announcement was made that branch offices had been opened in the following cities in charge of the men named:

Atlanta, Arthur Lucas; Boston, Harry F. Campbell, 40-44 Piedmont Street; Buffalo, George A. Hickey, 200 Pearl Street; Chicago, F. M. Brockell, 110 South State Street; Cincinnati, C. C. Hite, 215 East Fifth Street; Cleveland, H. A. Bandy; Dallas, Louis B. Remy; Denver, Walter S. Rand, 1440 Welton Street; Detroit, Abraham I. Shapiro, Peter Smith Bldg., Griswold and State Streets; Kansas City, Richard Robertson; Los Angeles, G. C. Parsons; Minneapolis, R. E. Bradford; New York, Samuel Eckman, 509 Fifth Avenue; Philadelphia, George T. Ames; Pittsburgh, C. C. McKibbin, 1201 Liberty Avenue; San Francisco, Charles M. Simmons; St. Louis, Floyd Lewis, 3312 Lindell Avenue; Seattle, C. F. Hill.

The street locations of the offices listed above without addresses are soon to be announced. A branch will also be opened in Washington, D. C., within a fortnight.

Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., of Canada, with head offices in Toronto, has opened the following branches in the Dominion:

Toronto, W. J. Reid, 27 Yonge Street; Calgary, H. L. Nathanson, 315 MacLean Street; Montreal, E. English, 337 Bleury Street; St. John, I. Sourkes, 19 Market Square; Vancouver, William Hansher, 304 Orpheum Block; Winnipeg, L. Kaufman, 48 Aiken Block.

In the brief period of sixty days Goldwyn virtually has girdled the North American continent and is rapidly arranging for expansion southward.

Mr. Goldfish will be the active head of the Goldwyn distributing system which is pioneering again by introducing new methods in film salesmanship. Incidentally, for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry, Goldwyn will establish a simultaneous release of its productions around the world—the same pictures appearing on the same days in the United States, Canada, Australia, Great Britain and other lands.

Mae Marsh Day to Open Convention

The honor of opening the annual exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to be held in the Coliseum, Chicago, beginning Saturday, July 14, has been given to Goldwyn.

The first day of the convention will be known and advertised as "Mae Marsh day" and the famous little star of "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," and other pictures, will arrive in Chicago on the morning of the fourteenth, accompanied by Samuel Goldfish and other officers of the Goldwyn organization.

The enormous attendance that always is found on the opening day of the big Chicago show is certain to be interested in the personality of this young girl of twenty, who attained fame and reputation first under the Griffith direction.

Hugo Ballin, William H. Cotton, Goldwyn's artist-specialists, and Herbert Messmore, scenic constructor and technical director, are building and designing special settings for the Goldwyn booths at the Coliseum and will journey to Chicago to erect them.

A late cable from Mary Garden, now in Paris, brings the information that she may arrive in America a day or two after the Chicago exposition has opened, but she gives the assurance that she, too, will journey to Chicago to appear at the exposition during the following week, as the closing day comes July 22.

"Good morning!" and "Good afternoon!" poses of Madge Kennedy, who is very familiar with the sound of laughter pouring back over the footlights, but who is now come dying for Goldwyn Pictures.

F. M. Brockell, manager of Goldwyn's Chicago offices, will be in active charge of this company's Coliseum exhibit and handle the local arrangements for Miss Marsh's appearance.

Rockwell Proud of Its Maxine Elliott

Perhaps no city in the United States is so balanced on the tiptoe of expectancy over the coming screen debut of Maxine Elliott as Rockland, Maine, the famous beauty's birthplace. Miss Elliott's managers have received applications from virtually all the Rockland picture houses for advance bookings of the two pictures thus far completed by the star who for years has been known as "the loveliest girl who ever came out of New England."

While there are certain reciprocal advantages on both sides, a beautiful woman like Maxine Elliott can give a town more advertising and publicity than the town could give to any famous beauty. In her childhood Maxine Elliott did not bear that name at all. She was Jessie Dermott, the daughter of a Maine sea captain.

Arden Studios Enlisted

The Arden studios of Fifth avenue, New York, is the latest colony of artists and decorators enlisted to lend their skill to the artistic preparation of Goldwyn Pictures.

The Arden Studios have several bases for their reputation throughout the decorative and art worlds. They are conducted by Miss Elizabeth Averill, a niece of Mrs. E. H. Harriman, and Mrs. John W. Alexander, widow of one of America's greatest painters.

Both Mrs. Alexander and Miss Averill have promised to write a series of practical articles for the owners of theaters exhibiting Goldwyn Pictures, showing them how picture houses may be beautified at comparatively trifling expense and how by simplicity theaters are improved not merely in looks but in acoustics and lighting.

William Duncan and Carol Holloway. Miss Holloway plays the only feminine role in "Hearts of Flame," Greater Vitagraph's new adventure serial, which will be released in the early fall. This new thriller, which comprises fifteen episodes, stars Mr. Duncan, who is also responsible for the direction.

Madge Kennedy Completes First Picture

The steady and satisfying progress made in the screening of the first of the farce comedies in which Madge Kennedy is starred has added another to the list of completed Goldwyn Pictures.

Miss Kennedy is already at work preparing for the second of her productions, and in her new role the charming young comedienne will wear even more stunning gowns than she set off to advantage in the picture she has just completed.

New York City F.I.L.M. Club Notes

Every member of the New York City F.I.L.M. Club was present at the meeting last week in which the new officers donned harness and E. M. Saunders, president-elect took the chair. Among the disputes adjusted between exhibitors and exchangemen was one in which an exchange was asked to pay an exhibitor $80 as damages for a broken contract.

John T. Cronin, acting secretary of the club, tendered his resignation, having been called to the colors. He does not cease to "belong," however, as he was unanimously elected as an honorary member of the organization. In the business taken up it was decided to elect delegates at the next meeting to attend the F.I.L.M. Club's National Convention to be held in Chicago the 14th, 15th and 16th of July.

Deals for "Redemption"

Several big deals for state rights are pending for the big Evelyn Nesbitt-Russell Thaw picture, "Redemption," now running at Geo. M. Cohan's Theater in New York.

It is understood some of the biggest and best known state rights buyers in the country are negotiating for the film, and it is probable that the deals for the richest territory in the country will be closed shortly. There is no let up in the interest in the picture in spite of the fact that it has passed its fourth week at the Cohan, with sell-outs at every performance.

It is Julius Steger's production, directed by Mr. Steger himself.

Handle "Should She Obey?"

The state rights territories already closed for the Arizona feature, "Should She Obey?" are as follows:

Greater New York—M. H. Hoffman, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York; Dominion of Canada—Famous Players Film Service, Toronto, Canada; Illinois and Indiana—Greiver & Herz, Consumers Bldg., Chicago.

The distribution of state rights for "Should She Obey?" is under the sole direction of the Renowned Pictures Corporation, Akiba Weinberg, president, 1600 Broadway, New York, and it is to this latter address that all inquiries regarding state rights bookings should be addressed.

Director Charles J. Brabin and his assistant, Jack Kennedy, are making rapid progress at Mayfair studios filming "Persuasive Peggy," in which the inimitable Peggy Hyland is featured, supported by an excellent cast including William Davidson, Mary Cecil Parker, Arthur Housman and Jules Cowles. Some of the scenes were made at Niagara Falls.

Fairbanks is here seen grabbing a man up from the ground as though he were a mere bundle of oats and cantering gently away with him tucked under his arm. It's more of the quiet and peace of "Wild and Woolly."

BUSINESS GOOD, SAYS GOFF

Assistant General Manager of V. L. S. E. Sends in Favorable Report on Conditions in Picture Industry, Especially from Exhibitor's Standpoint

Albert W. Goff, assistant general manager of V. L. S. E., on his trip of inspection to the numerous branch offices of the company, reports to General Manager Walter W. Irwin that the feeling of optimism over future business is justified by actual conditions in the exhibiting end of the business.

Instead of a curtailment of output, as outlined by some of the motion picture producers, Vitagraph is increasing its weekly footage to be released through V. L. S. E. exchanges from seven thousand to approximately twelve thousand reels. In commending on this increased output, Mr. Goff, in his report to Mr. Irwin, writes:

My personal investigation tends to prove the correctness of your diagnosis of conditions in the exhibiting end of the business. Judging from exhibiting conditions in the middle west Vitagraph will have to work to capacity to supply the demands of the exhibitors in the next few months.

I have talked to several exhibitors and find them almost a unit in the belief that we probably will even miss the usual summer slump in business. Of course, there are exceptions, but they are few.

Many of the exhibitors with whom I have talked acknowledged that three months ago they were on the verge of panic and some of them even were contemplating the closing of their theaters. This feeling now, I find, has been eliminated, and, instead of closing their houses, they are preparing to make a drive for business through increasing their advertising appropriations.

While, of course, our branch office reports show the increase in business even these reports fail to show the popularity of the Vitagraph product. Many exhibitors who have not run Blue Ribbon features for some time are visiting our branches making inquiries regarding forthcoming releases.

Another thing that has been of immense benefit to us is the fact that the exhibitors are realizing very rapidly that we are not renting pictures on our idea of the size of the exhibitor's pocketbook, but upon the value of the picture from his box office standpoint.

Several exhibitors have suggested that we should arrange for a special feature, along the lines of "The Girl Philippa." "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," and "Within the Law," at intervals of about every three months. They argue that when we give a great big special for presentation it stimulates interest in our regular five-reel features.

Another thing that has been brought to my attention by exhibitors is the excellence of our heralds for the last two months. Several of the exhibitors have mentioned the "teaser" form of synopsis which appears on these heralds, and they say that this form of synopsis whets the appetities of the audience.

"Best Seller" Film Powerful Puller

As one goes down the line of "best sellers" among publications, he finds that every one of them has made a successful plotoplay. In most cases they have been successful in pictures in proportion to their popularity in book and serial form.

This bit of psychology was largely instrumental in the acquirement by Historic Features, Inc., of "Christus," the Cines photo-spectacle of the life of Christ. One of the directors of the company, which was formed for the exploitation of picturures of artstic and educational value, happened to be in Rome last fall, shortly after the run of "Christus" began in that city. Not only was his attention attracted by the size of the audiences, but also by the fact that here was an elaborately-made picturization of the book which must rank as the "best seller" of all time—the Bible.

Figuring that the volume with the largest circulation of any ever published must have a tremendous screen value, he sought the American rights for Historic Features, and was successful in obtaining them. That his judgment was correct has been proved by the popularity of the picture in New York city and the state rights offers now in hand.

King Bee's Sixth Comedy

Billy West, the famous young King Bee star, is rapidly adding to the list of impersonations which is making him so popular with exhibitors and fans alike. In King Bee's sixth comedy now approaching completion at the Flushing studios, Billy West plays the part of a young millionaire whose wealth and social position involve him in all sorts of difficulties with all sorts of people.

"The Millionaire" is a comedy of contrasts in which Billy West is splendidly supported by the members of the celebrated King Bee Company, which includes Babe Hardy, Leo White, Bud Ross, and others.

Doug sails around a good many corners on two wheels in his latest play "Wild and Woolly."

C. J. Allenbaugh, inventor of the "Allenbaugh process" of preserving film. The Hedwig laboratories are to employ this process during the coming year to all films of 1,100 feet or more which go through their plant. Allenbaugh has been called a "second Edison" because of the number of his film inventions.

NEW FILM PROCESS

Allenbaugh Method to Preserve Films Perfectly—100-Day Stuff as Good as First Run Under New Treatment

An important invention in the film industry which promises to revolutionize the entire production of moving pictures, and which in a short time will affect every foot of film, has just been brought to the attention of Motography through a contract signed during the past week between Shepard and Van Loan, Major O. J. Allenbaugh, of the Film Renovating Company, and W. C. Fields, president of the Hedwig Laboratories.

This contract provides that the Hedwig Laboratories are to use the "Allenbaugh Process" on all of the films they handle.

For three years Major Allenbaugh, the inventor of this process, has labored night and day trying to perfect it.

A couple of weeks ago, while the major was discussing other business with Harry Shepard and Van Loan, he described his latest invention to them. They at once entered into a contract with him to act as his agents, and got in touch with the big laboratories throughout the country. They were soon besieged with requests from various printing, developing and cleaning organizations for the exclusive rights to the process.

Finally the officials of the Hedwig Laboratories became interested. They requested permission to put the "Allenbaugh Process" through various tests. The results were so excellent that President Fields and his colleagues became enthusiastic. They realized that the laboratory that could obtain the use of this process, and apply it to the film as it was being printed, would be able to defy all competition.

At a joint meeting of the board of directors of the various companies interested, a contract was signed between Major Allenbaugh, Harry J. Shepard and W. C. Fields, wherein it was agreed that the Hedwig Laboratories should have the right to use the "Allenbaugh Process" for a given length of time. At this meeting it was further agreed that every reel of film handled by this laboratory, averaging more than 1,100 feet, should be put through the "Allenbaugh Process." This means that any feature picture, or any film, of more than 1,100 feet will be just as good one year from the day it was printed as it was the day it left the laboratory.

Every reel of film will read: "Treated by the Allenbaugh Process," with the signature of the inventor, and none will be genuine without it.

In discussing his invention the major said:

There have been a great many attempts during the last seven or eight years to devise some means to preserve the film, but they proved inefficient, in that the film treated by these various methods become more or less brittle and instead of saving the film, had a tendency to shorten its life.

I have worked along an entirely different line. I discovered that in treating the emulsion, I had to also take into consideration a treatment for the celluloid itself that would harmonize with the treatment of the emulsion. This I have succeeded in doing and have proved that the emulsion is hardened, yet it it is hardened in such a way as to become practically a part of the celluloid itself and the whole made more flexible and pliable than the untreated film.

In hardening the emulsion the sprocket walls are given additional strength. The film treated with this process will run through the projecting machine with absolutely no accumulation of emulsion on the sprocket wheel, tension springs and aperture gate, or in any point with which it may come in contact. This relieves the strain on the walls of the sprocket holes and prevents the numerous scratches and wear and tear that is the usual effect on the untreated film. Some operators use oil, candle and bees wax to relieve the tension springs so that the film may run through more smoothly. This is damaging.

I believe the day is coming and that, too, in the near future, when every exhibitor will demand that the film that he books, be treated with this process. This especially applies to the exhibitor who is using the 60, 90 and 100-day stuff.

Major Allenbaugh was formerly an exhibitor in Baltimore, and entered into the exchange business in that territory, handling the program for the old Famous Players. He was one of the original Paramount men and later helped to form the Metro company and was president and manager of the Washington exchange.

New Military Educational Picture

Feeling that the answer to all America's query on just what happens to a boy taking military training, would make an interesting and compelling picture, the Cameragraph Film Manufacturing Company, through general manager, Frank R. Abrams, requested Colonel Sebastian C. Jones, U. S. A., one of the foremost experts in methods of military training for the youth, and now supervising such training at an important military school, to contribute his ideas in picture form. The scheme was to give an answer by an authority. Colonel Jones had spent years in the work and was the logical person to supervise such a film.

So "What of Your Boy?" was produced in seven reels and what happened to the boy under training "caught" from every angle. To make the picture easy for the motion picture exhibitor to show at any time, regardless whether a feature was on the day's bill or not, the Cameragraph Company has a three-reel feature on the subject also.

Here's a little lone bather who is just as attractive as a whole block of ordinary beach nuts would be, for even Venus in a bathing suit could be no more aesthetic than Mary Thurman. She is one of the Sennett-Keystone loreleis. That's why she likes to lie by the seashore.

Recruiting Aid Found in Films

To aid in the recruiting, the Pittsburgh branch of the Mutual Film Corporation offered to Lieutenant Oldendorf of the United States Navy, who has charge of the local recruiting station, the use of the U. S. Defender series of one-reel subjects showing the work of the army and navy. The three subjects which Lieutenant Oldendorf chose as being particularly useful for his work were "Scouts of the Sea and Sky," "Afloat and Ashore," and "Jack Tar in the Making."

The lieutenant's appreciation of these subjects was expressed in the following letter:

"We wish to express our gratification for your kindness and the expression of your patriotism in permitting us to use some of your navy films in our campaign for recruiting for the navy. It is the opinion of this office that nothing aids recruiting so much as a good exposition of real navy films.

"The writer has reviewed with great interest the films which you permitted him to use, and has expressed great satisfaction to the members of the Navy League and also to his superior officers the great good such films will do at this time."

"Paws of the Bear"

In what might be called the prologue to the latest Triangle drama, "Paws of the Bear," by J. G. Hawks, in which William Desmond is starred, a glimpse of the Belgian frontier is given, where the Uhlans are brought sharply into conflict with the allies. There are scenes of startling actuality, with the explosion of big guns and the circling of aeroplanes. And yet this is not a war story.

The opening scene, or prologue, is purely episodic, and in a flash the audience is started on an exciting detective story of the Sherlock Holmes type, a story that picks up stray clews in Belgium, Russia, France and on the ocean. It is finally unraveled in the peaceful surroundings on an American country house.

"Paws of the Bear" is full of tricks and surprises, keeping the mind on a keen edge lest one incident be overlooked. At the very last flicker the mystery is solved. If you have guessed it you should apply for a position in the United States secret service.

More Frieder Films

The Frieder Film Corporation of Chicago, which is now marketing its first big state right feature, "A Bit o' Heaven," founded on Kate Douglas Wiggin's celebrated story, "The Birds' Christmas Carol," announces that a long list of copyrighted novels will soon be filmed at the studio, Lankershim, California.

This decision, it is understood, is the result of the splendid success which its first feature is meeting throughout the country. Contracts have been signed with three different Eastern publishing houses, calling for film rights to a number of widely known stories similar to "The Birds' Christmas Carol."

The secret of her success in the creation of the character of "The Modern Eve," as portrayed in the multiple reel morality drama, "The Curse of Eve," which was given its debut by the Corona Cinema Company, is due to five weeks' careful study of human nature and a week of solitary confinement in the hills of southern California, according to Miss Enid Markey, who has scored her screen triumph in this production.

Above is a little game seen in a scene in "The Flame of the Yukon," with Dorothy Dalton as the flame. Below is Olive Thomas in a scene from her first Triangle play, and in the circle here is the demure and pulchritudinous Mildred Harris.

Triangle Program of July 1

Dorothy Dalton and Bessie Barriscale are the stars of the Triangle plays to be released July 1.

"The Flame of the Yukon" is the title of the drama in which Dorothy Dalton will make her ninth stellar appearance. Bessie Barriscale will be seen in a comedy of the eternal feminine from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, known as "Hater of Men." Charles Miller also directed this production.

The scene of Dorothy Dalton's vehicle is Alaska during the early days of the gold rush. "The Flame" was a well-known character in the country between Nome and Dawson. She was the ruling spirit of "The Midas Cafe," where she lured the nuggets from her victims one day, only to stake the unlucky to a new start when her mercurial sympathies were touched. Melbourne MacDowell, whose characterizations on the speaking stage made him a universal favorite a few years ago, takes the part of the proprietor of the cafe in which "The Flame" dances, while Kenneth Harlan has the strongest role of his career as the hero opposite Miss Dalton. Scenically the play has many striking qualities. A tribe of twenty Esquimaux were brought from Alaska to lend realism to the production, together with several malamute dog-teams. (Program continued on next page)

As the leading figure of "Hater of Men," Bessie Barriscale takes the part of Janice Salsbury, a special writer on one of the big city newspapers. She is engaged to a reporter, Billy Williams, but becomes convinced that marriage is only another name for slavery. She breaks off relations with Williams forthwith. Phillips Hartley, known as the drawing room philosopher, is also a member of the group in which Janice moves. He loves Janice, but silently waits for the time when she will forget her rebellious instincts and turn to him for comfort. Miss Barriscale makes the most of the role that Sullivan has provided her with. She is capably supported by Charles K. French and Jack Gilbert.

Universal Program

Jungle life with all its vivid picturesqueness and thrilling adventures is portrayed in the Butterfly five-act drama, "Man and Beast," which tops the Universal program for the week of June 25.

The leading roles are played by Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict. This new picture will prove exceedingly interesting to children on account of the animals.

"Man and Beast" will be released Monday, June 25, on the same day with the Nestor comedy, "The War Bridegroom," featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

The feature for Tuesday, June 26, is the Gold Seal three-part western drama, "The Golden Bullet," starring Harry Carey, supported by Fritzie Ridgeway and an exceptional cast.

The other Tuesday release is the Victor comedy, "Damaged Goodness," with Ernie Shields in the leading role.

"Her Daring Caring Ways," a two-part L-Ko comedy, with Merta Sterling and Fritzie Ridgeway furnishing most of the fun, is the chief offering for Wednesday, June 27. Issue 78 of the Universal Animated Weekly will also appear on this date.

On Thursday, June 28, the Big U two-reel underworld drama, "The Pointed Finger," will be released. This is a gripping story of crime, with George Pearce and Gretchen Lederer in the principal roles. On the same day the Victor comedy, "Her City Beau," will appear, with M. K. Wilson and Edith Roberts as the featured players.

An unusual two-part comedy drama is offered under the Victor brand on Friday, June 29, entitled "Swede Hearts," with Neal Hart and Janet Eastman in the leading roles. Issue 25 of the Universal Screen Magazine is the other Friday release.

The Bison two-act western drama, "Money and Mystery," with Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict, is the feature for June 30. The Joker comedy, "His Fatal Beauty," with William Franey, and the weekly issue of the Universal Current Events will also be released on this date.

On Sunday, July 1, the Imp drama, "The Double Topped Trunk," staring Allen Holubar, is presented. The other releases for Sunday are the Powers split-reel, "Duke Doolittle's Jungle Fizzle," a comedy cartoon, and "In the Land of Many Temples," a Dorsey educational, and the Big U drama, "Love's Turmoil," featuring Edna Maison.

During the week the first episode of the latest and greatest of Universal serials, "The Gray Ghost," will be released. This new mystery serial is a film adaptation of the novel, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, which appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post. The principal roles are played by Priscilla Dean, Eddie Polo, Emory Johnson and Harry Carter. The serial will run for fifteen consecutive weeks and is destined to set a new mark for this type of film production.

Laemmle Cheered at Universal City

An unusual tribute was paid to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a few nights ago at Universal City, when the hundreds of employes of the big studios assembled on the main stage and cheered to the echo his remarks when he set forth his ideas and ideals for the betterment of Universal City, and told of his desire to give the utmost encouragement to all of the men and women working at that motion picture plant.

The mind that conceived Universal City hopes for more than a mere studio where film plays are manufactured, and looks forward to a civic organization among the employes which will harmonize perfectly with his ideals of co-operation and co-ordination in all affairs pertaining to social, economic and business life.

In the near future, no doubt Universal City will have its own mayor, its city council and other executive officers, who will formulate the rules and regulations of the institution, organize a club for social purposes and in every way possible work for the upbuilding of the city and the hundreds of employes enrolled under the Big U banner.

The First Day Coming

"Betty and the Buccaneers," which will be Juliette Day's first production for Mutual, is a story of hidden treasure, pirates bold, thrilling adventure and romance.

Juliette Day is Betty, a quaint little character, full of romantic dreams and fancies, who has lived an isolated life. Her one treasure is a copy of "Treasure Island," and she is overjoyed when she is suddenly thrust into an adventure which parallels the plot of her well-worn book.

Rollin S. Sturgeon is directing this first production of Miss Day at the American studio, and Joe King is playing opposite her. The remainder of the cast is made up of Charles Marriott, Tote Du Crow, William Kyle, Gordon Russell and Harold Wilson.

New Comedy Company

Lawrence Semon, comedy director for Greater Vitagraph is organizing a brand new company for the production of Big V comedies and of his old company, the only members retained are Joseph Simberg and Earl Montgomery. He already has engaged seven of the best acrobats he can find and his new pictures will be replete with thrilling stunts. One of these will be the flight of a bed through the roof of a house onto a set of telegraph wires. For this scene Mr. Semon has had a special set of wires constructed.

Mr. Semon has just completed his fifty-third Vitagraph comedy, having produced this great number inside of two years.

Simberg and Montgomery are declared to be two of the most daring men in pictures and in one of their late ones made an exceptionally long and difficult leap. The action called for them to jump from the roof of one house to that of another. The distance was many feet across and they made it without a net being placed for their protection.

Scenes from Vitagraph's newest Blue Ribbon, "A Son of the Hills." It is an unusual play and features Antonio Moreno. It will be released June 25.

Greater Vitagraph has been forced to post a notice at its Brooklyn studio announcing that female leads are engaged on the strength of their histrionic ability coupled with their personal appearance, and not because applicants for positions have a superabundance of money.

For several weeks Production Manager Roosevelt has received almost daily calls from women who said they were wealthy at least, some of whom offered to pay for the privilege of appearing in Blue Ribbon features, while others offered their services free, and all were perfectly willing to work hard at least six days a week. According to Mr. Roosevelt not one of these women could act, and none of them was less than forty years of age.

The climax which caused the posting of the notice that only good looking young women with histrionic ability were wanted came on June 7, when a very wealthy woman who resides on Fifth avenue, near Fifty-sixth street, was an applicant for a position.

She is a woman of more than fifty years of age, far from being attractive, but with the supreme knowledge that she is a born motion picture actress.

In order to prove that the woman was not a motion picture actress Mr. Roosevelt caused a test to be made of her. Later, for her especial benefit, the test was run off in the projection room. After seeing the film she acknowledged that her first attempt was far from being the tremendous success she had anticipated.

"But," she explained, "that doesn't make a great deal of difference. Look at the clubs with which I am connected," and she enumerated the names of the organizations. "All of the members of these clubs are just frantic to see me in pictures. They will simply pack the theaters."

By gentle but firm persuasion Mr. Roosevelt shooed the woman of wealth on her way.

Maine Exhibitors Enthusiastic

At the second meeting of Maine exhibitors held June 7 at the Penobscot Exchange, Bangor, members of that organization fairly radiated enthusiasm at the prospects of having a real live league. Everyone seemed determined to make this last attempt to organize the Maine exhibitors a success.

Nine new names were added to the membership list at the Bangor meeting as follows: W. B. Williamson, Augusta; William E. Reeves, Portland; A. J. Burns, Gardiner; Fred Mason, Livermore Falls; J. J. Hone, Pasque Isle; O. B. Fernandez, Old Town; Wilber Shea, Eastport; William P. Sherbourne, Dover.

Permanent officers were elected and it was decided to hold the next meeting at the Augusta House, Augusta, June 19, at which time in all probability delegates to the Chicago National Convention in July will be elected. The officers chosen were: Alfred S. Black of Rockland, president; James W. Greeley of Portland, secretary; Fred W. Eugley of Westbrook, treasurer.

Twenty-four exhibitors were present and each man decided to bring back another fellow with him at the next meeting. According to Vice-President Greeley the Maine exhibitors are not making money now because they lack unity. He feels that much can be accomplished in the way of lining the exhibitors' pockets if they get together and talk to the producers collectively rather than as separate and unorganized units.

The latest Marie Shotwell feature, "The Woman and the Beast," has been sold for all territory east of the Mississippi, with the exception of Pennsylvania. This announcement was made by the Graphic Features, 220 West Forty-second street, who are distributing the feature. Negotiations are also pending for Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Russia.

The Stillman of Cleveland

A CLASSIC IN MODERN THEATERS—BEAUTY AND BUSINESS MADE ONE

Toward-the-screen view of the splendid new Stillman of Cleveland.

THIS is no place to try to tell the complete story of the Stillman Theater of Cleveland. That would require a volume. There are so many things about the house which are "special" or "different" or unusual that their adequate description would take pages where we can give them only paragraphs.

The architecture of the Stillman is Italian Renaissance, of the most graceful and delicate period. All decoration is in the manner of the brothers Adam, architects and designers of a century ago whose work was characterized by a distinctly individual note of effectiveness in their handling of the forms and methods of the Italian Renaissance and of the period of Louis XVI. The cameo-like panels and medallions which are noticeable throughout the theater are especially characteristic of the Adam style.

One enters through a series of three foyers. At either side of the wide entrance-way are ingenious electrical devices which advise the passer-by on the street which program number is being shown at the moment. Not only that: they tell what number will follow, and at what hour and minute it will begin. At a given moment, for instance, the bulletin will read, under the "Now Showing" heading, "E. H. Sothern, in 'The Chattel;'" under the line below ("Next Feature") will be the name of the number immediately to come—"Comedy, 'The Way of a Maid.'" Following this is a third permanent line reading "which will start at," and a clock face with the hands pointing to the time at which the comedy will take the screen.

The device is controlled by the projection man from his booth upstairs; when he puts a new reel in his machine, he touches a button which operates a curtain-like roll in the bulletin and brings before the aperture, under the "Now Showing" heading the title of the film he is starting; at the same time he presses a second button which changes the title behind the second aperture ("Next Feature Will Be") and moves the hands of a master-clock to the time which they should show. These electrical contacts operate three machines simultaneously—one at either side of the street entrance, and one in the reception room just off the lobby on the main floor. One may therefore be sure of getting seated just in time for the beginning of a picture—rather than in the middle of it—by watching any one of these bulletins; preferably, of course, from the comfortable reception room and lounge. Certainly it is exasperating to come in at any time except the beginning of a film or other number, and no Stillman patron need ever do so.

No device of this nature has ever, so far as we can find out, been employed by any theater. The machines were devised by, and built for, the Stillman—to fill what seemed to be a "long-felt want" of patrons of picture-plays.

The Outer Foyers

Through this wide (twenty-five foot) entranceway, one passes a ticket booth where general admission (not reserved seat) tickets are sold. Beyond is the first set of doors, admitting the visitors to a central foyer, where the ticket windows (for reserved seats) are on right, next to the door of the theater's offices; beyond (also on the right) is the reception room just mentioned. At this point one is before the second set of doors, beyond which the ticket-takers stand. From these doors to the street entrance is a distance of some 120 feet; the floor has a gradual rise from the street level to that of the auditorium, and the architects have made ingenious application of the opportunity thus presented in diminishing the height of the big mirrors which line either side of the foyer, accentuating an already interesting perspective. Among other things, this mirrored foyer gives the ladies leaving the theater a good chance to see that they are "all set" before leaving.

The Reception Room

In this pleasant little room a contrasting decorative scheme is felt at once. Rugs and upholstery are lavender, with furniture finished in walnut and bronze. The desks are supplied with stationery, an information clerk is always on duty, and every effort is made to provide a comfortable and pleasant lounging-room for those patrons who do not care to go into the theater proper at once. This room is opened at 9 o'clock in the morning (though programs do not start until 11) for the convenience of suburban people—who may meet their friends here, check their parcels, and make use of the theater's conveniences. A check room and a ladies' retiring room open off this reception room and lounge.

The Inner Foyer

Beyond the second series of doors one enters the inner foyer—and encounters the most spectacular architectural feature of the theater proper. For instead of coming into a low-ceilinged and apparently narrow and crowded corridor or aisle behind rows of seats, here is a beautiful and spacious foyer. Instead of entering under the balcony, one looks up, in this foyer, to the rear of the mezzanine floor, which is a lounge and promenade. Wide stairs rise from the main floor on either side of the entrance, and from the promenade, half a flight over the entrance, one looks down upon the foyer and the central section of orchestra loges. The effect of spaciousness, airiness and beauty is contributed to largely by the height of the foyer at this point.

Mezzanine Promenade

Ascending the stairs it is found that this mezzanine promenade, extending the full width of the auditorium, is the heart of the house. On one side is a man's lounge, on the other a woman's; each having retiring rooms. There are two stairways, upward, on either side—one (for those who hold seats or loges in the lower mezzanine) leading to the main aisle of the mezzanine auditorium; the other to the upper mezzanine and smoking boxes. Thus one may, from either side of the promenade, ascend the main aisle, behind the loges, or to the upper longitudinal aisle, midway between the upper and lower mezzanine.

The Smoking Boxes

At the rear of the upper mezzanine — the "top o' the house"—is a series of smoking boxes so arranged that neither smoke nor odor escape to the seats below them. They are furnished with comfortable arm-chairs, and though the screen seems far away before the picture appears, it will be found that they afford an excellent view in which the brilliance and detail of the projection seem enhanced, rather than lost.

Smoking Room and Lounge

To return downstairs: In the basement is a large lounge and smoking room, with a color scheme of green and black; check room and toilet are adjacent. This is the only utilization of basement space in "the front of the house," though the basement space back of and beneath the stage is a most important section of the theater.

The Stage Setting

Walking forward beneath the mezzanine the main auditorium, attention is centered on the stage. The present setting is intended to suggest an Italian landscape as seen from a loggia (which constitutes the setting proper) in the foreground. The curving, veranda-like structure is divided into three main sections; and into the central opening, when the pictures are to appear, the picture screen is lowered from the high scene-loft. The stage harbors many strange devices of modern wizardry for the creation and treatment of light—light being made to flow as water flows, and to take on many colors and contribute to many effects, by the men back-stage to whom the hundreds of levers and controls and reflectors and diffusers are as familiar as the fingers of their hands.

Some Architectural Features

A notable feature of the theater's construction is the ceiling of the main auditorium, which is stepped and vaulted—as is best seen when looking toward the rear of the house from the stage. This form—which is really that of a parabola—was decided upon after a careful study of the auditorium's acoustic requirements, by experts, and renders the theater perfect in this respect. The construction also lends itself admirably to an unusually handsome and light decorative scheme—which both architect and decorator were quick to realize, as you may see.

The architect of the world-famous Opera House at Paris was asked how he managed to secure the house's perfect acoustics, and he replied that he didn't; he just trusted to luck. The Stillman architects did not trust to luck, by any means; and the results fully justify their thorough and scientific working out of all the details which had direct bearing upon this problem.

No Pillars

The cantilever construction of the mezzanine has made it possible to do away with supporting columns and pillars in both auditorium and balcony, and there is therefore no seat from which a view of the screen is obstructed.

No Distortion

The relation of picture screen and seats was most carefully worked out, that there might be no seat on either main or mezzanine floor from which the picture would appear distorted. Sightlines were erected from every part of the house where chairs would be placed—and the careful observer may notice that, in consequence, the balcony curves in all directions (like a ship's body).

The Decorations

The decorative scheme is, as mentioned, a working-out of the style best described as Adam. Soft and pleasing colors without violent contrast; the free use of wedgewood-like medallions and panels; the repeated occurrence of the griffin, urn, bell-flower, rosette and other decorative devices accepted as characteristic of this style—all these (and other things) mark the decoration of the entire house as truly Adam in every detail.

The ornamental plaster alone deserves a volume. Of purest Roman design, conceived and executed as individual works of art, every group and figure is worthy of study and is sure to evoke admiration from connoisseur and layman alike. Especially notable is the large frieze which decorates the proscenium arch—but a hundred other designs in the building have beauties which are no less perfect—even if less prominent. In whatever part of the house one may sit he can satisfy his eye with the grace and idealism of these classic figures and designs; and he may know something of the spirit of undying beauty which his traveled neighbor found at its fullest in the galleries of Florence.

Even the mechanical side of this plaster-work is interesting. The figures are all original designs, modeled in clay by an artist who has given to each one, separately, the quality and degree of expression of his creative ability that he would give to works in heroic bronze. From these original modelings molds were made, using a tough, plastic compound which stands ordinarily careful handling without damage. The molds were shipped to Cleveland, and here expert craftsmen re-created the figures in plaster, giving each piece (the larger ones are in many sections) a backing of cloth, or cloth and wire, adapting its support to its place on wall or ceiling. The ceiling pieces are suspended by fine wires from the construction-steel—wires cunningly interwoven into the fiber and structure of the plaster-and-compound backing.

There are sixteen exits in all.

With roomy aisles, wide staircases, abundant exits and other precautions, the Stillman may certainly be called a safe theater.

Comfort

An earnest effort has been made to neglect nothing which might contribute materially to the comfort and convenience of patrons—from such petty details as legible signs to the installation of a huge ventilating plant.

Chairs

A first item of comfort may be noticed in the specially designed chairs—unique, so far as we know, in theaters. The height of arm, angle and curvature of back, and, in fact, every detail of design was carefully worked out to provide maximum comfort—to fit the body and make for restfulness. Every chair is comfortably wide, and a full thirty-one inches is allowed, in most cases, from back to back—providing abundant knee-room. That this space might be liberal the seating capacity of the auditorium was cut down by some 400 chairs, and the space so gained given to widening the rows.

Lighting

The lighting of the stage can obviously contribute much to one's pleasure in the entertainment presented—more than is commonly supposed, perhaps, for the effects that contribute materially to the creation of a mood or the conveying of an atmosphere may not be consciously noticed at all. But the lighting of the auditorium has as much to do with one's comfort. Stray rays of light are distracting and uncomfortable—and may even become almost unbearable; the sudden switching on or off of lights may be a distinct shock to the eyes and nerves; too bright or glaring lights are not at all conducive to comfort. All these things have been borne in mind in lighting the Stillman auditorium, and the difficulties of accomplishment have been fully overcome.

Emergency Lighting

The house has a system of emergency lighting which is very ingenious. Current enters the house over different lines from two different companies. Should one supply fail, for any reason, the current of the second source of supply is automatically switched on and lights the same bulbs which were but an instant before taking their current from another power-house. This "emergency current" operates the lights which are left burning practically all the time (one bulb in alternate fixtures throughout), and would be directed into all bulbs, should failure of the regular supply occur, so quickly that the extinction and relighting of the bulb would hardly be noticed by the audience.

All lights in the auditorium are on "dimmers," so that there is never the discomfort of a sudden change of brilliancy.

Stair Lights

Staircases and aisles are provided with special lighting devices, that patrons may not stumble when the house is darkened for a picture. Special precautions were taken in designing these that no stray light-rays should escape to find their way to the eyes of a person seated opposite the source of light.

Ventilation

Perhaps the most important comfort-feature of a theater auditorium is proper—which means constant, and more than just necessary—ventilation. And this not alone from the viewpoint of health and hygiene. Enjoyment of the program, however good that program may be, is conditional upon the relaxation of perfect comfort and the mental attitude of receptiveness to impressions which one can by no means attain when he is dull and heavy—a condition which may well mean only starved for enough pure air.

The Stillman is especially proud of the equipment installed, and unhesitatingly promises a constant supply of air that is both pure and fresh—25 cubic feet per person per minute, even when the theater is filled to capacity.

Air is taken into the building through a single large inlet—sucked in by a fan (11½ feet high and weighing 2½ tons) which handles up to 47,000 cubic feet per minute. The air first passes through 700 square feet of heater coil (to temper it); then it is washed by being forced through a chamber 9x9x4 feet which is filled with water sprayed in at the rate of 165 gallons per minute. This washing removes practically all impurities; tests at this stage show the air 95% pure, and clean. It then follows a zig-zag course through a series of baffle plates, which hold within their chamber any remaining impurities, and passes through another unit of heater coil (1,075 feet), which brings it to the temperature desired.

The air is now washed, filtered and heated, and is forced into large chambers which underlie the floors of both orchestra and mezzanine. These "plenum chambers" are, virtually, rooms—or "reservoirs"—with a ceiling height of three to six feet. The air is forced by an even pressure from these chambers into the auditorium through mushroom-shaped inlets which set in the floor beneath the chairs. There are 625 of these inlets, so placed that it may almost be said that there are no air pockets, however small, any place in the building. Not only is the air forced into the system (and the auditorium) by the fan mentioned, but another fan, eight feet high and with a double action which gives it the suction of two fans, is pulling the used air out of the building by a constant pulling force practically equal to the driving-in force of the supply fan. The supply of fresh, pure air is therefore constant. There are two other exhaust fans, of minor importance; those mentioned are the mainstays of the distributing system.

Heating

The warm air forced into the auditorium through the ventilating plant is heated to 70 degrees; wall radiators care for further heating required to make the building comfortable in cold weather. There are some 2,400 feet of radiation provided for this purpose.

Drinking Water

Seven ice water fountains are conveniently distributed through the building, and water drawn from any of them is taken from a supply which is always kept in circulation, by a pumping system, from tank to fountain and back—and is therefore kept at a constant temperature.

Water is first filtered by a special equipment, which handles fifty gallons per minute. From the filter it passes to a 500-gallon tank which keeps itself full automatically, and automatically shuts off an over-supply. Thence it travels to a cooling machine (cooling 250 gallons from 75 degrees to 40 degrees per day; and then, through cork-covered pipes, on a circuitous route from cooler to fountains, back to the cooler, to the fountains again, and so on. Thus the water which runs when you tap a fountain is from a supply always in motion through the system. Full provision is made against any possible pollution of the water after it leaves the filter, and as the refrigerating agent cools the water through a coil inside the tank, and is controlled by a thermostat, a uniform temperature of 40 degrees is maintained.

This method is accepted as much superior, in every way, to cooling by ice. The only ice in the equipment is the small amount that forms on the pipes of a coil (containing the refrigerating agent) around which the water circulates as it enters the distributing pipes.

The Organ

Everything about the Stillman organ is "special"—that is, it was designed and built, from top to bottom, for this theater. All good organs have more than a casual resemblance to each other, of course, but individual differences, even between two instruments of the same design and make, may be of the highest importance.

Differences in design and construction between this and a church organ are not radical but important. Its tone range and quality are not the same, range being wider, and tone lighter—the result of special "voicing." The Stillman organ, too, has faster repeat action than is ordinarily deemed essential in an organ for a church—as fast as the action of a piano, even; and rapid, staccato effects are limited only by the skill of the organist. Nine couplers are employed on the "great organ" whereas six might well be sufficient on another organ of this size intended for use in a church.

With this instrument the organist has the resources of a considerable orchestra beneath his fingers—and feet. Its effects include strings, reeds and brass—and even harps, chimes and certain instruments of percussion.

As an instance of how every sort of surrounding condition may affect the voicing of such an instrument as this, it may be mentioned that the men who "voiced" this instrument made allowance, according to a given scale, for the number of seats in the house, as well as for mere cubic feet of space and similar conditions. This is because the quality of tone is modified by the quality of the surfaces by which it is absorbed or reflected, and the mere presence of auditors, in any considerable number, has a large bearing upon the question of voicing.

Some interesting facts and figures:

There are 2,064 pipes, the largest being 16 feet high and 18x21 inches through; the smallest is seven-eighth of an inch long, and one-eighth inch in diameter.

The complete organ weighs about four tons.

All electrical contacts are of silver; there are 1,535 of them, with twelve cents' worth of silver in each.

There are something like 150,000 feet of wire used in the organ's construction—or nearly thirty miles.

Back-Stage Features

The Stillman stage is that of the regular dramatic or vaudeville theater, with scene-loft, grid, dressing-room space and all the requirements of the conventional stage.

The stage is 30 feet deep (proscenium arch to rear wall), and 45 feet wide.

Electrical effects on the stage are controlled through two auxiliary switchboards, each with separate dimmer. Spotlights (of which there are forty in all) are operated by a plugging system very like that of the familiar telephone switchboard. Through many complicated devices light can be directed almost anywhere about the stage and its settings, in any quantity or color desired. Flood (or bunch) lights, spotlights, pistol spots, baby spots, etc., provide for practically any effect ingenuity can devise; with a pistol spot, for instance, the electrician can project from his "bridge," a single star against the sky-blue of the cyclorama, and make it twinkle most realistically. Similarly a face may be illumined in the otherwise total darkness of the stage—and big effects are as easy of accomplishment as such small ones. Lighting effects on the cyclorama are secured by means of a specially-designed flood-light equipped with a so-called "X-ray reflector."

Each Picture in "Work" 3 Days Before Showing

The projection room is quite entitled to that name—instead of the more usual one of "operator's booth." It is 22x16 feet, and is outside the building proper (for greater safety), with entrance from outside and not from within. The pictures are projected through openings in a fire wall, and a fire, even of many hours' duration, would burn itself out without reaching the auditorium or doing any damage whatever except to the contents of the one room.

Below stairs are various rooms for special purposes, including a projection room for private screening of pictures for future showings. Every film shown at the Stillman is "in work" in this room for three days or more before it is seen on the auditorium screen, that its "production" may be adequate. The production includes the arrangement and rehearsal of special music, carefully timed to the picture's various scenes and action-features, and any editorial work which a study of the picture (through several screenings) reveals as needful. Few indeed are the pictures which cannot be improved and given more directness after a critical study by competent judges—who have not seen the picture in the making and to whom, therefore, every detail of its action is new and not judged in the light of cut-outs and trimmed scenes. Such scrutiny can hardly be given it by the producer, even if he were able to view it with one particular audience (instead of country-wide audiences) in mind.

Every week's program at the Stillman has a careful, complete rehearsal before the public sees it. At this final rehearsal there may be changes in every reel of film shown—changes of points not revealed in the reviewing room, where the film was not seen with the musical and lighting accompaniments worked out for it, and not preceded or followed by another feature—which might have a large influence on how it "gets over." The Stillman management works on the theory that the production of a program is but little less important than the program itself.

Interesting Facts About the House

The distance from screen to lens is about 134 feet—measured along the diagonal line which makes allowance for the "pitch" of projection. As the "pitch" would produce gross distortion in the pictures' image unless there was some compensation for it, the projecting machines have specially-ground lenses which make the correction. If the image were intercepted by the erection of a screen at, say, half the distance between the lens and stage, the picture would be so distorted and out of proportion as to be hardly recognizable, and other lenses would have to be ground to secure the correct projection at that precise distance.

The screen sets six feet from the rear wall of the theater, and is made of an imported satin of fine texture and a color very like that of rich cream. After much study and experiment by lighting engineers this was found to give better projection-surface than any of the plaster, mirror and other materials commonly used; the picture is brilliant and full of detail, and does not tire the eyes. "It gives," says the final report of the experts, " a picture without the slightest fadeaway; with wonderful brilliancy, good definition and proper reflection and diffusion." It is 18x14 feet in size, and, with its steel frame, weighs over 1,800 pounds.

The piano (a Mason & Hamlin) has a special interest, as it is an instrument which was selected—and is autographed by—Ossip Gabrilowitsch, one of the most distinguished of living pianists. He recently appeared in Cleveland in a joint recital with Harold Bauer—and was also heard there with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

All furniture, lighting fixtures, rugs, draperies, carpets, etc., were designed especially for this theater, and built or woven only after approval of the manufacturers' finished models or samples, by the decorators.

There are about two thousand yards of carpet in the building.

The chairs are of birch, finished in Italian walnut. They have solid wooden backs, which are not only better-looking than the ordinary theater chair-back, but are also more sanitary. All chairs are upholstered in green and black, with fine-hair stuffing—of which 3,500 pounds were required.

The air-washing equipment, including eliminators, casings, nozzles, motors and pumps, weighs more than two and a half tons (5,000 pounds); the supply and exhaust pipes of the ventilating system required over 38,000 pounds of galvanized iron for their manufacture. The fans are of the Buffalo-Niagara Conoidal type, direct connected—which eliminates the loss of efficiency that may occur in belt-driven fans.

A four-sweeper vacuum cleaning plant is an important part of the house's equipment. It is worthy of mention that throughout the house electrical sockets are set in walls near the floor to which movable lights may be attached while the cleaners are at work—so that the particular section being cleaned may be brilliantly lighted without the necessity for lighting the whole house.

The exit-signs and similar direction-signs are of thick red glass with sand-blasted letters; the illumination is not through the glass, but from the top edge.

There are four electric switch-boards—two back-stage and main switch-boards in office and basement.

Projection

A special instrument, somewhat resembling a speedometer, is used to secure the exactly proper timing of the film. The instrument in the projection room is electrically connected with another at the orchestra leader's desk, that there may be instantaneous and automatic co-operation between operator an dmusician, when for any reason, departure might be made from the scene-timing schedule established at rehearsals. This devise is also an accurate and unfailing preventive of the most common cause for dissatisfaction with the projection; the speeding of films. Under no circumstances will films be run faster than the speed at which the action is most effective—which, of course, may well vary somewhat in scenes of varying kinds. This subject touches another side of that very bi gsubject which has been referred to as "production."

The projection machines used are not of special construction in their entirety but have so many items of special equipment that it is quite safe to say that there are no others like them. The basic machines were only the starting-points of the equipment; optical formulae and mechanical engineering principles suggested many possibilities of improvement in projection, and full advantage was taken of these, with much experiment and many tests.

An inter-communicating telephone system connects stage with projection room, orchestra, offices, etc.

Some figures of interest in connection with the house's electrical equipment: There are some 5,000 individual electric bulbs, including many of tubular and other special design; approximately 100,000 feet (nearly twenty miles) of current-carrying wire; a carload of electric conduits; forty-four dimmers, forty spot-lights. The full strength of the house's light is estimated at 15,000 candle power.

Pipes which carry drinking-water from refrigerating plant to fountains and back are covered with an outer wall four inches thick.

Parking space for automobiles is being provided at rear of theater.

The Man Inside the Booth

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT, CONDUCTED BY E. C. SCOBEY

THIS department is a permanent feature of MOTOGRAPHY. Its editor, Mr. Scobey, is a former secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local No. 194, I. A. T. S. E., and was formerly associated with the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis. He was recently elected vice-president of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, the first operator to be so honored. The idea is to make this department just as helpful as possible to operators and exhibitors. Send your questions and problems to Mr. Scobey. He is sure to give you some valuable information. Address, MOTOGRAPHY, Chicago.

Arc Keeps Breaking

I am a reader of the Projection Department of MOTOGRAPHY and have received some very valuable information through the columns of the paper. Now I am in trouble and would like to have you help me if you possibly can.

I have two Simplex machines, a double dissolver, one spot lamp and a General Electric motor generator set in my booth, also a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. I use the compensarc to heat up the carbons on one machine while I am using the generator set on the other machine. The generator set is three phase A. C. to 50 amps. on the generator end, D. C.

When I light up on the A. C. and then switch over on the D. C. my light settles down and then the arc keeps breaking all the time and by the time that my show is over I have to cut out all the field resistance to hold the arc up to 25 to 28 amps. and I only run the show for three hours an evening. What shall I do for it or do to locate my trouble? —J. G. N.—Tennessee.

I think that the trouble that you are having when you change from A. C. on the compensarc to D. C. on the generator set is caused by your lighting the lamp too soon, that is you light it on A. C. and keep it lighted on the A. C. until you burn out the crater on the carbon that was formed when you were using D. C.

In using the two different currents on a machine, as you are using them, you have to take considerable care when using the A. C. because as I have just explained, in using the D. C. you have a crater form on the upper or positive carbon and every operator knows from experience that to get a good light on the screen you must have a good crater formed on the carbon.

Now, in your case you use the machine on the D. C. and at the end of the reel you cut off this machine and switch the D. C. to the other machine. When you get ready to use the first machine again, there is a crater formed on the top carbon—because you were using D. C. current on it last. Now, if you use A. C. on this lamp to warm the carbons up you will have to exercise a good deal of care that you do not light up too soon—that is, before the other machine is nearly ready to be shut off, for if you have to keep the lamp lighted very long on the A. C. you ruin the crater on the top carbon as A. C. causes a crater to form on both carbons. Then when you throw the lamp on the D. C. the lamp will sputter and take the best part of the time that you are running the reel through to get it to settle down and burn steady.

In regard to the trouble that you are having with the generator not holding up the amperage, I would suggest that you examine the generator and the lamp for loose connections. A loose connection on the lamp or generator will cause increased resistance and the longer the lamp is run the more resistance there will be, due to the heating up of the loose connection.

Another thing that might cause the trouble is a tight bearing on the generator, or the oil may not be flowing properly, caused by an oil ring being out of place. Still another thing that could cause it, though it is hardly probable, is a drop in the voltage on the A. C. side which would cause the motor to slow up in speed and by doing that would cause the generator to drop in voltage. I would advise you, first—to examine for loose connections, second—to see that the bearings do not heat up to excess, third—that the bearings are properly oiled and that the oil rings are keeping them that way.

The editor of this department has had several inquiries from operators as where to get the extension shafts to use when setting the shutter out at the point where it will cut the light at the proper place. There is only one firm that I know of that is making the extension shafts and that is the Nicholas Power's Company, 88-90 Gold street, New York. They make an extension shaft and also make an extra long shaft. I would advise the operators to use the extension shaft, as it can be fitted to the end of the shaft that is already in the machine whereas if you get the extra long shaft you have to take the old one out and put the new one in. And that is a job for a repair man that understands his business and not for an operator. In ordering the extension, be sure to give them the length that the shutter has to extend from the machine. They make these extensions in several lengths.

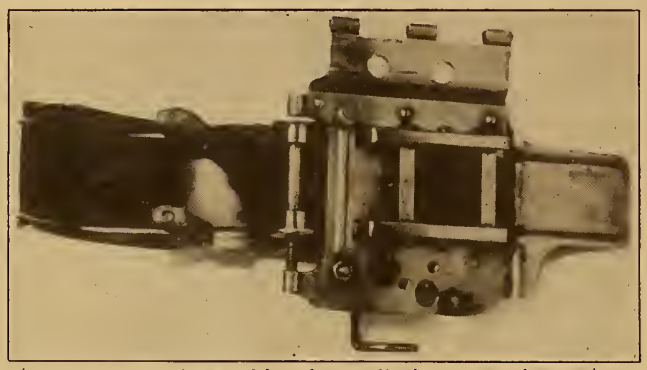
First Aid to First Run Device

Some time ago I sent you a device for use on Power's No. 6, 6A and 6B machines to be used when running first run films, and upon receiving your comments and a request for a photo of the device in position on the machine I am sending it to you. I figured out this First Aid to First Run device five years ago and have been using it every day since, and it has never failed to do the work; namely, it prevents the emulsion from adhering to the tension springs or the aperture plate.

I have made quite a few for the boys in this vicinity and they all take off their hats to it. I usually run new film at the rate of 16 minutes to the 1,000 feet the first time through the machine and then fifteen minutes to the 1,000 feet thereafter. I have had no stops on account of emulsion in the time that I have had this device in use and I think that you will agree with me than that is surely some record. Recently I screened five reels of K. E. S. E.—all 1,000-foot reels—in one hour and seven minutes.

I hardly think that it is necessary to give an explanation of this device as the photo speaks for itself. If any of the operators want one of these First Aid to First Run, the price is $1.00. I am very much interested in the Projection department of MOTOGRAPHY and look forward from week to week for its arrival. Heretofore I have never contributed to your paper but may muster up courage enough to send you something interesting later on.— K. R. Stickley, Chief Operator, Palms Theater No. 1, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The device mentioned in Mr. Stickley's letter is an attachment made of stiff wire and attaches to the upper film guard of a Power's No. 6, 6A or 6B machine. It cannot be used on any other make of machine, but Mr.



Device to prevent the emulsion from adhering to tension springs or aperture plate, submitted by K. R. Stickley of the Palms Theater No. 1, Indianapolis.

Stickley tells me that he expects to have an attachment that will fit the other machines in the near future. The device is fitted so that as the film passes from the top sprocket it comes in contact with the little felt pads of the device. These pads are covered with a preparation that is applied to the edges of the film as it passes under the device.

Mr. Stickley sent me one of the devices and I used it on three reels of new film and I found that the ribbon runs through the machine just the same as a film 90 days old. There was no emulsion on the tension springs nor aperture plate and I did not have to stop once while running the film. I examined the film after running it and you would have to look very closely at the film to tell that it had ever been through a machine. The attachment is very simple in construction and will last a life time, and if any of the operators are having trouble with first run film, I can recommend this attachment to them.

Operators Still Punching Films

In the last ten days I have had three letters from as many different exchange managers who are complaining about the operators who are punching holes in the film. There has been so much said about this practice of ruining film in the columns of this department as well as in all trade papers that I think the operators of the country who are giving their best efforts to projection should use every means in their power to detect and to report any operator who is following this punching of films. No one likes a knocker, but the time has come when this practice has got to stop, and the sooner these destroyers of films are reported to the exchanges the sooner it will stop. One exchange that I know of caught an operator that was punching holes in their film and gave him his choice of paying for the film that he ruined or going to jail. He paid.

W. R. Coleman to Direct Lois Meredith

William Robert Coleman, formerly connected with Biograph, Selig and other producing organizations, has been engaged to direct the first of six productions starring Lois Meredith, and bearing the star's name as the brand of release.

Mr. Coleman has a past record as a director that gives Miss Meredith ample justification in accepting him as her director. He will be remembered as having staged the "Selig Special" in 1915, "The Mariner's Compass," and "The Evangeline." His most recent endeavors have been for the London Features where he was centered until war broke out.

Mr. Coleman was born in Coleman, Kentucky, a little town named after his grandfather, the founder of the place. At the age of eleven he started out to shift for himself. Going to Louisville, he was picked up by Ed. Fisher's Minstrels. This company took him along up to Alaska where they played a long engagement, arriving there in the midst of the gold rush at Nome. Here Mr. Coleman accumulated quite a fortune, digging for gold in his spare time on his own claims, and taking part in the minstrel at night. Mr. Coleman has a host of friends covering the entire world. In speaking of the Alaskan days, he says, "I can look back with horror at the time when the price of a sack of flour was $40, ham and eggs $5 per plate, and a cup of coffee, $1. It strikes me it is about that bad right here in New York now."

The story for Miss Meredith has been selected and Mr. Coleman, co-directing with Marcel Morhange, will start work soon.

Stage Successes for Empire-Mutual

H. R. Durant, managing editor of scenarios for the Empire All Star Corporation, the company which is screening the dramatic successes of the late Charles Frohman for release on the Mutual program, continues to receive large consignments of manuscripts from ambitious authors, despite the fact that his organization is not in the market for original material.

H. R. Durant, former managing editor who blue pencils Empire-Mutual scenarios.

Durant was the first of the well-known magazine editors in this country to desert the field of periodical literature to devote his talents to the screen, and in actual point of service is entitled to the appellation of dean of the profession. He served in turn as editorial chief of the Biograph Company, the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and the Famous Players Corporation before forming his present connection with the Empire All Star Corporation. His present duties demand his attention to a list of some four hundred plays, all of which were produced by the late Charles Frohman.

Already plays for the entire year have been selected, and scenarios are being prepared by Joseph F. Poland, Hamilton Smith, Anthony P. Kelly, Charles A. Logue, John B. Clymer, Marc E. Jones, C. Doty Hobart, Harry Hoyt and Rufus Dewey. The stage successes which these talented writers are now making ready for the screen include the best of Pinero, Henry Arthur Jones, Oscar Wilde, Zangwill, Clyde Fitch, Augustus Thomas, Sardou, William Gillette, W. Somerset Maugham, James M. Barrie, Haddon Chambers, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, David Belasco, Anthony Hope, Richard Harding Davis, Booth Tarkington, Edith Wharton, and many others.

CHANGES IN BRADY SCHEDULE

Rearrangement of World Pictures' Release Sheet Places "Jerry-for-Short" in Lead—Plays Ready Three Months Ahead

There has been a rearrangement of the release sheet of World-Pictures Brady-Made which might almost be described as a shake-up.

The new photoplay, "Jerry-for-Short," in which little Madge Evans makes her first appearance as a star, has been moved up from its position at the far end of the line, and will be published August 13, throwing several kinks into the previous arrangement of later releases.

According to present schedule, "Jerry-for-Short" will be followed August 20 by Ethel Clayton in "Souls Adrift"; August 27, Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "The Guardian"; September 3, Alexandra Carlisle in a dramatization of a very popular novel; September 10, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "The Marriage Market"; September 17, Ethel Clayton in "The Woman Beneath"; September 24, Kitty Gordon in "The Divine Sacrifice."

This keeps the schedule of practically ready plays up to the minimum of three months ahead, with an ever-increasing flock of pictures in the offing. Six directors are always working in the World's studio, and it is a fixed rule of the Brady direction that the actual making of any World play shall not take up more than three weeks' time.

Most directors regard this as working at high pressure, but Mr. Brady himself, by way of providing a practical example of how simple it is, recently directed in person the production of Kitty Gordon's "The Beloved Adventuress" in seventeen days without apparent effort.

This process under which six directors are completing as many photoplays every three weeks makes a regular output of two productions weekly, so that no intricate process of computation is required to indicate the steady accumulation of Brady-Made motion pictures as time passes.

When Mr. Brady first made formal alliance with the World Film Corporation as director general, it was freely predicted that he would not "stay hitched" for any great length of time—that the studio conditions then prevailing throughout the manufacturing end of the motion picture business would either dishearten or disgust him, to the end that he would quit.

"But," as a member of the staff of World Pictures said in discussing this matter, "the prophets either were unfamiliar with Brady's career or had him sized wrong."

News-Weekly Committee Named

A news-weekly committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been organized by the election of Jack Cohn, chairman, E. B. Hatrick, vice-chairman, and Pell Mitchell, secretary. The following companies were represented at the meeting: Universal Film Manufacturing Company, "Current Events" and "Animated Weekly," by Jack Cohn and H. E. Culbertson; Gaumont-Mutual Company, "Mutual Weekly" and "Reel Life," by Pell Mitchell and Paul M. Bryan; Hearst-Pathe, by E. B. Hatrick and Emanuel Cohen.

The meeting was arranged by Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, who directed the organization work and has received President William A. Brady's approval to appoint the above named as members of the committee. This will be one of the most important committees to work in conjunction with the new war co-operation committee appointed by President Brady.

It is the purpose of the news weekly committee to recognize the National Association as a clearing house through which all matters pertaining to the committee will be handled. The parent companies which control the news weeklies are all members of the National Association and their officers are active in the councils of the organization, several being members of the Board of Directors.

It's Nice to Be a V. L. S. E. Employe

V. L. S. E., in the payroll of June 9, distributed Liberty Bond ten-dollar participating certificates to the extent of $12,500 to employes.

This distribution was made on the theory that any employe receiving one of these ten-dollar certificates would take it to a bank, add forty dollars to the same and become the possessor of a Liberty Bond. In case any employe had no desire for a certificate the employe would have no trouble realizing on the same, as many stores are accepting them the same as if they are ten-dollar bills.

If every V. L. S. E. employe who received a ten-dollar certificate finished the purchase of a Liberty Bond by this method alone, V. L. S. E. employes would be the possessors of Liberty Bonds to the value of $62,500.

Besides these participating certificates, employes of the home office of V. L. S. E. have purchased bonds to the value of $10,000.

The Barnetts, B. and Bert, well known in the trade in the middle west, are said to have purchased "Joan the Woman," for the northwest. These men now own the rights of this production for Michigan and Ohio.

Elsie Ferguson, the splendid stage artist who is Artcraft's newest recruit, learns her A. B. C.'s of film technique from George M. Cohan, who is at present appearing in his second picture, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Miss Ferguson will shortly commence activities on her first photoplay, "Barbary Sheep."

Jack Richardson Joins Triangle

Jack Richardson, who makes his first appearance on the Triangle program in the heavy part opposite Louise Glaum in "Love or Justice?" is one of the authentic veterans of the silent drama.

Jack Richardson, a powerful new Triangle player.

It is more than six years since Richardson began work before the camera with the Selig company. Previous to that he had filled a minor role in "The Royal Chef," a musical comedy, and had played a variety of parts with various stock organizations.

Richardson is a native of New York City, but early in life moved with his parents to Cleveland, Ohio. He was educated in the public schools of that city and at Culver Military Academy. Upon graduating from the latter institution, it was his parents' wish that he should enter the legal profession, but Jack had already become hopelessly enamored of the footlights, and when a friend of his urged him to join "The Royal Chef" company at the La Salle Theater in Chicago he made up his mind to answer the call of art, despite parental opposition, a decision that has added much to the enjoyment of thousands of gallery gods since then.

Figuring his connections with the Selig, Bison, American and now with the Triangle forces, Richardson has appeared in about 325 pictures. In nearly every play he has taken the heavy part, and has the reputation of having been killed in the films more frequently than any other villain in captivity.

Not long ago Richardson won a valuable diamond trophy in a contest held by one of the magazines to decide the screen's most popular heavy, polling more than 900,000 votes.

The new Triangle bad man stands a fraction less than six feet in height and weighs 190 pounds. Off the screen he is the liveliest of companions and never frowns except on a straight salary basis.

Constance Talmadge with Selznick

Lewis J. Selznick, known to the world of moving pictures as maker of stars and picker of winners, has announced that he has added to his list of stars the bright little Constance Talmadge. This young woman, who is only eighteen years old, begins her career of stardom under conditions which might well be the envy of any ambitious actress of many more years and much wider experience.

Her first encouragement is the family tradition of picture success. Miss Norma Talmadge, only a few years older than Constance, is already known to the exhibitors of every state in the Union as one of the most popular players on the screen. Constance has been a close observer of her sister's methods and will take advantage of all she has learned of Norma's experience.

Constance is beginning, in her stardom career, where Norma arrived after several years of experimenting. After enduring the grind of turning out pictures by the dozen for programs, Norma hailed the open booking system as one in which the star would be unhampered by the domineering release dates, and could take her time in making her pictures. So she signed her contraact with Lewis J. Selznick. A similar contract marks Constance's entrance into the film world, enabling her to escape a great deal of drudgery.

Still another important event in Miss Constance Talmadge's background is her experience in working for D. W. Griffith. When this great director was making his huge spectacle, "Intolerance," he wanted a young girl who could drive a chariot, had no knowledge of the word "fear," had the strength of a young tigress, and in addition to all this must be personally attractive. His casting director threw up both hands, but Griffith, with his uncanny precision in selecting the right player for a role, gave the part to Constance Talmadge, who had done practically nothing of importance at that time. The result, that Constance as the mountain girl, is one of the brilliant spots in the big picture, is a matter of history.

Bessie Good Hater of Men

Bessie Barriscale soon will be seen on the Triangle Kay-Bee program, when she is presented by Thomas H. Ince in the "Hater of Men," a comedy-drama by C. Gardner Sullivan.

"Hater of Men" is the engrossing narrative of the fourth estate, the unweaving of which offers the star, it is said, many opportunities to display her versatility. Janice Salsbury is a special writer for a big city newspaper, and is engaged to a reporter, Billy Williams. Phillipe Hartley, known as "the drawing room philosopher," completes the triangle. He loves Janice, but is silently and anxiously awaiting the inevitable revulsion of feeling, due to the environment and associations into which she has thrown herself, when she will turn to him for comfort.

Miss Barriscale, as Janice, is said to be "made-to-order" for this part. Her ability, it is said, to portray any conceivable part, is never questioned by competent critics, and her characterization in the "Hater of Men" will only strengthen this reputation.

New Pearl White Serial

The great demand of exhibitors throughout the country for a Pearl White serial this summer has caused J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., to change his plans and instead of releasing "The Fatal Ring," the serial in which Pearl White is starred, some time in September as originally planned, the release date will be July 8.

"The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," the latest Official Government pictures to be put out by Pathe, enjoy the distinction of having broken all house records of New York's Strand Theater, when they ran there.

Director Rupert Julian is nearing the completion at Universal City of "My Mother," a five-reel feature in which he and Ruth Clifford have the principal roles.

Various peeps at Jackie Saunders in "A Bit of Kindling."

It has always been Jack Saunders' idea that a fighting but femininely fascinating newsgirl would furnish some corking screen material —and here it is—in "A Bit of Kindling."

Jackie Saunders, Fighting Newsgirl

Jackie Saunders, the pretty little star whose best work is done in what Sherwood McDonald, her director, refers to as "tomboy stuff," comes to bat with a remarkable characterization in "A Bit of Kindling," latest Mutual-Horkheimer feature production, in which Miss Jackie is "Sticks," a newsgirl waif. It was released June 18.

According to all accounts the dramatization of "Sticks" is in realization of Miss Saunders' long cherished ambition. Ever since she began acting for the screen she has insisted that a fighting but femininely fascinating newsgirl whom she had known in San Francisco, furnished the motif for a corking film drama.

In collaboration with Douglas Bronson, Miss Saunders prepared the scenario of "A Bit of Kindling," the young star furnishing the material and Mr. Bronson the constructive ability. Between them they have made a play that thrills by its humanness and gives Miss Saunders the opportunity she seeks. It is a most appealing story that takes Miss Jackie through innumerable adventures before she marries the millionaire and settles down.

As "Sticks," the newsgirl, holding down a metropolitan corner and fighting for her rights against a lot of very tough lads, whom she terrorizes into complete subjection, "Jackie" seems at first to be a virago with a sharp tongue and sharper fist.

Ann Murdock is busy on locations where the exterior scenes are being taken for her next Mutual production, "The Beautiful Adventure." The role of Helene De Trevillar is not a new one for Miss Murdock, as she played this same part on the legitimate stage. "The Beautiful Adventure" is a film version of Charles Frohman's production of a French comedy, and has been described "As daring as it is delightful, and as frank as it is poetic."

Del Henderson is directing Miss Murdock.

From Shakespearean reportoire to principal fun maker in motion picture comedies is the experience of Jean Otto, the leading man of LaSalle comedies released through Mutual.

New Norma Talmadge Play

When Norma Talmadge selected "The Moth" as the production in which she will appear following the release of "Poppy" through the Selznick distributing organization, she found a vehicle which not only adds to her reputation as an emotional actress, but reveals her in a role distinctly different from any in which she has been seen since she started her own producing company.

Not content with portraying such widely-varying characters as those of "Panthea," the self-sacrificing Russian heroine in the photoplay of that name, and "Poppy," the love-starved little South African girl in her most recent screen success, Miss Talmadge has turned to the gay and foolish society moth, Lucy Gillam, for an opportunity to show her talents in a new light. In the evolution of Lucy—always fluttering dangerously near the flame of her own folly—from a selfish woman searching vainly for happiness to a devoted mother wrapped up in her children, there is a marvelous opportunity to portray every emotion of which the feminine heart is capable.

The staging of the new production is one of the most elaborate of any photoplay in which Miss Talmadge has ever been seen. The young screen star is appearing under the management of Joseph M. Schenck.

Bessie Barriscale's contract with Triangle expired June 4 and she is now working for her own company in the photo-dramatic production of Grace Miller White's novel, "Rose O'Paradise," which will be Paralta Plays first release. James Young, who wrote the screen version of the story, is directing the production. Robert Brunton, Richard Holmes Paul and Leon Spinak are responsible for the art and technical features and Clyde de Vinna for the photography. For the next five years Miss Barriscale will appear solely in pictures made by the Bessie Barriscale Feature Corporation.

At the request of the "peace patrol" at Plattsburg, New York, which is made up of more than a hundred patriotic youths, comprising a company of Infantry, N. Y. N. G., Charlie Chaplin, Mutual's international comedian, is working overtime at the studio, making a collection of exclusive photographs for the purpose of decorating a "Chaplin tent" at the camp.

ELSIE SEES NEW LIFE

Popular Stage Beauty Visits Fort Lee Studios for First Time—Expresses Great Delight in Anticipating New Work

Elsie Ferguson, who will shortly commence work for Artcraft in "Barbary Sheep," paid a visit to both Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky last week in order to acquaint herself with the new atmosphere in which she will work. At the Fifty-sixth street studio Miss Ferguson was greeted by George M. Cohan, who is appearing in his second Artcraft picture, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," Mr. Cohan ceased his activities before the camera in order to initiate the caller into the inner circle of the photoplay realm.

On a tour through the entire studio Mr. Cohan explained the various mysteries of the film craft to Miss Ferguson, who displayed great interest in the strange surroundings. This was Miss Ferguson's first visit to a film studio.

At the Fort Lee studio the beautiful stage star was shown through the great glass house which will be the home of her motion picture work under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. The anticipation of acting under the sun-light amidst the country atmosphere made her impatient to start work. Under the guidance of studio manager Lowe, Miss Ferguson was taken through the developing and printing plant at Fort Lee where she expressed amazement at the various intricacies of film technique.

After spending an entire afternoon becoming acquainted with her new associations, Miss Ferguson said: "It is all very wonderful indeed and naturally I can hardly wait to begin work. Although it was not until recently that I became interested in motion pictures, I am making up for lost time by seeing as many as four and five pictures a week. The poor work of the actors, directors and others connected with the production of pictures evidenced at the beginning resulted in turning me against this art. However, the wonderful improvement now apparent in its every branch has made it one of the greatest institutions of the universe. Like every other industry elimination left only the best and today the motion picture is really an art with which anyone might well feel proud to be allied. I feel I shall indeed be happy in my new work and shall put forward my best endeavors in my new undertaking."

Cecil B. De Mille, Mary Pickford, and Captain Ian Hay Beith of the British army, surrounded by some of the Prussian soldiers appearing in the Artcraft picture, "The Little American." The British army man co-operated with Director De Mille in the presentation of the war scenes for the coming Pickford picture.

"Bluebird Day" for Exhibitors

"Have you a 'Bluebird Day' at your house?" is the question Bluebird's sales department has been asking exhibitors during an inquiry campaign, by mail, that has been conducted to find out how the idea works. From many showmen the answer has come that "Bluebird Day" is not only an immediate business builder, but strengthens the exhibitor's future hold upon his community.

The brand so readily lends itself to a souvenir campaign that in houses that depend upon family trade "repeating," the results have been especially good. Where transients largely comprise the patronage of a theater, however, the same results cannot be expected. It's coming back each week, an action superinduced by the fine grade of pictures Bluebird is consistently circulating, that makes "Bluebird Day" a factor of value to theater managers in towns of 15,000 or less.

The fad for Bluebird knick-knacks started at about the time the brand of pictures was first marketed. There are bluebird dishes, bluebird candies, handkerchiefs, china and favors of all sorts, and to assemble a complete series of these souvenirs patrons come back time after time, until they look for "Bluebird Day" as a regular thing in their weekly enjoyment of moving pictures.

To stimulate the expansion of "Bluebird Days" as a feature of exhibiting the series, Bluebird's publicity department has all along incorporated references to the idea in its prepared newspaper notices and advertising hints; and now the sales promotion department has worked out a regular advertising campaign of helps for exhibitors who desire to advance the popularity of "Bluebird Day" at their houses, or to guide exhibitors who wish to establish the practice as a part of their plan of house management.

More Comedies for General

News of the resumption of the tried and popular "Pokes and Jabs" comedies, produced by the Jaxon Film Company, comes from General Film, which will again handle this product. The "Pokes and Jabs" releases are one-reel laugh-maker subjects of the lively kind and have long been in favor. A most excellent set of these subjects is now ready ahead, it is stated, and the first release will be that entitled "Are Actors People?" June 22. Burns and Stull, the eccentric team, as usual will be featured in this group of comedies.

It is the expressed endeavor of General Film to meet the demand for reliable short subjects, especially of the comedy type, and the Jaxon company is energetically co-operating.

When the French picture play "A Naked Soul" was shown to the reviewers the other day in the projection room of World-Pictures Brady-Made, there was a practically unanimous chorus of superlative commendation. The acting of Susan Grandaise ("the sweetest girl in Europe") and the other principals in a fine cast was spoken of in the highest of terms, while the direction of Louis Mercanton came in for unmixed praise as a model for many directors better known in America.

MANAGERS LIKE NEW POLICY

Exhibitors Send in Reports on Vitagraph Productions —Co-operate in Plan to Keep Poor Plays Off Market

Greater Vitagraph's recently inaugurated policy of withdrawing from distribution all of its productions which do not meet with the approval of sixty per cent of the first exhibitors who present them, has struck a responsive chord in the exhibitors throughout the country.

The home office of the Blue Ribbon company is daily in receipt of scores of blanks which are provided the exhibitors on booking features. Some are of laudatory tenor and some of adverse criticism, but all submitted in a realization that it is the exhibitor himself who will accrue the benefits of this co-operative innovation.

Among the reports recently received is one from A. N. Miles of the Eminence Theater, Eminence, Kentucky, who says of "The Chattel": "An excellent plot, well developed as to detail. A bit melodramatic in climax and conclusion, but not impossible. Miss Hyland is perfect in appearance and delineation and we can almost forget Sothern's age and stiffness in his excellent portrayal of the domineering husband."

Other criticisms received are:

"The Glory of Yolanda"—"This picture went over very well for a foreign story. Acting excellent. Photography very good except in theater scenes, which were too dark. Film in good condition. Never made a stop."—E. F. Dunlap, Dunlap Theater, Wakefield, Nebraska.

"Dollars and the Woman"—"Many of my patrons told me it was one of the best I had ever shown here of its kind and that means a lot, for I have had some good ones."—Merle R. Fish, Peterson Opera House, Peterson, Iowa.

"What Happened to Father"—"Liked a lot better than the society dramas."—Martin & Hahn, the Strand Theater, White City, Kansas.

"His Wife's Good Name"—"One of the best liked Vitagraph productions shown by me to date. Would like many more as pleasing."—T. H. Witmer, Lyric Theater, Valley Junction, Iowa.

"The Scarlet Runner"—"Curtain definition fine. Condition of film good. Pleased patrons and an assured success."—W. H. Jambien, Bio Theater, Billings, Oklahoma.

"The Daring of Diana"—"Turned away nearly a third of the people on account of a full house, all standing room taken long before the show started. Miss Stewart sure is some drawing card for the town."—C. W. Young, Aline Photoplay Company, Aline, Oklahoma.

"The More Excellent Way"—"Anita Stewart drew large crowd, and the picture pleased above the ordinary."—A. A. Jaecke, Dreamland Theater, Horington, Kansas.

"Captain of the Grey Horse Troop"—"Picture and advertising both fine."—Charles H. Ball, Electric Theater, Garden City, Kansas.

Director Joseph De Grasse of Universal City is directing Dorothy Phillips in a new five-reel feature, "Triumph," in which he also plays one of the parts.

Doug is here teaching his new leading lady, Eileen Percy, a bit of grinology. Wethinks Eileen could do a little teaching herself.

FAIRBANKS' LEADING LADY

Pretty Broadway Favorite in "Wild and Woolly" Discloses Natural Screen Talents. Exceptional Work in Initial Picture

Eileen Percy, the talented stage beauty who makes her motion picture debut in the Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture "Wild and Woolly," has been signed as permanent leading lady for the athletic star. Miss Percy will appear opposite Douglas in all his productions for the coming year as a result of her unusually effective work before the camera in the new Fairbanks subject which will be released by Artcraft on June 24th.

Miss Percy is a vivacious young girl of seventeen who made her first appearance on the speaking stage in Maeterlinck's play, "The Bluebird," followed by numerous engagements in Broadway productions. Her last stage engagement, which she left in order to appear on the screen with Fairbanks, was with "The Century Girl," in which production she won wide personal recognition. Following the custom of the well-to-do California film players, Miss Percy immediately leased a palatial bungalow plus a garage after signing her new contract, which will keep her active in California for some time to come.

Author! Author!

There is, percolating somewhere around the country, an author who has sold a story to a film producing concern but doesn't know it. His name is Norman MacDonald. The World Film Corporation wants to buy a certain scenario from his typewriter but is unable to locate Mr. MacDonald. If you read this, "Mac," you know what to do.

"Too Much Ink," is the title of a laughable one-reel school room comedy being directed by W. W. Beaudine at Universal City.

Ray Comedies Original

Johnny and Emma Ray are appearing in some very original comedies to be released through General Film. The male musical star is said to essay a type of screen portrayal absolutely different from anything heretofore attempted by the various film comedians.

Bert Ennis, general manager, Ray Comedies Company.

The first film by the Rays is "Coughing Higgins" and was released June 11. This will be followed at regular weekly intervals by single reel comedies. A large studio has been erected at Cliffside, N. J., for the production of these pictures. Bert Ennis is general manager of the company.

The supporting company includes Billy Sloane, Edward Boulden and Clare Irwin. Joseph T. Farrell, writer of many sketches and scenarios, has prepared the scripts for the Rays.

Selznick Gets "On Trial"

"On Trial," a photodrama made from the sensationally successful drama that ran a whole year in New York, has been secured by Lewis J. Selznick for the territory covered by his New York and Chicago exchanges.

This picture is the first to be selected by the National Exhibitors' Circuit, an organization of exhibitors formed to secure for the exhibitor a certain number of guaranteed box-office attractions. Recognizing the advantage of distributing through the Selznick organization, the Circuit transferred to them the rights for the territory mentioned.

"On Trial," therefore, is offered to the exhibitors of New York state with the double recommendation of the National Circuit and of the Selznick forces. S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto, New York, secured the production for the first showing in that city.

Group Bookings for "Pokes and Jabs"

In presenting the new "Pokes and Jabs" single-reel comedies, General Film, their exclusive distributor, inaugurates a service calculated to be of outstanding value to the exhibitor. These comedies, with Burns and Stull as stars, are being marketed in groups of six fresh subjects at a time, so that the exhibitor can know definitely in advance just what and how much he is going to get.

The plan is insured of success by the efficient cooperation of the Jaxon Film Company, which produces these comedies. Preparedness has been the keynote, and the first group of six comedies is ready. The prints have gone to all the General Film exchanges weeks ahead of release. The posters have been made and shipped to reach all parts of the country simultaneously with the prints. Later on, the second group of six "Pokes and Jabs" comedies will be distributed in the same manner.

L. C. Windom, one of the best directors of children in motion pictures, supervised the production of Essanay's "Do Children Count?" series. These short features, which present little Mary McAlister, aged six years, as their star, are being released weekly through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. More than one hundred children were used in the little star's supporting companies in several of these productions.

Cast Chosen for "Fall of Romanoffs"

Herbert Brenon has almost completed his noteworthy cast for his state rights picture, "The Fall of the Romanoffs." If he continues at the rapid pace at which he has been going, America will soon have the opportunity of seeing for itself the conditions that led up to the recent revolution in Russia.

With Iliodor acting his own role, Nance O'Neil as the Czarina, Alfred Hickman as the Czar, Edward Connelly as Rasputin, Mlle. E. Katerina Galanta as Anna, the girl who was the immediate cause of Rasputin's downfall and death, and Conway Tearle as the young Prince, Herbert Brenon's selection of players is one that challenges state rights buyers and the public. William E. Shay and Mlle. Marcelle complete the remarkable cast. All of these are artists who have proved their worth and hold a high place in the annals of the screen and dramatic stage, with the exception of Mlle. Galanta, who as yet is little known here.

Unless Mr. Brenon and all those who have seen her are very much mistaken, her appearance will make a sensation. Mlle. Galanta is a "find" of Mr. Brenon's. She is a young Russian girl who came to this country two years ago with the Russian ballet, and appeared in all the ballets, both at the Metropolitan and Manhattan Opera Houses.

Galanta will have ample opportunity to display her versatility in her first screen role, for the part of Anna brings into use both her powers of actng and of dancing. First she is seen as a peasant girl; later as one of the foremost ladies of the land, where Rasputin's enormous influence at court has placed her.

"Lone Wolf" at Broadway's Door

"The Lone Wolf," the third Selznick-Picture to be offered by the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, will open an indefinite engagement at the Broadway Theater beginning July 1. "The Lone Wolf" is a picturization of the sensational novel by Louis Joseph Vance, into which literary critics assert more action has been crammed than in a dozen ordinary novels.

Mr. Brenon has endeavored to make this picture a fitting successor to his previous screen triumphs and has produced it in his usual lavish and painstaking manner with a cast including a score of stage and film favorites. The scramble for the screen rights to this book included every producer in America and Mr. Brenon was congratulated on all sides upon his luck in securing it.

The unusually strong cast of this big picture is headed by Hazel Dawn. Other well known artists in the play are Auriol Lee, Edward Abeles, Alfred Hickman, William E. Shay, Stephen Grattan, Joseph Chailles, Ben Graham, Edna Chase, William Riley Hatch, Wilfred Lyttell, Juliet Brenon, Robert Fischer, Florence Ashbrooke, Cornish Beck and George Edward Hall.

Mr. Brenon believes that "The Lone Wolf" will even surpass in popularity his previous screen triumphs, "A Daughter of the Gods," and "War Brides." Certainly it is one of the great stories of the screen and the finished efforts of this director will be exemplified as never before in his new picture. The big moments are to be counted by the score, for so much action was packed into the scenario that almost every scene carries a thrill.

Fox Announces July Releases

William Fox's schedule of photoplays for July release, announcement of which has just been made. displays some of his best stars in action. The list for the coming month is well balanced and particularly attractive.

In "Patsy," her eighth William Fox picture, to be released July 1, Miss Caprice has another story full of charm and sunshine—the kind that gives her the opportunity to present her naive little self to best advantage. John G. Adolfi, who has screened all of the winsome star's productions, was again in charge of the direction. Harry Hilliard is the leading man.

R. A. Walsh, the young directorial genius of the Fox forces, has produced in "The Innocent Sinner," featuring Miriam Cooper, another of the remarkably human photodramas for which he is famous. Mr. Walsh has staged many of the most notable of William Fox pictures. His latest one will be released July 8.

Picturegoers the country over are sure to rejoice in the "Two Little Imps," the Lee children's starring vehicle, which will be sent out on July 15. The inimitable Jane and Katherine are universal favorites, and the millions of friends they have made through their affiliation with the screen will welcome the opportunity to see them in the leading parts for the first time. Mr. Fox has not released any film more captivating than this one with a pair of "Baby Grands."

The last announced photoplay, "To Honor and Obey?," for July 22, has an unusually gripping story and a cast of exceptional ability. The drama is Gladys Brockwell's initial production under the direction of Otis Turner, who has filmed George Walsh's pictures heretofore. Bertram Grassby, as the social parasite, plays opposite the beautiful emotional star.

Virginia Pearson's present production will probably be the release for the week of July 29. This picture has not yet been titled, but the principals in the star's supporting cast consist of Hardie Kirkland, Claire Whitney, and William Meehan. Mr. Meehan will continue to portray the genial crook of "Turn to the Right," the current Broadway comedy success, while appearing before the camero for Miss Pearson's play on the afternoons when there are no matinees of his other vehicle.

General Film Shows Patriotism

June 12, informally made Liberty Loan day for General Film, saw about $50,000 subscribed by employes of that company.

The largest subscription appears to have been made in New York, where at a meeting lasting only a half hour, executives and employes of headquarters subscribed $3,000, which was added to $5,700 already subscribed. Employes of the New York Exchange on Twenty-third street subscribed $1,700 at a similar meeting.

In New York, it developed that 90 per cent of the office forces had accepted the opportunity to subscribe to the Liberty Loan.

Shepard and Van Loan Get Big Job

The largest editing and titling assignment ever given to specialists in this line of work was awarded by the Russian Art Film Corporation a few days ago when they made arrangements with Shepard and Van Loan to title and edit sixty-seven Russian features.

The young men, who only recently opened offices in the Godfrey Building, New York, are well known in the industry. H. T. Van Loan was for three years publicity manager of the Universal Film Company, and

H. J. Shepard and H. H. Van Loan (at left), of Shepard and Van Loan.

H. J. Shepard was for a long time connected with the same company at the head of various departments. Both know the many angles of the business and are thoroughly equipped to advertise, exploit and promote anything from a one-reel comedy to a ten-reel feature. They have an efficient organization—unique and original—consisting of advertising, publicity, exploitations, titling, editing, sales promotion and art departments.

In commenting on the Russian plays he is about to edit and title Mr. Van Loan said:

I think these pictures are going to make a big hit in this country for, aside from the fact that they will prove an innovation and give us a glimpse of peasant and aristocratic life in Russia, which has been veiled to us in the past, they have great artistic value, excellent photography and real merit. They are quite different from the features we have been used to seeing and they are going to interest every moving picture theatergoer.

The work we have undertaken is big, to say the least, and it will probably take us two or three months to complete it. Mr. Goldsoll, who recently arrived here from Russia, and has assumed the duties of general manager of the company, has an original and novel idea as to how the titles, which are to be artistic, should be prepared and I think he will find his work will be readily copied by others in the future.

In addition to this big undertaking, Shepard & Van Loan have been engaged by the Wharton Brothers to prepare their latest production, "The Great White Trail," for the market.

They feel it is very evident that the producers are beginning to realize the manner in which a picture is presented—the titles, cutting, editing, etc.—has a great effect on the sales price of the picture. Much depends on the titling. A large producer said recently that good titles increase the selling price of a picture by at least one-third.

The next Ethel Clayton photoplay for World-Pictures Brady-Made is titled "Souls Adrift," to be published late in August. Miss Clayton's leading man in this drama is Milton Sills.

Asks Closer Co-operation

After a trip of inspection at various mid-western branches of General Film, including among others, Detroit, Chicago and Minneapolis, General Sales Manager Sidney R. Kent returned to New York with this important section of his field confirming his expectations in regard to various new merchandising methods.

His tour was devoted not alone to branch managers, but to exhibitors in each branch territory. His main purpose, however, was directly to instruct branch managers in the application of modern systems and policies that have been adopted by General Film. His trip was part of the educational campaign waged from headquarters that includes every member of the organization. In speaking of his tour and its purpose, Mr. Kent said:

We are requiring that our branch managers discard many of the obsolete policies that seem to be a sort of tradition in the film industry at large. Many merchandising methods new to this business are being introduced as swiftly as the magnitude of the organization permits.

We are insisting that all our branch managers co-operate with the exhibitor in studying out not only the cheapest but the most effective way of getting films and posters to him. What we are successfully approaching is the minimum of delay and expense to the exhibitor and ourselves.

Among other things of importance we have advised our branches that the arbitrary methods employed in this business so generally in the past must not creep in where we are concerned, and even where they do exist in other organizations our methods must provide a refreshing contrast.

For example, we are receiving most favorable comments from the exhibitors throughout the country whose complaints have been investigated by the home office and straightened out for them. In fact, we are requiring our branch managers to make a written report to the home office whenever they find it necessary to discontinue the service of any exhibitor as the outcome of a misunderstanding. This is so that headquarters may share any responsibility involved, and if any wrong has been done, right it. We want the branch manager and the exhibitor to feel that General Film as an organization is directly interested in the welfare of both.

Portrait Painter Joins Goldwyn

Considerable strength has been added to the Goldwyn producing staff through the addition of William H. Cotton to the group of brilliant men whose best efforts are concentrated upon the direction of Goldwyn Pictures. Mr. Cotton is one of the most successful of the younger American artists, having already achieved a reputation as a portrait painter, and won distinction as well by his decorative drawings and tone-studies.

Mr. Cotton received his early art education in Boston, where he was a pupil of the Cowles Art School. Afterwards he studied under the French master, Laurens, at the Julian Academy in Paris. One of the first canvases which brought his work to the attention of a wide circle of admirers was "The Princess," which won the first Hallgarten prize at the National Academy of Design in 1907.

At the Goldwyn studios Mr. Cotton has begun work on the first Jane Cowl production, the filming of which is making progress under the direction of Arthur Hopkins.

All four Art Dramas studios are working night and day at present, making features for summer releases. Several of the companies are engaged on two features, under different directors, as they are desirous of being well ahead of program requirements.

"A Kentucky Cinderella"

Southern Story in Bluebird Release of June 25. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

RUPERT JULIAN has directed this picturization of F. Hopkinson Smith's novel, scenarioized by E. J. Clawsen. Its quaint characters, beautiful settings and splendid photography are typical of the best of the Bluebird offerings. It recalls "Southern Justice" in its settings and southern atmosphere, but its story is better and more interesting.

Zoe Rae as a pickaninny adds a touch of humor.

Its story laid before the Civil War gives opportunity for pretty costuming which adds a flavor of romance. Ruth Clifford, Rupert Julian, Gretchen Lederer, Eddie Polo, Emery Johnson and others appear in the cast. Zoe Ray is prominent and furnishes humor as a lively pickininny. There are many humorous and unusual touches throughout the play. It is in every way an enjoyable picture and its power to entertain critical patrons is proved by the fact that it is held for a second week at the Playhouse, a Michigan Avenue theater in Chicago. It has won very favorable criticism from the daily papers of the city.

The Story: Nannie, her father and Toulumne John are three "pardners' in a mine. Nannie's father is killed and the girl is sent back to Kentucky to her uncle's home. There she is most unhappy because of the snubbing she receives from her aunt and the latter's daughter. When Nannie all unconsciously wins the love of her cousin's suitor, her aunt is furious and orders the girl from her home. Nannie is cared for by her negro mammy. Her lover, learning of the affair, wishes to marry Nannie at once. She is unhappy because she cannot have a fine wedding. Just at the right moment, Toulumne John arrives from the mine, which has proved rich. He approves of the marriage, after investigating the young man's history and informs Nannie that she is a wealthy heiress.

"An Amateur Orphan"

Gladys Leslie Stars in Thanhouser-Pathe Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IN THIS story Agnes C. Johnston has provided Gladys Leslie, newly advanced to stardom, with a vehicle in the style of the Gladys Hulette pictures. There is the same optimism and happiness of spirit, although perhaps not so much reality of humor as in Miss Johnston's previous stories. It is safe to say that audiences which liked the Gladys Hulette and the Baby Osborne stories on the Pathe program will appreciate this. It will place patrons in a pleasant frame of mind, unless they are troubled by improbabilities in plot.

Miss Leslie, who plays a child role throughout most of the story, is a sincere and likable young actress. She is given a good supporting cast, including Isabel Vernon as "Quincy," the governess, Thomas A. Curran and Jean Armour as the father and mother of the heroine, Ray Hallor as Dave, the country boy, Chester Morris as Dick, his rival, and Justus Barnes as Dave's father. Then there are a number of children who take part in the orphan asylum scenes and add a comedy element. The photography and settings are good. Van Dyke Brook is the director.

The Story: Marcia Schuyler (Gladys Leslie), is a "poor little rich girl" who has everything but the companionship of other children. When her mother and father leave for Japan, Marcia begs her governess to allow her to exchange places with the latter's niece and to go to an orphan asylum instead of the finishing school selected by her parents. The governess, solicitous for her neice's welfare, agrees, and Marcia becomes an "amateur orphan."

After having a "lovely time" at the orphanage Marcia is adopted by a farmer's family. Into an atmosphere of gloom and misunderstanding Marcia brings her sunshiny spirit and straightens out many tangles. Then her parents return home unexpectedly and discover what has happened. Through an accident the record of Marcia's adoptors is destroyed and her father offers a large reward for her discovery. Marcia's friend, Dave, the son of the family, thus wins a sum sufficient for an education.

Years later Dave has become a young business man. He loves Marcia and asks her to marry him. She promises to do so only if he will give up a city career and return to the farm so that at last she may have the sort of life she wishes.

"The Silent Master"

Selznick Drama in Six Parts Featuring Robert Warwick. Reviewed by George W. Graves

FOUNDED on a story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, "The Silent Master" is a tale having to do in large part with Paris Apaches. The story-interest is generally well sustained through the six reels and we have the average number of situations for a feature of fair merit, but nothing beyond this. The story's best entertainment is in the opening reels and these situations are the most convincing. Later on the development lapses into the commonplace and the finish is quite ordinary. The most important thing about the picture is its artistic direction by Leonce Perret. No pains were spared in making the scenes beautiful, both in construction, appointment and lighting. The majority of the scenes including some shots supposed to be out of doors are studio sets. Among the most impressive of these is a panoramic view of Paris by night, showing the Eiffel Tower with its beacon shining as a star in the sombre blue distance. Another set which illustrates the scrupulous pains taken on the part of the director for artistic effect is a disordered attic room in the Apache's house. In the rear there is an open window looking out onto a picturesque water-fall.

The picture is well but not remarkably well acted. Robert Warwick has a big role and there is no doubt as to his making it stand out, yet it by no means is the star's greatest screen triumph. He plays the part of the Marquis de Sombreuil with quiet force and assurance and makes this personality a powerful and likable one. Olive Tell renders a uniformly good performance as the wife who misunderstands him and causes a separation, and others having parts of considerable prominence are Donald Galaher, Anna Little, Henri Valbel and Juliette Moore.

As a complete offering, the exhibitor can bank on the picture for pleased, if not enthusiastic patrons. The artistic direction is bound to be a source of much comment.

Valentin, Marquis de Sombreuil, is leader of a secret band engaged in a peculiar mode of philanthropy. Evil doers who may be within the law but who trespass the moral code are given severe punishment if they fall into his hands. However, Valentin finally becomes disgusted with the poor co-operation of his henchmen and he comes to America—but not until he has indirectly caused the entrance of a worthless youth, Eugene Arlen, into a bad set. Eugene is put in prison as implicated in a murder. In America Valentin marries Virginia Arlen, who happens to be Eugene's sister. On the date of the youth's release from prison the husband and wife journey to Paris to meet him. From her brother's lips Virginia hears of her husband's past operations and believes that he is responsible for Eugene's predicament. Becoming intolerant, she insists upon a separation. With nothing to live for, Valentin takes to dissipation until he is reduced to utter penury. At this time Virginia relents and attempts to bring about a reconciliation through their child, but this fails. A girl whom Valentin had greatly befriended in the past, turns up, learns of the man's recent history, tells his wife the truth and thus a reconciliation is affected.

"The Upper Crust"

Gail Kane in American-Mutual Feature Released June 25. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS is one of the most delightful plays the American Company has ever given us. Miss Kane, who appears usually in emotional roles, in this play shows herself as clever in a light, happy characterization which relies upon personality and naturalness.

One way of winning a chauffeur's job.

The picture may be called a comedy drama but it keeps away from farce or exaggeration and has a consistent and logical story. It is beautifully picturized, both interior and exterior scenes excellently chosen and photographed. The story is well presented, and the best thing about the offering is the fine way in which the players catch the spirit of their roles and work together. So many likeable and interesting characters are seldom found in one play. They are all amusing, even Joe Holmes, the forger, played by that excellent character actor, John Gough, whom we see too infrequently in late pictures. Robert MacLean, who plays Algernon, makes the character wholly delightful and much more interesting than the average picture hero. Edward Peil plays the role of the millionaire well. Eugenie Forde has a small part. There are a number of character roles well taken, and not the least amusing members of the cast are the balky pony and the funny dog.

The whole production is, in short, just right. It will give the patrons of any picture house a pleasant time and leave them in a happy frame of mind. It's the kind that makes them come again.

The Story: Molly O'Toole, a young woman of good family, sets out to battle with the giant of poverty. She takes a position as housekeeper to a wealthy woman, Mrs. J. Van Ranselear Todd, and is sent to open the woman's new country home in the mountains.

So Mollie goes to "Castle Crags," and there is mistaken by the villagers for Mrs. Todd. Since Mrs. Todd is traveling and will not return for some time, Mollie does not correct the mistake but amuses herself by pretending to be the owner. Things are complicated when a wealthy neighbor, Captain Hancock, becomes interested in the supposed Mrs. Todd. Mollie has a daring plan and encourages the captain.

In the meantime, Mrs. Todd's son, Algernon, a whimsical chap, relieved by his fortune of the necessity of working, has purchased from Joe Holmes, a peddler, his donkey and cart and in this fashion is traveling through the country. He tires of this and goes to "Castle Crags." There he discovers Mollie's deception but does not reveal his own identity or spoil her play. Instead he gets a job as her chauffeur. The two fall in love and Algernon begs Molly to marry him. She cannot decide to give up the captain's millions for the latter wishes to marry her even after she has told him who she is. However, a series of events make Mollie believe that her chauffeur has turned forger on her account and then she realizes that she loves him, and resolves to give up the captain. But the real Mrs. Todd returns and Algernon is identified and proved innocent and everything turns out as it should.

"Blind Man's Luck"

Mollie King in Astra-Pathe Feature of June 10. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS story begins without any waste of footage. We are plunged at once into a mystery, and since mystery wins the attention of us all, we follow the story until the characters gain our sympathies, and of course the story then holds us until all complications are smoothed away. All of which shows that Director George Fitzmaurice has presented his material in a clever way. The story hasn't a plot of great originality, but it is set forth so skillfully that the average audience will be entertained to its satisfaction.

The acting is good. Mollie King, who has a following among Pathe patrons, will please her admirers and win new ones. She is the star of "The Mystery of the Double Cross." Earle Fox, opposite, is sure to please. Then there are Helene Chadwick, who does very good work in her role of Helen Raymond, and William Riley Hatch and Zeffie Tilbury. The settings and the photography are up to standard. There is plenty of action and suspense in the picture, also heart interest and humor. It's a good number for almost any theater and especially for the neighborhood house. It is clean and appealing and leaves no depressing after-effects.

The Story: Eileen Caverly (Mollie King), returns to the home of her guardian and then discovers that he is a smuggler of diamonds. She rebels against this life, but circumstances incriminate her. When the rest of the gang is captured, Eileen escapes, but is traced by the police.

One night young Bobbie Guerton, son of a millionaire, elopes, while intoxicated, with a cabaret singer, Helen Raymond. He and his bride board the train on which Eileen is traveling. The girl, frightened at a riot which Bobbie has started among the passengers, takes refuge in Eileen's compartment. There is a wreck in the night and Eileen's companion is killed. Eileen, to escape arrest, masquerades as Helen Raymond, showing the marriage certificate to prove her identity. Bobbie himself remembers nothing of the affair.

At the suggestion of Bobbie's mother, he and the supposed Helen Raymond are married again by a minister. Eileen maintains the deception for a number of years, during which Bobbie reforms under her influence and the influence of his little son. Later Guerton, Senior, who had disowned his son, is won through the little boy. Then, when all are happy Eileen's guardian is released from jail and, learning of the girl's marriage, tries blackmail. He is shot as a burglar before he can reveal the girl's secret, but Eileen confesses to her husband and is forgiven.

"A Song of Sixpence"

An Art Dramas Feature in Five Parts. Released June 1. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

A SONG OF SIXPENCE," a Van Dyke production which is being released by Art Dramas, in which Marie Wayne and Robert Connes are co-starred, is an average program offering. While the story could not be termed complicated, yet it is not always clear to the audience. It is true to life, appealing, surprising and interesting. The plot of the play is woven around the life of a young girl, whose one thought is riches and fine clothes. It shows in a remarkable way how she sacrifices the love of the man who really cares for her, to wed riches, and later how she is scorned by her one-time lover as a woman who breaks men's hearts and then laughs at them.

Ralph Dean directed the picture which is an adaptation from the novel by Frederic Arnold Kummer. Marie Wayne is very effective in the role of Emmy Moran. Robert Conness is pleasing as the leading man. An efficient cast is in support, which includes Margaret Townsend, Alfred Hemming, Rowden Hall, Nell Pemberton and Gene La Motte. The photography is good and the settings are appropriate. The acting as a whole is very satisfactory.

Emmy Moran was not satisfied with quiet country life and decided that she must have riches to be happy. She had often read of the favorable marriages that poor and beautiful girls frequently made. The opportunity came for her to move to the city and she immediately arrayed herself in pretty clothes and set forth in search of a rich husband.

However, when the time came for Emmy to wed wealth, she found that it was necessary to give up the man she loved, for a life of luxury. She comes to realize her mistake when she is finally despised by all men and left to her fate.

"The Land of Long Shadows"

Essanay Western Released by K. E. S. E. June 18. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

FOR a newcomer to the motion picture field, Jack Gardner certainly was given a strenuous role in this first of the new Essanay "westerns." But he shows no trace of the tenderfoot; instead he acts with vigor and naturalness.

The play is really a "northern" rather than a "western" play. It has the picturesque snow scenes and the interesting interior settings which always lend a charm to these stories and it has much action, including a fight. An especially well managed feature is the introduction of the pack of wolves. These provide added thrills.

With these elements of appeal, good acting and a story which, while not very complicated, wins interest and sympathy, the offering will be enjoyed by audiences of every variety. It is a good summer picture. Technically, it is up to standard, the photography being especially fine. If the following pictures from the western studio equal the first, exhibitors will hear few complaints from patrons who like active, outdoor plays.

W. S. Van Dyke wrote and directed the story. Ruth King, C. J. Lionel and Carl Stockdale support the star.

The Story: Joe Mauchin (Gardner) becomes interested in Jeanne Verette, the daughter of a saloon keeper in a wild northern community: Joe tries to protect the girl from the attentions of a rowdy and shoots the man in self-defense. The mounted police of the neighborhood have determined to put down disorder and decide to make an example of Joe, refusing to take into consideration the truth of the affair. Joe escapes and the police believe he has been killed. Jeanne knows the truth and later runs away and joins Joe. The two are married and go further north.

Sometime later Constable McKenzie of the Royal Mounted chances into that country. Joe finds him wounded, and instead of killing him, takes him home and cares for him. When he recovers he refuses to "forget" Joe, and tells Jeanne that he will inform the police. In fact, he shows himself to be a real "villain" and the sympathy of the viewer is with Joe. There is a struggle between the men in which McKenzie is defeated. He goes away from the cabin but is overpowered by the wolves and Joe's secret is safe.

"Today"

Five-Part Drama Produced by To-day Feature Film Company. Reviewed by George W. Graves

IT WOULD be a much more simple task to detail this picture's shortcomings than to enumerate its extensive list of excellent attributes, inasmuch as the former are almost nil while the latter include everything from masterly direction to "good photography and lightings." In fact, "shortcomings" is a little out of place, since there is only one fault worthy of comment and even this will not be considered a fault by many. The picture's ending is properly a tragic one, with the hero choking the faithless heroine, his wife, to death, but, as in many another melodrama of like ending, a few closing scenes are appended, registering the familiar fact that "it was all a dream" and thus removing the bad taste. It may be true that the American demand for happy endings must be satisfied, but this surprise dream explanation is getting to be less and less of a surprised and consolation as time wears on because it is used so often, and it is our opinion that American theater-goers would be well able to bear a real tragic ending now and then for the sake of the novel twist. The story of "To-day" works up to a tremendous climax and the extention scenes on the end of this particular film have an acute anticlimatic effect, making the ending ragged, even if happy.

In every other respect the Broadhurst-Schomer play is as sensationally effective on the screen as it was upon the stage. The adaptation has been made with ever watchful regard for the requirements of the screen. The continuity is smooth, the action uniform and swift, and we have a deft intertwining of plot threads that renders the action more and more intense until we arrive finally at a towering climax. Crises of differing magnitude are to be found throughout the story, but the action of the whole is most remarkable in its accelerated growth to this big climax, where the wife unwittingly betrays herself to her husband, and he, enraged at the reality of his discovery of her infidelity, murders her. The awful fact that the wife had no reason whatsoever for her folly but the love of personal adornment, is what inflames the husband to his act.

The screen version of this play is surely fortunate in being played by a star of such calibre as Florence Reed. Her methods are sure; her acting has all the subtle gradations of feeling that characterize the part she takes; and her whole performance is one of enthralled pleasure and reality for the spectator. Florence Reed has been seen in a large number of pretentious plays. She has had parts worthy of her talent and parts not sufficiently big to permit her to shine in her polished brilliance. In "To-day," however, there is no questioning the fact that her role is big and difficult and that she acquits herself with consummate ease and histrionic ability. Her supporting cast is remarkable for its individual and collective ability. The way that the acting brings out every last ounce of the story's worth is calculated to make even the most blase patrons glow with satisfaction. Frank Mills gives a polished, dignified and impressive rendition of the husband. The other members of the cast, just as sincere, and in their degree as effective, are Gus Weinberg, Alice Gale, Leonore Harris, Capt. Harry Lambert and Kate Lester.

Ralph W. Ince's direction is worthy of all the laudatory adjectives that can be bestowed upon it. Not once does he lose an opportunity for realistic, dramatic effect. The exhibitor can certainly bank on "To-day" for big results and make the most glowing promises through the medium of his advertising

"Periwinkle"

Mary Miles Minter's Latest American-Mutual Feature. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

IN every respect this latest Mary Miles Minter picture is the best production featuring this young star that American has offered so far. In this picture Miss Minter's charm of personality and genuine acting ability have the advantage of a plausible, interesting story, with the strength of real life in it and the fascinating background of the sea to add a pleasing flavor of romance. The photography and lighting effects of the exteriors are beautiful, and the interiors, the life-saving station and the homes of the sea-faring folk, are interesting.

Miss Minter in the role of "Periwinkle" in this story by William F. Payson, does some of the best work of her picture career. In certain phases of the role, she seems more childish than ever, but in others she has an opportunity for emotional work of greater maturity than in preceding plays. For this reason her admirers will be greatly pleased with the picture. It is one an exhibitor can "boost" profitably and its picturesque phases offer him many opportunities for lobby display and special advertising.

The supporting cast, containing many American favorites, is a worthy one. Ann Schaefer as Periwinkle's foster-mother will be noticed favorably. George Fisher plays Richard Evans, the hero. Other players are Clarence Burton, Alan Forrest, Harvey Clark, George Periolat, George Ahearn and Arthur Howard. James Kirkland, directed.

The Story: Periwinkle is a little orphan, rescued from a wrecked ship when a baby by the coast guards and cared for by Ann Scudder, one of the women of the village. She becomes a very beautiful girl and the men of the coast guard are in love with her. She leads a care free existence until the wreck of a yacht brings Richard Evans, a wealthy youth, into her life. She saves him from drowning and the two become friends. Evans is engaged to a girl who wants him for his money and, although he realizes that he has fallen in love with Periwinkle, he is not free to marry her. All complications are at last straightened out and the story ends happily.

"Periwinkle," the best Minter production American-Mutual has offered.

"Steps to Somewhere"

In "Do Children Count?" Essanay Series, with Mary McAlister. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

MARY McALLISTER in a mischievous role is delightful in this two-reel picture of the Essanay series. It is rather a change from the type of role she has played before and is truly amusing. The story is rather fanciful but affords opportunity for the introduction of much "kid stuff" which will be enjoyed. A number of youngsters support little Mary. John Cossar and Mabel Hardine have the leading adult roles. Settings and photography are up to standard. The appeal of the picture is general. It is excellent for a number on a children's program.

The Story: Nonie Kayliss is a very much spoiled child. When her father scolds her, her mother takes her part, and vice versa. This treatment teaches Nonie to disregard the orders of both. And it brings about a violent scene between Jack and his wife, which results in the former leaving his home. Nonie's grandparents, who are practical old folks, take a hand and in punishment of the child tie her to a chair. Nonie has a wonderful dream of going up a long flight of steps and coming to a beautiful room filled with lovely toys and nice, friendly children. They tell her she cannot enter because she is a bad girl. Nonie awakes and is so much impressed by her dream that she resolves to become a good girl. Her first move is to get her father and effect a reconciliation between him and her mother.

"Hater of Men"

Bessie Barriscale in Five-Part Triangle-Kay Bee Drama. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz

AN interesting comedy is "Hater of Men," in which pretty and charming Bessie Barriscale is featured. The scenario, by C. Gardner Sullivan, is delightfully amusing and will appeal to the picture fan as an unusual and effective comedy-drama. Although the play starts out well, toward the end it becomes somewhat drawn out and monotonous. The story tells of how Janice Salsbury, regarding marriage as unfavorable for a girl, but believing that she will be much happier mingling with men, is brought to see the true light on the subject.

Bessie Barriscale gives a splendid impersonation of Janice Salsbury, while Charles K. French acts the part of Phillips Hartley in a very clever manner. Jack Gilbert's work as Billy Williams is sincere and effective. The supporting cast is a capable one. The settings are appropriate and the photography good. It was directed by Charles Miller.

Janice Salsbury is a newspaper reporter. She has an idea that marriage is not much of a success for a girl, believing that she then loses her freedom. So disgusted is she with the outcome of a divorce trial and the eagerness with which the men listened to the testimony, that she breaks her engagement with Billy Williams, another reporter.

Believing that the men will care just as much for her as an associate, meeting them on their own ground, she becomes a Bohemian. Phillips Hartley, an old friend, feels that Janice is on the wrong track, and tries to show her the mistake she is making. She, however, fails to notice the change in the attitude of her friends toward her. At the opera, with Hartley, she receives a jolt when her men friends pass by with their wives and merely nod to her.

Janice determines to prove to Hartley that all men do not consider her as trivial and unworthy. She meets young Wentworth and strives to win his regard. But, when she overhears Wentworth say that she is pretty, but somewhat stagey and frivolous, she sees that she has blundered. Through the influence of Hartley, Billy and Janice are brought together again, and their engagement is renewed.

"A Bit of Kindling"

Jackie Saunders in Horkheimer-Mutual Feature of June 18. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THIS latest picture featuring the tom-boy heroine, Jackie Saunders, will be as well liked as any of its predecessors and better than some of them, for it is less exaggerated. It is similar to the former releases in many respects. Miss Saunders plays "Sticks," a little newsgirl, in the vivacious, hoidenish fashion of her earlier roles. Daniel Gilfether plays the role of a millionaire who adopts the little waif, and scenes on the country estate form pretty pictures. Photography and settings are good throughout. The offering is a wholesome, enjoyable offering which will go well in any neighborhood house and will be liked by the whole family. It will appeal especially to Jackie Saunders' followers, for her role is more important than the story. Arthur Shirley plays opposite. Others in the cast are J. P. Wade, Charles Dudley, Ethel Ritchie, Edward Jobson and H. C. Russell.

The Story: "Sticks" is a little newsgirl who holds her own against a gang of boys. She lives in fear of her drunkard father and one night runs away. She sees James Morgan, one of her customers, attacked by robbers and flies to his aid. Both she and Morgan are knocked unconscious and placed in an empty box-car. Before they recover consciousness, the car travels to a small country town. There Morgan and "Sticks" decide to stay, Morgan claiming "Sticks" as his little sister. The young man had a quarrel with his father and his fiancee and does not wish to return home.

Detectives locate Morgan, and "Sticks" learns that her friend is a man of wealth. Believing that Morgan is staying to protect her, she runs away. Morgan goes back to his family and "Sticks" is adopted by a wealthy old man. Years later, when "Sticks" has grown to young womanhood, she meets Morgan at her foster father's home and the two who had once been "pals" become lovers.

"The Beautiful Lie"

Five-Reel Rolfe-Metro Photodrama Features Frances Nelson. Reviewed by George W. Graves

THIS does not strike above the average at all as a program offering, but it figures up pretty well as entertainment because of some well handled situations, the alluring appeal of the star, who registers excellently throughout, and her efficient support. Weighing against these well conceived situations are some highly improbable spots that make the spectator groan inwardly in spite of his frantic attempts to get the author's angle. Harry Northrup does to perfection one of his famous villain roles, while Edward Earle, as the young artist, makes a very big impression. The latter's work in this exhibits an ease and naturalness which is wholly commendable. The support is adequate. In fact, as far as acting goes, audiences will be satisfied. The only point of doubt centers around the improbable spots in the action. As a whole, however, the story makes fair entertainment. John Noble's direction is acceptable, but not in any way remarkable.

Louise, a poor orphan, at the point of starvation, is thankful to marry a wealthy man who can care for her. But the girl's life is soon a very dreary one, for Grierson, her husband, having tired of her, spends most of his time away from home. At last her pent up emotions burst forth, but the drunken Grierson summarily dismisses her pleadings by telling her that the marriage was illegal and that he is "through." Louise has a hard time with the world, but at last happiness arrives in the love of Paul Vivian, a prosperous young artist who is indebted to Grierson for his tuition abroad. The inevitable meeting finally comes and Grierson denounces the girl as not worthy of Paul, having been his (Grierson's) mistress. Paul puts the blame where it belongs, however, and Grierson afterward meets his death at the hands of another to whom he has said, "I'm through." The marriage is finally proved legal, lifting all dishonor, and all ends happily.

plot itself as because of the way the story has been carried out and applied to the screen with an endless number of directorial and scenario detail comedy touches. There are laughs throughout, coming in bunches and singly. Olive Thomas, seen for the first time in pictures, proves a fortunate type for the role of the hoydenish, athletic girl, who, discharged from boarding school, refuses to be put second to her big sister in the matrimonial game. Miss Thomas is an irresistible personality. She makes the role delightfully vivacious, and makes herself the center of interest. She is given only a smattering of dramatic portrayal and so it is difficult to judge how she would "take" in the straight drama, outside of the fact that she has an expressive face. She makes her role one of youthful beauty, abandon and roguish pertinacity—the most fetching kind of a mad-cap that could be imagined.

The story opens with Father and Mother, chiefly the latter, planning to take Elder Sister to Palm Beach for a final desperate attempt to rope in a title. Father at last decides his finances will stand the strain and we soon find Mother and Elder Sister in the land of sparkling waters and glaring sands on the trail of a man they think is the Earl of Larlsdale, traveling incognito. After a refreshing line of choice boarding house pranks have been picturized, Madcap Madge, peremptorily told that her relations with the institution are severed, appeals to her indulgent father. The result is that Madge turns up at Palm Beach just in time to interfere with Mother's and Elder Sister's plans. She is forced by her mother to go back into short dresses, but she finds a way to have fun nevertheless.

Madge has her romance with a youth who has suspected the state of affairs in her family, and Big Sister wins the man she thinks is the Earl. She, however, is sadly disillusioned as to the latter's identity and Mother is about to collapse when a telegram arrives from Madge stating that she has eloped with and married her youthful lover, Earl. Mother's hopes revive with the arrival of this news for she thinks Madge has landed the precious Earl himself. But she suffers another blow on learning that her second hope is not the titled personage. But Father is happy, for Madge's lover is junior member of a firm that is crowding him financially. All hands are now interested in finding out who the real Earl is. This question lends itself to an easy solution, for it is soon discovered who the mysterious person is.

Selig Comedy Released on K. E. S. E. Program, June 25. Reviewed by Lapearl Waggoner

THIS two-reel offering of the Selig Polyscope is the best of the three Hoyt comedies released so far by K. E. S. E. William Fables, as the small town minister, adventuring into the land of the motion picture studio, will give any class of "fans" a jolly hour. Things happen and they happen fast. The comedy is clean, entertaining and satisfying, which is all that one wants in a comedy.

When Abner Goode, the pastor of a country town church, goes to New York to engage a new choir, he wanders into a motion picture studio, and there his troubles begin. He very much resembles the property man, Johnnie Swift, who has been sent away on an errand, and the directors mistake the clergyman for "Props."

A stranger to the methods of making motion pictures, he believes that Winne Saum, the actress, is really going to her death in a saw mill scene, and stops the machinery, much to the rage of the director.

Finally his blunderings result in the entire studio becoming demoralized, and work coming to a standstill. He is about to be violently assaulted by the irate director, when Johnnie Swift, the real "Props" returns, and the Rev. Abner Goode makes good his escape.

"The Call of Her People"

Five-Part Metro Drama Features Ethel Barrymore. Reviewed by George W. Graves

EDWARD SHELDON'S play, "Egypt," has formed the base in this for a photoplay which is well above the Metro standard. The scenario by June Mathis and the direction by John Noble, the latter accounting for much true portrayal of Gypsy life, prove to be of the best order of quality throughout the greater part of the picture, although the last scenes lose the high order of the rest of the play by losing all grip on conviction. Two or three unconvincing escapes at this final juncture form the only blemish on the face of the complete picture. In one of these escapes we have a murderer pursued by bloodhounds and an infuriated band of lynchers, taking refuge in the house of the heroine. A decision is reached in the house and the latter's other lover appears on the porch and orders the mob away. It appears that either the lynchers have no faith in their bloodhounds or they are unbelievably weak in their determination to get their man. Later they do get the hero and are about to string him up when the heroine dashes up on horseback and plucks him from their angry midst with practically no effort. Even if this had been possible, we had seen before that several of those in the crowd had guns. But there was no shooting at the time of the escape. These two or three they-do-it-in-the-movies escapes take the power out of the final climaxes and make the picture's ending fall.

The first four reels or so, however, make fine drama. The characters are interesting and convincing and the story is particularly well told, with a surprise or two to make things more entertaining. Ethel Barrymore is finely suited to the part of Egypt, a Gypsy maid who, led to think she is the daughter of a wealthy citizen of a Georgian town, goes to live with him and finally is on the verge of marrying a young friend of her supposed father's because her Gypsy sweetheart has not returned. But in spite of the fact that she makes the part stand out it is our opinion that Robert Whittier, as the Gypsy lover, steals the greatest part of the picture. His part is a fine one and his acting is excellent. Furthermore, you might be tempted to put up an argument if some one told you he was not a Gypsy, so perfect is his type. The cast, being one of the best seen in a Metro picture in some time helps substantially in making this one of the finest quality Metros to come along in some time. Frank Montgomery, Mrs. Allan Walker, William B. Davidson and William Mandeville are among its polished members.

A picture of unexcelled atmosphere, good acting, and a big number of gripping situations, this should be a successful business getter. Photography and lightings are of a high standard.

"The Fires of Youth"

Frederick Warde in Thanhouser-Pathe Offering. Reviewed by Genevieve Harris

THERE is an undercurrent of tragedy in this story by Agnes C. Johnston, but it is lightened by human appeal and the little touches which distinguish Miss Johnston's plays. It is a story of the steel mills, with a phase of the labor problem as the theme, and a very sympathetic story has been set forth against this gray background.

Little Helen Badgeley in a boy's role shares honors with the star, Frederick Warde, who has the part of the millionaire mill owner, turned philanthropist when he learns the real life of his working men. As this old man, embittered and longing for his lost youth, Mr. Warde creates a definite and sympathetic character. His friendship with little Billy and his adventures when he takes a minor position in his own mills lead to a number of dramatic situations which will stir most audiences. A love story, of which Jeanne Eagels is the heroine, runs through the play.

Emile Chautard directed the picture in a way to hold the interest and sympathies of the average audience. The atmosphere of the workers' lives is well depicted. The play as a whole is one an exhibitor can offer with confidence.

The Story: Owing to the close-fisted methods of the owner, Peter Pemberton, who refuses to provide safeguards, there are many terrible accidents in the mills and the men are discontented. But Peter Pemberton, instead of being the criminal his men picture is only a lonely old man who wishes he could regain his lost youth and learn to play. At last he gives up his active management and goes to a little mining town. There he wins the friendship of a little boy and through him, comes to know the family. Incognito, he takes a position in his own mills. Then he learns the truth of conditions and finds that he has been criminally negligent. Before he can remedy matters, his little friend is severely injured in an accident and the men declare Peter Pemberton is the murderer and that one of their number must kill him. Pemberton, as an employe, draws the number which appoints him his own slayer. He intends to commit suicide but the boy recovers, Pemberton's identity is discovered and the friends he has won refuse to let him kill himself. Instead he lives to work for the happiness of his men and in them finds again his lost youth.

"Love or Justice"

Triangle-Kay Bee in Five Parts. Featuring Louise Glaum. Reviewed by H. D. Fretz.

NOT only is "Love or Justice" interesting as a photodrama, but it also presents Louise Glaum in a very pleasing role. There is plenty of action throughout the picture. It is well cast and well played, and is bound to find favor with the picture goer. It is a story of love and sacrifice, in which the heroine seems determined to convict herself in order to advance the professional standing of her lover, who in turn shows considerable genius, force of character, and loyalty to her in discovering and convicting the real criminal.

Louise Glaum has an appealing role as Nan Bishop, a queen of the underworld. Her work is natural, sincere, and at all times effective. Charles Gunn as Jack Dunn does clever work, and Jack Richardson, the villain Keeley, is excellent. The photography and settings are good. The play, by Lambert Hillyer, was directed by Wallace Edwards and supervised by Thomas H. Ince. In the supporting cast are J. Barney Sherry, Dorcas Matthews, and Charles K. French.

A promising lawyer, Jack Dunn, becomes a victim to drugs and loses his standing in the legal world. He passes his idle hours in the slums, where he comes to know Nan Bishop, an underworld character. Nan awakens the man in him, and, through her influence, he breaks away from the use of drugs. It is also through the efforts of Nan that he is successful in obtaining a position as criminal lawyer.

Years later they meet in a court room. Nan has been falsely accused of murder, and Dunn is the prosecuting attorney. Learning that Dunn's future in the professional world depends on his winning the case, she pleads guilty. At the last minute the real criminal is discovered and Nan is cleared of the crime. She accepts Dunn's offer of marriage, and we presume that uninterrupted days of supreme happiness and content follow.

veritable tornado of thrills, comedy and red-blooded melodramatic action. Anita Loos' unusually clever scenario, based on H. B. Carpenter's story, tells of an athletic, energetic, dauntless New York youth, son of a big railroad magnate, who has seasoned his impressionable young mind with the salt of lurid dime novel tales about the great West, which place he believes identical at the present time with that portrayed in his stories.

When a committee from Bitter Creek, Arizona, arrives in New York to induce the millionaire railroad man to run a spur line through the town he sees a chance to cure his son, Jeff, of his "nut" fascination for the West of his fancy by sending him to investigate the proposition. The committee, realizing that it will be to the town's interest to show Jeff a good time and give him what he is looking for, accords the unsuspecting youth a big portion of made to order wild west life, and things are going fine when one of the chief plotters, using the fake play as a cloak, double-crosses the townsfolk and makes a robbery in earnest.

He also introduces some unlooked for villainy "not on the program" by inducing a band of drunken Indians to aid him in kidnaping the girl who has formerly rejected his advances. Jeff, however, in fighting trim, finds all this to his extreme liking and he makes a sensational round-up of the villain and the Redskins and rescues the girl, showing the effete West of 1917 more than it could show him and proving that a New Yorker may have as much spunk and daring as a native of the alkali fields.

With Anita Loos' inimitable sub-titles, John Emerson's realistic, humorous direction and Fairbanks' long line of hair-raising thrills, there is absolutely no leeway for the doldrums. The star evidently went into training for some of these thrills. They include long leaps into his horse's saddle from the side and back, riding a bucking broncho, jumping aboard a fast-moving train from his horse, breaking his way through to the upper floor of a building by hanging to the rafters of the room beneath by his fingers and swinging on the boards above with his feet until they burst through, lifting the heroine up from the ground and onto his horse in a wild escape from the Indians, and jumping and vaulting stunts without number. These stunts are so ridiculous in their Fairbanks unconventionality that they are for laughing purposes only.

In our opinion "Wild and Woolly" is the best thing Fairbanks has done to date, and the popular comedian has had a number of "bests" already. This is due to the fact that there is more to amaze and amuse and spectator per foot than in the best of his previous offerings. Credit is due all those concerned in making this superlative piece of entertainment.

INTERESTING NOTES ABOUT THE PLAYERS—READY TO CLIP OUT AND PRINT

The motion picture screen is at last to have a caveman. He will appear in the prologue of the Pallas-Paramount picture, "The Heir of the Ages," and will be impersonated by House Peters and Eugene Pallette. Two or three of the old family rugs, two discarded ingenue wigs after having been run through a threshing machine for tangling purposes, and two cans of cherry red stain converted these young men from twentieth century beings to perfect examples of the caveman.

Ruth Roland, the charming heroine of Pathe's "Neglected Wife" serial, is married. She and Lionel T. Kent of Los Angeles made a quiet trip to Patchogue, Long Island, where they were married on May 16, in the rectory of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The marriage is the culmination of a real romance. While working in pictures in Los Angeles, Miss Roland met Lieutenant Godfrey La Mothe. The lieutenant was an ardent wooer, and for a time it looked as if Mr. Kent, who is an automobile salesman, was an also-ran. Then came the war. The long arm of the British War Office placed La Mothe at Wilberforce Barracks, Sierre Leone. Mr. Kent felt secure until recent news from the front made him think the war was almost over. Then he began to get nervous and Miss Roland was bombarded by telegrams from Los Angeles. The string of "will you's" was finally answered by the one word "yes," so now the other woman becomes a wife, and not, we hope, a "neglected" one.

Gail Kane of the American-Mutual studio confesses to only one superstition and that is that walking under a ladder is bad luck. "I know this is true," said Miss Kane, "because I tried it once. There was a painter on that ladder painting a red roof. I was all dressed up in a beautiful new white dress. I went under the ladder just as the bucket of paint spilled and my beautiful gown was polka dotted with red. I never walk under ladders any more."

Lee Arthur, the author and scnarioist, recently visited the Horkheimer studios and met with various members of the cast. He rushed at Mollie McConnell with the exclamation "Ye gods! If it isn't McConnell's squaw!" Mollie McConnell acknowledged it, although twelve years had passed since the old days in New York when everyone called her "McConnell's Squaw." She was the wife of W. A. McConnell, a noted wit and theatrical manager. He used to introduce her to his friends as his squaw and when they registered at a hotel it stood on the book: "W. A. McConnell and Squaw."

The Selig forces in Los Angeles have organized a baseball team and are proud of their new diamonds. George Fawcett, the well known star, takes his regular turn in the pitcher's box.

Hugh Ford, the Gothic Famous Players director, picked up a photograph of Julian Eltinge, the feminine impersonator, which showed the latter in all his fulsome curves. Ford, who is about six feet tall and teeters the Fairbanks at 100 pounds, remarked: "When I retire from directing I think I shall take up this feminine impersonation stuff. I would make a wonderful New England spinster—particularly if they would let me wear low-necked gowns.

Mary Pickford has donated a beautiful flag to the Lasky Home Guard, an organization of volunteers from the well known picture studio at Hollywood, Calif. Wallace Reid, the popular film actor, won the coveted privilege of color sergeant.

Of the thirty-four men who took part in the big ballroom scene in "Aladdin's Other Lamp," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay in which Viola Dana is starred, twenty-six have been enlisted in some branch of service for their country.

Tsuru Aoki and Sessue Hayakawa were Los Angeles' official entertainers for the officers of the Japanese warships which spent a recent several days in the Los Angeles harbor.

While in the Santa Cruz islands, playing in "Periwinkle," Mary Miles Minter decided that she wanted a baby seal. There are lots of them there; so there was nothing for the gallant actor men to do but to capture a sealette for Miss Mary. Now, Mary has a little seal, its hide is sleek as silver, and everywhere that Mary goes—well—Babe Seal does not. She keeps the pet in a specially constructed tank at the American studios.

Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's child star, is learning to become a Red Cross nurse by practicing on her dolls.

Edna Goodrich (Mutual) says whenever she gets terribly blue she goes out and buys herself the most expensive and frivolous dress she can find and her spirits immediately bob up.

Charlie Chaplin says his goal is $10,000,000. When this is acquired he is going to settle down to a ripe old age.

Ann Murdock detests anyone who is temperamental and says good common sense is all that ever made a real actress.

Helen Holmes, of railroad serial fame, says she is going to spend her vacation in the wilds somewhere fifty miles from a railroad.

R. and insert on Desmond's typewriter the name of the K. & W. They plan to change the contracts while Burke is on the for the signature. Lightfingered Tom makes the change for them. When Hogan discovers the railroad has been changed to the K. & W. he phones to Desmond. Webb answers the phone, claims to be Desmond and says they have decided to change to the K. & W. Hogan is willing. Helen and Wilson come into the office just as the change is discovered, and after a fight secure the signed contracts. Burke is discharged from his position and Webb reinstated.

Jerry's Hopeless Tangle—(One Reel)—Cub—June 28.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry finds himself hungry and broke, without an idea where to get his next meal. He succeeds in wheedling the necessary cash out of a police sergeant under false pretenses, but discovery is swift and the policeman proceeds to "take it out of his hide." Jerry is chased from pillar to post by the indignant sergeant and half a dozen club swingers, finally escaping them. He gets work in a general store, makes love to the proprietor's daughter, but is discovered by Dad and chased again until he turns the old gentleman wrong side up in a water barrel. While the storekeeper is off watch, the store is robbed and Jerry helps to catch the thieves. This restores him to favor and he marries the maiden with his usual abandon.

The Tapped Wires—(Two Reels)—15th Episode Jimmie Dale Series—June 29.—Featuring E. K. Lincoln. Jimmie Dale is watched by the Pretender's Spy; he has reason to believe that the telephone wires are tapped. To allay suspicion, and give him a chance to get out unobserved, he calls the family physician. Jimmie manages to slip out. A Spy heard words whispered to Jimmie, and communicates them to the Pretender. He translates them into meaning that certain papers are in an underground office, maintained by a Crook, and instructs the Weasel to secure them. Jimmie is instructed by the Tocsin to secure the papers. The Weasel and the Grey Seal meet, but neither one find the papers. A struggle ensues, the Weasel gets away. Jimmie Dale leaves before the police enter. They see that the safe has been forced, and arrest the Weasel, and start after Jimmie, who reaches home safely after a wild chase. The Pretender sends Jimmie warning that his next night expedition will be his last, announcing that an oath to this effect has been taken by the gang.

The car breaks down. Hubby comes up and offers to give the bachelor the wallet if he will take his wife, too. He refuses and they fight. The bachelor wins, whereupon Wife knocks him down and declares for Hubby.

The War Bridegroom—Nestor—June 25.—With Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts. Eddie and Edith are to be married and the boys are celebrating with a stag party. On the way home they are arrested for reckless driving and sentenced to sixty days on the chain gang. They send word that they have been drafted for the army. They are put to work digging ditches, and one day are nearly discovered by Edith. When their time is up they stop on the way home and buy some second-hand uniforms. They are received as heroes, and the ceremony is arranged. In the midst of it the sheriff arrives. He has miscalculated, and they have two more days to serve.

In the Land of Many Temples—(Split Reel)—Powers—July 1.—With Dr. Dorsey. We see the part of India which is famous for its temples. The old palace of the Nawabs, built in the Moorish style, is now used for government offices. Remains of a temple from the twelfth century are shown. We see a Mogul's fortress, and then the white marble shrines of various Mohammedan saints. The palaces of Abkar follow, with the tomb where the famous Kohinooor diamond once reposed. Some of the ancient rock temples are seen, two thousand years old. On the same reel is:

Duke Doolittle's Jungle Frizzle—(Split Reel).—The African explorer, Duke Doodlittle, comes to the editor to sell him his book on hunting. He tells of his voyage and his adventures after big game in Bamabazoo, showing the editor the pictures. A leopard pursues him, and he shoots the spots off it. He then loses his gun just as the beast is about to jump on him. The editor asks what happened after that, and the Duke says that it is a serial and he won't finish it for about four years. On the same reel with "In the Land of Many Temples."

Universal Screen Magazine—Issue No. 25—June 26.—First is shown the making of ice cream in a large plant, under the rigid supervision of the Board of Health. Then comes views of the proper testing of seed corn, as it is carried out at the New York College of Agriculture at Cornell University. The subject of preparedness is represented by a demonstration of the making of armor plate for our battleships and cruisers. Science is taken up in a series of views of the teaching of deaf mutes to talk. The reel ends with a clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins, the Screen Magazine's sculptor, called "The Spirit of '76 in Every Man."

The Golden Bullet—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—June 26.—With Harry Carey, Vester Pegg, George Berrell, Ed Gibson and Fritzi Ridgeway. Dick, who is really "Rogue River" Charley and wanted by the authorities, with Red Johnson, a bum, rob Jack and his father. Jack is shot by Dick and goes to town to have his wound dressed. He becomes exhausted and is found by the sheriff and taken to his home. Dick then tries to get the sheriff to arrest Jack, as he answers the description of Charlie. Meanwhile the sheriff's daughter shows Jack a peculiar bullet-shaped nugget that had been given to her by Dick. He recognizes it as one that had been among their savings. Dick is finally discovered as "Rogue River" Charley and is arrested.

Motography Leads in Many Ways

But its Editorials are Predominent over all others.

Swede-Hearts—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—JUNE 29.—With Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. Ole Olson loves Frieda, but both parents object to the marriage. Ole finally leaves for America. He secures a job in a small apartment hotel. Frieda is about to leave for America, where she is to marry Gustaf Frese. When Ole learns that Frieda is in America, he runs into the street looking for her. The next day Ole receives a lot of money, and hastens back to buy the apartment. He chases all the tenants out. Finally bursting into the apartment where Frieda is being married to Gus, he stops the ceremony, and chases them all out. Then he and Frieda renew their interrupted romance.

The Double-Topped Trunk—IMP—JULY 1.—With Allen Holubar. In the custom house a double-topped trunk, in which are secreted several valuable gems, is discovered. Carey Crane takes care of the case. He dresses as a baggage-man and takes the trunk to the address to which it is to be delivered. He walks into a party of thugs, but is successful in escaping. He sends the police to the den, while he goes in search of the girl smuggler, who had left previous to the arrival of the trunk.

Feature Programs

House of Cards—(FIVE REELS)—ART DRAMAS.—With Frank Mills, Catherine Calvert and Kittens Reichert. Ethel Howard, a woman of ideals, and anxious to have a career, marries Mannering, but insists on devoting her time to her art. A child is born to them, but is neglected by both. They gradually drift apart, and their child Louise, seeing no attention being paid to her, decides to run away. With the disappearance of the little girl, they discover that their home has been built on weak foundations and in their grief are brought closer together. The child is found and they start on a firmer basis of love and duty. Reviewed in this issue.

Blue Bird

The Little Orphan—(FIVE REELS)—UNIVERSAL—JUNE 18.—Ella Hall plays the title role in this comedy drama. Reviewed in this issue.

A Kentucky Cinderella—(FIVE REELS)—UNIVERSAL—JUNE 25.—A delightful picture version of a novel by F. Hopkinson Smith. Reviewed in this issue.

Butterfly

Man and Beast—(FIVE REELS)—BUTTERFLY—JUNE 25.—With Harry Clifton, Eileen Sedgwick, L. M. Wells and Parks Jones. Carl Von Haagen, Boer settler, has a deep hatred for Harry Townsend, a pioneer. To gratify this hatred, he destroys the cattle springs, common to both neighbors, and allows the water to run waste. Von Haagen forbids Gretel to see the Townsends, but she tells him that she has promised to marry Ned. With the help of the elephant, Gretel gets out of the window and goes to Ned. When Eitel, her brother, learns of her flight, he takes his gun and starts for the spring. Ned saves him from a lion and he reluctantly shakes Ned's hand. Gretel and Ned are married. Three years pass; happiness comes to the Townsend family, but Von Haagen sits alone in his home and broods. A number of interesting events occur in which little Bobby follows a monkey into the jungle. The elephant finds them and brings Bobby back to his home. Von Haagen goes to the Townsend home to see his little grandson. A reconciliation takes place.

The Land of Long Shadows—(FIVE REELS)—ESSANAY—JUNE 18.—Jack Gardner is featured in this first of the new Essanay western pictures. Reviewed in this issue.

The Ghost of Old Morro—(FIVE REELS)—EDISON—JUNE 25.—The picture was filmed in Cuba and is an interesting and out of the ordinary production. Mabel Trunnelle, Helen Strickland, and other Edison favorites appear. Reviewed in this issue.

Steps to Somewhere—(TWO REELS)—ESSANAY.—A number in the "Do Children Count?" series, starring little Mary McAlister. A very pleasing release. Reviewed in this issue.

The Man Who Was Afraid—ESSANAY—(SCREEN TIME, 65 MINUTES)—JULY 2.—Starring Bryant Washburn. Benton Clune is not a coward at heart, but he is the victim of over-zealous mother love. When the President's call to arms comes, his regiment of the National Guard prepares, but Clune resigns from the unit at his mother's request. His comrades call him a slacker and the girl he loves spurns him. Finally Clune goes to the front in spite of his mother, and finds them in a perilous position. He volunteers to go for reinforcements, while the men who had jeered at him stand back. He has a series of hair-breadth escapes, but is successful in the end, redeeming his honor and winning the girl he loves.

A Bit of Kindling—(FIVE REELS)—HORKHEIMER—JUNE 18.—A Jackie Saunders comedy-drama. One of her best pictures. Reviewed in this issue.

The Upper Crust—(FIVE REELS)—AMERICAN—JUNE 25.—A thoroughly delightful play, featuring Gail Kane and an excellent supporting cast. Reviewed in this issue.

Periwinkle—(FIVE REELS)—AMERICAN—JUNE 11.—A sea story featuring Mary Miles Minter. An excellent offering. Reviewed in this issue.

The Masked Heart—AMERICAN—(FIVE REELS)—JUNE 16.—Starring William Russell. Life is a bore to the petted, admired Philip Greycourt. He is ever on the watch for the girl who will not be fascinated by his good looks, his wealth and social position. At a masked ball he becomes interested in a masked face, with laughing tantalizing eyes. A reveler insults the Unknown Lady. Philip rescues her and escorts her home. When he arrives home, his chum, Frank Sturtevant, invites him to the country home of some friends just returned from Paris. Frank is in love with the daughter, Catherine. Helene Villiers is the step-mother of Catherine. It is she who interested Philip at the ball. She determines to tantalize him still more, and though he is sure that she is his Unknown Lady, she will not own it. Catherine is in love with Philip and does not care for Frank any longer. One night John Villiers is called to town, but a tree falling across the way prevents his going. Returning home, he sees the shadow of his wife in the arms of Philip. Philip implies that it is Catherine and that he wishes to marry her. Years pass and John Villiers dies, leaving Helen free to visit the Greycourts. Here she does what she can to estrange the man and his wife, whom he has learned to love. In desperation Catherine books passage on a foreign bound steamer, but Philip wakes up in time and prevents her going.

Pathe

An Amateur Orphan—(FIVE REELS)—JUNE 3.—Gladys Leslie is starred in a pleasing story by Agnes C. Johnston. Reviewed in this issue.

Blind Man's Luck—(FIVE REELS)—JUNE 10.—Mollie King is the star of this adventurous story. Reviewed in next issue.

Fires of Youth—(FIVE REELS)—THANHOUSER—JUNE 17.—Features Frederick Warde. Helen Badgley and Jeanne Eagels also appear. Picture reviewed in this issue.

Triangle

Madcap Madge—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-KAY BEE.—Featuring Olive Thomas. A delightfully entertaining comedy-drama produced under the direction of Raymond B. West. It shows the new star in the role of a vivacious girl of eighteen summers, who refuses to give up all the pleasures in life so that her older sister can have a chance to catch a title at Palm Beach. Although mother forces her into short dresses and Big Sister thrusts her aside at all times, the lively girl has a romance all of her own. As it turns out, nobody gets the English earl, traveling incognito, since there is much confusion of identities. But even though social climbing is nipped in the bud, father is supremely pleased, since his new son-in-law is the junior partner of a competing business that has been showing him no mercy. Reviewed in this issue.

Hater of Men—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-KAY BEE.—Featuring Bessie Barriscale. Janice Salsbury is a special writer for the Evening Chronicle. She is engaged to Billy Williams, another reporter. Because of Billy's jealousy, Janice breaks her engagement with him, and lets it be known that she is not the marrying kind. She goes in strongly for the Bohemian life and becomes a particularly desirable toy for the men. Phillips Hartley, an old friend, watches her with regret, knowing that she is on the wrong path. Janice determines to prove to Hartley that all men do not regard her as being trivial and unworthy. Later, hearing a young man say that she is pretty, but rather stagy and frivolous, she sees what a mistake she has made. At the opportune moment, Janice and Billy, through the influence of Hartley, meet, and their engagement is renewed. Reviewed in this issue.

Love or Justice—(FIVE REELS)—TRIANGLE-KAY BEE.—Featuring Louise Glaum. A victim to the drug habit, Jack Dunn on the eve of his success, sinks to the lowest depths. Leaving his former companions, he spends his time in the most wretched part of the slums. Here he meets Nan, a character of the underworld, and they become great friends. Through her strong influence on the man, Nan gradually weans him away from the use of drugs. At last Dunn's ambition is awakened, and through her efforts he regains a footing in the legal world. In gratitude he would make Nan his wife, but she realizes that he is drifting away from her and that she can have no place in his world. After many years they are brought face to face in a courtroom. Nan has been falsely accused of murder and her former lover is the prosecuting attorney. Knowing that Dunn's future at the bar depends on his winning the case, Nan swears that she is guilty. Fate, however, brings its rewards, and Nan is cleared. She accepts the humbly offered place as Jack Dunn's wife. Reviewed in this issue.

Vitagraph-V. L. S. E.

A Son of the Hills—BLUE RIBBON FEATURE—VITAGRAPH—JUNE 25.—Starring Antonio Moreno. Sandy Morley, a youth of poverty, but ambitious to raise the downtrodden mountaineers, among whom he lives, loves Cynthia Starr. He goes out into the world to win his fortune, and by the help of John Markham, northern capitalist, he succeeds, but not before he makes an enemy of Lansing Hartford, Markham's nephew. He returns to Lost Hollow, to superintend the factory of Markham, but meets discouragement and disappointment. Lansing wins Cynthia from him, but after they are married the true character of Lansing reveals itself, and she returns to Sandy, divorcing Lansing and leaving him with the woman he should have married.

World

The Golden Lotus—(FIVE REELS)—WORLD.—With Regina Badet and Paul Guide. Leah is the decoy and the mistress of Giovanni, who runs a gambling house. Reginald Ramsay, a novelist, ignorant of Leah's identity, has fallen in love with her. Robert Verney, a friend of the young writer, learns of the woman's true position, and warns Reginald. To be convinced, he goes to the gambling house and soon learns the truth. Broken-hearted, he accompanies Verney on an expedition to Africa. A year later, Leah is the victim of a motor accident, which occurs near the home of the Marquis de Metricourt, a wealthy widower. She is taken into the house and obliged to stay there for several days. The Marquis learns to love Leah, but she tells him she has led a life of treachery and deception. In spite of all, he offers marriage, and Leah, tired of the false life, accepts. After the honeymoon, Leah learns that Reginald Ramsay, author of "The Golden Lotus," is really the son of her husband. Shocked beyond belief, she listens to the story of the woman who had wrecked his son's life. After many months of captivity, Verney and Reginald escape and finally make their way back to Paris. Arriving home, Reginald recognizes Leah, but for the sake of his father decides to say nothing. The Marquis learns all. Leah takes her own life and dies in the presence of the two men who had loved her. Reviewed in this issue.

Miscellaneous

How Character Is Revealed in the Face—NO. 1 OF SERIES—EDUCATIONAL CARTOON—DISTRIBUTED BY A. KAY COMPANY.—This is an interesting burlesque cartoon, showing in detail how character is revealed through the features and by the shape of the human head. Numerous instances are shown to prove the contention of the teachings. Among the heads used as illustrations are those of President Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, Marshal Joffre, Admiral Dewey and George Washington.

Complete Record of Current Films

This record is intended to give, for the convenient use of the exhibitor in booking films, all the information about each film that it is possible to present in a space limited to one line. The classification is indicated by the letter at the left (D for drama, C for comedy, T for topical, S for scenic, E for educational, etc.). Next comes the date and the title, followed by the names of the stars in parentheses. At the extreme right hand end of the line is the distributor's booking number, preceded by the name of the producing company. The figure appearing just before this name indicates the number of reels—the letter S meaning a split reel.

The latest in overalls—Kathlyn Williams, Pallas-Morosco.

NEW ATTIRE FOR LADIES

Here's the way Kathlyn Williams, the well known photoplay star, dresses when working in her garden which surrounds her little bungalow on the outskirts of Los Angeles.

Unlike many other thespians, Miss Williams believes in getting up early, often in place of retiring at a time when the little chirpers start the day. Her garden affords the pretty actress considerable pride and justly so. "Skirts are a nuisance at times," says the Morosco-Pallas star and this is particularly true when one tries to crouch among dense rose bushes or climb a tree.

A regular man's shirt, folded down at the throat and tucked into a pair of regulation overalls is the garb in which Miss Williams greets the morning sun in her garden. Several hours of manipulation of the rake, shears and spade are enjoyed by her before starting for a day's work at the Morosco-Pallas studios, with which concern she just recently signed a long term contract. Whenever she is not occupied before the motion picture camera one can always feel secure in finding her fussing with one of the many botanical pets as long as the sun shines. Flowers, trees, plants and sunshine are her hobbies.

DANGEROUS CAMERA STUNT

Len Powers has accomplished another difficult camera shot for the Foxfilm comedy that he is now engaged in photographing. In the picture, two telegraph poles are supposed to be knocked down. The wire strung between them sags to the ground. The poles were erected on the ground of the Fox studio in Hollywood, Cal., and Len placed his camera on the wires midway between them. He clung to a wire with one hand, and ground away with the other.

Then when the poles were upset, and the wires sagged, Len and his camera sagged with them. The photographic effect obtained by this hazardous method makes one dizzy.

And it certainly made Len dizzy.

Purchase "Submarine Eye" for Illinois

Williamson Brothers have just closed a deal with the Central Film Co. of Chicago, whereby the latter concern will take "The Submarine Eye," and after its run at the Studebaker Theater, will book it throughout Illinois. The sum involved is understood to have been a large one. The Studebaker Theater was the scene of the first triumph of the Williamson Brothers, which four years ago played the production known as the Williamson Submarine Expedition Pictures.

Rex O. Lawhead, who served in the capacity of manager for that attraction, is now in charge of the Studebaker showing, and is the general western representative for the Williamson Brothers, with offices in Chicago.

BRIEF THEATER NEWS

Arkansas

The proprietors of the Lyric Theater No. 2 at Rogers are considering the establishment of a theater in Bentonville.

California

Architect A. B. Rosenthal is completing plans for the erection of a theater building for Col. J. B. Lankershim at Los Angeles. It is to be located on Main street near Eighth and is to have a seating capacity of about 3,500. The exterior and interior will be designed in Italian renaissance. Glazed terra cotta will be used exclusively on the exterior.

Architects Cunningham & Politeo are preparing plans for the erection of a new playhouse at San Francisco to be known as the Turner and Dankin Theater at Market and Eighth streets. The theater is to have a seating capacity of 6,000. Music will flow into the theater through the plaster grilles and hidden lights will serve to heighten the novelties projected.

Turner & Dankin will devote it exclusively to motion pictures.

A. A. Richards of Modesto has purchased the Tokay Theater from John M. Graf. Richards also holds a lease on the new theater which is to be built by the Lodi Investment Company at Lodi. He expects to run both houses.

Mr. Breeden, who has assumed management of the Strand Theater at Stockton, announces that extensions, alterations and repairs will be made.

District of Columbia

Work will soon commence on the erection of a new motion picture theater at Ninth and G streets, Washington, for Tom Moore, proprietor of the Strand and Garden Theaters. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 3,389, and standing room for 400. It will be built of white marble and it is estimated will cost $1,000,000. The theater will have all modern improvements including a rest room for women, a writing room and other conveniences. A symphony orchestra of twenty-two pieces and an immense pipe organ will be features of the new playhouse.

Illinois

The Kankakee Theater Company has been incorporated by Henry Ruel, D. L. Hogan and Attorney Walter Nourie.

J. A. Dauntler of Sterling has purchased the picture business of C. E. Seeley of Prophetstown. Improvements will be made.

Architects Rapp & Rapp are preparing plans for the erection of a three-story brick theater building at 1201 Lawrence avenue, Chicago, for T. C. Chamales, 30 North La Salle street. Estimated cost $325,000.

Architect J. E. Pridmore is preparing plans for the erection of a two-story brick theater, store and hall at 7070 Clara street, North, Chicago, for Max Blatt. Estimated cost, $100,000.

Manager Coloves of the Mars Theater at Benton will start work at once on remodeling the theater and increasing the seating capacity.

Edward Browoesky, 111 West Washington street, will erect a theater at 2534 South Crawford avenue, Chicago, to cost $250,000.

Law," plays opposite E. K. Lincoln in the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series. This series is being released through Mutual, a two-reel story a week for sixteen weeks, beginning March 23. The pictures are adaptations of the stories by Frank L. Packard, a celebrated Canadian author, which are now running in People's Magazine.

Miss Hunter's stage career started with an engagement in the musical comedy, "Liberty Bells." Later she appeared with Dillingham and Klaw and Erlanger.

This blue-eyed, golden-haired ingenue made her first screen appearance with the Fox company in "The Soul of Broadway." She has also been with Red Feather-Universal. Vitagraph and Selznick.

Indiana

Architects Vonnegut & Bohn are preparing plans for the enlarging of the Alhambra Theater at Illinois street and West Washington street, Indianapolis. A balcony and mezzanine floor will extend across the rear of the two rooms and along the sides of the stage. About $40,000 will be expended on the improvements.

Iowa

John Hale of Clarksville purchased the Crystal Theater at Greene from Lloyd Gates. He will probably make improvements to same.

Madsen & Peterson, St. Paul, have been awarded the contract for the erection of a theater, store and office building for H. W. Graft at Esterville. The cost will be $150,000.

Dick Haagsman purchased the Lyric Theater at Sheldon from Buntley Brothers. Improvements will probably be made.

Louisiana

Two new theaters, one for high-class vaudeville and the other a combination moving picture and popular price vaudeville house, is the program for New Orleans which Southern Manager Charles E. Bray of the Orpheum Circuit announced. These theaters will be completed in September, 1918, and will be the first step in the circuit's new program of extending its circuit to include moving picture houses in all the large cities.

Michigan

The Crown Theater at Grand Rapids, which was damaged by fire recently, has been leased by Delbert Laity and Louis Sewnig who will reopen same at an early date.

William Ohis has purchased the Temple Theater at Charlotte which he is remodeling for moving picture purposes.

Manager Andrew Bram of the Star Theater at Houghton has started extensive improvements on the house.

John L. A. Galster has purchased the leases on the Alcazar and Temple Theaters at Petoskey from Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sorden and Mrs. F. M. Cory and took immediate charge of both buildings.

Minnesota

James Cruse of Calumet and Louis King of Waukesha, Wis., have purchased the Royal Theater, Calumet, and will make improvements.

A theater is to be erected at Beaulieu by Domino Schnitz.

J. H. Ross purchased the former Lyric Theater at Wabash and will make improvements.

A. C. Johnson has sold the Majestic Theater at Stillwater to Hales Bros.

Missouri

Madorie and Field, architects, of Kansas City, are preparing plans for the erection of a modern brick and stone theater seating 1,500 persons at 811 West Thirty-ninth street. The building will cost about $25,000, exclusive of the pipe organ and furnishings.

Chicago Notes

C. B. PRICE, presiding genius in Superpictures, has been spending a few days in the effete East.

The Fred W. Schaefer Theater Company has moved its offices from 1820 Mallers Building to room 1417 of the same film temple.

Max Goldstine, local Artcraft manager, is preparing to jump to New York for a conference with executives concerning the consolidation of the local Paramount and Artcraft offices.

Ralph Proctor, the statuesque Art Dramas manager, is putting an ad. behind the ears of nearly everybody who exhibits pictures. He's distributing several thousand Art Dramas lead pencils.

Major Funkhouser refused a permit for the Marguerite Sanger Birth Control films. Walter Konzack has filed a petition for a writ of mandamus in the Superior Court to compel the city to permit the exhibition of the film.

W. A. L. Douglas, vice-president and general manager of Lasalida Film, Inc., which produces the "Little Mary Sunshine" pictures for Pathe, was in the city last week on his way to New York to confer with Pathe executives. Mr. Douglas reports that producing conditions in California are very favorable and that he considers the war will act as a stimulant to the entire trade. Mr. Douglas was formerly with Pathe in Paris and states that the demands for motion pictures in Europe has been greater since the war than ever before.

Edwin Baird, Chicago newspaper man and a resident of Evanston, is the author of "The City of Purple Dreams," now in course of production by the Selig Polyscope Company. The plot and action are laid in Chicago. The story was first published in book form anonymously several years ago.

Sidney Abel, the able manager of the local Vitagraph V. L. S. E. office, has just annexed a couple of new salesmen. J. A. Humphrey will cover northern Indiana, and J. H. Cohen will tell the exhibitors of southeastern Illinois what are the best pictures in the world.

The local Pathe office has innovated an innovation in the shape of a regular advance agent. His duties are to arrange for publicity and accommodations for stars and officials during the coming national convention and exposition. Tom North, the first incumbent of the position, is on the job in Chicago now. The idea originated with J. A. Berst and C. R. Seclye of the home office of Pathe.

Did you know that one of Triangle's fairest daughters had been spending several days in our midst? Dorothy Dalton has returned to Culver City following her visit with her parents here. On her way back she appeared at the picture ball given by the Exhibitors' League of Portland, Oregon. Her next picture is "The Flame of Yukon," of which there is an illustration on another page in this issue.

M. F. Tobias has returned to New York. While here he completed arrangements whereby he will control the state rights sale for the entire United States and Canada of the ten superproductions to be produced by the Sunshine Film Corporation of Chicago, Ill. The productions will be of seven reel length. The first of these will be ready for the trade on or about September 15.

Essanay has opened a camp at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. For the past several years this organization has pursued a policy of sending its producing companies to various hot weather resorts each summer, not only for the refreshing and beautiful scenery thus afforded, but also to enable the members to combine their work with an outing. Lake Geneva, on whose shores stand the summer homes of many Chicago millionaires, is one of the scenic points of the mid-West and provides unlimited fields for picturesque settings. Bryant Washburn and his company, under the direction of Arthur Berthelet, were the first to occupy the camp. Mr. Washburn is being filmed there in many scenes for "The Golden Idiot," which will be released the latter part of this month.

LITTLE MARY McALLISTER

The Youngest Sergeant in the U. S. Army

"Do Children Count"

Do They? Ask The Mothers!

You will find that this winsome child actress will count with your patrons. Only 6 years old, she has been commissioned recruiting sergeant by Capt. F. R. Kenney, U. S. A., for her Red Cross and Recruiting work.

Quit Thinking in Ruts

HUNDREDS of pictures which prove successful in a limited way are potential with fortunes if rightly exploited. Their owners oftentimes are new entrants into the motion picture field and lack a knowledge of the peculiar conditions associated with the marketing of such productions.

Invariably they resort to the time worn circular letter and printed circular which have no value in so far as the motion picture field is concerned.

To illustrate how inefficient as well as expensive circularizing the motion picture trade is, we cite the following instance: A prominent Minnesota exhibitor, generally conceded to be one of the most progressive in the United States, recently told us that he had sold thirty-two dollars' worth of waste paper consisting of circular matter received from various releasing organizations and which he had never troubled himself to open. His treatment of circular matter is typical of the treatment it receives from eighty to ninety per cent of the exhibitors.

There probably is no other field in which there is so much advertising done as to the motion picture trade. Amid so great an amount of advertising, poor advertising falls flat.

Recent and very conservative estimates show that that there are approximately seventeen thousand motion picture theaters in the United States. MOTOGRAPHY is each week read by ninety-three hundred motion picture exhibitors, which body represents well over eighty per cent of the buying power in this field. Any trade paper which claims more than this is claiming the impossible.

Advertisers who have been bludgeoned and bled by the club of large circulation claims have been dissipating their resources to the four winds.

The foregoing are not idle claims. We have positive evidence proving them facts. More interesting than all else is the fact that MOTOGRAPHY'S advertising rates are from thirty to fifty per cent lower than those of any of its contemporaries.

The Eugenic Photoplay

THE BLACK STORK

with

DR. HARRY J. HAISELDEN

in the leading role

THE STAR

Dr. Harry J. Haiselden, is an eminent Chicago surgeon, chief of staff o. the German-American Hospital. He is one of the leading surgeons who refuses to operate to save or prolong the life of a misshapen baby, child of mismated parents, or to lift a hand to save the life of a child liable to become an imbecile. As a result of the professional stand taken by him the newspapers of the world f om November, 1915, to May, 1916, devoted more news space to Dr. Haiselden than they did to the President of the United States. His refusal to perform an operation on a possible imbecile was the subject of a terrific discussion in medical circles and was the topic for discussion at every family gathering. Dr. Haiselden, as star of "The Black Stork," proves he is just as good an actor before the camera as he is a surgeon.

THE STORY

"The Black Stork" is a five-reel eugenic love story founded upon the professional attitude of the physician-star. It is based on the fact that the off-color bird of ill omen, instead of leaving healthy, clean babies leaves instead little deformed. unhealthy pieces of humanity practically certain of becoming weak-minded with advancing years. The thought hammered home throughout the five reels is that these misshapen babies should be allowed to die, without medical attention, as soon as they are conceived as the offspring of mismated couples. There even is a faint suggestion that surgery should hasten the death. The story is by Jack Lait, the widely known short story writer. It is portrayed by a strong cast, supporting Dr. Haiselden, as the star, and consisting of Hamilton Revelle, Elsie Esmond, Jane Fearnly, Henry Bergman, Allan Murnane, Edgar Davenport and George Moss.

"For him I have only pity—but I could kill the woman who took him from me!"

Unbeknown, the outraged wife was pouring the secret of her heart-torn agony into the ears of the very woman whose influence had invaded the sanctity of her home.

How could she know that this was the woman she hated beyond all things in life? What could she know of the remorse, the sacrifice, the fires of expiation through which the women had come, cleansed of her sin?

And now, out of the darkness of his exile, the husband was returning, to find, not only his wife, but at her side the woman whose love had cost him more than life itself.

Were the embers of hate and the smouldering fires of passion to burst forth anew in an all-consuming blaze of destruction when these three tragic figures met again?

MAE MARSH

Every great newspaper authority praises her dramatic power, her youthful appeal, her sincerity, and points to her constantly growing popularity.

Here are some of the things the critics say:

ASHTON STEVENS, Chicago Examiner: "Mae Marsh is the first actress in my experience to possess a mental magnetism translatable to the celluloid."

NEW YORK TIMES: "Mae Marsh is the Maud Adams of the screen."

W. N. HARDY, Boston Post: "Mae Marsh is a girl of smiles and tears—a remarkable figure in the screen world."

RANDOLPH BARTLETT, Photoplay Magazine: "Mae Marsh possesses the biggest thing in the creative world—SINCERITY. A star of the first magnitude at twenty."

LOUELLA PARSONS, Chicago Herald: "Mae Marsh is the best actress on the screen."

R. G. McCOY, Pittsburgh Leader: "Mae Marsh is 'The Girl of 1,000 Faces'—every one of them appealing."

CHARLES DARNTON, N. Y., Evening World: "Mae Marsh is a vivid, electric actress."

ROB REEL, Chicago American: "Mae Marsh is becoming the most popular star in America."

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS: "Mae Marsh is the BERNHARDT of the films."

HARRIETTE UNDERHILL, New York Tribune: "There is only one Mae Marsh."

MOTION PICTURES

All the Marvelous Underwater Scenes in 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea

"Pictures With a Reason"

WHEN the Williamson Brothers produced their first underwater film known as the WILLIAMSON EXPEDITION SUBMARINE MOTION PICTURES, it was for a particular reason; namely

TO BRING BEFORE THE EYES OF THE WORLD THE MARVELS OF NATURE, HIDDEN FOR COUNTLESS AEONS OF TIME AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA

THEIRS was a labor of love: a mission to be fulfilled; a duty to be discharged.

Nevertheless, the seven reels of Submarine views that they obtained in the crystal-clear waters of the West Indies earned for its producers the everlasting good will of motion picture exhibitors by virtue of its inherent money-making qualities. To date, conservative estimates place the profits of this production at a half-million dollars.

LIKEWISE, when the Williamson Brothers staged the underwater scenes for "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," they did so with the consciousness that they were contributing, by means of their appliances, one of the most important additions to the literature of the screen ever conceived and executed.

COMING down to the present, there is a very specific reason for the existence of the Williamson Brothers' third great success now ready—

THE SUBMARINE EYE

This beautiful production justifies all the hopes and dreams of its producers, and the prophecies of the big men of the industry, freely made at the time the first production was given to the world, have come true. As a demonstration of the wonders and virtual miracles performed in the World War by means of the inverted or underwater periscope, "THE SUBMARINE EYE" not only reveals the reason for its existence, but actually makes it imperative for the showmen of the country to exhibit this super drama to their thousands of patrons or fall behind.

"PICTURES WITH A REASON." This is not a clever catch phrase, but a slogan that really means something. It deserves its place in the trend of Motion Pictures toward better and higher things, and the Williamson Brothers want you to know that they intend to live up to it at all times.

The Truth About THE BARRIER

BY

Edgar Lewis

Mr. Stephen Bush in an article in The Moving Picture World of October 9, 1915, said:

"Edgar Lewis . . . a man who laughs at criticism where he thinks it is unjust and who profits by it whenever it is just."

I have tried to live up to this estimate, but so many untruths have been published about the picturization of "The Barrier," and my position in the making of this production has been so misrepresented—that it is no longer a laughing matter. Although I believe that I possess an average amount of patience, that admirable quality, in this instance, has ceased to be a virtue. I have been deluged with requests, telegrams and letters asking me to make a public denial of these misleading statements, so I am publishing the following affidavit in answer thereto.

STATE OF NEW YORK } ss
COUNTY OF NEW YORK }

I, EDGAR LEWIS, being duly sworn, do depose and say:—

1. That "The Barrier" was picturized by me for the Lubin Manufacturing Company of Philadelphia.

2. That I only met Mr. Beach once before starting work on "The Barrier," and the main topic of conversation at that meeting was the discussion of a scenario of his novel made by Adrian Gil Spear, which I had read and found impossible—and that I spent considerable time telling this gentleman how to re-write it.

3. That Mr. Gil Spear afterward submitted another scenario, which—while the prologue was acceptable—the adaptation proper was so crude and impracticable that my secretary, Miss Louise Kellar (now Mrs. Lewis) and I found it necessary to re-write the entire adaptation.

4. That on the screen I gave Mr. Gil Spear and Miss Kellar joint credit for the work, but at the private showing and in all advertising matter Miss Kellar's name was eliminated.

5. That every location and every background was personally passed on by me only.

6. That every piece of construction, every studio set, every bit of detail, costuming, properties, etc., etc., was planned and supervised by me.

7. That I personally selected every actor in the cast without consulting Mr. Beach or anyone else. That I submitted no photographs, names or data, and that Mr. Beach never even saw one of them until the picture was completed.

8. That Mr. Beach was never on one of the locations, and never saw a single scene taken. That he had absolutely nothing to do with the direction or supervision of the picture. That the entire production was wholly and solely in my charge, and after that first meeting I never saw Mr. Beach again until the production was completed.

9. That, if necessary, I am in a position to prove the truth of the above affidavit and furnish all data pertaining thereto.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 9th day of April, 1917.

EDGAR LEWIS.

Sworn to before me this 9th day of April, 1917. RAY C. WEBER, (Seal) Commissioner of Deeds, City of New York.

The above affidavit is in answer to articles and advertisements that either directly or by inference give the impression that Mr. Beach was the main instrument in the making of this picture.

"Who steals my purse, steals trash; . . .
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
But makes me poor indeed."—(Shakespeare).

The Fruits of My Labors Are Mine, and I Demand Them.

Does anyone who knows me, or my work, believe that the man who made "The Bondman," "Samson," "The Plunderer," "The Nigger," "The Gilded Fool," "The Great Divide" or "The Light at Dusk," needed any supervising hand to guide him?

An Army of Triangle Players

There's an army of Triangle Players. Every man and woman—and child in it is recruited because of definite, pronounced ability. To suit the wide range of characters required, there is not one, but the pick of a hundred for each. All types are represented—big manly heroes, beautiful dainty heroines, old men and women, dancers, comedians, villains.

That is why Triangle plays are so true to life. That's why they hold and thrill an audience. The players fit their parts and the parts fit the players. There is always the man or the woman who can actually become the character assumed, and live it for the time. It takes earnest study, conscientious effort and a keen knowledge of human nature to pick players for

THIS IS THE WAY "THE SUBMARINE EYE" IMPRESSED THE DAILY NEWSPAPER CRITICS

EVE. MAIL: The picture aroused enthusiasm. Easily the motion picture novelty of the Summer season.

ZIT. IN THE EVENING JOURNAL: If you like thrills and heart-throbbing moments you are going to get them in bunches. Needless to say I am going to ask you to go and see it.

EVENING WORLD: One of the most thrilling spectacles shown in motion pictures. Ranks with the super-pictures previously played at the Liberty.

TRIBUNE: This new submarine story is so far ahead of anything which has gone before it that there is no comparison.

MORNING SUN: "The Submarine Eye" packs a big punch. Worthy of individual investigation. The audience was stirred fathoms deep.

BROOKLYN EAGLE: The story is gripping in its tensest moments, and is an example of the wonders and terrors of ocean depths. Is well worth seeing.

EVENING POST: It is an excellent photoplay.

N. Y. TIMES: A thrilling sea tale. An interest-compelling picture. Beautiful photography to recommend it.

N. Y. WORLD: This new submarine photoplay may be ranked among the best pictures yet produced. The film is certainly worth seeing.

N. Y. AMERICAN: As full of glamour as "Treasure Island." Clever, unusual, intensely interesting picture.

EVENING SUN: Combines very happily entertainment and instruction of a unique variety.

ROB REEL, CHICAGO AMERICAN: Goes one better than "20,000 Leagues"—It's a Daredevil Thriller.

W. K. HOLLANDER, CHICAGO DAILY NEWS: Romantic blending of Stevenson and Verne—Photography a joy.

MAE TINEE, CHICAGO TRIBUNE: If you are not fascinated I miss my guess—an intricate piece of work beautifully done.

KITTY KELLY, CHICAGO EXAMINER: A regular grown-up fairy tale—warmly recommended for a refreshing two hours.

LOUELLA PARSONS, CHICAGO HERALD: Forget you are a grown-up and go see it.

AND HERE IS THE UNANIMOUS PRAISE-VERDICT OF THE TRADE PRESS REVIEWERS

ADAM HULL SHIRK in N. W. DRAMATIC MIRROR: The story is plausible, and extremely thrilling. Will constitute one of the most profitable State right pictures that has been produced in a long time. It can conscientiously be recommended as a genuine novelty.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: "The Submarine Eye" undoubtedly rivals many of the present day output in its tense dramatic action and well defined thrills. Will receive hearty support from the picture-going public. Exhibitors will find it a meritorious release.

N. Y. CLIPPER: Action—plentiful. Continuity—excellent. Suspense—intense. Detail—superb. Atmosphere—excellent. Photography—magnificent, box office value—the full run.

BILLBOARD: Without a flaw; it grips and thrills, it pleases and satisfies. It should prove a box-office magnet of the highest calibre. Exhibitors who fail to book it are not playing fair with themselves or their patrons.

MOTOGRAPHY: Has about all that is required to keep its audiences in a perpetually interested state. It ought to make a great State rights proposition.

VARIETY: Very effectively visualized. Certain to attract interest no matter in what part of the world it is shown.

JOSEPH L. KELLY IN MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Its action is strong but simple—simple because the simple has been made impressive without the "blare of trumpets." Its continuity reaches the nth power of perfection. Dull moments are conspicuous because of their absence.

N. Y. DRAMATIC NEWS: Held audience completely under its spell.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: These wizards of the picture industry have produced the eighth wonder of the world . . . Timely, a big drawing card, a genuine novelty in theme and photography.

EXHIBITORS' HERALD: The Williamson Brothers scored a scientific, entertaining money-making hit.

N. Y. REVIEW: The story is one of the most fascinating and dramatic ever conceived, and is developed with a keen eye to sustaining the suspense.
